The Emperour was oftentymes woont to goe to S. Maries church in the mount Auentine to pray. Hildebrand when he had by his eſpials ſearched out, and knew all the doyngs of the Emperour, cauſed the place where the Emperour was accuſtomed (eyther ſtanding, or proſtrate on his face to pray) to be marked, and for money he hired a naughty pact (like himſelfe) to gather and lay together a heape of great ſtones, directly ouer the place, in the vault of the Church, where the Emperour would ſtande, that in throwyng the ſame downe vpon his head, he ſhould ſlay the Emperour. About which purpoſe as the hireling haſted, and was buſie remouing to the place, a ſtone of great hugenes & waight: it broke the planke whereon it lay, and the hirelyng ſtandyng thereupon, both together fell downe from the roofe, to the pauement of the church, and with the ſame ſtone was daſht all in pieces. And after the Romaines had vnderſtanding of the handlyng of this matter, they faſtened a rope to one of the feete of this hirelyng, and cauſed him to bee drawen through the ſtreetes of the Citie three dayes together in example of others. The Emperour notwithſtanding according to his woonted clemencie, cauſed hym to be buried.

The pope hyreth one to ſlay the Emperour.

Iohannes the biſhop of Portua (beyng one of the ſecret counſail of Hildebrand) came vp into the pulpit of S. Peter, & amongſt other things in the hearing, both of the Clergy and people, ſayd: Hildebrand and we haue committed ſuch a fact and ſo horrible, for the which we are all worthy to be burned alyue (meanyng of the Sacrament of the body of Chriſt) which Sacrament, Hildebrand when he thereof inquired a diuine aunſwer agaynſt the Emperour, and would not ſpeake, threw into the fire and burned it contrary to the perſwaſion of the Cardinals, that were preſent and would haue reſiſted the ſame.

Hildebrand caſteth the ſacrament of the Lordes body in the fire, becauſe it woulde geue him no anſwere.

In the ſecond holy day in the Eaſter weeke, when the clergy & the people were aſſembled at S. Peters Church to heare maſſe, after the Goſpell, he went vp into the pulpit as he was in his pontificall attire, and in the preſence of diuers biſhops & Cardinals (a great company both of the Senate and the people of Rome, beyng gathered together) openly preached (among manye other wordes of diuination) that the kyng whoſe name was Henry, ſhould die (without all peraduenture) before the feaſt of S. Peter next enſuyng: or els at leaſt wiſe, that he ſhould bee ſo deiected from his kingdome, that he ſhould not be able any more to gather together aboue the number of vj. knights. This he preached to the biſhops and cardinals, and all that were preſent, crying out of the pulpit in theſe wordes: Neuer accept me for Pope any more, but plucke me from the aulter, if this propheſie be not fulfilled by the day appointed. About the ſame tyme he went about by helpe of priuy murtherers to kill the Emperour, but God preſerued him. And many there were eu͂e at that tyme, which thoght Pope Hildebrand to be guiltie, and to bee the deuiſer of the treaſon, becauſe that then he (before the deed put in execution) preſumed of the death of the kyng, beyng by him falſly propheſied of before, which wordes of his, wounded many mens hartes. And it came to paſſe that Hildebrand by his wordes, was openly condemned in the congregation, which (as is ſayd) gaue iudgement of himſelfe to be no Pope, neither that he would be counted for Pope any longer, but thought to be both a belyer and a traitour, vnleſſe that before the feaſt of S. Peter next comming, the Emperour ſhould dye, or els ſhould bee depriued of all kingly honour: In ſo much he ſhould not be able to make aboue 6. knights on his part. And thus by the appoyntme͂t of God it came to paſſe that by his owne mouth he was condemned for an heretike.

The Pope a falſe prophet.

The Pope ſeeketh agayne to murther the Emperour.

The Pope by hys own mouth condemned for an heretick.

Thus ſayth the Lord: The prophet which of arrogancie will propheſie in my name, thoſe things I haue not commaũded him, or els will propheſie in the name of other Gods, let him be ſlaine. And if thou ſhall ſay with thy ſelfe, how ſhall I know what thyng it is that the Lord hath not commaunded to be ſpoken? This token ſhalt thou haue to know it by. Whatſoeuer thing the Prophet in the name of God ſhal propheſie, & the ſame come not to paſſe, that mayeſt thou be ſure the Lord hath not ſpoken, but the Prophet hath imagined through the hautineſſe of his owne mynde, & therfore thou ſhalt not be afrayd of him.

When the tyme was expired that Hildebrand in his diuination had ſet, and that neither the king was dead, neither the power of the Empire empayred: and fearing leaſt by the wordes of hys owne mouth he ſhould be reprehended and condemned, ſubtlely turned his tale, ſaying, and perſwading the ignorant people, that he ment not of the body of the king, but of his ſoule, as though the ſoule of the king had loſt all, ſauing 6. of his knights or ſouldiours, or els had bene dead during that ſpace, and thus by theſe ſleights he beguiled the ignorant people. Againſt ſuch Prophets S. Gregory vpon Ezechiel ſayeth: Betwene true Prophetes and falſe, this difference there is, that true Prophets, if they ſpeake any thing vpon their owne mynd, they be ſoone rebuked, but the falſe prophets, both they tell lies, and not hauyng the ſpirite of truth, they perſeuere in their falſitie.

A ſuttle ſhift of Hildebrand to ſaue hys lying propheſie.

Ouer and beſide, the ſayd Hildebrand iudged to death 3. men before they were conuict, or els confeſſed their crime wythout the ſentence of any ſecular iudge, and cauſed them to bee hanged vpon a paire of gallowes, ouer againſt the Church of S. Peter in a place called Palatiolum, without any delay or aduiſement, contrary to the lawes, which commaund that euery publike offender ſhould haue 30. dayes ſpace, before he be put to execution. Which thing euen amongſt the Paganes is in vre and obſerued, as teacheth the authoritie of S. Ambroſe, and the Martyrdome of holy Marcelianus and Marcus.

Three perſons before they were conuict, put to execution by Hildebrand agaynſt all law.

He caſt Centius the ſonne of Stephen the Alderman into priſon, beyng before his truſty friend, and in a veſſell being thick ſet with ſharpe nayles, he tormented him to the poynt of death: who after that he was eſcaped, apprehended the ſayd Hildebrand. Of this apprehenſion, before he was ſet at liberty, he openly forgaue all the conſpiratours. Which thing afterwardes, contrary to his fidelitie, he brake and reuenged, & cauſed Centius, to whome he had forgeuen all offences, to be taken, and hanged him, & v. of his men vpon the gallowes before S. Peters porch.

There was at the apprehenſion of Pope Hildebrand, a certain widowes ſonne, to whom (and others moe for their penaunce) he enioyned a yeares baniſhment. Which tyme beyng explete or run out, the widow in toke͂ of more ample ſatiſfaction, thinking therby to haue appeaſed the mynd of Hildebrand, put a halter about her ſonnes necke, and drawyng her ſonne by the rope to the foot of Hildebrand, ſayd: My Lord Pope at your hands will I receaue agayne my ſonne, which one whole yeare hath endured baniſhment, and other penaunce by your holyneſſe enioyned. Then the ſayd Hildebrand, for that inſtant, becauſe of thoſe which were with him in company (diſſembling his wrath) deliuered her, her ſonne very churliſhly, ſaying, get thee hence woman I bid thee, and let me be in reſt. After this he ſent his officers & apprehe͂ded the widowes ſonne, and gaue commaundement to the Iuſtices, to put him to death, who altogether makyng aunſwer, ſayd, that they could no more condemne or meddle with him, for that hee had for his crime committed, appealed once to the Pope, & abidden the baniſhment, and done the penaunce by him enioyned. Hereupon this glorious Hildebrand beyng diſpleaſed wyth the Iudges, cauſed the foote of the widowes ſonne to be cut off: makyng neyther repentaunce, nor the lawes and ordinaunces to be of any eſtimation with hym. And thus his foote beyng cut off, he dyed within three dayes after with the payne thereof. Many other wicked deedes did this Hildebrand, vpon whom the bloud of the church cryeth vengeance, ſhed by the ſworde (that is) the miſerable trecherie of his tong. For which things (and that iuſtly) the church refuſed to communicate with him. Hæc Benno.

✻ An other Epiſtle of Benno to the Cardinals.

An other letter of Benno.

To the reuerend fathers of the Church of Rome, and to hys beloued in Chriſt, and to his brethren that ſhall for euer be beloued: Benno the Cardinall of the Churche of Rome, wiſheth faythfull ſeruice, health and communion with the ſeruauntes of the catholicke Church. Of the which communion, diſcipline and power, he vaynely braggeth, ÿ by the preſumption of hys authoritie ſhal vniuſtly bynd or loſe any maner of perſõ. And he doth vniuſtly bynd whatſoeuer he be, that curſeth any man, (being willing to make ſatiſfaction, and bewayling hys boldnes, beyng alſo vnconuict, and not confeſſing the crime) but rather curſing that party in vayne: he curſeth and condemneth himſelf, turning his weapon vpõ his own perſõ to deſtructiõ. O ſtraunge and new found trechery, proceeding from the ſanctuary: nay rather from him whiche as high Prieſt ſeemeth to rule the church, & to be a Iudge ouer the Iudges.

Hildebrand was earneſtly in hand with the Emperor, that he ſhould depriue thoſe Biſhops which came in by ſimonie. The Emperour (thinking as a zelous Prince, that this commiſſion had proceeded from the throne of God) without delay obeyed the ſame, and forthwith without any conſideration, or iudiciall order, depriued certayne Biſhops, and thought that by this his obedience to Hildebrand, he offred an acceptable ſacrifice to God, not knowyng the crafty handling of him. But Hildebrand then agayne placed thoſe, whom the Emperour for ſimonie at his commaundement had before depoſed, and thoſe whom by that meanes he made to beare a hatefull heart to the Empe-

A deuiliſh practiſe of Hildebrand in ſetting the Biſhops agaynſt the Emperour.

Emperour, he reconciled agayne vnto himſelfe in great familiaritie, and by many and great othes taken of thẽ, for their fidelitie towards him, he promoted aboue al the reſt. And thus by theſe prankes, the Imperiall ſeat of the king beyng ſhortly after empaired, & deſtitute almoſt of frends, he craftily purchaſing the friendſhip and fauor of the greateſt princes, the better to bring his matters to paſſe: ſodainly agayne, without any lawfull accuſation, without any canonicall vocation, without all iudiciall order, excõmunicated the Emperor (ſo obedient alwayes vnto him) & ſet the Princes of the Empire all agaynſt him. And notwithſtandyng (as the Apoſtle ſayeth) that no man ought to circumuent his brother in his buſines, as much as in him lay, he rather mortified and killed him, then brotherly corrected him. Thus the Emperor beyng many wayes circumuented: as, excommunicate beſides the canonicall order, and by the conſent and counſail of Hildebrand, ſpoiled of the greateſt part of his Imperiall honour, and ouercharged with great warres and ſlaughters of hys owne ſubiects, in vayne deſired he and ſued for, to haue the Canon read and heard, cauſing him by force and violence at Canuſium, in the preſence of Hildebrand, to accuſe himſelfe by his owne confeſſion.

The Emperour cauſed by Hildebrand to accuſe himſelfe.

Say you now (I pray you) all ſuch as loue iuſtice, and loue not to leane either vpon the left hand, or els the right hand, in the fauour of any perſon. Say your mindes, whether that ſuch a confeſſion beyng inforced vpon neuer ſo poore a man (much leſſe vpon an Emperor) ought at ſuch a tyme to be preiudiciall or not. Or whether he which extorted the ſaine confeſſion, is guilty of the Canon? Or els he, which beyng ſo peruerſly iudged, ſuffered the iniury of a moſt peruerſe iudge? which alſo moſt paciently and publikely ſuffred this violence with lamentable affliction vpõ his bare feete, clothed in thinne garments, in the ſharpe winter, which neuer was vſed, and was three dayes together at Canuſium, made a ſpectacle both of angels and men, and a ludibrious mocking ſtocke to that proud Hildebrand. Neuer truſt me, if that 14. Cardinals, the Archdeacon himſelfe, and he that is called Primicerius, beyng all wiſe and religious men, beſides many other of ỹ clarks of Laterane, to the iudgement and priuiledge of whoſe holy ſeat the whole world is obedient (waying and conſidering his intollerable apoſtaſie) departed not from participating, and refuſed from communicating with him.

The great patience of the godly Emperour.

This glorious Hildebrand & his affinitie by their new authoritie, breaking the decrees of the Calcedone Councel not onely in wordes, but alſo in publike writings haue agreed, that it is tollerable both to baptiſe and communicate beyng out of the church of God, and how blynd theſe men were, and alſo what heretikes they be, their own writings do declare. What a miſchiefe is this (ſaith Benno) they preſume to iudge of the Church, which ſwarme themſelues in all errours, who alſo eſteeme the veritie, but as a lye, and leaſt their poyſoned falſhod both in words & writings ſhould appeare, they haue (like ſubtill poyſoners, the ſooner to deceiue) mixed hony therwithall. A lye ſayth S. Auguſtine, is euery thing pronounced with the intent of deceauing other.

Mēdaciū quid.

It were too long and tedious here to recite all the deteſtable doyngs, and diabolicall practiſes, of coniurings, charmes, and filthy ſorceries, exerciſed betwene hym and Laurentius, & Theophilact, otherwyſe named Pope Benedict the 9. wherof a long narration foloweth in the foreſayd epiſtle of Benno to the cardinals to be ſeen, to whom the reader may repaire, who ſo hath either laiſure to read, or mynd to vnderſtand more of the abhominable partes, and diueliſh actes of this Hildebrand.

Pope Hildebrand a worker of ſorcery and coniuring.

Thus hauing ſufficiently alledged the wordes and teſtimonies of Benno and Auentinus, concerning the actes and factes of this Pope. Now let vs proceed (in the order as followeth in his ſtory) to ſet forth the miſerable vexation which the vertuous and godly Emperour ſuſtayned by that vngodly perſon.

About what time Hildebrand was made Pope, Henricus the 4. Emperour was incombred and much vexed with ciuill diſſention in Germany, by reaſon of certayne greuaunces of the Saxons againſt him & his father Henricus the 3. Whereupon, the matter growyng to ſedition, liues were taken, & great warres enſued, betwixt Otho Duke of Saxony, & Henricus the Emperour. This ſame tyme ſeemed to Hildebrand very opportune, to worke his feates, whoſe ſtudy & drift was euer from the begynnyng to aduaunce the dominion of the Romiſh ſeat aboue al other biſhops, and alſo to make ſubiect the authoritie of the temporall rulers, vnder the ſpirituall men of the Church. And although he went about the ſame long before, by ſubtile traynes and actes ſet forth concernyng Simonie: yet now he thought more effectuouſly to accompliſh his purpoſed intent, after that he was exalted thether where he would be. And therfore now bearing himſelfe the bolder, by the authority of S. Peters throne, firſt he began to purſue the acte ſet out by his predeceſſor as touching ſimonie, curſing and excommunicating, whoſoeuer they were, that receiued any ſpirituall liuing or promotion at lay mens hands, as all ſuch as were the geuers therof. For this he called than Simonie, that vnder that colour he might defeat the temporal poteſtates of their right, and ſo bring the whole clergy at length to the lure of Rome. And foraſmuch as ỹ emperour was the head, thinking firſt to begin with him, he ſendeth for him by letters and Legates to appeare in the councel of Laterane at Rome. But the Emperour buſied in his warres againſt the Saxones, had no layſure to attend to councels. Notwithſtanding Gregorius the Pope, proceedeth in his councel, rendring there the cauſe and reaſon before the biſhops, why he had excommunicate diuers of the clergy, as Herman biſhop of Bamberge, counſellor to the Emperour, and other prieſts mo for Simony. And there moreouer in the ſayd Councell, he threateneth to excommunicate likewiſe the Emperour himſelfe, and to depoſe him from his regall kingdom, vnleſſe he would abrenounce the hereſie of ſimonie, and do penance. The councel being ended, Guibertus Archbiſhop of Rauenna, perſwadeth with one Centius (a Romaine, the captains ſon, whom the Pope had excommunicate) to take the Emperours part againſt the Pope. Who watching his tyme in the temple of S. Mary, vpon Chriſtmas day in the morning, taketh the Pope & putteth him faſt in a ſtrong tower. The next day the people of Rome hearing this, harnes themſelues with all expedition to helpe the biſhop, whom when they looſed out of priſon, they beſieged the houſe of Centius, and pluckt it downe to the ground. His familie hauyng their noſes cut off, were caſt out of the Citie. Centius himſelfe eſcaping, fled to the Emperour. Guibert the Archbiſhop pretending good will to the Pope, departed from Rome, who likewiſe had wrought with Hugo Candidus Cardinall, and with Theobaldus Archb. of Millaine, alſo with diuers other biſhops about Italy, to forſake the Pope and take the Emperors part. Gregory the Pope called Hildebrand, hearing the conſpiracie, layeth the ſentence of excommunication vpon them all, and depriueth them of their dignitie. The Emperor beyng moued (and worthily) with the arrogant preſumption of the proud prelate, calleth together a Councell at Wormes. In which Councell all the biſhops not onely of Saxonie, but of all the whole Empire of Germaines, agree & conclude vpon the depoſition of Hildebrand, and that no obedience hereafter ſhould be geuen to him. This being determined in the Councel, Rolandus a Prieſt of Parmen, was ſent to Rome with the ſentence, who in the name of the councell ſhould commaund Gregory to yeld vp his ſeate, & alſo charge the Cardinals to reſort to the Emperour for a new election of an other Pope. The tenor of the ſentence ſent vp by Rolandus, was this.

Henricus 4. the Emperour.

Much boſt made of Peters throne but his life they let alone.

✻ The ſentence of the Councell of Wormes againſt Hildebrand.

FOr ſo much as thy firſt ingreſſe and comming in, hath bene ſo ſpotted with ſo many periuries, and alſo the Church of GOD brought in no little danger, through thine abuſe and newfanglenes. Moreouer, becauſe thou haſt diffamed thine owne lyfe and conuerſation, with ſo much and great diſhoneſty, that we ſee no little perill or ſlaunder to riſe therof: therfore the obediẽce which yet we neuer promiſed thee, hereafter we vtterly renounce, & neuer entend to geue thee. And as thou haſt neither taken vs yet for Biſhoppes (as thou haſt openly reported of vs) ſo neither will we hereafter take thee to be Apoſtolike. Vale.

The counſell of Wormes agaynſt the Pope.

Gregory the Pope tickled with this ſentence, firſt condemneth it in his councell of Laterane with excommunication. Secondarily, depriueth Sigifridus Archbiſhop of Mentz of his dignities, and eccleſiaſticall liuings, with all other biſhops, Abbots and Prieſts, as many as tooke the Emperors part. Thirdly, accuſeth Henricus the Emperour himſelfe, depriueth him of his kingdome and regall poſſeſſion, and releaſeth all his ſubiects of their oth of allegeance geuen vnto him, after this forme and maner.

The councell of Rome agaynſt the councell of Wormes.

Henricus the Emperour excommunicated by Hildebrand.

✻ The tenour of the ſentence Excommunicatorie, agaynſt Henricus the Emperour, by Hildebrand.

O Bleſſed S. Peter Prince of the Apoſtles, bowe downe thyne eares I beſeech thee, and heare me thy ſeruaunt, whom thou haſt brought vp euen from myne infancie, and haſt deliuered me vnto this day from the handes of the wicked, which hate & perſecute me, becauſe of my fayth in thee. Thou art my witneſſe, and alſo the bleſſed mother of Ieſu Chriſt, and thy brother S Paule, fellow partener of thy martyrdome, how that I entred this function (not willingly) but inforced againſt my will: not that I take it ſo as a robbery, lawfully to aſcẽd into this ſeat: but becauſe that I had rather paſſe ouer my lyfe, like a pilgrime or priuate perſon, then for any fame or glory to clime vp to it. I do acknowledge (& that worthily) all this to come of thy grace, and not of my merites, that this charge ouer chriſten people, and this power of binding and looſing is committed to me. Wherefore, truſtyng vpon this aſſurance for the dignitie and tuition of holy church. In the name of God omnipotent, the father, the ſonne, & the holy ghoſt, I do here depoſe Henry, the ſonne of Henry once the Emperour, from his Imperiall ſeat, and princely gouernment, who hath ſo boldly and preſumptuouſly layd handes vpon thy Church. And furthermore, all ſuch as toſore haue ſworne to be his ſubiectes, I releaſe them of their othe, whereby all ſubiects are bound to the allegeaunce of their princes. For it is meete and conuenient that he ſhould be voyd of dignitie, whiche ſeeketh to diminiſh the maieſtie of thy Church. Moreouer, for that he hath contemned my monitions, tending his health and wealth of his people, and hath ſeparate himſelfe from the fellowſhip of the Churche (which he, through his ſeditions, ſtudieth to deſtroy) therefore I binde him by vertue of excommunication, truſting and knowyng moſt certainly, that thou art Peter (in the rocke of whom, as in the true foundation Chriſt) our king hath built his church.

Marke this, ye papiſtes that ſay the Pope cannot erre.

The pope threatneth kindenes of S.Peter.

Quis tulerit gracchos de ſeditione querentes? Iuuen.

The Emperour thus aſſaulted with the Popes cenſure, ſendeth abroad his letters thorough all nations, to purge himſelfe, declaring how wrongfully, & agaynſt all right he was condemned. The princes of Almany partly fearing the cracke of the Popes thunderclap, partly again reioycing that occaſion was renued to rebell agaynſt the Emperour, aſſembled a commencement, where they did conſult and ſo conclude, to elect an other Emperor, and to fall from Henry, vnleſſe the Pope would come to Germany, and he there content to ſubmit himſelfe and obtayne his pardon.

The Saxons take the popes part agaynſt the Emperour.

Wherein is to be conſidered the lamentable affections of the Germains in thoſe dayes, ſo to forſake ſuch a valiant Emperor, and ſo much to repute a vile Biſhop. But this was the rudenes of the world thẽ, for lack of better knowledge. The Emperor ſeyng the chiefe princes ready to forſake him, promiſeth them with an othe, that if the Pope would repayre to Germany, he would aſke forgeuenes.

Vpon this the biſhop of Triers, was ſent vp in commiſſion to Rome, to entreat the Pope to come into Germany. The biſhop (at the inſtance of the Legate, & of the Princes) was content. He entred into Germany, thinking to come to Auguſta. After he was come to Vercellos (the biſhop of that city beyng the Chancellor of Italy, and deſirous to diſturbe peace, for the old grudge he had to the Emperour) falſly perſwadeth with the Pope, that he was certayn, the Emperor was comming with a mighty great army againſt him, counſailing him therfore to prouide betimes for his owne ſafegard in ſome ſtronger place. Whereby the Popes mynde beyng altered, hee retyred backe to Canuſium or Canoſſus, a Citie being ſubiect to Matilda, a Counteſſe of Italy, where he ſhould not need to feare the Emperour.

Peace diſturbed through wicked counſell.

Henricus vnderſtanding the falſe feare of the Pope, & of his retire to Canuſium, incontinent (commyng out of Spires with his wife and his young ſonne, in the deepe & ſharp of winter) reſorteth to Canoſſus. All his peeres and nobles had left him for feare of the Popes curſe, neyther did any accompany him. Wherfore the Emperour beyng not a little troubled (laying apart hys regall ornamentes) came barefooted with hys wyfe and childe, to the gate of Canoſſus: where he from morning to night (all the day faſting) moſt humbly deſireth abſolution, crauing to be let in, to the ſpeech of the Biſhop. But no ingreſſe might be geuen him once within the gates. Thus he continuing 3. dayes together in hys petition and ſute: at length anſwer came, that the Popes maieſty had yet no leyſure to talke with him. The Emperour nothing moued therwith, that he was not let into the Citty, patient and with an humble minde abideth without the walles, with no litle greuance and paynefull labour: for it was a ſharpe winter, and all froſen with cold. Notwithſtanding, yet through his importunate ſute, at length it was graunted through the intreating of Matilda the Popes paramour, and of Arelaus Erle of Sebaudia, and the Abbot of Cluniake, that hee ſhould be admitted to the Popes ſpeach. On the 4. day beyng let in, for a token of his true repentance, he yeldeth to the Popes handes, his crowne, with all other ornaments Imperiall: and confeſſed himſelfe vnworthy of the Empire, if euer he doe againſt the Pope hereafter, as he hath done toſore, deſiring for that tyme to be abſolued and forgeuen. The Pope anſwereth he will neither forgeue hym, nor releaſe the bande of his excommunication, but vpon conditions. Firſt, to promiſe, that he ſhall be content to ſtand to his arbitrement in the councell, and to take ſuch penance as he ſhall enioyne him, alſo that he ſhall be preſt and redy to appeare, in what place or tyme the Pope ſhall appoint him. Moreouer, that he beyng content to take the Pope iudge of his cauſe, ſhall aunſwer in the ſayd councel to all obiections and accuſations layd againſt him, & that he ſhall neuer ſeeke any reuengement herein. Item, that he (though he be quit and cleared therin) ſhall ſtand to the Popes mynd and pleaſure, whether to haue his kingdom reſtored, or to looſe it. Finally, that before the triall of hys cauſe, he ſhall neither vſe his kingly ornaments, ſcepters, or crowne, nor to vſurpe the authoritie to gouerne, nor to exact any othe of allegeaunce vpon his ſubiects, &c. Theſe things beyng promiſed to the biſhop by an oth, and put in writing, the Emperour is onely releaſed of excommunication. The tenour of the writing is this.

Proud conditions of the Pope.

Pope both accuſer and iudge.

Here the beaſt of the Apocalips appeareth in his colors.

The forme and tenour of the othe, which Henricus made to the Pope.

I Henricus King, after peace and agreement made to the mynde and ſentence of our Lord, Gregorius the 7. promiſe to keepe all couenants and bandes betwixt vs, and to prouide that the Pope go ſafely whereſoeuer he will without any daunger eyther to him or to his retinue. Eſpecially in all ſuch places as be ſubiect to our Impery. Nor that I ſhall at any tyme ſtay or hinder him, but that he may doe that belongeth to his function, where & whenſoeuer his pleaſure ſhalbe. And theſe things I bynd my ſelfe with an othe to keepe. Actum Canoſ. 5. Calend. Februarij. indic. 15.

Thus the matter beyng decided betwixt them after the Popes owne preſcribement, the Emperour taketh hys iourney to Papia. The Pope with his Cardinals, dyd vaunce and triumph with no little pryde that they had ſo quailed the Emperor, & brought him on his knees, to aſke them forgeuenes. Yet notwithſtanding miſtruſting themſelues & miſdoubting tyme, what might befall them hereafter, if fortune ſhould turne, & God geue the Emperour to enioy a more quiete kingdome: therfore to preuent ſuch dangers betime, they ſtudy and conſult priuily with themſelues, how to diſplace Henry clean frō his kingdom. And how that deuiſe might ſafely be conueyed, they conclude and determine to deriue the Empire vnto Rodolphus, a man of great nobilitie amongſt the chiefeſt ſtates of Germany, and alſo to incite and ſtirre vp all other princes and ſubiects (beyng yet free and diſcharged from their othes) againſt Henry, & ſo by force of armes to expulſe the emperour out of his kingdom. To bring this purpoſe the better to paſſe, legates were ſent downe from the Pope. Sigehardus Patriarch of Aquilia, and Altimannus Byſhop of Padway, which ſhould perſwade through all Fraunce, that Henry the Emperor was rightfully excommunicate, and that they ſhould geue to the biſhop of Rome their conſents in chuſing Rodolphus to be Emperor. This beyng done, there was ſet to the ſaid Rodolphus duke of Swenia, a crowne from the Pope with this verſe,

The crafty conſpiracy of the Cardinals agaynſt the Emperour.

Petra dedit Petro, Petrus diadema Rodolpho.

The rocke gaue the crowne to Peter,
Peter geueth it to Rodolph.

The verſe.

Here by the way of digreſſion (to make a litle gloſe vpon this barbarous verſe) two notable lyes are to be noted. One, where he lyeth vpon Chriſt, the other where he lyeth vpon S. Peter. Firſt, that Chriſt gaue any temporal diademe to Peter, it is a moſt manifeſt lye, and againſt the ſcriptures, when as he would not take it, beyng geuen to himſelfe, and sayth his kingdome is not of this world. Agayne, where he ſaith that Peter geueth it to Rodulph: Here he playeth the Poet, for neither had Peter any ſuche thing to geue, and if he had, yet he would not haue geuen it to Rodulph from the right heyre, neither is it true that Peter did geue it, becauſe Hildebrand gaue it. For it is no good argument. Hildebrand did geue it: Ergo, Peter dyd geue it: except ye will ſay, Hildebrand ſtirred vp great warres & bloudſhed in Germany, Ergo Peter ſtirred vp great warres in Germany. So Peter neyther could, nor would, nor did geue it to Rodolphus, but only Hildebrād the Pope: who after he had ſo done, he gaue in commaundement to the Archbiſhop of Mentz and of Collen, to elect this Rodulphus for Emperour, and to annoynt hym kyng, and alſo to defend him with all force & ſtrength they might.

The gloſe vpon the verſe of Hildebrand.

The Pope proued a double lyer.

While this conſpiracy was in hand, Henricus the emperor was abſent, and the Popes ambaſſadors with hym alſo. In the meane ſpace Rodulphus was elected Emperor vnknowing to Henry. Vpō this commeth the biſhop of Strausborough vnto the emperor, certifiyng him what was done. He ſuſpecting & ſeing the ſtomack and doyngs of the Saxōs ſo bent againſt hym, muſtreth his men with expedition, & marcheth forward to defend his right. But firſt ſendeth to Rome (truſting vpon the league betwixt hym and the Pope) and requireth the biſhop to procede with his ſentence agaynſt Rodulphus, for the rebellious inuaſiō of his Imperye. But the biſhop minding nothing leſſe, ſendeth word againe, not to be right to condemne any perſon (his cauſe beyng not heard) thus vnder the pretence of the law, colouring his vnlawfull treatory. Henricus thus diſappointed and forſaken on euery ſide, with his men about him, attempteth battayle againſt Rodulphus. In which battaile, a meruailous great ſlaughter was on both ſides, but the victory on neither part certain. So that both the Captaines yet chalenged the Empire. After the battayle & great murder on both ſides, they ſent to Rome both to know of the Popes determination, to whether of them two, he iudged the right title of the empire to appertayne. The Biſhop commaundeth them both to break vp their armies, and depart the field, promiſing that he ſhortly will call a councell where this matter ſhould be diſputed. In the meane time they ſhould ceaſe from warre. But before the meſſengers returned agayne (their armies beyng refreſhed) they had an other conflict together, but no victory got on either part. Thus both the Captaines beyng weried in warres, the Romiſh beaſt the biſhop which was the cauſe therof, perceiuing whether theſe cruel wars would tend, to the great calamitie not onely of the Germains, but alſo of other nations (truſting to find another way to helpe Rodulphus and his adherentes) ſendeth downe a commiſſion by Ottho Archbiſhop of Treuers, Bernardus Deacon, and Bernardus Abbot of Maſſilia: to whom he gaue in charge that they ſhould call together a Councell or ſitting in Almany, and there to be defined to whether part the Empire ſhould pertayne, by moſt right and publicke conſideration. Promiſing that what they ſhould therein determine, he (looking vpon the matter, through the authoritie of God omnipotent, and of S. Peter, and Sainct Paule) would ratifie the ſame. Moreouer, for that, no let nor impeachment ſhould happen to the Legates by the way, he geueth with them letters, to the princes and nations of Germany. Whereof, the contents be declared briefly in Platina, if any liſt to read them.

The Pope traytor to the Emperour.

Great wars ſtirred vp by the pope.

But the Emperour would not ſo permit the Legates to haue any Councel within Germany, except they would firſt depriue Rodulphus of his kingdome. The Legates conſidering that to be againſt the drift and intention of the Pope, returned agayne frō whence they came. The Pope hearing this and ſeing his purpoſe ſo diſappointed by the Emperour, draweth out an other excommunication againſt him, and agayne bereaueth him of his kingdome: ſending about his letters excommunicatorie, throughout all places, thinkyng therby to further the part of Rodulphus the better. Platina hath in his booke the whole effect of the writing, which tendeth after this ſort.

The copy of the ſecond excommunication of Hildebrand agaynſt the Emperour.

Bleſſed S. Peter, prince of the Apoſtles, and thou Paule alſo the teacher of the Gentiles geue eare vnto me. I beſeech you a little, and gently heare me, for you are the diſciples and louers of truth, the things that I ſhall ſay, are true. This matter I take in hand for truth ſake that my brethren (whoſe ſaluation I ſeeke) may the more obſequiouſly obey me, and better vnderſtand, how that I truſting vpon your defence (next to Chriſt and his mother the immaculate virgin) reſiſt the wicked, and am ready to helpe the faythfull. I did not enter this ſeate of myne owne accorde, but much agaynſt my will, and with teares, for that I accounted my ſelfe vnworthy to occupy ſo high a throne. And this I ſay, not that I haue choſen you, but you haue choſen me, and haue layed this great burthen vpon our ſhoulders. And now where as by this your aſſignement, I haue aſcended vp this hill, crying to the people, and ſhewing them their faults, & to the children of the church their iniquities, the members of Sathan haue riſen vp agaynſt me and haue layd hands together to ſeeke my bloud. For the kings of the earth haue riſen vp againſt me, and the Princes of this world, with whom alſo haue conſpired certaine of the Clergy ſubiectes againſt the Lord, and againſt vs his annointed, ſaying: let vs break a ſūder their bands, & caſt off from vs their yoke. This haue they done agaynſt me, to bring me either to death, or to baniſhmēt. hornes and heele againſt the church of God, making conſpiracie with diuers other biſhops, both Italians, French & Germains. Againſt the pride of whom, hetherto your authoritie hath reſiſted, who rather being broken then amended, comming to me in Ciſalpina, made humble ſute to me for pardon & abſolution. I thinking nothing els but true repentance in him, receaued him again to fauour, & did reſtore him to the communion only, from which he was excommunicate, but to his kingdome (from which in the Synode of Rome he was worthily expulſed) I did not reſtore, nor to the rentes and fruites therof (that he might returne to the faith againe) that I graunted not vnto him. And that I did for this purpoſe, that if he ſhould deferre to fall to agreement with certaine of his neighbours, whom he hath alwayes vexed, and to reſtore agayn the goods both of the church and otherwiſe, thā he might be compelled by the cenſures of the Church and force of armes therunto Wherby diuers and ſundry biſhops and princes of Germany (ſuch as he had long troubled) being helped by this opportunitie, elected Rodolphus their Duke to be king in the place of Henricus, whom they for his tranſgreſſions had remooued & diſpatched from his empire. But Rodolphus firſt in this matter vſing a princely modeſtie and integritie, ſent vp his meſſengers to me, declaring how he was conſtrained (wild he, nild he) to take that regall gouernment vpon him, albeit he was not ſo deſirous therof, but that he would rather ſhew himſelfe obedient to vs, then to the other that offred him the kingdom, and whatſoeuer our arbitrement ſhould be therin, he would be vnder obedience, both of God and of vs. And for more aſſurance of his obedience, he hath ſent his owne children hither for pledges. Vpon this Henricus began to ſnuffe, and firſt entreated with vs, to reſtraine and inhibite Rodolphus through the paine of our curſe, from the vſurpation of his kingdom. I aunſwered againe, I would ſee whether of them had more right and title thereunto, & ſo ſend our Legates thither vpon the ſame, to know the whole ſtate of the matter, and therevpō I would decide betwixt thē, whither of them had truer part. But Henricus would not ſuffer our Legates to come to take vp the matter, and ſlew diuers both ſecular men, and of the Clergy, ſpoiling and prophaning churches, and ſo by this meanes hath indangered himſelfe in the bandes of excommunication. I therfore truſting in the iudgement and mercy of God, and in the ſupportation of the bleſſed virgin, alſo vpon your authoritie, do laye the ſentence of curſe vpon the ſaid Henricus, & all his adherents: and here againe I take his regall gouernment from him, charging and forbidding all chriſten men that haue bene ſworne vnto him (whom I diſcharge here of their oth) that hereafter they obey him in nothing, but to take Rodolphus to their king, who is elected by many princes of the Prouince. For ſo right it is and conuenient, that as Henry for his pride & ſtubburnnes, is depriued of his dignitie and poſſeſſion: ſo Rodolphus being gratefull to all men, for his vertue and deuotion be exalted to the Imperiall throne & domination.

Let all Papiſtes marke here well the holines of their holy father.

As though he were not ſet vp by you, rather then by them.

The more to blame Emperours to ſuffer you to be ſo ſaucie with them.

Therfore O you bleſſed prince of the Apoſtles, graunt to this, and confirme with your authoritie that I haue ſayd, ſo that all mē may vnderſtand, if you haue power to bynd and looſe in heauen, you haue alſo power in earth to geue & take away Empires, kingdoms, principallities, and whatſoeuer here in earth belongeth to mortall men. For if yov haue power to iudge in ſuch matters as appertain to God: what then ſhould we thinke you haue of theſe inferior & prophane things? And if it be in your power to iudge the angels, ruling ouer proud princes, what then ſhall it beſeeme you to do vpon their ſeruants? Therfore let the kings vnderſtand by this example, & all other princes of the world, what you be able to do in heauen, & what you are with God, that thereby they may feare to contemn the commaundement of holy church. And now doe you exerciſe this iudgement quickely vpon Henricus, whereby all men may ſee this ſonne of iniquitie to fall from hys kingdome, not by any chaunce, but by your prouiſion and onely worke. Notwithſtanding, this I would craue of you, that he being brought to repentance through your interceſſion, yet in the day of iudgement, may finde fauour and grace with the Lord. Actum Romæ. Nonis Martij, indictione, 3.

Nego argumentum.

Confer this clauſe with the hiſtory of the ſtory hereafter following. O double hipocrite.

Furthermore, Hildebrand not yet content with this, interditeth & depoſeth alſo Guibertus Archb. of Rauenna, for taking the Emperors part, commaunding all prieſtes to geue no maner obedience to him, and ſendeth thether to Rauenna an other Archb. with full authoritie.

Guibertus Archbiſhop depriued.

After & vpon this, Henricus & Rodulphus to try the matter by the ſword, coped together in battaile, not without bloudſhed, where Henricus by the fauour of God againſt the iudgement of Hildebrand, had the victory. Rodulphus there greatly wounded in the conflict, was had out of the army, and caried to Hyperbolis, where he commaunded the biſhops & chief doers of his conſpiracy to be brought before him. when they came, he lifted vp his right hand, in which he had taken his deadly wound, and ſayd: This is the hand which gaue the oth and ſacrament vnto Henricus my Prince, and which through your inſtigatiō, ſo oft hath fought againſt him in vaine. Now go and performe your firſt othe & allegeance to your king, for I muſt to my fathers, and ſo dyed. Thus the Pope gaue battaile, but God gaue the victory.

Henricus (after his enemy beyng thus ſubdued, and warres being ceaſed in Germany) forgate not the old iniuries receiued of Hildebrand by whom he was twiſe excommunicate, & expulſed from his kingdom, and iij. daies making humble ſute (yea & that in ſharpe winter) coulde find no fauour with him. Beſides that, he incited moreouer & aided his enemy againſt him, wherfore calleth together a councell or aſſembly of diuers biſhops of Italy, Lombardy and Germany at Brixia, an. 1083. where he purged himſelf, & accuſed the biſhop Hildebrand of diuers crimes, to be an vſurper periured, a Necromanſer & Sorcerer, a ſower of diſcord, complaining moreouer of wrongs & iniuries done by the biſhop and church of Rome, in that the church of Rome preferred the biſhop before him, whē that his father being emperor before him, had inthroniſed & ſet in diuers & ſundry biſhops there by his aſſignment, without all other electiō. And now this biſhop contrary to his oth & promiſe made, thruſt in himſelf, without the wil and knowlege of him, being their king and magiſtrate. For in the time of his father Henricus 3. This Hildebrand wyth other, bound themſelues with a corporall oth, that ſo long as the Emperour and his ſonne now beyng kyng, ſhould liue, they ſhould neither themſelues preſume nor ſuffer any other to aſpire to the Papal ſeat, without the aſſent and approbation of the foreſayd Emperours, which now this Hildebrand contrary to his corporal oth had done. wherfore the foreſaid councel with one agreement condēned this Gregory, that he ſhould be depoſed. The tenor of which condemnation is thus expreſſed in Abbate Vrſpergenſi.

* The ſentence of the Councell of Brixia, againſt Hildebrand.

Becauſe it is not vnknown, this biſhop not to be elected of God but to haue intruded himſelfe by fraud and money, who hath ſubuerted all Eccleſiaſticall order, who hath diſturbed the gouernment of the Chriſtian Empery, manaſing death of body and ſoule againſt our catholike & peaceable king, who hath ſet vp & maintayned a periured kyng, ſowyng diſcorde, where concorde was, cauſing debate amongſt friends, ſlāders, & offences amongeſt brethrenne, diuorcementes and ſeparation amongeſt the maried (for he tooke away the mariage of prieſts, as Henricus Mutius witneſſeth) and finally diſquieting the peaceable ſtate of all quiet lyfe: therfore we here in the name & authoritie of God congregate together, with the Legates & handes of 19. Biſhops, the day of Pentecoſt at Mentz, doe proceed in Canonicall iudgement, againſt Hildebrand, a man moſt wicked, preaching ſacriledge and burning, maintaining periury and murthers, callyng in queſtion the Catholike fayth of the body and bloud of the Lord, a follower of diuination and dreames, a manifeſt Necromancer, a Sorcerer, and infected with a Pythonicall ſpirite, and therefore departed from the true fayth, we iudge hym to be depoſed & expelled. And vnleſſe he hearyng this, ſhall yelde and depart the ſeate, to be perpetually condemned. Inacted vij. Calend. Iulij. feria. 5. indictione. 3.

Note here the Pope iudged and depoſed of the councell.

This being enacted & ſent to Rome, they elected Guibertus Archbiſhop of Rauenna in the place of Hildebrand, to gouerne the Church of Rome, named Clemens 3. But when Hildebrand neither would geue ouer his hold, nor geue place to Clement, the Emperour gathering an army to ſend to Italy, came to Rome to depoſe Gregory, and to place Clement. But Hildebrand ſendyng to Matilda the Counteſſe before mentioned, required (in remiſſion of al her ſinnes) to withſtand Henry the Emperor, and ſo ſhe did. Notwithſtanding Henricus preuailyng came to Rome, where he beſieged the Citie all the Lent, and after Eaſter got it, the Romaines being compelled to open the gates vnto him: ſo he comming to the temple of S. Peter, there placeth Clemēt in his Papacy. Hildebrand ſtraight flieth into Adrians tower with his adherents, where he beyng beſet round about, at length ſendeth for Robert Guiſcardus his frend a Norman, in the mean time, while Robertus collecteth his power, the Abbot of Cluniake, conferryng with Gregory, exhorteth him to crowne Henricus emperor in Lateran. which if he would do, the other promiſeth to bring about, that Hen. ſhuld depart with his army into Germany, whereunto the people of Rome alſo did lykewiſe moue him. To whom Gregory anſwered, that he was content ſo to do (but vpon condition) that the emperor would ſubmit himſelf to aſke pardon, to amend hys fault, and to promiſe obedience. The Emperour not agreyng to thoſe conditions went to Senas, taking Clement, new ſtalled Pope with hym.

The Pope ſeeketh ſuccour of hys paramour. The firſt example to fight for remiſſion of ſinnes, began in Hildebrand.

After the returne of the Emperor, the foreſayd Robert Guiſcardus approching with his ſouldiours, brake in at one of the gates, and ſpoileth the Citie. And not long after deliuereth Hildebrand out of his enemies hands, and caried him away to Campania, where he, not long continuyng, after dyed in exile.

Antoninus writeth, that Hildebrand, as he did lie a dying, called to hym one of his chief Cardinals, bewailing to him his fault & miſorder of his ſpirituall miniſtery, in ſtirring vp diſcord, warre & diſſenſion: wherupon he deſired the Cardinall to go to the Emperor, and deſire him of forgeuenes, abſoluing from the danger of excommunication both him and all his partakers both quicke and dead.

Hildebrand, the firſt author and patrone of all miſrule that followed in Popes.

Thus haſt thou (gentle Reader) the full hiſtory of pope Gregory 7. called Hildebrand, which I haue laid out more at large, & deſire thee to marke, becauſe that frō this Pope (if thou marke wel) ſpringeth all the occaſion of miſchiefe, of pride, pompe, ſtoutneſſe, preſumption & tiranny, which ſince that tyme hath raigned in his ſucceſſours hetherto, in the cathedral church of the Romiſh clergy. For here came firſt the ſubiectiō of the temporal regiment, vnder the ſpiritual iuriſdictiō. And Emperors, which before were their maiſters, now are made their vnderlings. Alſo here came in the ſuppreſſion of prieſts mariage, as is ſufficiently declared. Here came in moreouer the authoritie of both the ſwords ſpiritual & ſecular, into ſpiritual mens hands. So that chriſtian magiſtrates could do nothing in election, in geuing biſhoprikes or benefices, in calling Councels, in hearing & correcting the exceſſes of the clergy, but only the Pope muſt do all. Yea moreouer, no biſhop nor Paſtor in his owne pariſh could excommunicate or exerciſe any diſcipline amongſt his flocke, but onely the Pope chalenged that prerogatiue to himſelfe. Finally, here came in the firſt example to perſecute Emperors & kings, with rebellion & excommunication, as the clergy themſelues hereafter doe teſtifie and witnes in proceeding againſt Paſchalis. Thus theſe notes beyng well obſerued, let vs (by the grace of Chriſt) now repaire again to our coūtry hiſtory of englād.

The death of William Conquerour.

About the death of Pope Hildebrād (or not long after) folowed the death of king William Conqueror, in the yere of our Lord, 1090. after he had raigned in Englād the ſpace of 21. yeares and 10. moneths. The cauſe of his ſicknes and death, is ſaid to be this: For that Phillip the French king vpon a tyme (ieſting ſayd) that king William lay in child bed and nouriſhed his fat belly. With this the foreſaid William hearing therof, aunſwered againe and ſayd, when he ſhould be Churched, he would offer a thouſand candels to hym in Fraunce, wherewithall the kyng ſhould haue litle ioy. Wherupon king William in the month of Iuly (when the corne, fruite, & grapes were moſt flouriſhing) entered into Fraunce, & ſet on fire many Cities and townes in the weſtſide of Fraunce. And laſtly commyng to the Citie of Meaux, where he burning a woman beyng as a recluſe in a wall incloſed (or as ſome ſay, two mē Anachorites incloſed) was ſo feruent and furious about the fire, that with the heate partly of the fire, partly of the tyme of yeare, thereby he fell into ſicknes, and dyed vpon the ſame.

By the life & actes of this king, it may appeare true, as ſtories of him report, that he was wiſe but guilefull, riche, but couetous, a faire ſpeaker, but a great diſſembler, glorious in victory, & ſtrong in armes, but rigorous in oppreſſing whom he ouercame, in leuying of taſks paſſing all other. In ſo much that he cauſed to bee enrolled & numbred in his treaſury euery hide of land, and owner therof: what fruit & reuenewes ſurmounted of euery Lordſhip, of euery townſhip, caſtel, village, field, riuer, & wood, within all the realme of England. Moreouer, how many pariſh Churches, how many liuing cattell there were, what and how much euery Baron in the realme could diſpend, what fees were belonging, what wages were taken, &c. The tenour & contents of which taſkment, yet remaineth in rolles. After this taſking or nūbring, which was the yere before his death, folowed an exceding moreine of cattell, & barennes of the ground, with much peſtilence and hote feuers amōg the people, ſo that ſuch as eſcaped the feuer, were cōſumed with famine. Moreouer, at the ſame ſeaſon among certain other Cities, a great part of the City of London, with the church of Paules was waſted with fire, an 1085.

Peſtilence in England and moreine of beaſtes.

London with the Church of Paules brent.

In hunting and in parkes, the foreſayd king had ſuch pleaſure, that in the country of Southamptō by the ſpace of 30. miles, he caſt downe churches and Townſhips, and there made the new foreſt, louing his Deere ſo dearely, as though he had bene to them a father, making ſharp lawes for the increaſing thereof, vnder payne of looſing both the eyes. So hard he was to Engliſhmen, and ſo fauorable to his owne country, that as there was no Engliſh Byſhop remainyng, but onely Wolſtane of Worceſter, who beyng commaunded of the king and Lancfrank to reſigne vp his ſtaffe, partly for inhabilitie, partly for lacke of the French tongue, refuſed otherwiſe to reſign it, but only to him that gaue it, and ſo went to the tombe of king Edward, where he thought to reſigne it, but was permitted to enioy it ſtil: ſo likewiſe in his daies there was almoſt no Engliſh mā, that bare office of honour or rule.

Wolſtane Byſhop of Worceſter.

In ſo much, it was half a ſhame at that tyme, to be called an Engliſh man. Notwithſtanding he ſome deale fauoured the citie of London, & graunted vnto the Citizens the firſt charter that euer they had, written in the Saxon, with greene waxe ſealed, and conteined in few lynes.

England peaceable frō theeues.

Among his other conditiōs, this in him is noted, that ſo geuen he was to peace and quiet, that any maiden being laden with gold or ſiluer, might paſſe thorough the whole realme, without harme or reſiſtance. This William in his tyme builded two monaſteries, one in England, at Battail in Suſſex, where he wan the field againſt Harold, called the abbey of Battail: an other beſide, named Barmōdſey, in his countrey of Normandy.

The Abbey of battayle.

The Abbey of Barmōdſey.

After the life & ſtory of K. William thus briefly deſcribed, with the acts & order of battail betwene him & K. Harold (although much more might haue bene written of ye matter, if the booke had come ſooner to my hands which afterward I ſawe) now remaineth in the end of his ſtory to deſcribe the names of ſuch Barons & nobles of Normandy, which entered with him into this land, as well of them which were embarked with him, & ſlaine alſo (as appeareth) in the battaile, as alſo of thē who were planted & aduanced by the ſaid Conqueror, in the lands & poſſeſſiōs of Engliſh Lordes, whome he either expulſed or els beheaded. The names of which Normands here folow vnderwritten.

❡ Out of the Annales of Normandie in French, wherof one very Auncient written Booke in Parchment, remayneth in the cuſtody of the writer hereof.

THe day after the battaile, very early in the Morning, Odo biſhop of Bayeux ſong Maſſe for thoſe that were departed. The Duke after that deſirous to know the eſtate of his battaile, and what people he had therein loſt, and were ſlaine, he cauſed to come vnto him a Clarke that had written their names when they were embarked at S. Valeries, and commaunded him to call them all by their names, who called them that had bene at the battaile, and had paſſed the ſeas with Duke William. And hereafter followeth their names.

The firſt byſhop of Saliſbury. Oſmund Biſhop of Sarum. Ordinale eccleſiaſtici officij. Secundũ vſum Sarum.

Ex Eulogio hiſtorico. Lib. 3. The vſe and ordinary of Sarum, how and when it was deuiſed.

A little aboue, mention was made of the Biſhops ſea of Shireborne, tranſlated from thence to Saliſbury. The firſt biſhop of Saliſbury was Hermannus a Norman, who firſt began the new church and minſter of Saliſbury. After whom ſucceded Oſmũdus, who finiſhed the worke and repleniſhed the houſe with great liuing, & much good ſinging. This Oſmundus firſt began the ordinarie, which was called Secundum vſum Sarum. an. 1076. The occaſion wherof was this (as I find in an old ſtory booke intituled Eulogium) a great contention chanced at Glaſtenbury betwene Thurſtanus the Abbot, and his couent in the days of William Conqueror. Which Thurſtanus the ſayd William had brought out of Normandy, frõ the Abbey of Cadonum, and placed him Abbot of Glaſtenbury. The cauſe of this cõtentious battaile, was for that Thurſtanus contemning their Quier ſeruice, then called the vſe of S. Gregory, cõpelled his monkes to the vſe of one Williã a monk of Fiſcam in Normandy. Wherupon, came ſtrife & contentions amongſt them: firſt, in wordes, then from words to blowes, after blowes then to armor. The Abbot with his gard of harneſt men, fell vpon the monkes, & draue them to the ſteps of the high aulter: where ij. were ſlayne, viij. were wounded with ſhafts, ſwords & pikes. The monkes then driuen to ſuch a ſtraight & narow ſhift, were compelled to defend themſelues with fourmes and candleſtickes, wherwith they did wound certain of the ſouldiours. One monke there was (an aged man) who in ſtead of his ſhield toke an Image of the Crucifixe in his armes, for hys defence, which image was woũded in the breſt by one of the bowe men, wherby the Monke was ſaued. My ſtory addeth more, that the ſtriker incontinent vpon the ſame fell mad, which ſauoreth of ſome monkiſh addition beſides the text. This matter being brought before the king, the Abbot was ſent agayne to Cadonium, and the monks by the commaundement of the king were ſcattered in farre countreys. Thus by the occaſion hereof, Oſmundus biſhop of Saliſbury, deuiſed that ordinary, which is called the vſe of Sarum, and was afterward receiued in a maner through all England, Ireland and Wales. And thus much for this matter, done in the time of this king William.

Which William after his death, by his wife Matildis or Maulde, left iij. ſonnes, Robert Courtſey to whom he gaue the Duchie of Normandy: William Rufus his ſecõd ſonne, to whom he gaue the kingdome of England: And Henry the third ſonne, to whom he left and gaue treaſor, and warned William to be to his people louing & liberall, Robert to be to his people ſterne and ſturdy.

Example of Gods iuſt iudgment vpon a Byſhop, who being vnmercifull to the poore, was eaten with rattes and myſe.

In the hiſtory called Iornalenſis, is reported of a certain great man, who about this tyme of kyng William, was compaſſed about with Miſe and Rattes, and flying to the middeſt of a Riuer, yet when that would not ſerue, came to the land agayne, and was of them deuoured. The Germaines ſay, that this was a Byſhop, who dwellyng betwene Colen and Mentz, in tyme of famine and dearth, hauyng ſtore of corne and grayne, would not helpe the pouertie crying to hym for reliefe, but rather wyſhed hys corne to be eaten of Myſe and Rattes. Wherefore beyng compaſſed with Miſe and Rattes (by the iuſt iudgement of God) to auoyd the annoiance of them, he builded a tower in middeſt of the Riuer of Rheine (which yet to this day the Dutchmen call Rattes tower) but all that would not helpe: for the Rattes and Myſe ſwamme ouer to hym in as great aboundaunce as they did before. Of whome at length he was deuoured.

❧ William Rufus.

Anno. 1088.

William Rufus.

William Rufus the ſecond ſonne of William Cõquerour beganne his raigne, an. 1088. And raigned 13. yeares, beyng crowned at Weſtminſter by Lanfrancus, who after his coronation releaſed out of priſon, by the requeſt of his father, diuers of the Engliſh Lords, which before had bene in cuſtody. It chaunced that at the death of William Conquerour, Robert Courtſey his eldeſt ſonne was abſent in Almany. Who hearing of the death of hys father, and how William his yonger brother had taken vpon him the kingdome, was therwith greatly amoued, in ſo much that he laid his dukedome to pledge vnto his brother Henry, and with that good, gathered vnto him an army, and ſo landed at Hampton, to the intent to haue expulſed his brother from the kyngdom. But William Rufus hearing thereof, ſent to him fayre and gentle wordes, promiſing him deditiõ and ſubiection as to the more worthy and elder brother, this thing onely requiring, that ſeeyng he was now in place and poſſeſſion, he might enioy it during his life, paying to him yerely iij. thouſand markes, with condition, that which of them ouerlyued the other, ſhould enioy the kingdome. The occaſion of this variance betwene theſe brethren, wrought a great diſſentiõ among the Normaine Lordes and Biſhops, both in England & in Normandy. In ſo much that all the Normain biſhops within the realm almoſt rebelled againſt the king (takyng part with Duke Robert) except onely Lanfrancus, and Wolſtane Biſhop of Worceſter, aboue mentioned an Engliſh man: who for his vertue and conſtancie was ſo wel liked and fauoured of his citizens, that (emboldned wyth his preſence & prayer) they ſtoutly maintained the City of Worceſter agaynſt the ſiege of their enemies, & at laſt vanquiſhed them wyth vtter ruine. But Duke Robert at length by the aduiſe of his counſaile (hearing the wordes ſent vnto him, and wagging his head thereat, as one conceiuing ſome matter of doubt or doublenes) was yet content to aſſent to all that was deſired, & ſo returned ſhortly after into Normandy, leauing the biſhops and ſuch other, in the briers, which were in England taking his part againſt the kyng.

Wolſtane Byſhop of Worceſter.

This Rufus was ſo ill liked of the Normaines, that betwene him and his Lords was oft diſſention. Wherfore (well nere) all the Normains toke part agaynſt him: ſo that he was forced of neceſſitie to drawe to hym the Engliſhe men. Agayne, ſo couetous he was, and ſo vnmeaſurable in his taxes and takings, in ſelling benefices, Abbeys, and Biſhoprickes, that he was hated of all Engliſh men.

Anno. 1091.

The death of Lanfrancus Archb. of Canterb.

In the third yere of this king, died Lancfrancus Archbiſhop of Cant. from whoſe commendation and worthines as I liſt not to detract any thing (being ſo greatly magnified of Polidorus his countreyman) ſo neyther, doe I ſee any great cauſe, why to adde any thing therunto. This I thinke, vnleſſe that man had brought with him leſſe ſuperſtition, and more ſincere ſcience into Chriſtes Church, he might haue kept him in his countrey ſtill, & haue confuted Berengarius at home. After yͤ deceaſe of Lanfranke, the ſea of Cant. ſtode emptie iiij. yeares.

Remigius Byſhop of Lincolne.

Lincolne minſter builded.

Stow Abbey builded.

After the counſaile of Lancfrancus aboue mentioned: wherin was concluded for tranſlating of Biſhops ſeas, from villages into head cities: Remigius biſhop of Dorcheſter, who (as ye heard, accompanied Lancfrancus vnto Rome) remoued his Biſhops ſea from Dorcheſter vnto Lincolne, where he builded the minſter there ſituate vpon an hill within the ſayd citie of Lincoln. The dedication of which church, Robert Archbiſhop of Yorke did reſiſt, ſaying that it was builded within the ground of his precinct. But after, it had his Romiſh dedication by Robert Bloet, next biſhop that followed. By the ſame Remigius alſo was founded the cloiſter or monaſtery of Stow, &c.

Anno. 1092.

Wynchecombe ſteeple brent with lightning. Vi. hundreth houſes blowne down with wynde. The roofe of Bowe Church ouerthrowne.

In the iiij. yeare of this king, great tempeſt fell in ſondry places of England, ſpecially at Winchcombe, where the ſteeple was burned with lightning, the Church walle braſt through, the head and right leg of the Crucifixe, with the Image of our Lady, on the right ſide of the Crucifixe throwen downe, and ſuch a ſtench left in the Church, that none might abide it. At London the force of the weather & tempeſt ouerturned vj. hundreth houſes. In which tempeſt the roofe of Bowe church was whurled vp in yͤ wind, and by the vehemence thereof was pitched downe a great deepenes into the ground.

Robert Bleuet payd v. thouſand markes for hys Biſhopricke.

King William (as ye heard an exceding piller or rauener rather of Church goods) after he had geuen the Biſhoprike of Lincolne to his Chauncellor Robert Bleuet (aboue minded) began to cauil, auouching the ſea of Lincoln to belong to the ſea of Yorke, till the Biſhop of Lincolne had pleaſed him with a great ſumme of money of v. thouſand markes, &c.

Herbert Loſinga Byſhop of Norwiche. Loſinga. i. adulator.

Norwiche mynſter builded by Herbert.

And as nothing could come in thoſe dayes without mony from the king, ſo Herbert Loſinga paying to the kyng a peece of money, was made biſhop of Thetford, as he had payd a little before to be Abbot of Rameſey. Who likewiſe the ſame time, remouing his ſea from Thetford to the Citie of Norwich, there erected the Cathedrall Church with the cloiſter in the ſaid citie of Norwich, where he furniſhed the Monkes with ſufficient liuing and rentes of his owne charges, beſides the Biſhops landes. Afterward repentyng of his open and manifeſt ſimonie, he went to Rome: where he reſigned vnto the Popes hands his biſhoprike: but ſo, that incontinẽt he receiued it againe. This Herbert was the ſonne of an Abbot called Robert, for whõ he purchaſed of the king to be biſhop of Wincheſter, wherof runneth theſe verſes.

Pope victor the 3.

Pope victor poyſoned in his chalice.

A compariſō betwene Hildebrand Pope of Rome: and Ieroboam king of Iſraell.

The order of Charter monkes began.

Ye heard a little before of the death of Pope Hildebrād, after the tyme of which Hildebrand, the Germain Emperors began to looſe their authoritie and right in the Popes electiō, and in geuing of benefices. For next after this Hildebrand, came Pope Victor by the ſetting vp of Matilda, and the Duke of Normandy, with the faction and retinue of Hildebrand, who likewiſe ſhewed himſelfe ſtout againſt yͤ emperor. But God gaue the ſhrewd Cow ſhort hornes: For Victor beyng poyſoned (as ſome ſay in his chalice) ſate but one yeare and a halfe. Notwithſtanding the ſame imitation and example of Hildebrand continued ſtill in thē that followed after. And like as the kings of Iſrael folowed moſt part the ſteps of Ieroboam, till the tyme of their deſolation: ſo for the greateſt ſort all Popes followed the ſteps and proceedings, of this Hildebrand their ſpirituall Ieroboam, in maintaining falſ worſhip, and chiefly in vpholding the dignitie of the iea, againſt all rightfull authoritie, and the lawful kingdom of Sion. In the time of this Victor, began the order of the Monkes of Charterhouſe, through the meanes of one Hugo biſhop of Gracionople, and of Bruno biſhop of Colen.

Pope Vrbanus 2.

Two Popes in Rome.

The order of Ciſtercian or whyte monkes beganne.

Next to Victor ſate Vrbanus the ij. by whom the acts of Hildebrand were confirmed, & alſo new decrees enacted againſt Henricus the Emperour. In this time were two Popes at Rome, Vrbanus and Clemens iij. whome the Emperor ſet vp. Vnder Pope Vrbane came in the white Monkes of Ciſtercian order, by one Stephen Harding a monke of Shireborne (an Engliſhman) by whom this order had his beginning in the wildernes of Ciſtery, within the prouince of Burgoyne, as witneſſeth Ceſtrenſis. Other write that this Harding was the ij. Abbot of that place, & that it was firſt founded by the meanes of one Robert Abbot of Moliſme in Ciſtercium, a Foreſt in Burgundy, an. 1098. (perſwaded perchance by Harding) and afterward in the yere of our Lord, 1135. it was brought into England by a certaine man called Eſpek, which builded an Abbey of the ſame order called Merinale. In this order yͤ monks did liue by the labour of their hands. They paid no tithes, nor offrings: they weare no furre nor lyning: they weare red ſhoes, their coules white, and coate blacke, all ſhorne ſaue a little circle: they eate no fleſh but only in their iourney. Of this order was Bernardus, &c.

Synodus Romana vel Placentina.

This Vrbanus held diuers Councels: one at Rome, where he excommunicated all ſuch lay perſons as gaue inueſtiture of any Eccleſiaſticall benefice. Alſo all ſuch of the Clergy as abiected themſelues to be vnderlings or ſeruants to lay perſons for Eccleſiaſticall benefices, &c.

Synodus Claromantana.

An other Councell he held at Cleremount in France. where among other things the biſhop made an Oration to the Lords, being there preſent concerning the voiage & recouering of the holy land from the Turkes and Sarazens. The cauſe of which voiage firſt ſprang by one Peter a monke or Hermite, who being in Ieruſalem, & ſeing the great miſery of the Chriſtians vnder the Paganes, made thereof declaration to Pope Vrbane, & was therin a great ſollicitor to all chriſtian Princes. By reaſon whereof, after the foreſaid Oration of pope Vrbane 30000. men (takyng on them the ſigne of the croſſe for their cogniſaunce) made preparation for that voiage, whoſe Captains were Godfrey duke of Loraine with his two brethren, Euſtace, and Baldwine, the biſhop of Pody, Bohemund duke of Puell and his nephew Tancredus, Raymund Erle of S. Egidius, Robert Erle of Flaunders, and Hugh le Graund, brother of Phillip the French king. To whome alſo was ioyned Robert Courthoyſe duke of Normandy, with diuers other noble men, with the foreſayd Peter the Heremite, who was the chiefe cauſer of that voiage.

The viage vnto the holy land. The number that went. The captaynes of thē whiche went to the holy land.

At that tyme many of the ſayd Noble men layed their lands & lordſhips to morgage, for to prouide for the forenamed voiage: as Godfrey duke of Lorayne, who ſold the Dukedome of Boloine to the Biſhop of Eburone for a great ſumme of money. Alſo Robert Courthoyſe Duke of Normandy layd his Dukedome to pledge to his brother William king of England for x. thouſand pounds, &c.

Anno. 1096.

Thus the Chriſtians which paſſed firſt ouer Boſphorus, hauing to their captaine Peter the Heremite (a man perchance more deuout then expert to guide an army) beyng trapped of their enemies, were ſlaine & murthered in great number among the Bulgars, and nere to the towne called Ciuitus.

The actes of the Chriſtians in their viage to win Hieruſalem.

When the nobles and the whole army met together at Conſtantinople (where Alexius was Emperour) paſſing ouer by Helleſpontus goyng to Ieruſalem, they tooke the cities of Nicea, Eraclea, Tarſis, and ſubdued the country of Cicilia, appointing the poſſeſſion thereof to certayne of their Captaines.

Antioch taken of the Chriſtians.

Anno. 1098.

Antioch was beſieged, and in the ix. month of the ſiege it was yelded to the Chriſtians by one Pyrrhus: about which ſeaſon were fought many ſtrong battayles to the great ſlaughter and deſolation of the Sarazens, and not without loſſe of many Chriſtian men. The gouernance of this Citie was committed to Boamund Duke of Puell, whoſe martiall knighthood was often proued in tyme of the ſiege thereof.

The ſlaughter of the Perſian infidels.

And not long after, Corbona, maiſter of the Perſians Chiualry, was vanquiſhed and ſlayne, with an hundreth thouſand Infidels. In which diſcomfiture were taken 15000. camels.

Hieruſalem conquered by the Chriſtians.

Ex Henric. li. 7.

Ieruſalem the 39. day of the ſiege was conquered by the Chriſtians. Robert Duke of Normandy was elect to be king therof. But he refuſed, hearing of the death of king William of Eng. wherfore he neuer ſped in all his affaires well after the ſame. Then Godfrey captaine of the chriſtian army was proclaimed the firſt king of Ieruſalem. At the taking of the City was ſuch a murder of men, that bloud was congeled in the ſtreete the thicknes of a foote. Then after Godfrey raigned Baldwine his brother. After hym Baldwine the ſecond nephew. Then Gaufridus duke of Gaunt, and after him Gaufridus his ſonne, by whom many great battails there were fought againſt the Sarazens and all the countrey thereabout ſubdued ſaue Aſcalon, &c. And thus much hetherto touching the voyage to the holy land. Now to our owne land agayne.

The king of Englands iudgment agaynſt the Pope.

Ex Math. pariſ.

About this tyme (as Matthæus Pariſienſis writeth) the kinge of England fauoured not much the ſea of Rome, becauſe of their impudent and vnſatiable exactiōs, which they required, neither would he ſuffer any of his ſubiectes to go to Rome, alleaging theſe wordes in the author thus expreſſed: Quòd Petri non inhærent veſtigijs, præmijs inhiantes, non eius poteſtatem retinent, cuius ſanctitatem probantur non imitari: that is, becauſe they follow not the ſteppes of Peter, hunting for rewardes, neither haue they the power and authoritie of him, whoſe holineſſe they declare themſelues not to follow, &c.

By the ſame Vrbanus, the ſeuen Houres whiche we call ſeptem horas Canonicas, were firſt inſtituted in the Church.

Example of Gods rightfull iudgement in puniſhing cruel murther.

In the 6. yere of this kings raigne, Malcolme king of Scots which foure times before had made great ſlaughter of old & yong in the North partes, as is before ſhewed, braſte into Northumberland with all the power he could make, and there by the right iudgement of God was ſlain with his ſonne Edward, and alſo Margaret his wife, ſiſter to Edgar Adeling aboue mynded, a vertuous and deuout Lady, within 3. dayes after.

Anſelmus made Archbiſhop of Cant.

The ſame yeare he gaue the Archbiſhoprike of Caunterbury (after that he had detayned the ſame in hys owne handes 4. yeares) to Anſelmus Abbot of Becke in Normandie

The ſaying of Anſelme pondered.

This Anſelme was an Italian in the Citie of Auguſta borne, and brought vp in the Abbey of Becke in Normandy: where, he was ſo ſtraight a folower of vertue, that (as the ſtory recordeth) he wiſhed rather to bee without ſinne in hell, then in heauen with ſinne. Which ſaying and wiſh of his (if it were his) may ſeeme to proceede out of a mynde neither ſpeaking orderly according after the phraſe and vnderſtanding of the ſcripture, nor yet ſufficiently acquainted with the iuſtification of a chriſten man. Further, they report him to be ſo farre from ſingularitie: that hee ſhould ſay it was the vice which thruſt the angels firſt out of heauen, and man out of paradiſe.

The vice of ſingularitie.

Of this Anſelme it is moreouer reported, that he was ſo ilwilling to take the Archbiſhoprike, that the kyng had Anſelme ill willing to take the Archbiſhop prick.

Strife and contention betweene the king and Anſelmus.

much adoe to thruſt it vpon him: and was ſo deſirous to haue him take it, that the Citie of Caunterbury (which before Lanfrancus did holde but at the kings good wyll and pleaſure) he gaue now to Anſelme wholy, which was about the yere of our Lord, 1093. But as deſirous as yͤ king was then to place the ſayd Anſelme, ſo much did he repent it afterward, ſeeking all maner of meane to defeate hym if he might. Such ſtrife and contention roſe betweene them two for certayne matters, the ground and occaſion whereof, firſt was this.

Anſelme ſtopped from hys conſecration.

Anſelme conſecrated.

Anſelme doth homage to K. William.

After that Anſelmus had bene thus elected to the ſee of Canterbury, before he was fully conſecrate, the king commoned with him (aſſaying by all gentle maner of wordes to entreat him) that ſuch lands & poſſeſſions of the church of Cant. as the king had geuen and granted to his friends ſince the death of Lanfrancus: they might ſtill enioy the ſame, as their owne lawful poſſeſſion, through his graunt and permiſſion. But to this, Anſelme in no caſe would agree. Wherupon the king conceiuing great diſpleaſure againſt him, did ſtop his conſecration a great ſeaſon, till at length in long proces of time, the king enforced by the daily complaintes and deſires of his people and ſubiects for lacke of an Archbiſhop to moderate the church, was conſtrained to admit and autoriſe hym vnto them. Thus Anſelme with much ado, takyng his conſecration, and doyng his homage to the king, went to his ſee of Cant. And not long after, the king ſailed ouer to Normandy.

The kinges argument agaynſt Anſelme.

The cuſtome of England, from William Conquerours time not to Appeale to the Pope.

Anſelmus reply againſt the king.

The reaſons of Anſelme to proue the popes authority aboue other kings.

Anſelme here ignorauntly calleth the Pope the vicare of S. Peter, where the Cãnon lawe calleth him but the ſucceſſour of Peter and vicare of Chriſt.

About this time there were two ſtriuing in Rome for the Popedome, as is afore touched. Urbanus & Guibertus. Diuers realmes diuerſly conſenting, ſome to the one, ſome to the other. England taking part with theyr kyng was rather enclined to Guibertus, called Clemens the 3. but Anſelmus did fully go with Urbanus, making ſo hys exception with the king, entring to his biſhopricke. After the king was returned againe from Normandy, yͤ Archbiſhop commeth to him and aſketh leaue to goe to Rome, to fet his palle of Pope Urban: which when he could not at the firſt obtaine, he maketh his appeale from the king to the Pope. Whereat the king beyng iuſtly diſpleaſed, chargeth the Archbiſhop with breach of his feaultie, contrary to his promiſe made: that is, if he, without his licence, would appeale eyther to Urbane or to any other Pope. Anſelme aunſwereth agayne, that was to bee referred to ſome greater councell, where it is to be diſputed, whether this be to breake a mans allegeance to a terrene Prince, if he appeale to the vicar of S. Peter. And here much arguyng and contending was on both ſides. The kings reaſon proceeded thus: The cuſtome (ſayth he) from my fathers time hath bene in England, that no perſon ſhould appeale to the Pope without the kings licence. He that breaketh the cuſtomes of the realme, violateth the power and crowne of the kingdom. He that violateth and taketh away my crowne, is a traitour and enemy againſt me, &c. To this Anſelme replieth agayne: The Lord (ſayth he) eaſilie diſcuſſeth this queſtion, briefly teachyng what fidelitie and allegeaunce we ought to geue to the vicar of S. Peter, where he ſayth: thou art Peter, and vpon this rocke will I build my church, &c. And to thee I wyll geue the keyes of the kingdom of heauen, and whatſoeuer thou ſhalt bynde in earth, it ſhall be bound in heauen, and whatſoeuer thou looſeſt in earth, ſhall be looſed in heauen, &c. Agayne to them all in general, he ſaith: he that heareth you, heareth me, and who deſpiſeth you, deſpiſeth me. And in an other place, he that toucheth you, toucheth the apple of myne eie. On the other ſide, what duety we owe to the king, he ſheweth alſo. Geue (ſayth he) to the Emperour, what belongeth to the Emperour, and to God, geue that to God belongeth. Wherefore in ſuch things as belong to God, I will yeld and muſt yeld by good right and duetie, my obedience to the vicar of S. Peter, and in ſuch thinges as belong agayne to terrene dignitie of my prince, in thoſe I will not deny to him my faithfull helpe and counſell, ſo far as they can extend.

All the Biſhops of the Realme ſtoode of the kinges ſide agaynſt Anſelmus. William Byſhop of Dureſme.

Gualterus the Popes legate commeth to England.

Anſelme could not be remoued by the king. The pope taketh this no fault, for a ſubiect to repugne agaynſt hys king.

Thus haue ye the grounded arguments of this Prelate, to ſtand ſo ſtifly agaynſt his prince, wherunto peraduenture was ioyned alſo ſome piece of a ſtubburne hart. But in this concluſion, none of his fellow biſhops durſt take his part, but were all againſt him: namely, William Biſhop of Dureſme. To whom Anſelme thus proteſteth, ſaying: who ſo euer he were that would preſume to proue it any breach of allegeaunce of feaulty to his ſoueraigne, if he appealed to the vicar of S. Peter, he was ready to aunſwer at all tymes to the contrary: the biſhop of Dureſme aunſwering againe, that he which would not be ruled by reaſon, muſt with force be cõſtrained, &c. The king hauing on his part the agreement of the Biſhops, thought to depriue the Archb. both of his paſtorall ſea, and to expell him out of the realme. But he could not performe his purpoſe, for Anſelme as he was ready to depart the realme, he ſayd: whenſoeuer he went, he would take his office and authoritie with him, though he tooke nothing els. Wherupon, that matter was deferred till a longer tyme. In the meane ſeaſon the king had ſent priuily two meſſengers to Pope Urbane, to intreat him to ſend his pall to the king for him to geue it where he would. Which meſſengers by this time were returned againe, bringing with them from Rome Gualter biſhop of Albane the popes Legate, with the pall to be geuẽ to Anſelme. This Legate firſt landing at Douer, from thence came priuily (vnknowing to Anſelme) to the king, declaring and promiſing, that if Urbane was receyued pope in England, whatſoeuer the king required to be obtayned, he by his priuiledge from the Apoſtolicall ſea would ratifie and confirme the ſame, ſaue onely that when the king required of the Legate that Anſelme might be remoued, the Legate therunto would not agree, ſaying: that was vnpoſſible to be obtained, that ſuch a man as he, beyng lawfully called, ſhould bee expelled without manifeſt cauſe. In concluſion ſo it folowed, that although he could not obtain his requeſt of the Legate, yet yͤ Legate wroght ſo with the king, that Urbane was proclaymed lawfull Pope through all the realme.

The ſtoutnes of Anſelme ſtanding agaynſt hys king.

The maner of bringing in Anſelms palle into Cant.

Then were ſent to Anſelmus certain biſhops to moue and proue his mynd, declaring what charges and paynes the kyng had bene at in his behalfe, to procure the pall for hym from Rome, which otherwyſe would haue ſtood him in great expences, and that all this the king hath done for his ſake. Wherfore it were good reaſon and conueniẽt, that he (to gratifie the king) ſhould ſomething condeſcend to his requeſt againe. But with all this, Anſelme the ſtoute Archbiſhop would not be moued. Wherefore the kyng ſeeyng none other remedy, was compelled to graunt vnto him yͤ full right of his Archbiſhoprike. And ſo yͤ day apointed when the palle ſhould be brought to Canterbury (being caried with all ſolemnitie in a thing of ſiluer) the Archbiſhop with a great concourſe of people, came forth barefoot, with his prieſtly veſtiments, after a moſt goodly maner to meete the ſame. And ſo beyng brought in, was layd vppon the aulter, whileſt Anſelme (ſpreading ouer hys ſhoulders his popiſh veſtiments) proceeded vnto his popiſh maſſe.

An other quarrell of the king againſt Anſelme.

Anſelme agayne appealeth to Rome.

The kinges aunſwere to Anſelme for hys appealing to Rome.

The cuſtome of England, no prelate or noble man to goe to Rome without the kinges ſending.

Thus agreement beyng made betwene the kyng and the biſhop, ſo long as it would hold. It happened the yere following, the kyng with his army entred into Wales to ſubdue ſuch as there rebelled againſt him. After the victory gotten, the king returned home agayne with triumph. To whom Anſelme thought to haue come, to congratulate his proſperous ſucceſſe. But the king preuented hym by meſſengers, laying to the biſhops charge both the ſmal number & euil ſeruice of his ſouldiours ſent to him at hys need. At the hearing hereof, all the hope of Anſelme was daſht, who at the ſame preſent had thought to haue obtayned & done many great matters with the king touching the ſtate of the Church. But here all turned contrary to his expectation. In ſo much, that he was charged againſt the next court of parliament, to make his aunſwer. But he auoided that by appealing to Rome. Wherfore he made his ſute and friendes to the king for liſence to go to the Pope. Unto the which ſute, the king aunſwered agayne, that he ſhould not go, neither was there any cauſe for him ſo to do for that both he knew him to be of ſo ſound a lyfe, yͭ he had done no ſuch offence whereof hee needed to craue abſolution at Rome, neither was there any ſuch lacke of ſcience & knowledge, that he neded to borrow any counſel there. In ſo much (ſayth the kyng) that I dare ſay. Pope Urbane, rather hath to geue place to the wyſedome of Anſelme, then Anſelme to haue neede of Urbane. Wherefore as he hath no cauſe to goe, ſo I charge hym to tary. And if he continue in his ſtubburnnes ſtill, I wil aſſuredly ſeaſon vpon his poſſeſſions, and conuert his Archbiſhoprike vnto my cofers: for that he tranſgreſſeth and breaketh hys fidelitie and obeiſaunce, promiſing before to obſerue all the cuſtomes of my kyngdome. Neyther is it the faſhion in this Realme, that any of my Nobles ſhould goe to Rome without my ſending. And therefore, let him ſweare vnto me, yͭ he ſhall neyther for any greuance, appeale hereafter to the ſea of Rome, or els let him voyde my realme.

The anſwer of Anſelme to the king.

Againſt theſe wordes of the king, Anſelme thinkyng not beſt to reply agayne by any Meſſage, but by worde of mouth, comming himſelfe perſonally to the kyng, placeth himſelfe (after his order) on the right hand of the Prince, where he made his reply vnto the meſſage ſent to hym by the kyng. Where as ye ſay, I ought not to goe to Rome either for lacke of any treſpaſſe, or for aboundance of counſaile and knowledge in me (albeit I graunt to neither of them as true) yet what the truth is therein, I referre it to the iudgement of God. And whereas ye ſay that I promiſed to kepe and obſerue your cuſtomes: that I graunt, but with a condition: ſo farre to keepe them, and ſuch of them to obſerue, as were conſonant to the lawes of God, & ruled with right and equitie. Moreouer, whereas ye charge me with breach of my fidelity and allegeance, for that contrary to your cuſtomes I appeale to the Sea Apoſtolicke (my reuerence and dutie to your ſoueraigntie reſerued) if an other would ſay it, that is vntrue. For the fidelitie and obeiſaunce that I owe to thee (O King) I haue it of the faith and fidelitie of God, whoſe Vicare S. Peter is: to whoſe ſeat I do appeale. Farther, whereas ye require me to ſweare, that I ſhal for no cauſe hereafter at any time appeale to Rome: I pronoūce openly that a chriſtian Prince requireth ſuch an othe of his Archbiſhop vniuſtly. For if I ſhould forſweare S. Peter, I ſhould denye Chriſt. And when I ſhall at any time deny Chriſt, then ſhall I be content and ready to ſtand to my ſatiſfaction of my tranſgreſſion to you, for aſking licenſe to goe to Rome. And peraduenture when I am gone, the goodes of the Churche ſhall not ſo ſerue your temporal deſires and commodities as ye wene for. At theſe wordes of the Biſhop, the king and his nobles were not a little incenſed: defending againe, that in obſeruing the kinges cuſtomes, there was neither condition nor any clauſe put in, either of God or right. No was, ſayde Anſelme? If ſo be that in your cuſtomes was neither mention made of God nor of right, whereof was there mention then? For God forbid that any Chriſtian ſhoulde be bound to any cuſtomes, which goe contrary to God and to right: Thus on both ſides paſſed much altercation betwene thē. At length, the king after many threatning wordes, tolde him he ſhould cary nothing out of the realme with him. Well ſayde the Biſhop, if I may neyther haue my horſe, nor garmentes with me, then will I walke on foote. And ſo addreſſed him toward his iourney (all the other biſhops forſaking him) wherof none would take his part: but if he came to them for their counſaile, they ſayd he was wiſe inough, and needed not their counſaile, as who for his prudence knewe beſt what was to be done, as alſo for his holines was willing and able to proſecute the ſame that he did know. As for them, they neither durſt nor wold ſtand againſt the king their Lord: whoſe fauour they could not lacke, for the peril that might happen both to thēſelues and to their kinrede. But for him becauſe he was both a ſtranger, and void of ſuch worldly corruption in him: they willed him to goe forwarde as he had begon, their ſecrete conſent he ſhoulde haue, but their open voice they woulde not geue him. Thus Anſelmus remaining at Douer 15. daies tarying for winde: at laſt ſped him towarde his paſſage. But his packing being ſecretly knowen in the court: the kings officer (William Warlwaſt) preuented hys purpoſe: ſearching by the kings commaundement al his truſſes, coffers, ſatchels, ſleeues, purſe, napkin and boſome for letters, and for mony, and ſo let him paſſe. Who ſailing into Fraunce, firſt reſted a while at Lions, from thence came to Rome to complaine to Pope Urbane, according to the tenor and forme of a certaine Epiſtle of his, wherin among many other thinges in the ſame Epiſtle conteined: theſe wordes he wryteth to Pope Paſchalis, the third yere after his baniſhment, after the death of Urbane, and a little before the death of the king.

Anſelme ſeruant of the Churche of Cant. offereth due ſub-iection from his heart, and prayers, if they can ſtand in any ſtede. Ex Epiſt. 36. Paulò poſt initium.

I See in Englād many euils, whoſe correction belongeth to me, and which I could neither amend, nor ſuffer without mine owne fault. The king deſireth of me, that vnder the name of right I ſhuld conſent to his pleaſures, which were againſt the lawe and wil of God. For he woulde not haue the Pope receaued nor appealed vnto in Englande, without his commaundement: neither that I ſhould ſend a letter vnto him, or receaue any from him: or that I ſhuld obey his decrees. He ſuffered not a Councell to be kept in his realme, now theſe 13. yeares ſince he was king. In all theſe things, and ſuch like, if I aſked any counſaile, all my ſuffragane Byſhops of his realme, denied to geue me any counſaile, but according to the kinges pleaſure. After that I ſawe theſe and ſuch other thinges, that are done againſt the will and lawe of God: I aſked licenſe of him to goe to Rome, vnto the ſea Apoſtolicall, that I might there take counſaile for my ſoule, and the office committed to me. The king ſayd, that I offended agaynſt hym for the onely aſking of licenſe: And propounded to me, that eyther I ſhould make hym amendes for the ſame as a treſpaſſe (aſſuring hym neuer to aſke this licenſe any more to appeale to the pope at anye tyme hereafter) or els that I ſhoulde quickly depart out of hys land. Wherefore choſen rather to goe out of the land: then to agree to ſo wicked a thing: I came to Rome, as ye know, and declared the whole matter to the Lord Pope. The king by and by (as ſoone, as I went out of England) inuaded the whole Archbiſhoprike, and turned it to hys owne vſe: taxing the monkes onely with bare meate, drinke, and clothe. The king being warned and deſired of the Lord Pope to amend this, he contēned the ſame: and yet continueth in his purpoſe ſtill. And now is the third yere ſince I came thus out of Englande and more. Some men not vnderſtanding, demaund why I did not excommunicate the king. But the wiſer ſort, and ſuch as haue vnderſtanding counſayle me, that I doe not this thing: becauſe it belongeth not to me both to complayne, and to puniſh. To conclude, I was forewarned by my frendes that are vnder the king, that my excommunication (if it ſhould be done) would be laughed to ſcorne and deſpiſed &c.

A fragment or portion of a letter of Anſelme to Pope Paſchalis. Et ex legenda Anſ. aut Edmero. Ex Epiſtol. Anſelm. 36.

The king would not haue the pope receaued, nor appealed vnto in England.

Anſelme complayneth of the K. & of hys ſuffragane Byſhops.

The king contemneth the Popes warning.

By theſe here aboue prefixed, appeareth how Anſelme the Archbiſhop comming to Rome, made hys complaynt to the Pope Urbane of the king: and how the Pope writing to the king in the behalfe of Anſelme: hys letters and commaundementes were deſpiſed. And now to our ſtory. In the meane tyme while the popes letters were ſent to the king, Anſelme was byd to wayte about the Pope to looke for an aunſwere backe. Who perceauing (at length) how little the king reputed the popes letters, began to be weary of hys office: deſiring the pope that he might be diſcharged thereof. But the Pope in no caſe woulde thereto conſent, charging hym vpon hys obedience, that whereſoeuer he went, he ſhoulde beare with him the name and honour of the Archbiſhop of Cant. Whereunto, Anſelmus agayne ſayd, hys obedience, he neyther durſt nor woulde refuſe, as who for Gods cauſe, was ready to ſuffer, whatſoeuer ſhould happen (yea though it were death it ſelfe) as he thought no leſſe would follow thereof. But what ſhold we think (ſayth he) is there to be done, where not onely iuſtice taketh no place, but is vtterly oppreſſed? and where as my ſuffraganes not onely doe not helpe (for dread) the righteous cauſe: but alſo for fauour do impugne the ſame. Well (ſayth the Pope) as touching theſe matters, we ſhal ſufficiently prouide for at the next Councell at Baron: where as I will you the ſame tyme and place to be preſent.

When the tyme of the Councell was come, Anſelme among other was called for. Who firſt ſitting in an vtter ſide of yͤ Byſhops, afterward was placed at yͤ right foote of the Pope, with theſe wordes: Includamus hunc in orbe noſtro tanquam alterius orbis Papam. Wherupon the ſame place after hym was appoynted to the ſucceſſours of the ſea of Cant. (in euery general Councel by the decree of Urbane) to ſit at the right foote of the pope. In this Councell, great ſturre and much reaſoning there was agaynſt the Grecians, concerning the matter and order of proceeding of the holy Ghoſt. Where is to be noted that the Greeke Church hath of long tyme diſſented from the Latine church in many and ſondry poyntes, to the number of xx. or almoſt xxix. Articles, as I haue them collected out of the Regiſter of yͤ Church of Hereford. Whereof, lyke as occaſion hereafter may ſerue (God willing) for a further & more ample tractation to be made: ſo here by the waye partly I meane to touch ſome. The firſt is.

Concilium Baronēſe.

Anſelme and hys ſucceſſours of Cant. placed at the right foot of the pope in generall councels.

De proceſſione ſpiritus ſancti.

The difference betweene the greeke Church and the latine.

❧ Wherein the Greeke Church differeth from the Latine.

THe firſt article wherein the Greeke Churche altereth from the Latine or Romiſh Church is this, Quòd ſunt extra obedientiam Romanæ eccleſiæ, pro eo quòd eccleſia Conſtantinopolitana non eſt ſubiecta, ſed ei æqualis. 1. Dicunt Dominum Apoſtolicum non habere maiorem poteſtatem, q̄ iiii. Patriarchæ. Et quicquid fit præter ſcientiam eorum per Papam, vel ſine eorum approbatione, nullius eſt valoris &c. In Engliſhe. Firſt they are not vnder the obedience of the Churche of Rome, becauſe that the Church of Conſtantinople is not ſubiect, but equall to the ſame.

2. They hold that the Biſhop of the Apoſtolicke Sea of Rome, hath greater power then the 4. Patriarches. And what ſoeuer the Pope doth beſide their knowledge, or without their approbation, it is of no valor.

3. Item they ſay, what ſoeuer hath bene done or concluded ſince the ſecond generall Councell, is of no full authoritie, becauſe from that time they recount the Latines to be in errour, and to be excluded out of the holy Church.

4. Item Dicunt Euchariſtiam conſecratam per Romanam Eccleſiam non eſſe verum corpus Chriſti. 1. They hold the

The articles and opinions of the greeke Church differing from the Latine Church of Rome.

Euchariſt conſecrated by the Churche of Rome, not to be the very body of Chriſt. Alſo where the Romiſh Churche doth cōſecrate in vnleauened bread, they cōſecrate in bread leauened.

5. Item they ſay, that the Romiſh church doth erre in the wordes of Baptiſme for ſaying, I baptiſe thee, when they ſhould ſay: let this creature of God be baptiſed. &c.

6. They hold moreouer, to be no Purgatory, nor that the Suffrages of the Church do auaile the dead, either to leſſe the paine of them, that be deſtinate to hell, or to increaſe the glory of them that be ordained to ſaluation.

7. Item they hold, that yͤ ſoules out of the bodies departed (whether they haue done good or euill) haue not their perfect paine, nor glory: but are reſerued in a certain place, till the day of iudgement.

8. Item they condemne the church of Rome, for mixting cold water in their ſacrifice.

9. Item they condemne the Church of Rome, for that as wel women as prieſts annoynt children (when they baptiſe them) on both ſhoulders.

10. Item Dicunt panem noſtrum panagiam. i. They call our bread Panagia.

11. Item they blame the Church of Rome, for celebrating their Maſſe on other daies beſide Sondaies, and certaine other feaſtes appoynted.

12. Alſo in this the Greeke Church varieth from the Latine, for they haue neither creame, nor oyle, nor ſacrament of confirmation.

13. Neither do they vſe extreme vnction, or anoyling after the maner of the Romane church, expounding the place of S. James of the ſpirituall infirmitie, and not corporall.

14. Item they enioyne no ſatiſfaction for penance, but onely that they ſhewe themſelues to the Prieſts, annoynting them with ſimple oyle in token of remiſſion of ſinnes.

15. Item onely on maundy Thurſday they conſecrate for the ſicke: keeping it for the whole yeare after, thinking it to be more holy vpon that day conſecrate, then vppon any other. Neither doe they faſt any ſaterday through yͤ whole yeare, but onely on Eaſter euen.

16. Item they geue but onely 5. orders as of Clearkes, Subdeacons, Deacones, Prieſtes, & Byſhops, when as the Romaine Church geueth ix. orders after the ix. orders of Aungels.

My copy here ſeemed to want ſomewhat.

17. Moreouer, the Greciās in their orders make no vow of chaſtitie, alledging for them the 5. Canon of N. *Ego præsbyter vel Diaconus, vxorem cauſa honeſtatis non reijciam. &c. i. I. N. Prieſt or Deacon will not forſake my wiſe for honeſtie ſake.

18. Item, euery yeare the Grecians, vſe vpon certaine dayes to excommunicate the Church of Rome, and all the Latines, as heretickes.

19. Item, among the ſayde Grecians they are excommunicate, that beate or ſtrike a Prieſt. Neither doe their religious men liue in ſuch Prieſtly chaſtitie, as the Romane Prieſts doe.

20. Item, their Emperour among them, doeth ordaine Patriarches, Biſhops, and other of the Clergy, and depoſeth the ſame at his pleaſure, alſo geueth benefices to whō he luſteth, and retaineth the fruites of the ſame benefices, as pleaſeth him.

This article ſeemeth not to be rightly collected, out of the Grecians.

21. Item, they blame the Latine Churche becauſe they eate not fleſh, egges, and cheſe, on Friday, and do eate fleſh on Saterdaies.

22. Item, they holde againſt the Latine men, for celebrating without the conſecrated Churche, either in the houſe or in the field: And faſting on the Sabboth day: And for permitting menſtruous women, to enter into the Church before their purifying: Alſo for ſuffering dogges, and other beaſtes, to enter into the Church.

23. The Grecians vſe not to knele in all their deuotions, yea not to the body of Chriſt (as the regiſter termeth it) but one day in the whole yeare: ſaying and affirming, that the Latines be goates and beaſtes, for they are alwayes proſtrating themſelues vpon the ground in their praiers.

24. The Grecians moreouer permit not the Latines, to celebrate vpon their altars. And if it chaunce any Latine Prieſt to celebrate vpon their altar, by and by they waſhe their altare, in token of abomination & falſe ſacrifice. And diligently they obſerue, that whē ſoeuer they do celebrate, they do but one Liturgie or maſſe vpon one altar or table, that day.

25 Item, they diſſent from the Church of Rome, touching the order and maner, of the proceding of the holy Ghoſt.

These Articles wherein is declared the difference betwene the Eaſt and weſt church, of the Grecians and Romanes, as I found them articulate and collected in an ancient & autentical regiſter of the churche of Herforde: ſo I thought heere to inſerte them, & leaue them to the conſideration of the Reader. Other foure articles moe in the ſame Regiſter be there expreſſed, concerning ſimonie, vſurie not to them forbidden, and touching alſo their Emperour, and how they teach their children to hurt or dāniſy by any maner of way the Latine prieſtes. &c. which articles, for that either they ſeme not truly collected out of their teachings, or els not greatly pertinent to the doctrine of Religion, I ouerpaſſe them. To the purpoſe now of our ſtorie againe.

When certaine of theſe aboue prefixed, were moued in the foreſaid Councel to be diſcuſſed, namely concerning the aſſertion of proceeding of the holy Ghoſt: and concerning leauened bread in the miniſtration of the Lords Supper. Anſelme, as is aboue ſayd, was called for, who in the tractation of the ſame Articles ſo beſturred him in that councell, that hee well liked the Pope, and them about him, as mine author recordeth. Wherupon, touching the matter of vnleauened bread how indifferētly he ſeemed there to reaſon: and what he writeth to Walerane Byſhop of Nurenburgh, therof ye ſhal heare by a pece of his letter ſent to the ſayd Byſhop, the copie whereof here inſueth.

A letter of Anſelme ſent to Valtrā Biſhop of Nurenburgh. Ex Epiſt. Anſel. 325.

AS concerning the ſacrifice in which the Grecians thinke not as we doe: it ſemeth to many reaſonable Catholike men: that which they do, not to be againſt the Chriſtian faith, for bothe he that ſacrificeth vnleauened and leauened ſacrificeth breade. And where it is red of our Lord (whē he made his body of bread) that he tooke bread and bleſſed: it is not added vnleauened, or leauened. Yet it is certaine that he bleſſed vnleauened bread (peraduenture) not becauſe the thing that was done required that, but becauſe the ſupper in which this was done, did geue that. And wher as in an other place he called himſelfe and his fleſh bread, becauſe that as many as liue tēporally with this bread, ſo with that bread he liueth for euer. He ſayth not vnleauened or leauened, becauſe both alike are breade. For vnleauened & leauened differ not in ſubſtance as ſome thinke: like as a new man afore ſinne, & an olde rooted man in the leauen of ſinne, differ not in ſubſtance. For this cauſe therefore only, he might be thought to call himſelfe and his fleſh, bread, and made his body of breade, becauſe that this breade (vnleauened or leauened) geueth a tranſitorie life: and his bodie of bread, becauſe that this bread (vnleauened or leauened) giueth a tranſitorie life: and his body geueth euerlaſting life, not for that it is either leauened or vnleauened. Although it be a cōmandement in the lawe, to eate vnleauened breade in the paſſeouer, where all things are done in a figure: that it might be declared, that Chriſt whom they loked for, was pure & cleane: and we that ſhould eate his body were admoniſhed to be likewiſe pure from al leauen and malice and wickedneſſe. But nowe, after we are come from the olde figure to the newe trueth, and eate the vnleauened fleſh of Chriſt: that olde figure in breade (of which we make that fleſh) is not neceſſary for vs. But manifeſt it is, to be better ſacrificed of vnleauened then of leauened, &c.

Bread in the communion to be vnleauened is not neceſſary.

To this letter I haue alſo adioyned an other Epiſtle of his to the ſayd Waltrame, appertaining to matters not much vnlike to the ſame effect: wherein is entreated touching the varietie and diuers vſages of the ſacraments in the church. Wherby ſuch as cal and cry ſo much for vniformitie in the Churche, may note peraduenture in the ſame, ſomething for their better vnderſtanding.

¶ A piece of on other letter of Anſelme to the ſaid Valtram biſhop of Nur.

To the reverende father and his frend Valtram, by the grace of God the worſhipful biſhop of Nurenburgh, Anſelme the ſeruant of the Church of Canterbury greeting. &c.

Ex Epiſt. Anſel. 327. An other letter.

YOur worſhip complaineth of the Sacraments of the Church, that they are not made euery where after one ſorte, but are handled in diuers places after diuers ſortes. And truelie, if they were miniſtred after one ſorte and agreeing through the whole church, it were good and laudable. Yet notwithſtanding, becauſe there be many diuerſities which differ not in the ſumme of the ſacrament, in the ſtrength of it, or in the faith, nor els can be gathered into one cuſtome: I thinke that they are rather to be borne with in agreement of peace, than to be condemned with offence. For we haue this from the holy fathers, thai if the vnitie of charitie be kept in the Catholique faith, the diuerſitie of cuſtomes hurt nothing. But if it be demanded whereof this diuerſity of cuſtomes doe ſpring: I perceiue no other cauſe thereof, but the diuerſitie of mens wits. Which although they differ not in ſtrength and truthe of the thing: yet they agree not in the fitneſſe and comelineſſe of the miniſtring. For that which one iudgeth to be meeter, oftentimes an other thinketh leſſe mete: wherefore not to agree in ſuch diuerſities, I thinke it not to ſwarue frõ the truth of the thing. &c.

Diuerſitie of vſages in the Church to be borne with peace, rather then to be condemned with offēce. Diuers cuſtomes in the Church hurt nothing.

Excommunication denounced agaynſt the Grecians. Excommunication bent agaynſt K. William. Firſt breake hys head, and then geue him a playſter.

Then in the ſtory it followeth, after long debating and diſcuſſing of theſe matters in the councell, when they had geuen forth their determination vpon the ſame: And the Pope had blaſted out his thundring excommunications againſt the Grecians, & all that toke their parte: at length was brought in, touching the complaintes and accuſation againſt the king of England. Vpon the hearing whereof, Pope Vrbane with his adherents was ready to proceede in excommunication againſt the king. But Anſelme kneeling before the Pope, after hee had firſt accuſed his King, then after obtained for him longer time to be geuen vpon further triall.

Meſſage betweene the K. and the Pope.

A loude cracke of thunder, but without a thunderbolt.

Thus the councell breaking vp, the Pope returning againe to Rome, directeth downe his letters to the King, commaunding him that Anſelme with all his partakers (in ſpeedy wiſe) ſhould be reueſted againe into his archbiſhopricke, and al other poſſeſſions thereunto appertaining. To this the king ſendeth anſwere againe by meſſengers, who comming to the Pope, declared in the kings behalfe on this wiſe. That the King their maiſter did not a little meruaile, what came in his minde to commaund Anſelme to be reueſted and reſaiſed againe into his former Archbyſhopricke, ſeeing he told him before plainly, that if he went out of England without his leaue, he woulde ſo doe vnto him. Well ſaith the Pope, haue ye no other matter againſt Anſelmus but onely this? No, quod they. And haue ye taken all this trauel (ſayth the Pope) to come hether ſo farre to tell me this, that the Primate of your countrey is therefore ſeaſed and diſpoſſeſſed, becauſe he hath appealed to the ſea and iudgement Apoſtolicall? Therefore if thou loueſt thy Lord ſpede thee home and tell him, if he wil not be excommuned, that he quickly reueſt Anſelme againe, to all ẏ he had before. And leaſt I make thee to be hanged for thy labour, loke to thy terme, and ſee that thou bring me aunſwer againe from him into this citie, againſt the next coũcel the third weeke after Eaſter. The meſſenger or ſpeaker being ſomewhat aſtonied at the hearing of this ſo ragicall aunſwere: thinking yet to worke ſomething for his King & maſter: came ſecretely to the Pope, ſaying that he would conferre a certaine myſterie from his king priuately wyth his holineſſe betwene them two. What myſterie that was or what there paſſed from the king to the Pope & the court of Rome, mine author doth not ſhew. But ſo cunningly ẏ myſterie was handled: that with a full conſent both of the Pope and all the court of Rome, a longer day was geuen (from Eaſter to Michaelmas) and the popes cholericke heate ſo aſſwaged: that when the councel came (which then was holden in S. Peters Church in Rome) albeit great complaintes were then denounced againſt the King: yet ſuch fauour was found, that he toke no harme. Onely the ſentence of excõmunication was there pronounced againſt ſuch lay perſons as gaue inueſture of Churches, and them ẏ were ſo inueſted. Alſo againſt them that doe conſecrate ſuch, or which geue themſelues in ſubiection to lay mẽ for eccleſiaſtical liuings, as is before touched, &c.

Concilium Romanum. Optimus cauſidicus nummus.

Actes of the councel of Rome.

This Councell being finiſhed, the Archbiſhop ſeeing the vnſtedfaſtneſſe of the Pope (which pleaſed him but a little) toke his iourney to Lions: where he continued his abode a long time, till the death firſt of pope Vrbane, then after of the king.

The hardines or rather raſhnes of K. Wil.

Of this king William, many things be diuerſly recorded, ſome to his commendation, & ſome to his diſcommẽdation: whereof this is one which ſome will aſcribe to hardines, but I rather to raſhnes in him. As this king vpon a time was in his diſport of hunting: ſodenly worde came to him, that Cenourona (a Citie in Normandy) was beſieged. The King without longer tarying or aduiſement, toke the ſtraight way towarde the ſea ſide, ſending to his lordes, that they ſhould followe after. They being come to hys preſence, aduiſed him to ſtaie, till the time his people were aſſembled, but he would not be ſtayed: ſaying, that ſuch as him loued (he knew) wold follow him ſhortly, and ſo went to take ſhip. The ſhipmaſter ſeeing the weather ſo darke and cloudie, was afraide, and counſailed the king to tarrie till the winde did turne about, and the weather more fauourable. But the King perſiſting in his iourney, commaunded him to make all the ſpeede he might for his life (ſaying) that he neuer hearde, that any King yet was euer drowned. And ſo paſſed the ſea in ſafetie, and came to Normandie.

The ſaying of K. Wil. how he neuer knew any K. drowned.

The 13. yeare of his reigne the ſaide king William hauing the ſame time in his hand three byſhoprickes, Cant. Wint. and Sarum: alſo 12. Abbeyes in farme: As he was in his diſport of hunting in the new foreſt, by glaunſing of an arrowe (ſhot of a Knight named Walter Tyrell) was wounded to death: and ſo ſpeachleſſe was caried to Weſtminſter, and there was buried. Where alſo is to be noted, ẏ Richarde the coſen Germaine of K. William, and ſonne to duke Robert his brother, was likewiſe ſlaine in the foreſaid foreſt. See the iuſt hand of god vpon kings, vſurping wrongfully vpon other mennes grounds, as did William Conqueror their father, in making this newe foreſt: plucking downe diuers churches and towneſhips, the cõpaſſe of 30. miles about. Here therefore apeareth, that although men can not reuenge, yet God reuengeth either in thẽ, or in their poſteritie. &c. This king as he alwaies vſed Concubines, ſo left he no iſſue legitimate behinde him. His life was ſuche, that it is harde for a ſtorie that ſhoulde tell truth, to ſay, whether he was more to be cõmẽded, or reproued. Among other vices in him, eſpecially is to be rebuked in him vnmeaſurable and vnreaſonable couetouſnes: in ſo much ẏ he coueted (if he might) to be euery mans heire. This one example of a liberal and princely nature I finde in him: that vpon a time, when a certaine Abbot of a place was deade, there came to his court two Monkes of the ſame houſe: who before had gathered much mony, and made their frendes to the king, and offered large offers either of them to be promoted to that dignitie. There was alſo the third monke of the ſame place, which of meekenes and humility folowed the other two: to the intent that vpon him ẏ the king had admitted for Abbot, he ſhould geue attendance, and as his chaplaine to haue with him returned. The king called before him the two monkes ſeuerally, of whom the either outproffered the other. As the king caſt his eye aſide, he eſpied the third Monke ſtanding by, ſuppoſing that his comming had bene alſo for the like cauſe. Then the King calling him, aſked what he wold do, whether he would geue more then his brethren had offered, to be Abbot. He anſwered to the king, and ſaide: that he neither had (nor woulde if he might) offer any penie for it, by any ſuch vnlawfull meane.

Vrbane excommunicated Henry the 4. Emperour.

Vrbanus B. of Rome (who, as is ſaide ſucceeded after Victor) ruled the Churche of Rome, about the ſpace of 12. yeres: and among his other actes, he excommunicated the Emperor Henricus the fourth of that name, as a man not much deuoute to that ſea of Rome: But yet a worthy and victorious prince he was, in whome albeit ſome vice perchaunce might be noted: yet none ſuch, wherefore any prelate or miniſter of Chriſt, ought to excite his ſubiects to rebell againſt publike authoritie of God appointed. This Emperour Henricus the iiij. was by 4. Popes ſeuerallye excommunicate: firſt by Hildebrand, by Victor, Vrbanus, and Paſchalis. Which excommunicatiõ wrought ſo in the ignorant & blinde hearts of the people, that many (as well of the nobles as of the multitude, contrary to their ſworne alleageance) rebelliouſly conſpired againſt their king and Emperor. In number of whom, among the reſt, was one certaine Earle named Ludouicus: to whom Waltramus biſhop of the Church of Mergburgh (a godly and a faithfull man, as appeareth) doeth write letters of fatherly admonition, exhorting and inſtructing him in the office of obedience. Vnto the which letters he likewiſe doth anſwer againe, by cauilling ſophiſtication, and by mere affection, rather diſpoſed to diſcord, then ſeeking ſinceritie of trueth. And foraſmuch as in theſe two letters, ẏ argument of chriſtian obedience on both ſides is ſo debated by proofes and reaſons, as may be profitable for the Reader to peruſe and vnderſtande: I thought therfore not to defraud the Engliſh reader of the ſame, whereof peraduenture ſome vtility might be taken. The tenour of the Byſhops letter to the Earle here foloweth.

Valtrame by the grace of God being that he is: to Ludouike the noble prince, with inſtance of praier offreth himſelfe ſeruiceable to all things. To euery realme concord is a thing profitable, and iuſtice muche to be deſired. For this vertue is the mother of godlines and the conſecration of all honeſtie. Concorde and iuſt obedience neceſſary in a common wealth.

Diſobedience puniſhed of God.

he is a murtherer, and partaker with him: who euer gaping and thruſting for an others bloud, goeth about ſeeking whom he may deuoure. You therefore, conſidering with your ſelfe (moſte noble Prince) howe God is the God of peace, and not of diſſention (ſo much as in you doth lie) haue peace with all men. God is charity, the deuil is hatred. The whole law and Prophets conſiſt in loue & charitie. He that hateth and maligneth his brother, is a murtherer & hath no part with Chriſt in the kingdome of God. This we read teſtified and proteſted both by him which is the truth himſelfe, & by him which was the ſcholer of the truth: who vpon the breſt of the Lorde (drinking a more full draught of the goſpel) reioyceth the citie of God with aboundance of plentiful floods. In like maner the worthy veſſell of election, who being rapt vp to the thirde heauen (not by man but by reuelation of Ieſu Chriſt) proteſteth alſo, ſaying: let euery ſoule ſubmit himſelfe to higher powers. There is no power ſayeth he, but of God. He that reſiſteth power, reſiſteth the ordinaunce of God. If that be true therefore, which certaine of our frendes do iangle among women, and the vulgare ſort, that we ought not to be ſubdued to kingly power, then is it falſe which the Apoſtle teacheth, that euery ſoule muſt ſubmitte himſelfe vnder power and ſuperioritie. But can the veritie lie? Or do we ſeke for experimẽt of him, who ſpake in the Apoſtle, Chriſt the Lorde? Or do we prouoke the Lorde? Be we ſtronger then he? For what doth he but thinketh himſelfe ſtronger then the Lorde, that reſiſteth the ordinance of God? for there is no power but of God. But what ſayeth the Prophet? Confounded be all they that ſtriue againſt thee O Lorde, and the men which repugne againſt thee, ſhall periſh. Rodolphus, Hildebrandus, Egbertus, with many other Princes, reſiſted the ordinance of God in Henry the Emperour. And lo, euen as they had neuer bene, ſo are they nowe periſhed, & as their end was euil, ſo their begining could not be good.

Nowe therefore, for ſo much as they which be contrary to vs do earneſtly ſtriue againſt vs with their owne arguments, wheras of right (I dare referre me to your iudgemẽt) we ought to vſe the authoritie of Chriſt & ancient fathers, before that, which our aduerſaries take out of their owne treaſurie. And becauſe I will not refuſe the order of lawe in this behalfe, let it be the ende of the ſtrife: that either I may be openly ſhamed before the people, either els (the victory falling on my ſide) we may winne you to the obedience of our ſoueraigne Lord the Emperour. Alſo take you hede to this ſaying, If any man do preach otherwiſe then that which is preached, let him be of you accurſed. This curſe, I ſay doeth not proceede from any newe prophane authoritie, but is thundered downe from the third heauen. And of them which knowe not the righteouſnes of God, but goe about to ſtabliſh their owne righteouſnes, and therfore be not ſubiect to the righteouſnes of God: I may boldly ſay, let ſuch be accurſed. So may you well ſay, confounded be al they that proudly riſe vp againſt the Lorde. but thy ſeruant (oh Lord) ſhall reioyce, for as thou haſt wel ſaide, without me you can doe nothing, ſo in iudging of the wicked, thou doeſt not condemne the iuſt. Who art thou that iudgeſt another mans ſeruant to his owne Lord whether he doth ſtand or fall?

The anſwere of the Earle Lewes, to Biſhop Waltram.

THe Earle Lewys to the Lord Waltram, howſoeuer vnworthy or vnmeete he be for the name. Like as a good man from the good treaſure of the hart bringeth forth good fruit, ſo doeth the euil man from the euil treaſure of the heart bring forth euil fruit. What arrogãcie hath ſo poſſeſſed you, to prouoke my diſpleaſure, with ſuch iniurious contumelies? for in dede, thoſe my good lords and ſpirituall fathers, which ſtrengthen me in the way of righteouſnes: you railingly, call them, bloudy men like vnto Sathan, and the wholeſome leſſons which they teache, you ſay they are but dreames of the common people amongeſt fooliſh women. Hath God any nede of your iudgement that you ſhould ſpeake leaſings for him? Iniquity hath taught your mouth to folow blaſphemous tonges, ſo that wel may the Prophet ſay of you, he would not vnderſtand to do wel, he hath deuiſed wickedneſſe vpon his bed. Although therfore you being altogether froward, haue only ſpoken frowarde things: yet we haue determined to ſet a watche before your mouth, like as if a ſhameles perſon ſhoulde ſtande vp before vs: and the worde of GOD dothe prouoke vs ſaying. Anſwere a foole according to his owne fooliſhneſſe, leaſt hee ſhoulde ſeeme wiſe in his owne opinion. Shall folly ſpeake and wiſedome holde his peace? Shall lies be freely vttered, and trueth compelled to kepe ſilence? Shall darkenes couer the earth, & ſhall not the Lorde ariſe and ſhine? yea rather the light hath lightened the darknes, and darknes hath not comprehended it. In conſideration hereof our harts haue melted, and our zealous meditation hath ſet vs on fire. We therefore ſpeake and crie, and the little foxes which vndermine the Lords vineyards (as much as in vs is) we driue away, fearing the threatning prophecie. You haue not withſtanded our aduerſaries, neither haue you made a bulwarke for the defence of the houſe of Iſrael, that you might be able to ſtand in battaile in the day of the Lorde. Let them heare (I ſpeake not to you which haue eares and heare not, eyes & ſee not, which haue made darke the light that is in you) but let them heare (I ſay) that be wel diſpoſed, and haue eares to heare withall As for you, you haue no vnderſtanding, and if you haue you cloke it. Neither haue you any thing to ſay or to proue, by what reaſon we ſhould be ſubiect to the Lord Henry whome you call Emperour. And yet (as it is giuen vs to vnderſtand) you goe about to perſwade, that of neceſſity we ought to be ſubiect to him, & that by the argumẽt of S. Paule. Let euery ſoule be ſubdued to the higher powers, for there is no power but of God, he therefore that doth withſtande power, doth reſiſt Gods ordinance. The which ſentence of the Apoſtle, we ſay that you do euil conceiue, and therefore euil interprete: for if euery power be of God (as you vnderſtãde) what is meant by that, that the Lord doth ſpeake of ſome by the Prophet? They did raigne and were not made Princes by me, and I knewe them not. If euery power be of God as you take it, what is to be thought of that, that the Lorde doth ſay, If thine eye offende thee, pluck it out, and caſt it from thee. For what is power, but the eie? Certainly, Auguſtine in the expoſition of this ſentence of the Apoſtle, let euery ſoule, &c. doth ſay that if the powers do cõmãd any thing againſt God, then haue them in contempt: but yet neuertheles feare thẽ. Is there any iniquitie with God? Is Chriſt the miniſter of ſinne? God forbid. What ſhal we therfore ſay? doth the Apoſtle preach contrary to the truth? Auguſtinus ſayeth no: one winde filleth many pipes of diuers tunes. Therfore let vs hear the Apoſtle agreeing and expounding himſelfe, and deſtroying his enemie and auenger. There is (ſayeth he) no power but of God. What followeth? He therfore (ſayth he) that doth reſiſt the power, &c. God forbid: doeth nothing followe? But what doeth followe? Thoſe powers which be ordeined of god truely: that is it we look for. O craftie tongue, O heart imagining miſchiefe, O conſuming breath that ſhall not returne, why haſt thou lied to the holy ghoſt? Thine owne conſcience ſhall accuſe thee. Behold the wicked fleeth and no man doth purſue him. Why woulde you ſuppreſſe the truth to the intẽt to deceiue? Why haue you ſtolne away the pith and effect of this ſentence? For if theſe wordes ſhould be taken away from the midſt of the ſentence, it ſhuld lie contrary to it ſelfe, inconuenient and halfe dead. The worde of the Lord is herein fulfilled. He that diggeth a pit for his neighbour, ſhal fall therein him ſelfe. Verely you can neither excuſe you of theft, neither auoid the puniſhment due for the ſame. What (O vnhappy man) what ſhall you anſwer to the iudge, when he ſhall require an accompt of his ſeruaunts whome he putteth in truſt ſeeing you ſhal be ſet before him in the midſt, and prooued a picker of your maiſters treaſure? Wherefore did you not feare the iudgement & executiõ, whẽ as the giltines of offence doth require condigne puniſhment? The Apoſtle through the holy Ghoſt did foreſee that you and ſuch heretikes as you are ſhould ſpring in the Church, which ſhould call good euil, and euil good: and that ſhould put darknes in place of light, and light in place of darknes, which alſo ſhould take occaſion by the ſentences of truth to bring in error: When as he did ſet this before, there is no power but of God: to the intent that hee might take away the coniecture of falſe vnderſtanding, for (ſayeth he) thoſe powers that be, are ordeined of God. Geue therefore an ordinarie power, and we doe not reſiſt, yea we will forthwith doe our homage. But I do maruell (if at the leaſt there remaine in you any one drop of bloud) that you are not aſhawed, to call the Lord Henry a king, or to allow him any ordinarie place.

This is li ly that th Emperou would m his owne wife a co mon harl

Euill will neuer ſay well.

Is this a ſeemely order thinke you to geue place to wickednes, and to make a generall confuſion in mixing good and euill, Gods and mans deuiſes together? Either do you thinke this good order, for man to ſinne againſt his owne body, as (Oh ſhamefull wickednes) to make his owne wife a common harlot, a miſchiefe not heard of at any time ſince the beginning of the world before now: or do you alow this for good order, when as the Lord ſayth, defend the widowes, eſpecially ſuch as require equitie of Iuſtice, and then them to ſend away moſt filthely defiled? Madde Oreſtes doth proteſt him to be out of his wit that will ſay theſe things to be orderly or well done. Vntill this moſt miſerable time, nature hath euer loued ſecrecie, but your king geuẽ vp into a reprobate ſenſe, hath vncouered the priuities of nature, who hath not let to lay abroade all ſhamefaſtneſſe: we wil not ſpeake of other thinges which cannot be numbred, that is to ſay, burning of Churches, robberies, fiering of houſes, manſlaughters, murders & ſuch like, the number whereof he knoweth and not we: for let vs ſpeake chiefly of thoſe things which moſt greue the Church of God. Harken therfore to true & not fained things. Hearken I ſay to matters of earneſt and to no trifles. Euery one that doth ſell ſpirituall dignities, is an hereticke: But the Lord Harry, whom they cal a king, doth ſell both Byſhoprikes and Abbathies: for truely he ſolde for money the Byſhoprikes of Conſtance, Babemberge, Mens. & many others. The Byſhopprikes of Ratisbone, Auguſta, and Straſebrough, he ſold for a ſword: and the Abbey of Fulda for adulterie. And for filthy ſodomitry he ſold the byſhopprike of Mon. A wickednes it is to ſpeake or heare of ſuch a fact. The which things if without ſhame ye wil deny, he is to be condemned by the witnes of heauen and earth: yea and of the ſelie poore idiotes that come from the ſmithes forge. Wherfore the Lord Harry is an hereticke.

Yea true, if he had compelled you to forſake the name of Chriſt, which hee neuer did.

Oh how craftely doth Sathan here ſhape himſelfe to an Angell of light.

For the which moſt wicked euils he is excommunicate from the ſea Apoſtolike, ſo that he may not exerciſe either kingdome or power ouer vs which be Catholicke And whereas you burden vs with hatred of our Brethren, knowe you that we purpoſe not to hate any of affection, but of a godly zeale. God forbidde that we ſhould thinke Harry worthy to be accompted amongſt our chriſtian brethren, who in deede is reputed for an Ethnike and Publicane, in that he refuſed to heare the Church which ſo oft hath reproued him. The hatred of whome we offer vnto God for a great ſacrifice, ſaying with the Pſalmiſt: Lord ſhall not I hate them that hate thee? and ſhall not I triumph ouer thine enemies? I hate them with an inward hatred that be ennemies to me for thy ſake. The truth it ſelfe commending the worthines of this hatred, doth ſay: If any do not hate father and mother, brethren and ſiſters for my ſake, he cannot be my diſciple. We are not therefore iuſtly to be reproued of hatred, which doe geue ouer our owne ſoule to be in the way of God: who in deede are commanded to hate father and mother, and euery affection which doth withſtād vs for walking in the path of God. Hereof it commeth, that we labor withall our ſtudie and endeuour to beware of the enemies of the church, and them to hate. Not for that they be our enemies, but gods. Farther, where you doe perſwade peace to be had with all men: you muſt remember what the Apoſtle doth put before, if it may be. But if it can be that we can haue peace with them, who can be contrary to God? Who doth not know the Lord our Sauiour, to commend not onely peace, when as he ſayth: my peace I geue vnto you, my peace I leaue vnto you? but that he is the peace, as ſayeth the Apoſtle: he is the peace which made of both one: For he calleth him our peace, ſpeaking in commendation of the peace: Thincke not (ſayeth hee) that I came to ſende peace. For I came not to ſend peace, but the ſworde. What is meant by this? Why is peace called a ſword? Or doth peace bid battel? Yea truely, to deſtroy the peace of the deuill. For the deuil hath his peace, whereof the Lord ſpeaketh: When as the ſtrong man keepeth his houſe, he doth poſſeſſe all his ſubſtance in peace. Oh howe mightely doeth the deuil kepe his ſouldiours and his houſe in this time: who with the ſhield of falſhoode, and the helmet of vntruth, ſo doth defend him, that he will not ſuffer either arrow or dart of truth to pearſe him. Neuertheles, our Lord being more ſtrongly armed, & fiercely comming vpon your Giaunt, is able to ouercome him, and to take away his weapons, wherein he putteth his truſt. We are not therfore to be blamed, if we do deteſt that peace, more cruel then any warre The which the truth it ſelfe did reproue, weeping ouer Hieruſalem, and ſaying: Truely, it grieueth me this day to ſee ſinners in peace, being like vnto that peace, wherat the Pſalmiſt was offended. Whereas you condemne Pope Gregory, king Rodolphus, and Marques Eggerbertus, as men that haue died of an vnhappy death, & do magnifie your Lord, becauſe he doth ouerliue them: it doth plainly (forſoth) appeare that you remaine voide of all ſpiritual conſideration. Is it not better to die well, then to liue ill? They be truely happy, who ſuffer perſecution for righteouſnes ſake. by the ſame reaſon may you eſteme Nero, Herod, and Pilate happy, in that they ouerliued Peter, Paul, Iames Apoſtles, & Ieſus Chriſt. What can be ſaid more fooliſh and wicked then this opinion? Wherfore refraine your babling toung from this blaſphemie, leaſt that you place your ſelfe in the number of them, which ſeeing the end of the iuſt to be glorious (themſelues doing late & vnfruitfull penance, bewailing in the anguiſh of the ſpirite) ſhall ſay: Theſe be they whom ſometime we had in deriſion, & laughed to ſcorne: we being out of our wits, thought their liues madnes, and their end to be without honor. Behold howe they be allowed to be amongſt the children of God, and their portion is amongſt the Saints. Wherfore we haue erred from the way of truth, & the brightnes of righteouſneſſe did not ſhine vpon vs. What did our pride auaile vs? And what profit did the boaſting of our richeſſe bring vnto vs? They are all vaniſhed away like a ſhadowe. The which wordes we haue regiſtred vp into perpetual memorie, & we do deſpiſe euery attēpt that ſhal lift vp it ſelf againſt the truth of God. And reioycing in troubles, we may be reproued, put to ſhame and rebuked, yea and finally be ſlaine and killed, but we will neither yeeld, nor be ouercome. And with great triumph will we reioyce in our fathers doings: of whom, you (as a beardles boy, & of ſmal knowledge) haue not rightly conceiued: who in dede deſpiſing Princes cōmandements, haue deſerued euerlaſting reward.

Ex vetuſto chronico.

There is a certaine Chronicle in olde Engliſh meter, which among other matters ſpeaking of William Rufus, declareth him to be ſo ſumptuous & exceſſiue in pompous apparel, that he being not contented with a paire of hoſe of a lowe price which was iij. ſhillings: cauſed a paire to be bought of a marke, whereupon his chamberlaine procuring a paire much worſe then the other before, ſayd:

That they coſtenid a marke, and vnneth he them ſo bought,
Ye belamy (quoth the king) theſe are well bought.

Wherby is to be noted what difference is to be ſeene betweene the hoſe of Princes then, and the hoſe of ſeruingmen now.

Henry Beuclerk the firſt, king of England.

What learning doth in a prince.

Lawes of King Edward reduced. The meaſure of England made after the length of King Henries arme.

Wanton perſons remoued out of the court.

Ex Math. Pariſ. Flor. Hiſt.

Henry firſt of that name, the third ſonne of W. Conquerour, ſucceeding his brother Rufus: began his raigne in England, the yere of our Lord 1100. who for his knowledge & ſcience in the 7. liberal arts, was ſurnamed Clerke or Beweclerke. In whome may wel appeare, howe knowledge and learning doth greatly conduce, to the gouernement and adminiſtration of any realme or country. At the beginning, he reformed the ſtate and condition of the clergie: releaſed the grieuous paiments: reduced againe king Edwards laws, with emendation therof: he reformed the old and vntrue meaſures, & made a meaſure after ÿ length of his arme: he greatly abhorred exceſſe of meats & drinks: many things miſuſed before his time he reformed: and vſed to vanquiſh more by counſaile then by ſworde. Suche perſons as were nice and wanton, he ſecluded from hys court. This man as appeareth, litle fauoured the vſurped power of the Biſhop of Rome. Soone after he was King, he maried Matilde or Maude: daughter of Malcolin king of Scots, and of Margaret his wife: daughter of Edward the Outlaw, as is before ſpecified: being a profeſſed Nunne in Wincheſter, whom notwithſtanding (wont the popes diſpenſation) he maried by the conſent of Anſelme. By the which Maude he receaued 2. ſonnes, William, and Richard: & 2. daughters, Maude & Mary, which Maude afterward was maried to Henry the v. Emperour. &c.

Example what it is to leaue off the Lordes buſines.

In the ſecond yere of his reigne, Robert his elder brother Duke of Normandy, who being occupied in the Chriſten warres againſt the Turkes, and being elect (as ye heard) king of Hieruſalem, hearing of the death of Rufus, refuſed the kingdom therof. For the which (as is thought) he neuer ſped wel after. Thus the ſaide Robert, leauing of the Lordes buſines, and returning into Normandy, made there his preparation, and came ouer into England, with a great hoſte to chalenge the Crowne. But by mediation of the Lordes it was agreed, that Robert ſhoulde haue yearely during his life iij. M. markes, as was likewiſe promiſed him before, by K. Rufus his brother. And whether of them ouer liued the other, to be others heyre. And thus Robert departed again vnto Normady, to the great diſcontentation of his Lords there. But in few yeares after, the forenamed tribute of iij. M. Markes, through the meanes of Queene Maude, was releaſed to the King his brother. In proces of time, variance falling betwene king Henry, and the ſayd Robert his brother: at length Robert in his warre was taken priſonner and brought ouer into England, & was put into the Caſtel of Cardiffe in Wales, where he continued as priſoner while he liued.

Duke Robert taken priſoner.

The hoſpitall of Bartholomew founded, Rayer, and Richard Whittington founders of S. Bartholomewes, in London.

In this time, as about the iij. yeare of this king: the hoſpitall of S. Bartholomewe in Smithfield was founded (by meanes of a minſtrell belonging to the King) named Rayer, And after was finiſhed by Richard Whittyngton, Alderman and Maior of London. This place of Smithfield was at that day, a lay ſtowe of all ordure or filth, & the place where the felones & other tranſgreſſors of the kings lawes were put to execution.

Diuers ſtrait lawes were by this king prouided, eſpecially againſt theeues and felones: that who ſo were taken in that fault, no money ſhould ſaue him from hanging.

Item, that who ſo did counterfait falſe money, ſhoulde haue both his eyes, and nether partes of his body cut off.

Ex Henr. lib. 7. Anſelmus.

Item, in the ſame Counſell was decreed, an order for Prieſtes to be ſequeſtred from their wiues, whych before were not forbidden, according as the wordes of mine author doe purporte, whoſe wordes be theſe. Anſelmus prohibuit vxores ſacerdotibus Anglorum, ante non prohibitas. Quod quibuſdam mundiſſimum viſum eſt, quibuſdam periculoſum, ne dum mundicias viribus maiores appeterent, in immundicias horribiles ad Chriſtiani nominis ſummum dedecus inciderent. &c. Hen. Hunt.

Item, it was then decreed, that Monkes and Prieſts ſhould beare no rule ouer lay perſons.

Item, it was then decreed, concerning broydering of heare, and wearing of garments.

Item, that the ſecrete contract betwene a yong lad and a yong maid ſhould not ſtand: with other things mo concerning the excommunication of Sodomites. &c.

Who after the death of King William, was ſent for againe by the foreſayde King Henrie, and ſo returned againe, and was at the Councell of the King at Weſtminſter: where the king in the preſence of the Lordes as well temporall as ſpiritual, ordeined and inueſted 2. Herbert biſhop of Norwich diuorſing hys prieſtes from their wiues had much a doe.

After this councel, and the other before ſet forth by Anſelmus. Herbert biſhop of Norwich, had much adoe with ẏ prieſts of his dioceſſe. For they would neither leaue their wiues, nor yet geue ouer their benefices. Whereupon, hee wrote to Anſelme the Archbiſhop for counſaile, what was to be done therein. Which Anſelme required him (as he did other mo the ſame time, by wryting) to perſwade the people of Norfolke and Southfolke: that as they profeſſed Chriſtianitie, they ſhoulde ſubdue them as rebels againſt the church, and vtterly to driue both them and their wiues out of the countrey: placing Monkes in their rowmes, as by the Epiſtles of the ſaid Anſelme doth appeare. Whereof certaine parcels ſhall hereafter (by the grace of Chriſt) enſue for the better euidence of this and the other his actes aboue recited.

The like buſineſſe alſo had Gerarde the Archbiſhop of Yorke, in depriuing the prieſtes of his prouince from their wiues: which thing with all his excommunications and thundrings he coulde hardly bring about. Vpon this ruffeling of Anſelme with maried prieſtes, were riming verſes made to helpe the matter withall, when reaſon coulde not ſerue. Which verſes for the folly therof, I thought here to annexe.

About the end of the third yere of this king, which was the computation of our Lord 1103. a variance fell betweene King Henry and Anſelme: the occaſion whereof was this. Ye heard a little before how Henry the foreſaid king had of his owne authority inueſted 2. biſhops, one Roger which was his Chauncelour, biſhop of Saliſbury: and an other Roger biſhop of Herford. Beſides them diuers alſo he inueſted, and diuers other like things tooke he vpon him in the eccleſiaſtical ſtate, which he might lawfully doe, Gods worde allowing wel the ſame: but becauſe it was reſtrained by the biſhop of Rome for him ſo to doe: this Anſelme ſwelled, fretted, and waxed ſo mad, that he woulde neither conſent to it, neither yet confirme them: nor communicate nor talke frendly with them, whome the king had inſtituted and inueſted: but opprobriouſly called them abortiues, or children of deſtruction: diſdainefully rebuking the gentle king as a defiler of Religion and polluter of their holy ceremonies: as witneſſeth Polydorus. With thys vncomely outrage the King was much diſpleaſed (as he myght full well) and required Gerard the Archbiſhop of Yorke, (as he ought him allegeance) to conſecrate them: who wythout delay did ſo, well performing the ſame, ſauing that one William Gifford to whom the king had geuen the Biſhoprike of Wincheſter, refuſed to take his conſecration by the hands of the Archbiſhop of Yorke. For the which cauſe the King worthely with him offended, depriued him both of biſhoprike and goods, and baniſhed him the realme.

A ſtrife betwene K. Henry and Anſelme the Archbiſh. of Cant.

Gifford Biſhop of Wint. refuſeth to be conſecrate by the Archbiſhop of Yorke.

Moreouer, the king required of Anſelmus the Archb. of Canterbury, to do vnto him homage after the maner of his aunceto urs, as witneſſeth Guliel. de geſtis pontif. Anglo. Alſo, it was aſked of the ſayde Anſelme, whether that hee wold be with the king in geuing inueſtures as Lanfrancus his predeceſſor was with his father. To whome Anſelme ſaid, that he promiſed not in any time, that he would enter into this order, to kepe the law or cuſtome of his father, as Lanfrancus did. Moreouer, as cōcerning homage to be done to the King, that he refuſed, alledging the Cenſures of the Popes excommunication: who in his councel of Rome a little before, had geuen foorth open ſentence of excommunication, vpon all ſuch lay perſons (whatſoeuer they were) that ſhoulde from hencefoorth conferre or geue any ſpirituall promotions: alſo vpon them that receiued them at their hands, either yet ſhould conſecrate any ſuche receiuers. Moreouer, he accurſed al them that for benefices or other Eccleſiaſticall promotions, ſhoulde ſubiect themſelues vnder the homage or ſeruice of any great mā, king, Prince, Duke, or Erle of the laitie. For it was vnſeemely (ſayd the Pope) and a thing very execrable: that the hands which were conuerted into ſo high working, as was grāted to no Angell (that is, to create him with their Croſſes, which created all, and to offer vp the ſame before the ſighte of the father, for the ſaluation of the whole world) ſhoulde be brought to ſuch a ſlauerie, as to be ſubiect to thoſe filthye hands, which both day and night are polluted wt ſhamefull touchings, robberies, and bloudſhed. &c. This decree of Pope Urban, Anſelmus alleaging for himſelfe: denyed to ſubiect himſelf to the kings homage, fearing (as he ſaid) the Popes excommunication. Vpō this, meſſengers were ſent to Rome on both partes, vnto the Pope (then Paſchalis) who ſtoutly ſtanding to the ſteps and determinations of Vrbane his predeceſſor, woulde in no caſe yeelde to the kings inueſting.

In the meane time while there was long diſputation on both ſides for inueſting: the nobles of the realme cōtended, that inueſtings did belōg to the kings dignity: wherfore the King calling for Anſelmus againe, required him either to do homage to him, or els to voide his kingdome. To whom Anſelmus replying again, required the popes letters to be brought forth: and according to ẏ tenor thereof, ſo the matter to be decided. For now the meſſēgers were returned from Rome with the Popes anſwer, altogether bearing with Anſelmus: Then ſayde the king: what haue I to do with the Popes letters. I wil not forgo the liberties of my kingdome for any Pope. Thus the contention continued betwene them. Anſelmus ſayeth, he would not out of the realme, but depart home to his church: and there ſee who wold offer him any violence, and ſo did. Not long after, meſſage came from the King to Anſelme, requeſting him after a gentle ſort, to repaire to the Kings preſence againe, to ſet an ende of the controuerſie begun: whereunto Anſelme graunted and came. Then were newe Ambaſſadours ſent againe to the Pope, that he woulde ſomething qualifie and moderate (or rather aboliſh) ẏ ſtreitneſſe of the Romaine decree before mentioned. On the part of Anſelmus went two monkes, Baldwinus and Alexander. On the kings behalfe were ſent two biſhops, Robert biſhop of Lichfield, and Herbert biſhop of Norwich, wt the kings letters wrytten vnto the Pope, containing in forme as followeth.

The letter of K. Hen the firſt to the Pop

To the reuerende father Paſchal the chiefe biſhop, Henrie by the grace of God, king of England, greeting. For this your promotion into the ſee of the holy Church of Rome, as I am heartily glad: ſo my requeſt is to you, that the frendſhip and amitie, which hath bene tofore betweene my father and your predeceſſours in times paſt, may now alſo betwene vs in like manner continue vndeminiſhed. And that loue and gentlenes may firſt beginne of my part: heere I ſende vnto you that gift that S. Peter had in foretime of my predeceſſors. And likewiſe the ſame honors & obedience, which your predeceſſours haue had in the realme of England before in the time of my father, I will you to haue the ſame in my time alſo: after this forme I meane, and tenour, that the vſage and maner of dignitie and ſuch cuſtomes which my father hath had in this realme of England in the time of your aunceto rs, I in like ample maner alſo nowe in your time, may fully enioy the ſame in this the ſaide realme of England. Thus therefore be it knowen to your holines, that during this life of mine (God almighty abling me to the ſame) theſe aboue named dignities, vſages, & cuſtomes of this realme of England, ſhall in no part be leſſoned. Yea, and if that I (as God forbid I ſhould) would ſo much deiect my ſelfe into ſuch cowardnes: yet my Nobles, yea the whole people of England in no caſe would ſuffer it. Wherfore (deare father) vſing with your ſelfe a better deliberation in the matter, let your gentleneſſe ſo moderate it ſelfe toward vs, leaſt ye compell me (which I ſhall doe againſt my will) to receade and depart vtterly from your obedience.

At the ſame tearme alſo he ſent an other letter or Epiſtle to the ſayde Pope, crauing of him the palle for Girardus Archb. of Yorke, the forme wherof, here alſo followeth.

Another letter of K. Henry the firſt ſent to the Pope.

In Engliſh.

To the reuerend and welbeloued father, vniuerſall Pope Paſchalis, Henry by the grace of God, king of England, greeting. The great loue which I beare to you, and the no leſſe gētlenes in you, which not a little beautifieth your doings, miniſtreth to me boldneſſe to write. And where as I thought to haue reteined ſtill this Gerardus with me, and to haue craued your palle for him by letters: yet, notwithſtanding, when his deſire coulde not otherwiſe be ſatiſfied, but woulde needes preſent himſelfe before your preſence, by his owne hart to craue of you the ſame, I haue ſent him vp vnto you. Deſiring your benigne fatherhoode in this behalfe, that he obtaining the palle at your hands, may be ſent home again to me. And thus requiring the aſſiſtance of your prayers, I praye the Lord long to conſerue your Apoſtleſhip.

This ſecond letter of the king in ſending for the Palle, was well taken of all the court of Rome, which (as mine author ſayth) procured ſuch fauor to Girardus archbiſhop of Yorke, and bringer thereof: that no complaint of his aduerſaries afterward could hurt him with the Pope. Notwithſtāding he was accuſed grieuouſly for diuers things, and ſpecially for not ſtanding to the conſecration of Anſelme Archbiſhop of Cant.

A place of Polydorus Virg. found faultie.

Ex Guliel. lib. 1. de pont. Anglo.

Polidorus in his 11. booke of his Engliſh hiſtory, affirmeth, that Anſelmus alſo went vp to Rome with Girardus, about the ſame cauſe. But both the premiſſes, and ſequele of the ſtory argueth that to be vntrue. For what needed the 2. Monks to be ſent vp on Anſelmus ſide, if he had gone vp himſelfe. Againe, howe coulde the Pope wryte downe by the ſaide meſſengers to Anſelme, if he had there bene himſelf preſent? For ſo proceedeth the ſtory by the narration of Malmeſbury and others.

The pope lothe to go agaynſt hys owne profit.

After the Ambaſſadours (thus on both ſides ſent vp to Rome) had laboured theyr cauſe with inſtante ſute, one againſt the other: the pope glad to gratifie the king (yet loth to graunt his requeſt, being againſt his owne profite, and therefore more inclining to Anſelmus ſide) ſendeth downe his letters to the ſayde Anſelme, ſignifying that he woulde not repeale the ſtatutes of his holy fathers for one mans pleaſure: charging him moreouer, not only not to yelde in the cauſe of inueſting, but conſtantly to adheare to yͤ foreſaid decreemēt of Pope Vrban his predeceſſor. &c. Beſides this letter to Anſelme, he directed alſo an other to the king himſelfe: which letter, mine author ſaith, the king ſuppreſſed, and did not ſhewe: onely declaring by word of mouth, what the ambaſſadors had ſaide vnto him from the Pope. Which was, that he permitted vnto him the licence of Inueſting vpon condition, that in other things he would execute the office of a good Prince. &c. To this alſo yͤ teſtimony of the 2. biſhops aboue minded, did accord, which made the matter more probable. But the 2. monkes on the other ſide replied againe, bringeth forth the letter of Anſelme to the contrary. &c. To thē was anſwered againe, that more credite was to be geuen to the degree and teſtimonie of the Biſhops, then to theirs: And as for monkes, they had no ſuffrage nor teſtimonie (ſaide they) in ſecular matters, and therefore they might hold their peace. But this is no ſecular matter, ſayd Baldwine abbot of Rameſey. Whereunto the nobles again of the kings part, anſwered, ſaying: that he was a good man, and of ſuch demeanor, as they had nothing to ſay againſt him, neither ſo woulde if they might: but yet both humane and diuine reaſon taught them ſo, to yelde more credite and confidence to the teſtimonie of 3. biſhops then of 2. monkes. Whereby may well appeare, that Anſelme at that time wēt not with them. Then Anſelmus ſeeing the king and his peres how they were ſet: and hearing alſo the teſtimonie of the 3. biſhops, againſt which he ſaw, he could not preuaile: And alſo hauing yͤ popes ſeale, which he ſawe to be ſo euident on the contrary ſide: made his anſwer again, that he would ſend to Rome, for a more certaintie of truthe. Adding moreouer, that he neyther would nor durſt geue ouer his cauſe, though it ſhould coſt him his life, to do or proceede againſt the determination of the Churche of Rome, vnleſſe he had a perfect warrant of abſolution from thence, for his diſcharge. Then was it agreed by the king and his nobles, that he ſhould not ſend, but go himſelfe to Rome. And much intreatie was made, that he wold take that iorney himſelf, in his owne perſon, to preſent himſelfe to the Pope, for the peace of the Church and of his country. And ſo at the length by perſuaſion was content, went to Rome, and ſpake with the pope. In ſhort time after followeth alſo, the kings Ambaſſador (William Warlwaſt) new elect biſhop of Exetor: who ther pleading on the kings ſide, for the ancient cuſtomes of the realme, & for the kings right of Inueſting. &c. Firſt declared: howe England of a long continuance, had euer bene a prouince peculiar to the Church of Rome, and howe it paied dewly his yerely tribut vnto the ſame. Inferring moreouer how the king, as he was of nature very liberall, ſo alſo of courage a prince ſtout and valiant. Then what a ſhame wold hee thinke it be to him (as it were in deede) if hee, who in mighte and dignitie farre exceeded all his progenitours, ſhould not defend and maintaine the liberties & cuſtomes by them procured? wherefore he deſired the Pope to ſee to the matter, ſo as might ſtande both with the kings honor, and alſo with his owne profite and aduātage: who otherwiſe no doubt, ſhoulde looſe a great peece of money out of the realme, vnleſſe he did remit ſome thing of the ſeueritie of his canons and lawes decretall.

He meaneth beſide the two biſhops Girardus whiche made the third.

Anſelme a deuout chaplaine to the Church of Rome.

Anſelme iournieth agayne to Rome.

The effect of the oration of W. Warlwaſt, at the popes court.

With theſe and ſuch other perſwaſions like to the ſame effect, the court of Rome was well cōtented: agreeing that the kings requeſt ought with al fauor to be graunted. But the Pope & Anſelme ſate ſtill marking their doings. The ambaſſadour ſuppoſing their ſilence to be halfe a yeelding to him, added moreouer and ſayd: that the king, no not for the crowne of his realme, would looſe the authority of Inueſting or admitting his Prelates, within his dominion: Whereunto the proude Pope anſwering againe, braſt out in theſe wordes: Nor I (ſayde he) for the price of his heade (as thou ſayſt) wil loſe the geuing of ſpirituall promotiōs in Englande, and confirming it with an othe (before God ſayth he I ſpeake it) know it for a certaine. &c. Then it followeth in the ſtorie of Malmeſberie: with this word of the P. the mindes of the reſt were chaunged, ſaying: Benedicta ſit cordis tui conſtantia, benedicta oris tui loquela. The kings attourney alſo was therewith daſhed: who notwithſtanding, yet brought to paſſe, that certaine of the Kinges cuſtomes vſed before of his father, were releaſed vnto hym. At the which time, in the ſame court was decreed, that (the king onely, which had inueſted them, being excepted) the other which were inueſted by the king, to be excommunicated: the abſolution and ſatiſfaction of whome was left to Anſelme the archbiſhop.

Thus Anſelme being dimiſſed from Rome, tooke his iorney toward England. But the ambaſſador pretending to go to S. Nicholas remained behinde, to ſee whether he could winne the popes mind to the kings purpoſe. Which when he ſaw it would not be, he ouertaketh Anſelmus by the way, at Placentia, and opened to him the kings pleaſure. The king (ſayth he) geueth to you in charge and commaundement, that if you will come to England and there behaue your ſelfe to him, as your predeceſſours did to his father, you ſhould be receiued and retained in the Realme accordingly: if not you are wiſe inough (ſayth he) ye know what I meane, and what will followe. &c. And ſo with theſe wordes parting from him, retourned againe to the King. Anſelmus remained at Lions a yeare and a halfe, writing diuers letters to the King, after this effect and wordes as followeth.

¶ To his reuerend Lord Henry king of England,

Anſelme Archbiſhop of Canterburie, faithful ſeruice with prayers. Epiſt. 224.

A letter of Anſelme to kyng Henry.

ALthough ye vnderſtand by William Warlwaſt what we haue done at Rome: yet I ſhall ſhortly ſhewe you that belongeth to me. When I came to Rome, I declared the cauſe wherefore I came to the Lorde Pope. He anſwered that he woulde not ſwarue from the ſtatutes of his predeceſſours. Furthermore, he commanded me that I ſhould haue no fellowſhip with them that receiued inueſtings of Churches at your hands after the knowledge of this prohibition, except they woulde doe penaunce and forſake that they had receiued, without hope of recouerie, nor that they ſhuld not communicate with the other Byſhoppes that had conſecrated ſuche menne, except they woulde preſent them ſelues to the iudgement of the Apoſtolike ſea. The foreſayde William can be a witneſſe of all theſe things if he will. This William when we departed a ſonder (reconing vp in your behalfe the loue and liberalitie which yee haue had alwayes towardes me) warned mee as your Archbyſhoppe, that I ſhoulde ſhewe my ſelfe ſuch a one; that if I would come into Englande, that I might be wyth you as my predeceſſoure was wyth your Father: and ye might entreate mee wyth the ſame honoure and liberalitie, that youre father entreated my predeceſſor. By which wordes I vnderſtand, that except I woulde ſhewe my ſelfe ſuche a one, you woulde not haue me come into England. For your loue & liberalitie I thanke you: but that I ſhoulde be with you as my predeceſſour was with your father, I cannot do it. For I dare not do homage to you, nor dare communicate with them that take inueſtings of Churches at your hands: becauſe of the foreſaid inhibition made, I my ſelfe hearing it. Wherfore I deſire you to ſend me your pleaſure herein (if it pleaſe you) whether I may returne into England (as I ſayde) with your peace and power of mine office.

The proude ſtoutnes of a prelate in a wrong cauſe.

In the meane while, great buſineſſe there was, & much poſting went to and fro, betwene yͤ king, the archbiſhop, and the Pope, but nothing was done: for neither woulde the Pope agree to the king, neither woulde the King condeſcende to the Archbiſhop. At laſt, the Archbiſhop ſeeing by no meanes he could preuaile againſt the king: thought to reuenge himſelfe by excōmunication, and ſo went about the ſame. The king hauing word thereof by the Counteſſe Adala his ſiſter, deſireth her to come to him to Normādie, and bring Anſelmus with her: whereupon (through the meanes of the Counteſſe) reconcilement was made, & the archbiſhop was reſtored to his former poſſeſſions againe. Only his returne into England was differred, becauſe he would not communicate with thoſe whome the King had inueſted. So yͤ king toke his paſſage ouer into England, and Anſelme made his abode at the Abbey of Becke.

Anſelme about to excommunicate the king.

Reconcilement made betweene the king and Anſelmus.

Then were ambaſſadors againe directed vnto Rome W. Warlwaſt, & Baldwin aboue named Abbot of Rameſey: who at length cōcluded the long controuerſy betwene the king & the Pope, vpon this agreement, that the King ſhould take homage of the Biſhops elect, but ſhoulde not deale with inueſting them by ſtaffe and ring. &c. While the Embaſſadours were thus in their ſute at Rome, diuers complaintes were daily brought from Englande to Anſelme, againſt the Prieſtes and Chanons: who in his abſence, contrary to the late councel holden at London, receiued their wiues vnto their houſes againe, & ſo were permitted by the king, paying him certaine mony for yͤ ſame. Anſelme (the ſore enemie againſt lawfull mariage) agreeued therwith: addreſſeth his letters vnto the King, requiring hym to refraine from any more taking of ſuche exactions: declaring moreouer and affirming, that the offences of all ſuch Eccleſiaſticall miniſters muſt be corrected by the inſtance of Byſhops, and not of lay men. To this the king anſwereth gently againe by letters, tempering himſelfe: howe he purpoſed ſhortly to come ouer into Normandie, and if he had done any thing amiſſe, either in theſe or other things he would reforme it by his obedience.

It was not long after (the meſſengers being nowe returned from Rome) but the king as he had promiſed, ſped him into Normādy: whē he warring againſt his brother Robert, brought both him & the Countrey of Normandie at laſt vnder his ſubiection. But firſt meting wͭ Anſelmus at the Abbey of Becke, he cōuented & agreed with him in al ſuch poyntes as the Archb. required. As firſt, that all hys Churches which before were made tributarie vnto King William his brother, now ſhould remaine free from al tribute. Item, yͭ he ſhould require nothing of the ſayd Churches or Prouinces, in the time of the ſeate being vacant. Moreouer, concerning ſuch Prieſtes & Miniſters, as had geuē money to the king for their company wͭ their wiues: it was agreed that they ſhoulde ſurceaſe from all Eccleſiaſtical function, the ſpace of 3. yeeres: and yͭ the king ſhoulde take no more after ſuch maner. Item, that all ſuch goodes, fruites, and poſſeſſions, as had bene taken away before frō the Archbyſhoppricke, ſhould be reſtored at his comming againe into England. &c.

Conditions graunted by the king to Anſelm.

Lawfull matrimony puniſhed.

This Anſelmus the ſtout champion of Poperie & ſuperſtition, after this victorie gotten vpon the King, for the which he ſo long fought: with ioy and triumph ſaileth into England, hauing al his Popiſh requeſts obtained. Where firſt, he flieth like a Lion vpon the maried Prieſts, contrary to the woorde of God, diuorſing and puniſhing that by mans authority, which the eternal and almighty God had coupled. Next he looketh to them, which did holde any Church by farme vnder the king. Againſt Simonie likewiſe, and againſt them that married within the 7. degree, he proceedeth with his full pontificall authoritie.

Anſelme returneth into England.

Prieſtes driuen agayne from their wiues.

Shortly after, as king Henry had finiſhed his warre in Normandy, & with victory returned againe into England, about the 6. yere of his raigne: Anſelme Archbiſhop of Canterbury (by the permiſſion of the king) aſſembled a great Councell at Weſtminſter in London, of the Clergie and Prelates of England.

In the which (by the Byſhop of Romes authoritie) he ſo wrought with the king, that at length, albeit (as the ſtorie ſayth not without great difficultie) it was newly cōfirmed and enacted: that no temporall man after that day, ſhoulde make inueſture with croſſe or with ring, or wyth paſtoral boke. In this Councel ſondry and diuers iniunctions were geuen forth to prieſts and Deacons: as diuers other ſinodall acts alſo by the ſame Anſelme had bene concluded in other Councels before. And becauſe heere falleth in mention of the actes Synodall concluded in the time of this Anſelme: I thought here good to packe them al in one general heape together, as I finde them in Malmeſbur[ie], and in other ſondry authors ſcatteringly recited.

The firſt thing decreed by this Anſelme in his ſynodal Councels, was touching the fault of Simonie: whereby diuers both Byſhops and Abbotes (as is aforeſayd) were at the ſame time depoſed. And lay men forbidden to confer any Eccleſiaſtical promotion.

Item, after the reſtreint of Prieſts mariage: when filthy Sodomitry begã to come in the place therof, then were they forced alſo, to make an act for that, which was this.

A ſlap with a foxe tayle for ſodomitry.

With a greuous curſe we condemne both them that occupy the vngratious vice of ſodomitry, and them alſo that willingly aſſiſt them, or be wicked doers with them in the ſame: till ſuch time, as they may deſerue abſolution by penance and confeſſion.

So that whatſoeuer he be, that is noiſed or proued to be of this wickedneſſe (if he be a religious perſon) he ſhall, from thence forth be promoted, to no degree of honor: and that which he hath, ſhalbe taken from him.

If he be a lay perſon, he ſhalbe depriued of all his freedome within the land, and be no better then a foreiner.

And becauſe it ſhalbe known, the abſolution of ſuch as be ſecular to belong onely to byſhops, it was therefore enacted: that on euery ſonday, in euery pariſh church of England the ſaid excommunication ſhould be publiſhed. &c.

Ranulph. Ceſtrenſis. lib. 7. Note the prepoſterous proceding of Anſelme in ceaſing the vice of Sodomitry.

But marke in this great matter what followed. For as Ranulphus Ceſtrenſis witneſſeth: this grieuous general curſe was ſoone called backe againe, by the ſute of certaine: which perſuaded Anſelme, that the publication or opening of that vice, gaue kindlings to the ſame in the heartes of lewde perſons: miniſtring occaſion of more boldnes to the to do the like. And ſo to ſtop the occaſiõ of filthie Sodomitry, the publication thereof was takẽ away, but the forbidding and reſtreinement of Prieſtes vnlawfull mariage (which chiefly was the cauſe thereof) remained ſtill. And thus euer ſince, horrible Sodomitry remained in the clergie, both for lacke of mariage more vſed, and for lack of publication, leſſe puniſhed.

Beſides all theſe Synodall acts aboue comprehended, and geuen out by Anſelmus in his Councels before: heere alſo in this preſent Cõucell at Weſtminſter, and in the yere of this king aforeſaid, he alſo directed other newe Iniunctions to the Prieſts.

Penalties and forfaits agaynſt prieſtes that kept their wiues.

Firſt, that they and their wiues ſhoulde neuer more meete in one houſe, neither yet haue dwelling in their territories.

Item, that the Prieſts, deacons, and ſubdeacons, ſhuld keepe no women in their houſe, vnleſſe they were of their next kinne.

Item, for ſuche as had diſſeuered themſelues from the ſocietie of their wiues: yet for ſome honeſt cauſe they had to common with them, they might: ſo it were without doore, and with ij. or iij. lawfull witneſſes.

In the latter dayes ſhall come falſe teachers forbidding mariage, and eating of meates, &c.

Item, if any of them ſhould be accuſed by ij. or iij. witneſſes, and could not purge himſelfe againe by ſixe able mẽ of his owne order (if he be a Prieſt, or if he be a Deacon by iiij. or if he be a Subdeacon by ij.) then he ſhould be iudged a tranſgreſſor of the ſtatutes, depriued of his benefice, & be made infamous, or be put to open reproche of all men.

Item, he that rebelled, as in contempt of this new ſtatute held ſtill his wife, and preſumed to ſay maſſe: vpon the viij. day after (if he made not due ſatiſfaction) ſhould be ſolemnly excommunicated.

Item, all Archdeacons and Deacons to be ſtraightly ſworne, not to wink or diſſemble at their meetings, nor to beare with them for money. And if they would not be ſworne to this, then to loſe their offices without recouery.

Purificatiõ of prieſtes, that had bene maried.

Item, ſuch prieſts as forſaking their wiues, were willing to ſerue ſtill and remaine in their holy order: firſt muſt ceaſe 40. dayes from their miniſtration, ſetting Vicars for them in the meane time to ſerue: and taking ſuch penaunce vpon them, as by their Biſhop ſhould be enioyned them.

Thus haue ye heard the tedious treatiſe of the life and doings of Anſelmus: how ſuperſtitious in his Religion, how ſtubburne againſt his Prince he was, what occaſion of warre and diſcorde he miniſtred by his complaintes (if they had ben taken) what zeale without right knowledge, what feruencie without cauſe he pretended, what paines without profite he tooke. Who if he had beſtowed that time and trauel in preaching Chriſt at home to his flock, which he tooke in gadding to Rome, to complaine of his countrey: in my minde he had bene better occupied. Moreouer, what violent and tyrannical iniunctions he ſet forth of inueſting and other thinges, ye haue heard: but ſpecially againſt the lawfull and godly mariage of Prieſts. Wherin, what a vehement aduerſary he was: here may appeare by theſe minutes or peeces extracted out of his letters, which we haue here annexed in forme and effect as followeth.

But becauſe there is ſo great multitude of ſuch within the Realme of England, that almoſt the greater and better part of the Clerks are reckened to be on this ſide: therfore we commit this diſpenſation to your care. For we graunt theſe to be promoted to holy offices by reaſon of the need at this time, and for the profit of the church (ſuch as learning and life ſhal commẽd among you) that yet notwithſtanding the preiudice of the Eccleſiaſticall decree be taken heede to hereafter. &c.

AFter that I returned to my biſhopricke in Englande, I ſhewed the Apoſtolicall decree: which I being preſent, heard in the romiſh Councel. 1. When the K. and his nobles, and the biſhops themſelues and other of the lower degree hearde theſe things: they tooke them ſo grieuouſly, that they ſayde: they woulde in no caſe agree to the thing, and that they woulde driue me out of the kingdome, and forſake the Romiſh Churche, rather than keepe this thing: wherefore reuerende father I deſire your counſell by your letter. &c.

Unto theſe letters aboue prefixed, I haue alſo adioyned an other of the ſayde Anſelmus, touching a great caſe of conſcience, of a Monkes whipping of himſelf. ✻ An other letter of Anſelmus.

✻ Anſelmus Archbiſhop, to Bernard Monke of the Abbey of S. Warburg greeting, and prayer.

A letter of Anſelmus.

Ex Epiſt. 255.

Whether is more merite for a monke to cauſe himſelfe in the chapter to be whipped: or to ſuffer obediently the whippinges of his Abbot.

I Heard it ſayde of your Lorde Abbot that thou iudgeſt it to be of greater merite, when a Monke either beateth himſelfe, or deſireth himſelfe to be beaten of an other: then when hee is beaten (not of his owne will) in the chapter, by the commaundement of the prelacie. But it is not ſo as you thinke. For that iudgement that any man commaundeth to himſelfe is kingly. But that which he ſuffreth by obedience in the chapter is Monkiſh. The one is of his owne will, the other is of obedience, and not of hys owne will. That which I cal kingly, kings & rich proud men cõmãd to be done to themſelues. But that which I call mõkiſh, they take (not commaunding, but obeying) The kingly is ſo much eaſier, by how much it agreeth to the will of the ſufferer. But the monkiſh is ſo much the grieuouſer, by how much it differeth frō the wil of the ſufferer. In the kingly iudgement, the ſufferer is iudged to be his own: In the monkiſh he is proued not to be his own. For although the king or riche man when he is beaten, willingly ſheweth himſelfe humbly to be a ſinner: yet he woulde not ſubmit himſelfe, to this humbleneſſe at any other commaundement, but would withſtand the commander with all his ſtrength. But when a Monke ſubmitteth himſelfe to the whippes humbly in the chapter at the wil of the prelate: the truth iudgeth him to be of ſomuch greater merite, by howe much he humbleth himſelfe more, and more truely then the other. For he humbleth himſelf to God only, becauſe he knoweth his ſinnes. But this man humbleth himſelf to man for obedience. But he is more lowly that humbleth himſelfe both to God and man for Gods cauſe, then he which humbleth himſelfe to God only, and not to Gods commandement. Therfore if he that humbleth himſelfe ſhall be extolled, Ergo, he that more humbleth himſelfe ſhall be more exalted. And where I ſayde that when a monke is whipped, that it differeth from his wil: you muſt not ſo vnderſtande it, as though he woulde not paciently beare it with an obedient wil: but becauſe by a natural appetite, he would not ſuffer the ſorrow. But if ye ſay, I do not ſo much flie the open beating for the paines (which I fele alſo ſecretly) as for the ſhame: know then, that he is ſtronger that reioyceth to beare this for obediēce ſake. Therfore be thou ſure, that one whipping of a monke by obedience, is of more merite then innumerable whippings taken by his owne minde But where as he is ſuch that alwaies he ought to haue his heart ready without murmuring obediently to be whipped: we ought to iudge him then to be of a great merite, whether he be whipped priuily or openly. &c.

The iudgement or concluſion of Anſelme vpon the caſe.
Falſe opinion of merite.

{Anno. 1105.}

And thus much concerning Anſelmus archb. of Cant. whoſe ſtout example gaue no litle courage to Thurſtinus and Becket his ſucceſſors: and other that folowed after to doe the like againſt their kings and princes, as in proceſſe hereafter by the grace of Chriſt ſhall appeare.

Iudges corrupted.

About this time An. 1105. two famous Archbiſhops of Mentz, being right vertuous and wel diſpoſed Prelates: were cruelly and tirannouſly delt withall, and intreated by the B. of Rome. Their names were Harry and Chriſtian. This Harry hauing intelligence, that he was complained of to the pope, ſent a learned man (a ſpecial frend of his) to excuſe him, named Arnolde: one for whome he had much done, and promoted to great liuing and promotiōs. But this honeſt mā Arnold, in ſteede of an excuſer became an accuſer, bribing the two chiefeſt Cardinalles with good gold: by which meanes he obtained of the Pope, thoſe two Cardinals to be ſent as inquiſitors and only doers in that preſent caſe. The which (comming to Germany) ſomoned the ſayd Henry, and depoſed him of his Archbyſhopricke (for all he could doe) either by lawe or iuſtice: ſubſtituting in his place the foreſaid Arnolde, vpon hope (truely) of the eccleſiaſtical gold. Whereupon that vertuous & honorable Henry (as the ſtorie telleth) ſpake vnto thoſe his peruerſe iudges on this wiſe. If I ſhuld appeale vnto the Apoſtolik ſee for this your vniuſt proces had againſt me: perhaps the pope wold attempt nothing any more therein, then ye haue: neither ſhould I win any thing by it, but only toyle of body, loſſe of good, affliction of mind, care of heart, & miſſing of his fauour. Wherfore I do appeale to the Lord Ieſus Chriſt, as to the moſt higheſt & iuſt iudge, and cite you before his iudgement, there to anſwere me before the high iudge. For neither iuſtly nor godly (but by corruption as it pleaſeth you) you haue iudged. Whereunto they ſcoffingly anſwered: Go you firſt, and we wil folow. Not long after (as the ſtorie is) the ſaide Harry died: whereof the 2. Cardinals hauing intelligence, ſayd one to the other ieſtingly: behold he is gone before, and we muſt follow according to our promiſe: and verely they ſayde truer then they were aware off, for win a while they died in one day. For the one ſitting vpon a iakes to eaſe himſelfe, voyded out all his intrails into the draught, and miſerably ended his life. The other gnawing of the fingers off his handes, and ſpitting them out of his mouth (al deformed in deuouring himſelf) died. And in likewiſe, not long after the ende of theſe men, the foreſaid Arnold (moſt horribly) in a ſedition was ſlaine: and certaine daies (lying ſtinking aboue the groūd vnburied) was open to the ſpoyle of euery raſcall & harlot. The Hyſtoriographer in declaring hereof, crieth vpon the cardinals in this maner: O ye Cardinals, ye are ẏ beginning and authors hereof. Come ye hether therefore, come ye hether, and heape and cary vnto your coffers the deuil: and offer your ſelues to him with that money whereof ye haue bene moſt gluttonous and inſatiable.

A terrible example for corrupt iudges to beware.

Pope Paſchalis the 2.

About the ſame time and yeare when king Henry began his raigne, Pope Paſchalis entered his papacie, ſucceding after Vrbanus: about the yeare of the Lorde 1100. nothing ſwaruing from the ſteps of Hildebrand his ſuperiour. This Paſchalis, being elected by the Cardinals, after that the people had cried thriſe, S. Peter hath choſen good Raynerus: He than putting on a purple veſture, & a tiare vpon his head, was brought vpon a white palfray into Laterane: where a ſcepter was geuen him, and a girdle put about him (hauing vij. keyes, with vij. ſeales hanging there vpon) for a recogniſance or token, of his vij. fold power, according to the vij. folde grace of the holy Ghoſt: of binding, looſing, ſhutting, opening, ſealing, reſigning, & iudging, &c. After this Paſchalis was elected Pope: Henricus 4. the foreſaid Emperour (of courage moſt valiant, if the time had ſerued thereto) thought to come vp to Italie to ſalute the newe Pope. But vnderſtanding the Popes minde bent againſt him, he chaunged his purpoſe. In the meane time, Paſchalis to ſhew himſelfe inferior to Hildebrand in no poynt: began firſt to depoſe all ſuch Abbates & byſhops whome the Emperour had ſet vp. Alſo baniſhed Albertus, Theodoricus, and Maginulphus ſtriuing the ſame time for the papacie. I ſpake before of Guibert, whō Henricus the Emperour had made Pope againſt Hildebrād. Againſt this Guibert Paſchalis made out an armie: who being put to flight, not long after departed.

The biſhop of Fluence martyr.

A councell at Trecas.

About the ſame time, An. M. Ci. the biſhop of Fluence began to teach and to preach of Antichriſt then to be borne & to be manifeſt, as Sabellicus teſtifieth: wherupon Paſchalis aſſembling a coūcell, put to ſilence the ſayde biſhop, and condemned his bookes. In this councell at Trecas: prieſtes that were maryed, were condemned for Nicolaitanes. Item, according to the decree of Hildebrand, al ſuch of what degree or eſtate ſoeuer they were (being lay men) ẏ gaue any eccleſiaſticall dignities, were cōdemned of Symonie. Furthermore, the ſtatute of prieſtes tithes, there he renued: coūting the ſelling away therof as a ſinne againſt the holy ghoſt. Concerning the excommunicatiō and other troubles, that Hildebrand wrought againſt Henricus the 4. Emperor: it is declared ſufficiently before. This excommunication, Paſchalis ẏ Pope renued a freſh, againſt the ſaide Henry. And not onely that, but alſo conuenting the Princes of Germanie into a generall aſſemble: ſet vp his owne ſonne againſt him: cauſing the biſhop of Mentz, of Colen, and of Wormes, to depriue him of hys Imperiall crowne, and to place his ſonne Henricus the fift, in his fathers kingdome, and ſo they did. Comming to the place at Hilgeſhem, firſt they required his Diademe, hys purple, his ring, and other ornaments pertaining to the crowne, from him. The Emperor demaundeth the cauſe, being then excommunicate and voide of frendes. They pretending againe (I cannot tell what) for ſelling of Biſhopricks, Abbaies, and other eccleſiaſticall dignities for money: alſo alledging the popes pleaſure, and of other princes. Then required he firſt of the Biſhop of Mentz (and likewiſe of the other two whom he had preferred to their biſhopricks before) aſking them in order, if he had receiued of them any peny for his promoting thē to their dignities. This when they could not deny to be ſo: wel ſaith he, & doe you require me againe with this? With diuers other wordes of exhortation, admoniſhing them to remember their othe & alleageaunce to their Prince. But the periured Prelates, neyther reuerencing his maieſtie, nor moued with his benefites, nor regarding their fidelitie, ceaſed not for this, but firſt plucked from him (ſitting in throne) his crowne imperiall: then diſueſtured him, taking from him his purple & his ſcepter. The good Emperour, being left deſolate and in confuſion, ſayeth to them: Videat deus, & iudicet, that is, let God ſee, and iudge. Thus leauing him, they went to his ſonne, to confirme him in his kingdom, and cauſed him to driue his father out. Who then being chaſed of his owne ſonne (hauing but 9. perſones about him) did flee by the Dukedome of Limburgh, where the Duke being then in hunting, perceauing and hearing of him, made after to folow hym. The Emperor fearing no other but preſēt death (for he had diſplaced ẏ ſame Duke before out of his Dukedome) ſubmitted himſelfe, crauing of him pardon, and not reuengement. The Duke full of compaſſion, & pitying his ſtate: not onely remitted all hys diſpleaſure, but alſo receiued him to his caſtle. Moreouer, collecting his ſouldiours and men of warre, brought him to Colen, and there was well receaued. His ſonne hearing this, beſieged the city of Colen. But ẏ father by night eſcaping, came to Leodium: where reſorted to hym all ſuch as were men of compaſſion and of a conſtant heart. In ſo much, that hys power being ſtrōg enough, he was now able to pitch a field againſt his enemies, and ſo did: deſiring his friends that if he had the victorie, they woulde ſpare hys ſonne. In fine (the battail ioyned) the father had the victorie, the ſonne was put to flight: many being ſlaine on both ſides. But ſhortly after the battell renued againe: the ſonne preuailed, the father was ouercome, and takē. who then being vtterly diſpoſſeſſed of his kingdome, was brought to that exigent: that comming to Spire, was faine to craue of the biſhop there (whom he had done much for before) to haue a prebende in the Church: and for that he had ſome ſkill of his Booke, he deſired to ſerue in our Ladies quire. Yet coulde he not obtaine ſo much at his hande: who ſwore by our Ladie, hee ſhould haue none there. Thus the wofull emperour (moſt vnkindly hādled, and repulſed on euery ſide) came to Leodium, and there for ſorrowe died, after he had raigned 50. yeares: whoſe body Paſchalis after his funerall, cauſed to be taken vp againe, and to be brought to Spires, where it remained 5. yeres vnburied. Henricus Emperour. Ex Chronico Carionis lib. 3.

After the deceaſe of this Emperor Henricus the 4. his ſonne Henricus the 5. raigned the ſpace of 20. yeares. Who comming to Rome to be crowned of the Pope, coulde not obtaine before he would fully aſſent to haue this ratified, that no Emperour ſhould haue any thing to doe with the election of the Romaine Byſhop, or with other byſhoppricks. Beſides that (about the ſame time) ſuche a ſturre was made in Rome by the ſayd Byſhop: that if the Emperour had not defended himſelfe, with his owne hands, he had bene ſlaine. But as it happened, the Emperour hauing the victorie: amongeſt many other Romaines (which were partly ſlaine, partly taken in the ſame ſkirmiſhe) he taketh alſo the Pope, and leadeth him out of the Citie: where he indenteth with him vpō diuers conditions, both of his coronation, and of recouering againe his right and title in the election of the Pope, & of other byſhops: wherunto the Pope aſſenting, agreed to all. So the Emperour (being crowned of Paſchalis) returned againe with the Pope to Rome.

The pope taken priſoner.

All the conditions betwene the Emperour & the Pope (ſo long as the Emperour remained at Rome) ſtode firme and ratified. But aſſone as the Emperour was returned againe to Germanie, forthwt the Pope calling a Synode, not only reuoked all that he had agreed to before: but alſo excommunicated Henricus the Emperor, as he had done his father before, reprouing the former priuilegium for prauilegium. The Emperor returning frō Rome to Fraunce, there maried Mathild daughter to king Henry. who then hearing what the Pope had done (agreeued not a little) to all expedition marcheth to Rome, and putteth the Pope to flight: and finally placeth an other in his ſteade. In the meane time the Biſhops of Germanie (the Popes good frendes) ſlept not their buſineſſe, incenſing the Saxons, al that they might againſt their Ceſare: In ſo much that a great commotion was ſtirred vp, and grew at length to a pitcht field: which was fought in yͤ moneth of Februarie, by the wood called, Silua Catularia. An. M. Cxv.

War rayſed vp by the Pope, and his papiſtes.

Peace concluded betweene the Emperour and the P.

The Emperour ſeeing no end of theſe conflictes (vnleſſe he would yelde to the Pope) was faine to geue ouer, and forgoe his priuiledge: falling to a compoſition, not to meddle with matters perteining to the Popes electiō, nor with inueſting, nor ſuch other thinges belonging to the Church, and Church men. And thus, was the peace betwene them concluded and proclaimed, to no ſmal reioyſing to both the armies, then lying by Wormes, neare the riuer of Rine.

Mathildis. Example of the Lordes iuſt retribution and iudgement.

All this while Henricus the Emperour had no iſſue (hauing to wife Mathildis, the daughter of Henricus i. king of England) and that by the iuſt iudgement of God, as it may appeare. For as he hauing a father, perſecuted him by the Popes ſetting on, contrary to the part of a naturall ſonne: ſo Gods prouidence did not ſuffer him to be the father of any childe, naturally to loue him, or to ſucceede him.

Two popes ſtriuing together.

Pope Calixtus the 2.

After the death of Paſchalis, An. 1118. ſucceeded Pope Gelaſius (choſen by the Cardinals) but without the conſent of the Emperour: wherupon roſe no little variance in Rome. And at length an other pope was ſet vp by yͤ Emperour called Gregorius viij. and Gelaſius driuen away into Fraunce, and there died. After whom came Calixtus the ſecond (choſen likewiſe by a fewe Cardinals, wythout the voyce of the Emperour) who comming vp to Rome to enioy his ſeat, firſt ſent his legat into Germanie to excommunicate the Emperour Henricus: who then hauing diuers conflictes with his fellow Pope Gregorius, at lēgth draue him out of Rome. At this time by this occaſiō, great diſputation and controuerſy was betwene the Emperors and the Popes court, whether of them in dignitie ſhoulde excell the other: wherof reaſons and argumentes on both ſides were alleadged, as in the verſes here following are comprehended.

The Pope excommunicateth the Emperour.

In concluſion the Emperor being ouercome ſo much with the vaine reaſons of the Popes ſide, and fearing the dangerous thunderbolt of this curſe (talking in Princes, and perſwaded by his frendes, was faine to condeſcend to the vnreaſonable conditions of the Pope. The next yere following, Rodolphus biſhop of Rocheſter (an Engliſhman) was promoted to be Archb. of Canterb. and Thurſtinus the kings chaplaine was elect archbiſhop of York. who being content to receiue his benediction or conſecration of the ſee of Cant. yet becauſe he refuſed to make his profeſſion of obedience to the ſame See, he was by the king depriued of his dignitie.

The letter of Paſchalis to K. Henry.

Then Thurſtin (by the inſtigation of certaine of his clerkes at York) tooke his iorney to Rome: who there making his complaint to Pope Paſchalis, brought with him a letter from the Pope to the King: where among other wordes was conteined as followeth: Audiuimus electum Eboracenſis Eccleſiæ virum, ſapientem & ſtrenuum, ſine iudicio ab Eboracenſi ſequeſtratum eccleſia, quod nimirum diuinæ iuſtitiæ & S.Patrum inſtitutionib aduerſatur. Wherfore, as touching the forſaid elect let him be receaued againe by any meanes (as right and meete it is) vnto his Church. And if there be any queſtion betwene the foreſaid churches, let it be handled and decided in your preſence, both the two parties beyng there preſent, &c.

Aſſemble of the nobles at Saliſbury.

Thurſtine refuſeth to profeſſe ſubiection to the Archb. of Cant.
Thurſtine promiſeth to renounce hys archbiſhopricke.

Upon the occaſion of this letter, a ſolemne aſſemble there was appoynted at Saliſbury, about the hearing of thys controuerſy. The variance betwene theſe two prelates ſtil encreaſed more and more. Radulph Archbiſhop of Can. in no caſe would yeelde nor condiſcend to geue impoſition of handes vnto him, vnleſſe he would make his profeſſion of obedience. Thurſtine againe ſaide he would willingly receiue & embrace his benediction, but as touching the profeſſion of his ſubiection, that he woulde not agree vnto. Then the king declaring his minde therein, ſignified vnto Thurſtin: that without his ſubiection and obedience profeſſed to the Archbiſhop of Cant. he ſhoulde not enioy hys conſecration to be Archbiſhop of York. Wherunto Thurſtin (nothing replying againe) renounced his Archbiſhopricke, promiſing moreouer to make no more claime vnto it, nor moleſt them that ſhould inioy it.

Anno. 1118.

Pope Calixtus breaketh promiſe with the king.
Thurſtine ſacred archbiſhop of Yorke by the Pope agaynſt the kinges minde.

Shortly after this, it happened, that Pope Paſchalis died: After whome (as is aboue rehearſed) ſucceded Pope Gelaſius, which liued not paſt a yere, and died in France. Wherupon, the Cardinals (which then followed the ſayd Pope Gelaſius to Cluniake) created an other Pope of their chuſing, whom they called Calixtus 2. The other cardinals which were at Rome did chuſe an other Pope called Gregorie as mention before is made: About which 2. Popes much ſturre there was in Chriſten Realmes. As this Calixtus was remaining in Fraunce, and there calling a general coũcell at Remis as ye heard before, Thurſtinus the Archbiſhop of Yorke deſired licence of the King to goe to the Councel, purpoſing there to open the cauſe of his Church, which eftſones he obtained: firſt promiſing to the king that he ſhould there attempt nothing that ſhould be preiudiciall to the Church of Cant. In the meane time, the king had ſent ſecret word vnto the Pope, by Radulph and other procurators, that in no caſe he would conſecrate Thurſtinus. Yet (notwithſtanding the faithfull promiſe of the Pope made to the King) ſo it fell out: that the ſayde Pope, through the ſute of his Cardinals, whome Thurſtinus had wonne to him: was inclined to conſecrate him, and gaue him the palle. For this deede the king was ſore diſcontented with Thurſtine, and warned him the entrie of his land.

Concilium Rhemenſe.
Actes of the councell of Rhemes.

In this councell at Rhemis (aboue mentioned) where were gathered 434. Prelates, theſe 5. principal actes were concluded.

1. That no man ſhould either buy or ſell any Biſhoprike, abbotſhip, deanry, archdeaconſhip, prieſthood, prebedſhip, altar, or any Eccleſiaſticall promotion, or benefice, orders, conſecration, church halowing, ſeat or ſtall within ẏ quire, or any office eccleſiaſticall, vnder danger of excommunication, if he did perſiſt.
2. That no lay perſon ſhould geue inueſture of anye Eccleſiaſticall poſſeſſion: or that any ſpirituall men ſhould receaue any ſuch at any lay mans hand vnder payne of depriuation.
3. That no man ſhoulde inuade, take away or detayne the goodes or poſſeſſions of the Churche: but that they ſhould remayne firme and perpetuall, vnder payne of perpetuall curſe.
4. That no Biſhop or Prieſt ſhould leaue any eccleſiaſticall dignitie or benefice to any, by way of inheritance. Adding moreouer that for baptiſme, chriſme, anoyling, or buriall, no mony ſhould be exacted.
5. Item that all prieſts, deacons, and ſubdeacons, ſhould be vtterly debarred and ſequeſtred from company of their wyues and concubines, vnder payne of excluding from al chriſtian communion.

Henry the Emperour excommunicated.

The actes thus determined, were ſent eftſoones to Hericus the Emperor, to ſee and try, before ẏ breaking vp of the councell, whether he would agree to the canonical elections, free conſecration, and inueſting to ſpiritual perſõs and to other Actes of the ſayd Councell. The Emperour maketh aunſwer agayne, that he would loſe nothing that auncient cuſtome of hys progenitours had geuẽ him. Notwithſtanding, becauſe of the authoritie of the general coũcell, he was content to conſent to the reſidue, ſaue only the inueſting of eccleſiaſticall function to be taken from hym, to ẏ he would neuer agree. Upõ this, at the next returne of the Pope to the Councel, ẏ Emperour was appoynted to be excommunicated. Which thing, when diuers of the Councell did not well like, and therefore did ſeperate thẽſelues from the reſt, the Pope applying agaynſt them the ſimilitude of the 70. diſciples which were offended at the Lord, when he taught them of eating his fleſh and bloud, and therefore deuided themſelues from him. Declaring moreouer to thẽ, how they which gathered not with hym ſcattered, and they that were not with him, were agaynſt him: by theſe and ſuch like perſwaſions reducing them agayne to hys ſide, and ſo by that Councell Henricus the Emperour was excommunicated.

Agreed that England ſhoulde haue no other Legate from

It was not long after, but the Pope came to Giſortium: where, Henry King of England, reſorted to him, deſiring & alſo obtayning of him, that he would ſend henceforth no Legate, nor permit any to be ſent from Rome to England, vnleſſe the king himſelfe ſhoulde ſo require, by reaſon

Rome, but onely the Archb. of Cant.

England ſpoyled by the popes legates.

reaſon of ſome occaſion of ſtrife, which els could not otherwiſe be decided, by his owne biſhops at home. The cauſe why the king required this of the Pope: was for that certain Romaine legates had bene in England a little before (to witte) one Guido, and an other Romayne named Anſelmus, and another alſo called Petrus, who had ſpoyled the realme of great treaſure, as the cuſtomed maner of the Popes proud Legates is wont to do, Guliel. de pont. lib. 1. Alſo he required of the Pope, that he might vſe & retayne all the cuſtomes vſed before of his forefathers in England and in Normandy.

All the cuſtomes of the Realme graunted of the pope.

To theſe petitions the Pope did eaſily conſent, requiring agayne of the king that he would licenſe Thurſtinus the Archb. aboue minded, to returne with fauour into his realme. But that the king vtterly denied vnles he would profeſſe ſubiectiō to the church of Cant. as his predeceſſors had done before, and excuſed himſelfe by his othe, which he before had made. To this the Pope anſwered againe, that he by his authoritie Apoſtolicall, both might and would alſo eaſily diſpenſe with him for his promiſe or othe. Then the king ſaid that he would talke with his counſail therof, and ſo ſend him an anſwer of his mynd. Which anſwere was this. That for the loue and requeſt of the Pope, hee was content that Thurſtinus ſhould returne his realme, and quietly enioy his prelateſhip, vpon this conditiō that he would (as his predeceſſors did) profeſſe his ſubiection to the church of Canter. Otherwiſe (ſayd he) ſo long as he was king, he ſhould neuer ſit Archb. of the church of York. And thus ended that meting betwene the king of england, and the Pope for that tyme.

Biſhoprike of Carlile newly erected by king Henry.

It was aboue touched, how Matild or Maude daughter of king Henry, was maried to Henry the 5. Emperor, who after the deceaſe of the ſaid Emperor her huſband, returned about this preſent time with the Imperiall crowne to her father in Normandy, bringing with her the hand of S. James. For the ioy whereof, the king builded the Abbey of Reading, where the ſayd hand was repoſed. This Matild was receiued by the ſayd councell to be next heyre to the king her father, in poſſeſſion of the Engliſh crowne, for lacke of iſſue male. And ſoone after vpon the ſame was ſent ouer to Normandy, to mary with Geffrey Plantagenet Erle of Angeow, of whō came Henry the ſecond, who (after Stephen) was kyng of England. And about this tyme was alſo founded the priorie of Norton in the Prouince of Cheſter, by one william the ſonne of Nichelle. In the ſtory of Polychron. Iornal. and Polydorus is declared, how the king was troubled greatly with 3. ſundry viſions appearing vnto him by night. The firſt was of a great multitude of huſbandmen of the country, which appeared to flie vpon him with their mattocks and inſtrumēts, requiring of him his debt which he did owe vnto them. In the ſecond, he ſaw a great number of ſouldiors and harneſſed men to come fiercely vpon him. In the third, he ſawe a company of prelates and churchmen, threatning him with their biſhops ſtaues, & fiercly approching vpō him, wherupon (being diſmayd) in all haſt, ran & toke his ſword to defēd himſelf, finding there none to ſtrike: who afterward aſking counſaile concerning theſe viſions, was moniſhed by one of his phiſitions (named Grimbald) by repentance, almes and amendment of life, to make ſome mends to god and to his countrey whom he offended. Which thre vowes thus being made, the next yere after he went to England: where he being vpon the ſeas in a great tempeſt with hys daughter Matild, remembred there his iij. vowes. And ſo comming to the land (for performance of the ſame) firſt releaſed vnto the commons the Dane gelt which his father & his brother before had renued. Secondly, he went to S. Edmondeſbury, where he ſhewed great benefites to the churchmen. Thirdly, he procured iuſtice to be adminiſtred more rightly throughout his realme, &c. Alſo he ordayned and erected a new biſhoprike at Carlile.

The Citie and Paules Church of London burned.

In the 33. yeare of this kinges raigne (as witneſſeth a certayne author) a great part of the citie of London, wyth the Church of S. Paule, was burned with fire in Whitſon weeke.

Honorius the 2.

Mathæus Pariſienſis.

After Caliſtus (whoſe ſtory and tyme is before diſcourſed) ſucceded Pope Honorius, ij. Notwithſtanding that the cardinals had elected another, yet he by the meanes of certain citizens obtained the papacie, an. 1125. About the ſecond yeare of his induction (as is to be red in Math. Pariſ.) there was a certaine legate of his called Ioannes Cremenſis, ſent downe to England, from the Pope for the redreſſe I cannot well tell whereof. But in deede the chiefeſt purpoſe of his commyng (as of all other after hym in thoſe dayes) was to fill their pouches with Engliſh mony, as may further appeare by their procedings. This Legate commyng then with the Popes letters directed both into england & Scotland (after he had well refreſhed himſelfe in Biſhops houſes, and amongeſt the Abbottes) at length reſorted to London, where he aſſembled the whole Clergy together, inquired of Prieſtes concubines (otherwiſe called theyr wiues) & making thereupon a ſtatute in the ſaid Synode of London, after this tenor: Præſbyteris, diaconibus, ſubdiaconibus, & canonicis, vxorum, concubinarum, & omnium omnino fœminarum contubernia: autoritate Apoſtolica inhibemus præter matrem, aut ſororem vel amitam, aut eiuſmodi quæ omnino careant ſuſpitione. Et qui decreti huius violator extiterit (confeſſus vel conuictus) ruinam ordinis patiatur. Inter conſanguineos, ſeu affinitate propinquos, vſque ad ſeptimam generationem, matrimonia contrahi prohibemus. That is, vnto prieſts, deacons, ſubdeacons, and canons, we do vtterly inhibite by authoritie Apoſtolicall, all maner ſocietie and conuerſation with all kynde of women, except onely their mother, ſiſter, or Aunt, or ſuch whereof can ryſe no ſuſpicion. And whoſoeuer ſhall be found to violate this decree (beyng conuict thereof) ſhall ſuſtaine thereby the loſſe of all that he hath by his order. Moreouer, amongſt kindred or ſuch as be ioyned in affinitie, we forbid matrimony, vnto the ſeuenth generation, &c. But ſee how God worketh againſt ſuch vngodly proceedings. The next night after, it happened, the ſame Cardinal (ruffling & reuellyng wyth his concubines) to be apprehended in the ſame vice, whereof he had ſo ſtraightly geuen out precepts the next day before, to the no little ſlaunder and ſhame (as Math. Pariſ doth write) of the whole clergy.

A romiſhe ſtatute concerning prieſtes wiues and Concubines.

Mariage forbid to the ſeuenth degree.

The Popes Legate geuing preceptes of chaſtitie, was found with an harlot.

Lotharius Emperour.

Vnto this tyme liued Henricus the v. Emperor, after he had raigned 20. yeres, dying without iſſue as is before mentioned. Next after Henricus, the Imperiall crowne came to Lotharius Duke of Saxon. an. 1127.

Arnulphus Martyred at Rome.

The hiſtory of Arnulphus.

Certayne hiſtoryes make mention of one Arnulphus in the tyme of this Pope Honorius. ij. Some ſay he was Archbiſh. of Lugdune: as Hugo, Platina, Sabellicus. Trithemius ſayth, he was a prieſt, whoſe hiſtory, as it is ſet forth in Trithemius, I will briefly in Engliſh expreſſe. About this time (ſayth he) in the dayes of Honorius, ij. one Arnulphus Prieſt (a man zelous and of great deuotion, and a worthy preacher) came to Rome, which Arnulphus in his preaching rebuked the diſſolute and laſciuious looſenes, incontinencie, auarice, and immoderate pride of the clergy, prouoking all to follow Chriſt and his Apoſtles in the pouerty rather, and in purenes of lyfe. By reaſon wherof, this man was well accepted, and highly liked of the nobilitie of Rome, for a true diſciple of Chriſt, but of the Cardinals and the clergy no leſſe hated, then fauoured of the other. In ſo much, that priuily in the night ſeaſon they toke hym and deſtroyed him. This his martyrdome (ſayth he) was reuealed to hym before, from God by an Aungell, he beyng in the deſert, whē he was ſent forth to preach, wherupō, he ſayd to them publikely with theſe words: I know (ſayth he) ye ſeeke my lyfe, and know, ye will make me away priuily. But why? becauſe I preach to you the truth, and blame your pryde, ſtoutneſſe, auarice, incontinencie, with your vnmeaſurable greedines in getting and heaping vp riches, therfore be you diſpleaſed with me. I take here heauen and earth to witneſſe, that I haue preached to you, that I was commaunded of the Lord. But you contemne me and your creator, who by his onely ſonne hath redemed you. And no meruaile if ye ſeeke my death beyng a ſinfull perſon preaching to you the truth: when as if S. Peter were here this day, and rebuked your vices (which doe ſo multiply aboue all meaſure) you would not ſpare him neither. And as he was expreſſing this with a loude voyce, he ſayd moreouer: For my part I am not afrayd to ſuffer death for the truth ſake, but this I ſay to you, that God will looke vpon your iniquities, and will be reuenged. You beyng full of all vnpuritie, play the blynd guides to the people committed to you, leading them the way to hell. A God he is of reuengeaunce. Thus the hatred of the Clergy beyng incenſed agaynſt hym for preaching truth, conſpired agaynſt him, and ſo laying priuy waite for hym, tooke hym and drowned him. Sabellicus & Platina ſay, they hanged hym.

Arnulphus Martyr.

In the ſecond Tome of the generall Councels imprinted at Colen, is mentioned a certain booke called Opus tripartitum, written as the author ſuppoſeth, aboue 400. yeres ago, either of this Arnulphus, or iuſt about the ſame tyme. In this booke the writer complaineth of many enormities and abuſes in the Church, First, of the number of holy dayes, declaring what occaſion of vice groweth thereby, accordyng to the common ſaying of whores and naughty women (which ſay) they vauntage more in one holy day, then in 50. other dayes beſides.

Ex Tretimio. A booke called Tripartitum, written 400. yeares agoe.

Number of holy dayes.

Item, complaineth of the curious ſinging in cathedrall churches, whereby many bee occaſioned to beſtow much good tyme, yea many yeres about the ſame, which otherwiſe they might geue to the learning of better ſciences.

Curious ſinging in Cathedrall Churches.

Likewiſe, he complaineth of the rable and multitude of begging Friers and religious men, & profeſſed womē, ſhewyng what great occaſion of idle & vncomely life commeth therof.

The world ouercharged with begging Religions.

Alſo of the vnconſiderate promotion of euill Prelates, and of their great negligence in correcting and reforming the euill demeanour of the people.

Promotion of euill prelates.

Item, of the great wantonnes & laſciuiouſnes in their ſeruants and families, concerning their exceſſiue wearing of apparell.

Superfluitie of apparell in Biſhops families.

Item, complaineth alſo of the outragious and exceſſiue gaynes, that Prelates and other vnder them take for their ſeale, eſpecially of officials, ſcribes & ſuch like, which geue out the ſeale they care not how, nor wherfore, ſo they may gayne money.

Byſhops ſeales abuſed to get mony.

He complaineth in like maner, that prelates be ſo ſlack and negligent in looking to the reſidēts in their benefices.

Non reſidentes in benefices.

Farther lamenteth, for the raſh geuing of benefices to parſons, vicars, and curates, not for any godlines or learning in them, but for fauour or friendſhip, or interceſſion, either els for hope of ſome gayne, whereof ſpringeth this great ignorance in the Church.

Raſh beſtowing of benefices.

After this he noteth in prelates, how they waſt and expend the goods of the church in ſuperfluities or vpon theyr kinſfolke, or other worſe wayes, which ſhould rather be ſpent vpon the poore.

Waſtefull ſpending of the Church goods.

Nextly, in the x. chapter, he cōplaineth for that through the negligence of men of the church (eſpecially of the church of Rome) the bookes and monuments of the old Councels & alſo of the new, are not to be found: which ſhould be reſerued and kept in all cathedrall Churches.

Old bookes of Councels loſt by the negligence of the clerkes.

Item, that many prelates be ſo cold in doing their duties. Alſo reprocheth the vnchaſt and voluptuous demeanor of Eccleſiaſticall perſons by the example of Storkes, whoſe nature is (ſaith he) that if any of their company, leauyng his owne mate, ioyneth with any other, all the reſt flieth vpon him (whether it be he or ſhe) beateth hym, and plucketh his fethers off: what then (ſayth he) ought good prelates to do to ſuch a perſon of their company, whoſe filthineſſe and corrupt life both defileth ſo many, and ſtinketh in the whole Church.

The vnchaſte lyfe of prieſtes condemned by the nature of the ſtorkes.

Againe, forasmuch as we read in the booke of Eſdras, lib 2. cap 9 that he purging Iſrael of ſtrange womē, began firſt with the prieſts: So now likewiſe in the purging & correcting of all ſortes of men, firſt the purgation ought to begin with theſe, according as it is written by the prophet Ezechiel. Begin firſt with my ſanctuary, &c.

Amendment of lyfe ought firſt to begin with the prieſtes.

Moreouer, how that in the tyme of Phillip kyng of Fraunce, the whole Realme was interdited, for that the kyng had but one woman in ſtead of his wife, which was not his wife by law. And againe, ſeyng in theſe our dayes, the king of Portingale hath bene ſequeſtred from his dominion, by the authoritie of the church (beyng thought not ſufficient to gouerne) what then ought to bee ſayd to that Prelate, which abuſeth other mens wiues, virgines, and Nunnes, which alſo is found vnable & inſufficient to take vpon him the charge of ſoules?

After Honorius, next in the ſame vſurpation ſucceded Pope Innocentius 2. an. 1130. But as it was with hys predeceſſours before hym, that at euery mutation of newe Popes, came new perturbations, and commonly neuer a Pope was elected, but ſome other was ſet vp againſt him, (ſometymes 2. ſometymes 3. Popes togethey) ſo likewiſe it happened with this Innocentius: for after he was choſen, the Romains elected another pope named Anacletus. Betwixt theſe two Popes was much ado, and great conflicts through the partaking of Rogerius Duke of Sicile, takyng Anacletus part agaynſt Innocentius, vntill Lotharius the Emperour came, who reſcuing Innocentius, droue Rogerius out of Italy. Our ſtories recorde, that king Henry was one of the great helpes in ſetting vp and maintayning this Pope Innocentius againſt Anacletus, Giſburnenſ.

About the tyme of doyng of theſe thynges (beyng the yeare of our Lord, 1135.) king Henry being in Normandy (as ſome ſay) by taking there a fall frō his horſe (as other ſay) by taking a ſurfet in eating Lampries, fell ſicke & died, after he had raigned ouer the realme of England 35. yeres and odde monethes, leauyng for his heyres Matilde the Empreſſe his daughter, with her young ſonne Henry to ſucceed after hym, to whom all the Prelates and Nobilitie of the Realme were ſworne. But contrary to their oth made to Molde in the preſence of her father before: William the Archbiſhop of Cant. and the nobles of the realme, crowned Stephen Erle of Boloyne, and ſiſters ſonne to king Henry, vpon S. Stephens day in Chriſtmas weeke. Which Archbiſhop, the next yeare after dyed: beyng (as it was thought) iuſtly puniſhed for his periury. And many other lordes which did accordingly, went not quite without puniſhment. In like iuſtice of puniſhmēt is numbred alſo Roger biſhop of Saliſbury, who contrary to his othe (beyng a great doer in the coronation of Stephen) was apprehended of the ſame kyng, and miſerably (but iuſtly) exterminned.

The death of K. He Anno. 1135.

Periury iuſtly puniſhed.

A certaine written Engliſh ſtory I haue, which addeth more, and ſaith, that king Stephen (hauing many foes in diuers quarters, kepyng there holdes and caſtels agaynſt him) went then to Oxford, & tooke the Biſhop of Saliſbury, and put a rope about his necke, & ſo led him to the caſtle of Vice (that was his) and commanded them to render vp the caſtle, or he would ſlay and hang their Biſhop. Which Caſtle beyng geuen vp, the kyng tooke the ſpoyle thereof. The like alſo he did to the Biſhop of Lyncolne named Alexander, whom in lyke maner he led in a rope to a Caſtle of the Biſhops, that was vpon Trent, and bad them deliuer vp the Caſtle, or els he would hang their Lord, before the gate. Long it was before the caſtle was geuen vp, yet at length the king obtaining it, there entred and tooke all the treaſure of the Biſhop, &c. Roger Houeden. Fabian alleagyng a certayne olde Author, whom I cannot finde, referreth a great cauſe of this periury to one Hugh Bigot, Steward ſometyme with king Henry. Who immediatly after the death of the ſayd Henry, came into England, and before the ſayd Archbiſhop and other Lordes of the land, tooke wilfully an othe and ſware: that he was preſent a little before the kings death, when king Henry admitted for his heyre (to be king after him) Stephen his nephew, for ſo much as Molde his daughter had diſcontented him. Wherunto the Archbiſhop with the other Lordes gaue to haſty credence. But this Hugh (ſayth he) eſcaped not vnpuniſhed, for he dyed miſerably in a ſhort tyme after. Ex Fabia. Albeit all this may be ſuppoſed rather to be wroght not without the practiſe of Henry biſhop of Wincheſter, & other Prelates (by his ſettyng on) which Henry was brother to King Stephen, &c.

King Stephen.

Anno. 1136.

Thus when king Stephen contrary to his oth made before to Molde the Empreſſe, had taken vpon hym the crowne (as is aboueſayd) he ſware before the Lordes at Oxford, that he would not hold the benefices that were voy-ded, and that he would remit the Danegelt, with many other things, which after he little perfourmed. Moreouer, becauſe he dread the comming of the Empreſſe, he gaue licence to his Lordes, euery one to build vpon theyr owne ground, ſtrong caſtles or fortreſſes, as them liked. All the tyme of his raigne he was vexed with warres, but eſpecially with Dauid king of the Scottes, with whom he was at length accorded, but yet the Scottiſh king did hym no homage, becauſe he was ſworne to Maude the Empreſſe. Notwithſtanding, yet Henry the eldeſt ſonne to king Dauid, did homage to king Stephen. But he after repentyng thereof, entred into Northumberland with a great hoſt, & burnt and ſlew the people in moſt cruel wyſe, neither ſparing man, woman, nor chylde. Such as were with chylde they ript, the children they toſt vpon their ſpeare pointes, and laying the prieſts vpon the altars, they mangled and cut them all to pieces after a moſt terrible maner. But by the manhood of the Engliſh Lordes and ſouldiours, and through the meanes of Thurſtine Archbiſhop of Yorke, they were met withall, and ſlaine a great number of them, and Dauid their king cōſtrained to geue Henry his ſonne hoſtage for ſuretie of peace. In the meane tyme king Stephen was occupied in the South countreys, beſieging diuers caſtles of diuers Biſhops & other Lordes, and tooke them by force, and fortified them with his knights and ſeruants, to the entent to withſtand the Empreſſe, whoſe cōming he euer feared.

The crueltie of the Scots agaynſt the Engliſhe men.

About the vj. yeare of his raigne, Maud the Empreſſe came into England out of Normandy, & by the aid of Robert Earle of Glouceſter, and Ranulph of Cheſter, made ſtrong warre vpon kyng Stephen. In the ende whereof the kings partie was chaſed, and himſelfe taken priſoner, & ſent to Briſtow, there to be kept in ſure hold. The ſame day whē kyng Stephen ſhould ioyne his battayle: It is ſayd in a certaine old Chronicle before mynded, that he beyng at the Maſſe (which then the biſhop of Lincolne ſayd, before yͤ kyng) as he went to offer vp his taper, it brake in two pieces. And when the maſſe was done, (at what time the Kyng ſhould haue bene houſeled) the Rope whereby the pyxe did hang, did breake, and the pixe fell down vpon the aultar.

Maude the Empreſſe came into England agaynſt Steuen.

After this field, the Queene (king Stephens wyfe, lying then in Kent) made great labour to the Empreſſe and her counſail, to haue the kyng deliuered and put into ſome houſe of religion, but could not obtayne. Alſo the Londiners made great ſute to the ſayd Empreſſe, to haue and to vſe agayne S. Edwardes lawes, and not the lawes of her father, which were more ſtraight and ſtrange to them then the other: which when they could not obtayne of her and her counſaile, the citizens of London (beyng therwith diſcontented) would haue taken the Empreſſe. But ſhe hauing knowledge therof, fled priuily from London to Oxford. But then the Kentiſhmen and Londiners taking the kings part, ioyned battaile againſt the Empreſſe: there the foreſayd Robert Erle of Glouceſter, and baſe brother to the Empreſſe was taken. And ſo by exchange, both the King, and Erle Robert were deliuered out of priſon. Then Stephen (without delay) gatheryng to hym a ſtrong army, ſtraightly purſued the foreſaid Matild or Maud, with her friendes, beſieging them in the Caſtell of Oxford. In the ſiege wherof, fell a great ſnow and froſt ſo hard, that a man well laden might paſſe ouer the water. Vpon the occaſion wherof, the Empreſſe (bethinking her ſelf) appointed with her friends & retinue: clothed in white ſheetes (& ſo iſſuing out by a poſtern gate) went vpō the ice, ouer Thames and ſo eſcaped to Wallingford. After this, the king) the caſtle beyng gotten) when he found not the Empreſſe, was much diſpleaſed, and moleſted the countrey about diuers wayes. In concluſion, he purſued the empreſſe & her company ſo hard, that he cauſed them to flee the realme, which was the vi. yeare of his raigne.

Ex incerti autoris chronico.

The ſecond yeare after this, which was the viij. yeare of his raigne, there was a parliament kept at Londō. Vnto the which, all the Biſhops of the Realme reſorted, and there denoūced the kyng accurſed (and all them with him) that did any hurt to the Church, or to any miniſter therof. Wherupon the king began ſomwhat to amend his conditions for a certain ſpace: but afterward as my ſtory ſayth, was as euil as he was before: but what the cauſes were, myne author maketh no relation therof, &c. To returne agayne to the ſtory, the Empreſſe compelled (as is ſayd, to flee the realme) returned againe into Normandy to Geffrey Plantagenet her huſband. Who, after he had valiantly wonne and defended the Duchy of Normandy, agaynſt the puiſſance of king Steuen a long tyme, ended his lyfe, leauing Henry his ſonne to ſucceed him in that dukedom. In the meane while, Robert Earle of Glouceſter, and the Earle of Cheſter (who were ſtrong of people) had diuers conflictes with the king. In ſo much, that at a battayle at Wilton betwene them, the king was well nere taken, but yet eſcaped with much payne.

The deceaſe of Geffry Plantagenet.

It was not long after, but Euſtace ſonne to king Stephen, who had maried the French kings ſiſter, made war vpon duke Henry of Normādy, but preuailed not. Soone after, the ſayd Henry Duke of Normandy (in the quarell of his mother Maude) with a great puiſſance entred into England, and at the firſt wan the caſtle of Malmeſbury, then the Tower of London, and afterward the towne of Notingham, with other holdes and caſtles, as of Walyngford and other mo. Thus, betwene him and the king were foughten many battayles, to the great annoyaunce of the realme. During which tyme, Euſtace the kings ſonne departeth. Vpon the occaſion wherof, the king cauſed Theobald (which ſucceeded next after W. aboue mentioned) Archbiſhop of Canterbury, to make meanes for the Duke for peace, which vpon this condition betwene them was concluded, that Steuen during his life tyme ſhould holde the kingdome, and Henry in the meane tyme to bee proclaimed heyre apparant, in the chiefe cities throughout the Realme. Theſe things thus concluded, Duke Henry taketh his iourney into Normandy (king Steuen and hys ſonne William, bringing him on his way) where William the kings ſonne, taking vp his horſe before his father, had a fall and brake his leg, and ſo was had to Canterbury. The ſame yere king Stephen, about October (as ſome ſay for ſorow) ended his life, after he had raigned 19. yeres periuredly.

In the tyme of this kyng, which was the xvi. yeare of his raigne, Theobaldus Archbiſhop of Cant. and Legate to the Pope, did hold a councell at London. In the which councel firſt began new found appellatiōs, from councels to the Pope, found out by Henry Biſhop of Wint. For as the wordes of myne author doe recorde: In Anglia namq́; appellationes in vſu non erant, donec eas Henricus Wint. Epiſcopus dum legatus eſſet, malo ſuo crudeliter intruſit. In eodem namq́; concilio ad Rom. pontificis audientiam ter appellatū eſt, &c. That is, For appellations before were not in vſe in England, till Henry Biſhop of Winchester being thē the Popes Legate, brought them cruelly in, to his own hurt. For in that Councell thriſe appeale was made to the Biſhop of Rome.

In the tyme of king Stephen died Gracianus a mōke of Bononie, who compiled the booke called the Popes decrees. Alſo his brother Petrus Lombardus biſhop of Paris (which is called the maiſter of Sentences) compiled his foure bookes of the ſentence. Theſe two brethren were the greateſt doers in finding out and ſtabliſhing this blynde opinion of the ſacrament, that the only ſimilitude of bread and wyne remayned, but not the ſubſtaunce of them: and this they call the ſpirituall vnderſtandyng of the myſterie. And therefore no meruail if the ſunne in thoſe dayes were ſeene blacke and dimme.

At which tyme alſo, Lotharius the Emperour began to do the lyke in recouering agayne the right & priuiledge taken away from Henricus his predeceſſor, had not Bernardus geuen him contrary counſaile.

Curſing with booke, bell, and candle.

Here came into the Church, the maner of curſing with booke, bell, and candle, deuiſed in the Councell of London holden by William biſhop of Wincheſter vnder Pope Celeſtinus, which ſucceded after Innocentius, an. 1144.

{ Anno. 1138. }

Alſo Lotharius ſucceeded in the Imperiall crowne, Conradus the nephew of Henricus the v. afore mentioned, an. 1138. which only amongſt many Emperors is not found to receiue the crowne at the Popes hand.

Pope Lucius, the ij. warring agaynſt the Senators.

In the dayes of this Emperor (who raigned 15. yeres) were diuers Popes, as Celeſtinus 2. Lucius the 2. Eugenius the 3. at which time the Romaines went about to recouer agayne their former olde maner of chuſing theyr Conſuls and Senators. But the Popes thē being in their ruffe, in no caſe would abide it, wherupon roſe many commotions, with much ciuile warre amongeſt them. In ſo much, that Pope Lucius (ſending for ayde to the Emperour, and he otherwiſe letted at that tyme could not come) armed his ſouldiours, thinking to inuade them or els to deſtroy them in their Senate houſe. But this comming to their knowledge before, the people was all in aray, and ſo much ado was amongſt them. Pope Lucius beyng alſo amongſt thē in the fight (wel pelted with ſtones & blowes) liued not long after. Likewiſe Pope Eugenius after him, an. 1145. (purſuing the Romains for the ſame matter) firſt did curſe them with excommunicatiō. After, when he ſaw that would not ſerue, he came with his hoſt: and ſo compelled them at length to ſeeke his peace, and to take his cōditions which were theſe: That they ſhould aboliſh theyr Conſuls, and take ſuch Senators, as he by his Papall authoritie ſhould aſſigne them.

Hadrianus a Pope an Engliſhman.

Then followed Anaſtacius the 4. & after him Hadrianus 4. an Engliſhman, by his name (called Breakeſpere) belonging once to S. Albōs. This Hadrianus kept great ſtirre in like ſort with the citizens of Rome for aboliſhyng their conſuls and Senate, curſing, excommunicating, and warring agaynſt them with all power he could make: to the tyme he remoued the Conſuls out of their office, and brought them all vnder his ſubiection. The lyke buſineſſe and rage he alſo ſtyrred vp againſt Apulia, and eſpecially againſt the Empire, bluſtering and thundering agaynſt Fridericus the Emperour, as (the Lord graunting) you ſhall heare anone after we haue proſecuted ſuch matter, as neceſſarily appertayneth firſt to the continuation of our Engliſh ſtory.

King Henry the ſecond.

King Henry the ſecond.

Thomas Becket chauncellor of England.

Henry the ſecōd of that name, the ſonne of Jeffrey Plantagenet, and of Maude the Empreſſe and daughter of king Henry the firſt, beganne his raigne after king Stephen, and continued 35. yeares. The firſt yeare of his raign he ſubdued Ireland, and not long after, Thomas Becket was made by him Lord Chauncellour of England. This king caſt downe diuers Caſtles, which were erected in the time of king Stephen. He went into the North partes, where he ſubdued William king of Scotland, who at that tyme held a great part of Northumberland vnto new Caſtell vpon Tyne, and ioyned Scotland to his owne kingdome from the South Ocean to the North Iles of Orchades. Alſo he put vnder his dominion the kingdome of Wales, and there let to fall downe many great woodes, and made the wayes playne. So that by his great manhood and policie, the ſeignorie of England was much augmēted with the addition of Scotland, Ireland, the Iles Orchades, Britaine, Poytow, and Guyan. Alſo he had in hys rule, Normandy, Gaſcoyne, Angeow, and Chinon: alſo Aluerne and the Citie of Tholous he wan, and were to hym ſubiect. Ouer and beſides (by the title of his wife Elenore daughter to the Erle of Poytow) he obtained the mounts Pyraine in Spayne: ſo that we read of none of hys progenitours, which had ſo many countreys vnder hys dominion.

In England were ſeene in the firmament two ſunnes, or as it is in Chronica Chronicorum, in Italy appeared thre ſunnes by the ſpace of iij. houres in the weſt, and the yere following, appeared iij. moones, wherof the middle moone had a red croſſe ouertwart the face. wherby was tokened (by the iudgement of ſome) the great ſchiſme, that after fell among the Cardinals for the election of the Biſhop of Rome: or els rather the buſineſſe betwene Fridericus the Emperour and the Popes, wherof partly now incidently occaſiō geueth vs to diſcourſe. After that I haue firſt written of Gerhardus and Dulcinus Nauarēſis, who in their tyme according to their gift, did earneſtly labour & preach againſt the church of Rome, defending and maintainyng, that prayer was not more holy in one place then in an other, that the Pope was Antichriſt, that the Clergy & prelates of Rome were reiect, and the very whore of Babilon prefigured in the Apocalips, &c. Peraduenture theſe had receiued ſome light of knowledge of the Waldenſes. Who at length with a great number of their folowers were oppreſſed and ſlaine by the Pope. And although ſome inconuenient points of doctrine and diſhoneſty in their aſſemblies be agaynſt them alledged of ſome, yet theſe tymes of ours do teach vs ſufficiently, what credite is to bee geuen to ſuch popiſh ſlanders, forged rather vpon hatred of true religion, then vpon any iudgement of truth. Illyricus in his booke De teſtibus referreth the tyme of theſe two, to the yere of our Lord, 1280. but as I find in ẏ ſtory of Robert Guiſburn: theſe ij. about ẏ yeare of our Lord, 1158. brought 30. with them into England, who by the king and the Prelates, were all burnt in the forehead, and ſo driuen out of the Realme, and after (as Illyricus writeth) were ſlayne by the Pope.

Fredericus Barbaroſſ Emperour.

And now according to my promiſe premiſed, the tyme requireth to proceede to the hiſtory of Fredericus the firſt, (called Barbaroſſa) ſucceſſor vnto Conradus in the Empire, who marched vp to Italy, to ſubdue there certaine rebels. The Pope hearing that, came with his Clergy to meete him by the way, in a towne called Sutrium, thinking by him to find ayd againſt his enemies. The Emperor ſeyng the Biſhop, lighteth of his horſe to receiue hym, holdyng the ſtirrup to the Prelate on the left ſide, when he ſhould haue held it on the right, whereat the Pope ſhewed himſelfe ſomwhat agrieued. The Emperor ſmiling, excuſed himſelfe that he was neuer accuſtomed to holde ſtirrops. And ſeyng it was done onely of good will, and of no duety, the leſſe matter was, what ſide of the horſe he held. The next day to make amends agayne to the Biſhop, the Emperor ſending for him, receiued him, holding the right ſtirrup to the prelate, & ſo all the matter was made whole and he the Popes owne white ſonne agayne.

The pope diſpleaſed, that the Emperou did not ho his right ſtirrup.

The Emperour holdeth the Popes ſtirrup.

The Popes old practiſe in ſetting Princes together by the eares.

After this, as they were come in and ſate together, Hadrianus the Pope beginneth to declare vnto him, how his aunceſtors before him (ſuch as ſought to the ſea of Rome for the crowne) were woont alwayes to leaue behind them ſome ſpeciall token or monument of their beneuolence, for the obtaining thereof, as Carolus Magnus in ſubduing the Lombards, Otho the Berengarians, Lotharius the Normands, &c. Wherfore, he required ſome benefit to proceed likewiſe from him to the church of Rome, in reſtoring agayne the countrey of Apulia, to the Church of Rome. Which thing if he would do, he for his part agayne would do that which appertained to him to do: (meaning in geuing him the crowne) for at ẏ tyme the popes had brought the Emperors, to fetch their crowne at their hands.

Frederike with his princes perceiuing, that vnleſſe he would of his owne proper coſtes & charges fetch in agayn Apulia out of duke Williams hands, he could not ſpeed of the crowne, was fayne to promiſe to all that the Pope required, and ſo the next day after was crowned.

War more gaynefull to the Pope then peace. Warre ſtirred vp by the Pope.

This done, the Emperor returneth into Germany, to refreſh his army and his other furnitures, for the ſubduing Apulia. In the meane while, Hadrianus not thinking to be idle, firſt geueth forth cenſures of excommunication againſt William duke of Apulia. Beſides (not contēt with this) ſendeth alſo to Emanuel Emperor of Conſtantinople, incenſing him to warre againſt the foreſayd William. The duke perceiuing this, ſendeth to the Pope for peace, promiſing to reſtore to him whatſoeuer he would.

But the Pope through the malignant counſaile of his Cardinals, would grant to no peace, thinking to get more by warre. The Duke ſeyng nothing but warre, prepareth himſelfe with all expedition to the ſame. To be briefe, making all his power out of Sicilia, he arriueth at Apulia, & there putteth Emanuell the Emperour to flight. This done, he proceedeth to the Citie Bonauenture, where the Pope with his Cardinals were looking for victory. He planting there his ſiege, ſo ſtraightly preſſed the City, that the Pope & his Cardinals were glad to intreat for peace which they refuſed before. The Duke graunted to their peace vpon certaine conditions: that is, that neyther hee ſhould inuade ſuch poſſeſſions as belonged to Rome, and that the Pope ſhould make him king of both Siciles. So the matter was concluded, and they departed. The biſhop cōming to Rome was no leſſe troubled there about their Conſuls and Senators. In ſo much, that when his curſes and excommunications could not preuayle nor ſerue, hee was fayne to leaue Rome, and remoued to Ariminum.

The pope driuen to entreate for peace.

The Emperor all this while ſitting quietly at home, began to conſider with himſelfe, how the Pope had extorted from the Emperours (his predeceſſours) the inueſting and induyng of prelates: how he had pylled and poled all nations by his Legates, and alſo had bene the ſower of ſeditions through all his Empery, he began therfore to require of all the biſhops of Germany homagium, and othe of their allegeance, commaunding alſo the Popes Legates, if they came into Germany without his ſending for, not to be receiued. Charging moreouer all his ſubiectes, that none of thē ſhould appeale to Rome. Beſides this, in his letters he ſet & prefixed his name before the popes name. Whereupon, the Pope beyng not a little offended, directed his letters to the foreſayd Frederike Emperour, after this tenor and forme as foloweth.

HAdrianus Epiſcopus ſeruus ſeruorum Dei, Friderico Imperatori ſalutem, & Apoſtolicam benedictionem. Cætera vide in priore æditione.

In Engliſh.

A letter of Pope Hadrian, to the Emperour Fredericke.

Hadrian Biſhop, ſeruant of the ſeruants of God, to Friderike Emperour, health and Apoſtolicall benediction. The law of God, as it promiſeth to them that honour father and mother long life, ſo it threatneth the ſentence of death to them that curſe father & mother. We are taught by the word of truth, that euery one which exalteth himſelfe ſhalbe brought low. Wherfore (my welbeloued ſonne in the Lord) we meruaile not a little at your wiſedome, in that you ſeeme not to ſhew that reuerence to bleſſed S. Peter, and to the holy church of Rome, which you ought to ſhew. For why? in your letters ſent to vs, you preferre your owne name before ours, wherin you incurre the note of inſolencie, yea (and rather to ſpeake it) of arrogancie. What ſhould I here recite vnto you, the othe of your fidelitie, which you ſware to bleſſed S. Peter and to vs, and how you obſerue and kepe the ſame? Seyng you ſo require homage and allegeaunce of them that be Gods, and all the ſonnes of the high God, and preſume to ioyne their holy handes with yours, working contrary to vs? Seyng alſo you exclude (not onely out of your churches, but alſo out of your cities) our Cardinals, whom we direct as Legates from our ſide: what ſhall I ſay then vnto you? Amend therefore I aduiſe you, amend: for while you go about to obtayne of vs your conſecration and crowne, & to get thoſe things you haue not. I feare much your honour will looſe the things ye haue. Thus fare ye well.

The Emperours name before the Popes.

❧ The aunſwer of Frederike the Emperour to the Pope.

FRederike by the grace of God, Romaine Emperour, euer Auguſtus, vnto Adrian biſhop of the Romaine church, and vnto all ſuch that bee willing to cleaue vnto thoſe things which Ieſus began to worke and teach, greeting. The law of iuſtice geueth to euery perſon accordingly that which is his. Neither do we derogate from our parents: of whom, according as we haue, receiued this our dignitie of the Imperiall crowne and gouernance: ſo in the ſame kyngdome of ours, we doe render their due & true honour to them againe. And foraſmuch as duety in all ſortes of men is to be ſought out, let vs ſee firſt in the tyme of Conſtantine (Silueſter then being Biſhop of Rome) what patrimony or regalitie hee had of his owne, due to him that he might claime. Dyd not Conſtantine of his liberall benignitie geue liberty, and reſtored peace vnto the church? And whatſoeuer regalitie or patrimony the ſee of your papacy hath, was it not by the donation of Princes geuen vnto them? Reuolue and turne ouer the ancient chronicles (if either you haue not red, or neglected that we do affirm) there it is to be found. Of them which be Gods by adoption, and hold our lord ſhips of vs: why may wee not iuſtly require theyr homage, & their ſworne allegeāce, whē as he which is both your maiſter and ours (taking nothing of any king or any man, but geuing all goodnes to all men) payd toll and tribute for hym & Peter, vnto Ceſar? Geuing you example to do the like. And therfore, ſaith to you and all men: Learne of me, for I am meeke and humble of hart, &c. Wherfore eyther render againe your lordſhips & patrimonies which ye hold of vs: or els if ye finde them ſo ſweete vnto you, then geue that which is due to God, to God: and that which is due to Ceſar, vnto Ceſar. As for your Cardinals, we ſhut them out both of churches and cities. For that we ſee them not preachers, but proylers: not repairers of peace, but rakers for mony, not pillers and vpholders of the church, but polers inſatiable of the world, and moylers of mony and gold. What tyme we ſhall ſee them to be other men (ſuch as the church requireth them to be) members and makers of peace ſhining forth lyke lightes to the people, aſſiſting poore and weake mens cauſes in the way of equitie, &c. Then ſhall they finde vs preſt and ready to relieue thē with ſtipends, and all things neceſſary. And where as you inferre ſuch queſtions as theſe vnto ſecular men (little conducing to religion) you incurre therby no little note and blemiſh of your humilitie (which is keeper of all vertues) and of your manſuetude. Therfore let your fatherhood beware and take heede, leaſt in mouing ſuch matters as ſeme to vs vnſeemely for you, ye geue therby offence to ſuch as depend of your word (geuing eare to your mouth, as it were to an euening ſhower.) For we cannot but tell you of that we heare, ſeing now the deteſtable beaſt of pride, doth creepe into the ſeat of Peter, prouiding alwayes (as much as we may by gods grace) for the peace of the church. Fare ye well.

Upon this, Hadrianus the Pope directeth out a Bull againſt Friderike, excommunicating him with publike & ſolemne ceremonies. Moreouer (conſpiring with William duke of Apulia) ſought all maner of ways to infeſt the emperour, and to ſet all men agaynſt him, eſpecially the clergy. Amongſt many other writing to Hillinus Byſhop of Treuers, to Arnulphus biſhop of Mentz, & to Friderike biſhop of Colen, ſeeketh firſt to make them of his ſide. His Epiſtle to them ſoundeth to this effect.

THe Empire of Rome was tranſferred from the Greekes to the Almains, ſo that the king of Almains could not be called Emperour, before he were crowned of the biſhop Apoſtolicall. Before his conſecration he is a king, afterward Emperour. Whence hath he his Empire then, but of vs? By the election of his princes he hath the name of a king, by our conſecration he hath the name of the Emperour of Auguſt, or of Cæſar. Ergo, by us he raygneth as Emperor. Search ancient antiquities. Zacharias P. promooted Carolus, and made him a great name, that he was made and called Emperour. And after that, euer the king of Almaines was named Emperour and aduocate to the ſee Apoſtolicall, ſo that Apulia (conquered by him) was ſubdued to the biſhop of Rome: which Apulia with the citie of Rome, is ours, and not the Emperours. Our ſeat is at Rome, the ſeate of the Emperour is at Aquis in Arduenna, which is a wood in Fraunce. The Emperour whatſoeuer he hath, he hath it of vs. As Zacharias did tranſlate the Empire frō the Greekes to the Almaines: ſo we may tranſlate it againe from the Almains, to the Greekes. Behold it lyeth in our power to geue it to whom we will, being therfore ſet vp of God aboue Gentiles and nations, to deſtroy and plucke vp, to build and to plant, &c.

A ſeditious and proud letter of the pope to the Biſhops of Germany.

Well bragged and like a Pope.

Scripture well wraſted.

And yet further to vnderſtand the ambitious preſumption of this proud ſee of Rome, it ſo chaunced this Emperour Fridericus at his firſt comming vp to Rome, dyd behold there in the palace of Laterane, a certaine picture brought forth vnto him, how Lotharius the ij. Emperour was crowned of the Pope, with the inſcription of certaine verſes in Latin, declaryng how the foreſayd Emperor cōming to Rome, firſt did ſweare to the city, after was made the Popes man, and ſo of him receiued the crowne. Fridericus offended with this picture, deſired the pope it might be aboliſhed, for that it ſhould be no cauſe of any diſſention hereafter. The Pope vnderſtanding the intent of the Emperor, how loth he was to come vnder ſubiectiō to his ſee, deuiſed by all crafty wayes to bring it to paſſe. And firſt taking his occaſion by the biſhop of Laodicea (beyng thē detained in cuſtody, I cannot tell by whom) ſent diuers and ſharpe letters vnto him. And yet not ſo ſharpe, as proud & diſdainfull. Wherin the firſt ſalutation by his legates, was this in Latine: Salutat vos beatiſſimus pater noſter Papa, & vniuerſitas Cardinalium, ille vt pater, hij vt fratres. That is, our moſt bleſſed father the Pope greeteth you, and the vniuerſall company of the Cardinals, he as your father, they as your brethren. Meaning therby that he ſhould vnderſtād himſelfe to be ſubiect and vnderlying to the Pope, no leſſe then the Cardinals were. Moreouer in his letters obiecting diuers things againſt him, reciteth, how many and great benefites he had receiued of the church of Rome: by the which church he had obteyned the fulneſſe of his honor and dignity, &c. The Emperour with his princes perceiuing whereunto the Pope by his Legates did ſhoot: (beyng yng a prince of courage) could not abide ſuch intollerable preſumption of a proud meſſage: whereupon, much contention fell betwene the Legates and the Princes. And of whom then (ſay the Legates) receyueth Ceſar the Emperie, if he take it not of the Pope? with the which word, the Germaine princes were ſo much offended, that had not the Emperour ſtayed them (with much ado) they would haue vſed violence againſt the Legates. But the Emperour not permitting that, commaũded the Legates away, ſtraightly charging them to make no turne by the way to any perſon or perſons, but ſtraight to depart home. And he (to certifie the whole ſtate of the Empire of the truth of the matter) directeth forth theſe letters that follow.

✻ The tenour of the Emperours letter ſent through all his Empire.

FOraſmuch as the prouidence of God (whereof dependeth all power both in heauen and earth) hath committed to vs hys annointed, this our regiment and Impery to be gouerned, and the peace of his Churches by our Imperiall armes to bee protected, we cannot but lament and complaine to you with great ſorrow of heart, ſeyng ſuch cauſes of diſſention (the roote and fountaine of euils, and the infection of peſtiferous corruption) thus to riſe from the holy church, imprinted with the ſeale of peace, and loue of Chriſt.

By reaſon wherof (except God turne it away) we feare the whole body of the church is like to be polluted: the vnitie thereof to be broken, and a ſchiſme and deuiſion to be betwixt the ſpirituall and temporall regiment For we beyng a late at Biſunze, & there intreating buſily of matters pertaining as well to the honor of our Empire, as to the wealth of churches, there came Embaſſadors of the ſee Apoſtolicall, declaring they brought a legacie to our maieſtie of great importaunce, redounding to no ſmall commoditie of our honour and Empire.

Who then, the firſt day of their comming, beyng brought to our preſence, and receyued of vs (as the maner is) with honour accordingly, audience was geuen them to heare what they had to ſay. They forthwith bruſting out of the Mammon of iniquitie, hautie pride, ſtoutneſſe and arrogancie, out of the execrable preſumption of their ſwelling hart, did their meſſage with letters Apoſtolicall, whereof the tenor was this: That we ſhould alwayes haue before our eyes how that our ſoueraign lord the Pope gaue vs the Imperiall crowne, and that it doth not repent him, if ſo be it, we haue receiued greater benefites at his hand. And this was the effect of that ſo ſweete and fatherly legation, which ſhould nouriſh peace both of the church and of the Empire, to vnite thẽ faſt together in the band of loue.

At the hearing of this ſo falſe, vntrue, and moſt vaineglorious preſumption of ſo proud a meſſage, not only the Emperors maieſtie, conceiued indignation, but alſo all the Princes (there preſent) were mooued with ſuch anger and rage thereat, that if our preſence and requeſt had not ſtayed them, they could not haue held their hands from theſe wicked prieſts, or els to haue proceeded with ſentence of death againſt them.

Furthermore, becauſe a great number of other letters (partly written already, partly with ſeales ready ſigned, for letters to be written according as they ſhould thinke good to the Churches of Germany) were found about them: whereby to worke their conceiued intent of iniquitie here in our churches, to ſpoile the aultars, to cary away the iewels of the church, and to fley the limmes and plates of golden croſſes, &c. To the intent their auaricious meaning ſhould haue no further power to raigne, we gaue them commaundement to depart the ſame way, they came. And now, ſeyng our raigne and Empery ſtandeth vpon the election of Princes, from God alone, who in the paſſion of his ſonne, ſubdued the world to be gouerned with two ſwords neceſſary. And againe, ſeyng Peter the Apoſtle hath ſo informed the world with this doctrine, Deum timete, Regem honorificate, that is, Feare God honour your king. Therfore, who ſo ſayth that we haue & poſſeſſe our imperiall kingdom by the benefite of the Lord Pope, is contrary both to the ordinance of God, and to the doctrine of Peter, and alſo ſhalbe reproued for a lyer.

Note here a couragious hart in a valiaunt Emperour. An example for all princes to follow.

Note.

Therfore as our endeuour hath bene heretofore to helpe and to deliuer the ſeruile captiuitie of churches out of the hand, and from the yoke of the Egyptians, and to maintayne the right of their liberties and dignities, we deſire you all with your compaſſion to lament with vs, this ſlaundrous and ignominie inferred to vs and our kingdome, truſting that your faithfull good wil which hath bene euer truſty to the honour of this Empire (neuer yet blemiſhed from the firſt beginning of this citie, and of religion) will prouide, that it ſhall haue no hurt through the ſtrange noueltie and preſumptuous pride of ſuch. Which thing, rather than it ſhould come to paſſe, know you this for certaine: I had rather incurre the danger of death, then to ſuffer ſuch confuſion to happen in our dayes.

This letter of Ceſar fretted the Pope not a little, who wrote again to the biſhops of Germany, accuſing the emperor, and willing them to worke againſt him what they could: they anſwer againe with all obedience to the Pope ſubmitting themſelues, and yet excuſing the emperor, and blaming him rather. And exhorted him henceforth to temper his letters and legacies with more gentlenes and modeſtie, the which counſaile he alſo followed, perceiuing otherwiſe, that he could not preuayle,

Much trouble had good Fridericus with this Pope: but much more with the other, that followed. For this Pope continued not very long, the ſpace only of 4. yeres & odde months. About whoſe tyme roſe vp the order of the Hermites by one william once duke of Aquitania, and afterward a Frier. This Hadrianus walking with his cardinals abroad, to a place called Anagnia or Arignanum, (as Volateran calleth it) chaunced to be choked with a flie getting into his throte, and ſo was ſtrangled, who in the latter tyme of his papacie, was woont to ſay, that there is no more miſerable kynd of lyfe in the earth, then to bee a Pope, and to come to the papacie by bloud, that is (ſaid he) not to ſucceed Peter, but rather Romulus, who to raigne alone, did ſlay his brother.

Pope Alexander the third.

Although this Adrian was bad enough, yet came the next much worſe, one Alexander the 3. of that name. who yet was not elected alone: for beſide him the Emperor wt 9. Cardinals (albeit Sabellicus ſaith but with 3.) did ſet vp another Pope named Victor the 4. Betwene theſe two Popes roſe a foule ſchiſme and great diſcord, and long cõtinued. In ſo much, that the Emperour being required to take vp the matter, ſent for them both to appeare before him, that in hearing them both, he might iudge theyr cauſe the better. Victor came, but Alexander (diſdaining that his matter ſhould come in controuerſie) refuſed to appeare. whereupon the Emperour with a full conſent of his Biſhops and clergy about him, aſſigned and ratified the election of Victor to ſtand, and ſo brought him into the Citie there to be receiued & placed. Alexander (flying into Frãce) accuſed them both, ſending his letters to all chriſtendom againſt them, as men to be auoided and caſt out of all chriſtian company. Alſo to get him frendes at Rome by flattery and mony got on his ſide the greateſt part of the Citie, both to the fauouring of him, and to the ſetting vp of ſuch Conſuls as were for his purpoſe. After this, Alexander comming from France to Sicile, and frõ thence to Rome, was there receiued with much fauour, through the helpe of Phillip the French king.

Alexander curſeth the Emperour.

The Emperour hearing this rebellion and conſpiracie in Rome, remooued wt great power into Italy, where he had deſtroyed diuers great cities. Comming at length to Rome, he required the Citizens that the cauſe betwixt the two Popes might bee decided, and that he which had ẏ beſt right, might be takẽ. If they would ſo do, he would reſtore agayne that which he tooke from them before. Alexander miſtruſting his part, and doubtyng the willes of the Citizens, (hauing ſhippes ready prepared for hym, from william Duke of Apulia) fetcht a courſe about to Venice.

Anno. 1164.

To declare here the difference in hiſtories, betweene Blondus Sabellicus, and the Venetian chronicles, with other writers, concerning the order of this matter, I will ouerpaſſe. In this moſt do agree, that the Pope beyng at Venice, and required to be ſent of the Venetians, to ẏ Emperour, they would not ſend him. wherupon, Fridericus the Emperour ſent thither his ſonne Otho with men and ſhips well apointed, charging him not to attẽpt any thing before his comming. The yong man more hardy then circumſpect (ioyning with the Venetians) was ouercome, & ſo taken was brought into the city. Hereby the Pope toke no ſmall occaſion to worke his feates.

The father to helpe the captiuitie and miſerye of hys ſonne, was compelled to ſubmit hymſelfe to the Pope, and to intreat for peace. So the Emperour commyng to Venice (at S. Markes Church, where the biſhop was, there to take hys abſolution) was bidde to kneele downe at the Popes feete.

The proud Pope ſetting his foote vpon the Emperors necke, ſayd the verſe of the Pſalme: Super aſpidem & baſiliſcum ambulabis & conculcabis Leonem & Draconem: That is, Thou ſhalt walke vpon the Adder and the Baſiliſke, and ſhalt tread downe the Lion and the Dragon, &c. To whõ the Emperour aunſwering agayne, ſayd: Non tibi ſed Petro, that is, not to thee but to Peter. The Pope agayne, Et mihi, & Petro, both to me and to Peter. The Emperor fearing to geue any occaſion of further quarelling, held hys peace and ſo was abſolued, and peace made betwene thẽ: the conditions wherof were theſe. Volateran taken with a contradiction.

Here, as I note in diuers writers, a great diuerſitie and varietie touching the order of this matter (of whome ſome ſay that the Emperour campt in Paleſtina before he came to Venice, ſome ſay after) ſo I meruell to ſee in Volaterane (ſo great a fauourer of the pope) ſuch a contradiction who in his 22. booke ſayth yͤ Otto (the Emperours ſonne) was taken in this conflict, which was the cauſe of yͤ peace betweene his father and the pope: And in his 23. booke agayne ſaith, that the Emperour himſelfe was taken priſoner in the ſame battayle: & ſo (afterward peace concluded) tooke his iorney to Aſia & Paleſtina: This P. in the time of his papacie (whiche continued 21. yeares) kept ſundry councels both at Turo & at Lateran, where he confirmed the wicked proceedings of Hildebrand, and other his predeceſſors. As to binde all orders of the clergy to the vowe of chaſtitie, which were not greatly to be reprehended if they would define chaſtitie aright. For who ſo liueth not a chaſte lyfe (ſayth he) is no fit perſon to be a miniſter. But herein lyeth an error full of much blindnes: and alſo peril, to thinke that matrimony immaculate (as S. Paul calleth it) is not chaſtitie, but onely a ſingle life, that they eſteeme to be a chaſte life.

Papiſtes are not ſo much in promiſing chaſtitie, as in defining chaſtitie.

Now foraſmuch as our engliſh pope holy martyr, called Thomas Becket, happened alſo in the ſame tyme of this pope Alexander, let vs ſomewhat alſo ſtory of him ſo far as the matter ſhall ſeeme worthy of knowledge and to ſtand with truth. To the end that the truth thereof being ſifted from all flattery and lyes of ſuch popiſhe writers as paynt out his ſtory: men may the better iudge both of hym what he was, and alſo of hys cauſe.

✱ The life and hiſtory of Thomas Becket
Archbiſhop of Canterbury.

Tho. Becket Archb. at Cant.

Becket no martyr.

IF the cauſe make a Martyr (as is ſayd) I ſee not why we ſhould eſteeme Tho. Becket to dye a martyr, more then any other whome the Princes ſword doth here temporally puniſh for their temporall deſertes. To dye for the Church, I graunt is a glorious matter. But the Church, (as it is a ſpirituall and not a temporal Church) ſo it ſtandeth vpon cauſes ſpirituall, and vpon an heauenly foundation, as vpon fayth, religion, true doctrine, ſincere diſcipline, obedience to Gods cōmandements. And not vpō things pertaining to this world, as poſſeſſions, liberties, exemptions, priuileges, dignities, patrimonies, and ſuperiorities. If theſe be geuen to the Churche, I pray God churchmen may vſe them wel, but if they be not geuen, the church cannot clayme thē: or if they be takē away, that ſtādeth in the princes power. To contend wt Princes for the ſame, it is no matter (in my minde) materiall, to make a martyr, but rather a rebellion agaynſt them, to whom we owe ſubiection. Therfore as I ſuppoſe Tho. Becket to be far frō the cauſe and title of a Martyr (neyther can he be excuſed, from a playne rebell againſt his prince) ſo yet would I haue wiſhed agayne, the lawe rather publikely to haue found out his fault: then the ſwords of men (not biddē nor ſent) to haue ſmitten him, hauing no ſpeciall commandement, neyther of the prince nor of the lawe ſo to doe. For though the indignation of the Prince (as the wiſe Prince ſayth) is death: yet it is not for euery priuate perſō ſtraightwayes to reuenge the ſecret indignation of his Prince, except he be publikely authoriſed thereunto. And thus had bene (as I ſuppoſe) the better way, the lawes firſt to haue executed their iuſtice vpon him. Certes, it had bene the ſafeſt way for the king, as it proued after: who had iuſt matter inough, if he had proſecuted his cauſe agaynſt him. And alſo thereby, hys death had bene without all ſuſpicion of martirdome, neyther had their followed this ſhrining and ſainting of him as there did. Albeit, the ſecret prouidence of God (whiche gouerneth all thinges) did ſee this way percaſe to be beſt, and moſt neceſſary for thoſe dayes. And doubtles (to ſay here what I thinke, and yet to ſpeak nothing agayne charitie) if the Emperours had done the like to the Popes, contending agaynſt them what tyme they had tooke them priſoners: that is, if they had vſed the lawe of the ſword againſt them, and chopped off the heads of one or two, according to their trayterous rebellion: they had broken the necke of much diſturbaunce, whiche long tyme after did trouble the Churche. But for lacke of that, becauſe Emperours hauing the ſword, and the truth on their ſide, woulde not vſe their ſworde: but ſtanding in awe of the Popes vayne curſe, and reuerencing his ſeat for Saint Peters ſake, durſt not lay hand vppon hym: though he were neuer ſo abhominable and trayterous a malefactour. The Popes perceauing that, tooke ſo much vpon them (not as the ſcripture would geue) but as much as the ſuperſtitious feare of Emperors and kings woulde ſuffer them to take: which was ſo much, that it paſt all order, rule, and meaſure. And all becauſe the ſuperior powers (eyther would not, or durſt not) practiſe the authoritie geuen to them of the Lord, vpon thoſe inferiours, but ſuffered them to be their maiſters.

But as touching Thomas Becket, what ſoeuer is to be thought of them that did the acte: the example therof yet bringeth this profite with it, to teach all Romiſh Prelates not to be ſo ſtubborne (in ſuch matters not pertayning to them) againſt their Prince, vnto whom God hath ſubiected them.

Now to the ſtory, which if it be true that is ſet forth in Quadrilogo, by thoſe foure who tooke vpon thē to expreſſe the life and proceſſe of Thomas Becket: it appeareth by al coniectures that he was a man of a ſtout nature, ſeuere, & inflexible. What perſwaſion or opinion he had once cōceaued: from that he would in no wiſe be remoued, or very hardly. Threatnings & flatterings were to him both one. In this poynt ſinguler, following no mans counſayle ſo much as hys own. Great helpes of nature were in him (if he could haue vſed them well) rather then of learning. Albe it, ſomewhat ſkilful he was of yͤ ciuile law, which he ſtudied at Bononie. In memory excellent good, and alſo wel broken in courtly and worldly matters. Beſides this, he was of a chaſte and ſtraite lyfe, if the hiſtoryes be true. Although in the firſt part of hys life (being yet Archdeacon of Canterbury and after Lord Chauncellor) he was very ciuill, courtlike, pleaſaunt, geuen much both to hunting & hauking, according to the guiſe of the court. And highly fauored he was of his prince, who not only had thus promoted him: but alſo had committed hys ſonne & heyre to hys inſtitution and gouernaunce. But in this his firſt beginning he was not ſo wel beloued: but afterwarde hee was again as much hated (& deſeruedly) both of the king, and alſo of the moſt part of his ſubiects: ſaue onely of certayne Monkes and prieſtes, and ſuche other as were perſwaded by thē: who magnified him not a little, for vpholding the liberties of the church (that is) the licentious life and exceſſe of Churchmen. Amongeſt all other, theſe vices he had moſt notable, & to be rebuked. Full of deuotion, but wythout all true Religion. Zelous, but cleane without knowledge. And therfore as he was ſtiffe and ſtubborn of nature, ſo (a blinde conſcience being ioyned wall) it turned to playne rebellion. So ſuperſtitious he was to the obedience of the pope, that he forgot his obedience to hys naturall and moſt beneficiall king. And in mayntayning (ſo cōtentiouſly) the vayne conſtitutions and decrees of men: he neglected the commaundementes of God. But herein moſt of all to be reprehended, that not onely (contrary yͤ kings knowledge) he ſought to conuey himſelfe out of the realme (being in that place and calling) but alſo (being out of the realme) ſet matter of diſcord betweene the Pope & hys K. and alſo betwene the French king and him: contrary to al honeſty, good order, naturall ſubiection, and true chriſtianitie. Whervpon folowed no little diſquietneſſe after, both to the king and damage of the realme, as here (in proceſſe and in order following by the grace of Chriſt) we will declare. Firſt beginning with the firſt riſing vp of hym, & ſo conſequently to proſecute in order hys ſtorye as foloweth.

What commeth of blinde zeale deſtitute of right knowledge.

The life of Tho. Becket.
Polydorus miſtaketh the mother of Becket.
Ex Roberto Crikeladenſi.
Ex Florilego.

And firſt here to omitte the progenie of him and of his mother named Roſe, whom Polyd. Virgilius falſly nameth to be a Saracen: when in deede ſhe came out of the partes bordering neer to Normandy. To omit alſo the fabulous viſion of his mother, mentioned in Rob. Crikeladenſis, of a burning torche iſſuing out of her body and reaching vp to heauen: his firſt preferment was to the Church of Branfield, which he had by the gift of S. Albons. After that, he entred in the ſeruice of the Archb. of Cant. by whō he was then preferred to be his Archdeacon. And after by the ſayd Theobald was put (as a mā moſt meteſt for his purpoſe) to K. Hen. to bridle the young K. yͭ he ſhould not be fierce agaynſt the clergy: whom in proceſſe of time, the K. made lord Chauncellor, and then he left playing the archdeacon, and began to play the Chauncellor. He facioned his conditions like to the kinges both in waighty matters & trifles. He would hunt with him, and watch the tyme when the Kyng dyned and and ſlept. Farthermore hee began to loue the mery geſtinges of the court, to delight himſelfe wͭ the great laud of mē & prayſe of the people. And yͭ I may paſſe ouer hys houſhold ſtuffe, he had his bridle of ſiluer, & the boſſes of his bridle were worth a great treaſure. At his table and other expences, he paſſed any earle: That on the one ſide, men would iudge him little to conſider the office of an Archdeacon: and on the other ſide would iudge hym to vſe wicked doyngs. He played alſo the good ſouldiour vnder the K. in Gaſcon, and both wan and kept townes. When the K. ſent Thomas being Chancellor home into Englād (ambaſſador with other nobles after the death of the Archb.) he willed Rich. Luci (one of the chiefeſt) to commend in his name, this Thomas to the couent of Cāterbury, that they might choſe him archbiſh. Which thing he did diligētly. The monks ſayd, it was not meet to chuſe a courtier and a ſouldior to be head of ſo holy a company, for he would ſpend (ſayd they) all that they had. Other had this ſurmiſe alſo, becauſe he was in ſo great fauour with the prince, the kinges ſonne, & was ſo ſodenly diſcharged of the Chancellorſhip which he had borne fiue yeares. In the 44. yeare of hys age (on the Saterday in the Whitſonweeke) he was made prieſt, and the next day conſecrated Byſhop.

Diffe
cles,

As touching the prieſthoode of this man, I finde the hiſtories to vary in thēſelues, for if he were beneficed, and chaplaine to Theobald, & afterward archdeacon (as ſome ſay) it is no other like, but that he was prieſt before, & not (as our moſt Engliſh ſtoryes ſay) made prieſt in one day, and archbiſhop the next.

But howſoeuer this matter paſſeth, here is in yͤ meane tyme to be ſeene, what great benefites the K. had done for him, and what great loue had bene betweene them both. Now after that Becket was thus promoted, what variaunce and diſcord happened betweene them, remayneth to be ſhewed: The cauſes of which variaunce were diuers and ſondry.

The cau
of varia

Archb.

As firſt when (according to the cuſtome) the Kinges officers gathered, of euery one, hyde mony through the Realme, for the defence of their owne country: the Kyng would haue taken it to hys cofers. But the Byſhop ſayd, that which euery man gaue willingly, he ſhould not coūt as his proper rent.

An other cauſe was, that where a Prieſt was accuſed of murther, and the kinges officers and the friendes of the dead, accuſed the prieſt earneſtly afore the biſhop of Saliſbury his Dioceſan to whō he was ſent, deſiring iuſtice to be done on him: the prieſt was put to his purgation. But when he was not able to defend himſelfe, the Byſhop ſent to the archbiſhop to aſke what he ſhould do. The Archb. commaunded he ſhould be depriued of all eccleſiaſtical benefices, & ſhut vp in an abbey to doe perpetuall penance. After the ſame ſort were diuers other handled for like cauſes, but none put to death, nor loſt ioynt, nor burned in the hand, or the like payne.

The third cauſe was, that where a Chanon of Bruis did reuile the kinges iuſtices: the king was offended with the whole clergy. For theſe and ſuch lyke, the Archbiſhop (to pacifie the kinges anger) commaunded the Chanon to be whipped, & depriued of his benefices for certain yeares. But the king was not content with this gentle puniſhement, becauſe it rather increaſed their boldnes: and therfore he called the Archbiſhop, biſhops, and all the clergy to aſſemble at Weſtminſter. Whē they were aſſembled together: the king earneſtly commaunded, that ſuche wicked Clerkes ſhould haue no priuilege of their Clergy, but be deliuered to the Iaylers, becauſe they paſſed ſo little of yͤ ſpiriturll correction: and this he ſayd, alſo their own Canons and lawes had decreed. The Archbiſhop counſailing wͭ his biſhops and learned men, anſwered probably: and in the end he deſired hartely the kinges gentlenes (for the quietnes of himſelfe and his realme) that vnder Chriſt our new king, and vnder the new law of Chriſt, he would bring in no new kind of puniſhment into his Realm (vpon the new choſen people of the Lord) agaynſt the old decrees of the holy fathers: And oft he ſayd, that he neyther ought nor could ſuffer it. The king moued therwith (and not without cauſe) alledgeth agayne and exacteth the olde lawes and cuſtomes of his graundfather, obſerued and agreed vpō by archbiſhops, biſhops, prelates, & other priuileged perſons: inquiring likewiſe of hym, whether hee would agree to the ſame, or els now (in his raigne) would condēne that which in the raigne of his graūdfather was well allowed. To which lawes & cuſtomes, the ſaid Thomas did partly graunt, and partly not graunt. The copy of the which foreſayd lawes are contayned in the number of xxviii. or xxix. whereof I thought here to recite certain, not vnworthy to be knowne.

1. If that betweene a clerke and a lay man, were anye ſtriuing for Church goodes: they would ye ple ſhould be done in the kinges court.

2. That there ſhould neyther biſhop nor clerke, go out of the land without the kinges licence: And then hee ſhoulde ſweare vpon a booke, he ſhould procure no hurt agaynſt the king nor none of his.

3. If any man were denounced accurſed, and were come agayn to amendment: the king would not that he ſhould be ſworne, but onely finde ſureties to ſtand to that, ye holy Church ſhould award.

4. The fourth, that no man that held of the king in chiefe or in ſeruice, ſhould be accurſed without the kings licence.

5. That all the Biſhoppricke & Abbayes that were vacant, ſhould be in the kings handes, vntill ſuche time that he ſhould chuſe a prelate thereto: and he ſhould be choſen out of the kinges chappels, and firſt before he were confirmed, he ſhould doe his homage to the king.

6. If any ple were to conſiſtory brought, they ſhould appeale from thence to the archdeacon: and from thence to ye Byſhops court: and from the Byſhops court, to the archbyſhops: and from thence to the king, and no further: So that in concluſion the complayntes of holy Church, muſt come before the king and not the pope.

8. That the Peter pence, which to the Pope were gathered ſhould be taken to the king.

9. If any clerke for felony were taken, and ſo proued: he ſhould be firſt diſgraded, and then through iudgement, to be hanged, or if he were a traytour to be drawne.

❧ Other lawes and conſtitutions made at Claredoun in Normandy, and ſent to England, wherunto Becket and the Pope would not agree. He being then fled out of the Realme.

The lawes of Claredoun.

1. If any perſon ſhall be found to bring from the Pope, or from the Archbiſh. of Canterb. any writing, conteining any indicte or curſſe agaynſt the realme of England: the ſame man to be apprehended without delay, for a traytour, and execution to be done vpon the ſame.

2. That no monke, nor any Clerke ſhall be permitted to paſſe ouer into England, without a paſſport from the king or his Iuſtices: who ſo doth the contrary, that man to be tached and impriſoned.

3. No man to be ſo bould once to appeale to the Pope, or to the Archbiſhop of Canterbury, out of England.

4. That no decree, or commaundement proceeding from ye authoritie of the pope or the Byſhop of Canterbury, to be receaued in Englãd vnder payne of taking & impriſoning.

5. In generall, to forbid any man to cary ouer anye commaundement or precept (eyther of clerke) or layman, to the Pope or to the archbiſhop of Canterbury, vnder payn of impriſonment.

6. If any Biſh., clerke, abbot, or lay man ſhal do contrary to this inhibitiõ: or wil keep the ſentence of interditing: the ſame incontinent to be thruſt out of the land, with all their kinred, and to leaue all their goodes behinde them.

7. All the poſſeſſions, goodes & cattell of ſuch as fauour the pope, or the Archbiſhop of Cãterbury, to be ceaſed and confiſcate for the king.

8. All ſuch of the clergye, as be out of the realme hauyng their rentes and profites out of the land: to be ſommoned and warned through euery ſhyre, within three mõthes to repayre home: eyther els their rentes and goods to returne to the king.

9. That S. Peters pence, ſhould be no more payd to the Apoſtolicall ſee: but to be reſerued diligently in the kinges cofers, and there to be at hys commaundement. Atq; hæc ex Quadrilogo.

10. That the Byſhops of Saliſbury and Norwiche, be at the kings mercy: and be ſomoned by the Sheriffe and bedels, that they before the kings iuſtices, do right to the K. and hys iuſtices: becauſe, (contrary to the ſtatutes of Clarendon) by commaundement they interdicted the land of Hugh Earle, and publiſhed the ſame in their Dioces without licence of the kinges iuſtices.

By theſe and ſuch other lawes and decrees it may appeare that the abolyſhing of the pope, is no newe thing in the realme of England. This onely difference there is, ye the P. being driuen out then, could not be kept out ſo long as now he is. The cauſe is, that ye tyme was not yet come, that antechriſt ſhould ſo fully be reueled. Neither was his wickednes then ſo fully ripe in thoſe dayes, as it hath bene now in our time. Nowe theſe premiſed, let vs returne where we left, to the matter betwixt the king and Thomas becket.

❧ The communication and controuerſie betweene the king and Thomas Becket with hys Clergye.

The king as is aforeſayd, conuenting hys Nobles and clerkes together, required to haue ye puniſhmẽt of certayne miſdoers of the Clergy. But Thomas Becket not aſſenting thereunto: the king came to this poynt: to know whether he would conſent with his clergy, that the cuſtomes then ſet forth in the realme (meaning by the firſt part of thoſe decrees aboue ſpecified) ſhould be obſerued. To which the Archbiſhop conſulting together with hys brethren, geueth aunſwere agayne, that he was contented ye kings ordinaunces ſhould be obſerued, adding this withall, Saluo ordine ſuo: that is, ſauing his order. And ſo in like maner all the other byſhops after, being demanded in order, anſwered wt the ſame addition, Saluo ordine ſuo. Onely Hillarius biſhop of Chicheſter, perceauing the king to be exaſperate with that addition, in ſtede of Saluo ordine, agreed to obſerue them Bona fide. The king hearing thẽ not ſimply to agree vnto him but with an exceptiõ, was mightely offended: who thẽ turning to the Archbiſhop and the Prelates ſayd: that he was not well contented with that clauſe of theirs, Saluo ordine ſuo, which he ſayd, was captious and deceitfull: hauing ſome maner of venime lurking vnder, & therfore required an abſolute graunt of them wtout any exception to agree to the kinges ordinaunces. To this the Archbiſhop anſwered agayne, that they had ſworn vnto him their fidelitie, both life, body, and earthly honor, Saluo ordine ſuo: and that in the ſame earthly honour, alſo thoſe ordinances were cõprehended: and to the obſeruing, they would bynde themſelues after no other forme, but as they had ſworne before. The king with this was moued, & all his nobilitie not a little. As for ye other biſhops, there was no doubt but they would eaſely haue relented, had not the ſtoutnes of the Archb. made thẽ more conſtant then otherwiſe they would haue bene. The day being wel ſpẽt: the king (when he could get no other aunſwere of them) departed in great anger: geuing no word of ſalutatiõ to ye biſhops. And likewiſe, the biſhops euery one to his own houſe departed. The biſhop of Chicheſter (amongeſt the reſt) was greatly rebuked of his fellowes, for chaũging ye exception cõtrary to the voice of al the other. The next day following, the king took from the archbiſhop all ſuch honours & Lordſhips, as he had geuẽ him before, in the tyme that he was chauncellor: wherby appeared the great diſpleaſure of the king agaynſt him and the clergy. Not long after this, the king remouing from London (vnknowing to the biſhops) ſayled ouer to Normandy, whither the biſhop of London called Gilbert (not long after) reſorted to craue the Kinges fauour: & gaue him councell withall to ioyne ſome of ye biſhops on his ſide, leaſt if al were againſt him, peraduenture he might ſooner be ouerthrowne. And thus the greateſt nũber of ye biſhops were by this meanes reconciled agayn to the King: onely the archbiſhop with a few other remayned in their ſtoutnes ſtill. The K. (thinking to try all maner of wayes) when he ſawe no feare nor threates could turne hym: dyd aſſay him with gẽtlenes, it would not ſerue. Many of the nobles labored betwixt thẽ both, exhorting him to relent to the King, it would not be. Likewiſe the archbiſhop of Yorke with diuers other Byſhops and abbots (eſpecially the biſh. of Cheſter) did the ſame. Beſides this his own houſhold dayly called vpon him: but no man could perſwade him. At legth vnderſtãding (partly by them ye came to him) what daunger might happen not onely to himſelfe, but to al the other clergy vpon the kings diſpleaſure: partly conſidering the old loue & kindnes of the king towardes him in tyme paſt, was content to geue ouer to the kinges requeſt: & came to Oxford to him, reconciling himſelfe about the addition, which diſpleaſed the king ſo much. Wherupõ, the king (being ſomewhat mitigate) receiueth him with a more cheerful countenance: but yet not all ſo familiarly as before, ſaying: that he would haue his ordinaunces and proceedinges after ye forme confirmed in the publike audience & opẽ ſight of his Byſhops and all his Nobles. After this the K. (being at

The archbiſhop ſuſpecting (I cannot tell what) in yͤ kings promiſe, drew backward, & now would not that he would before. At laſt with much a doe he was enforced to geue aſſent. Firſt, came to him the byſhop of Saliſbury and of Norwiche, who (for old matters indangered to the king long before) came weeping & lamẽting to the archbiſhop, deſiring him to haue ſome cõpaſſion of them, & to remit this pertinacy to the king: leſt if he ſo continued (through his ſtoutnes to exaſperate the kinges diſpleaſure) happely it might redound to no ſmall daunger, not onely of thẽ which were in ieoperdy already: but alſo of himſelfe to be impriſoned, and the whole Clergy to be indaungered. Beſides theſe two byſhops, there wẽt to hym other two noble pieres of the realme labouring wͭ him to relent & condiſcend to the kings deſire. If not, they ſhould be inforced to vſe violence, as neither would ſtand with the kinges fame, and much leſſe with his quietnes. But yet the ſtout ſtomack of the mã would not geue ouer. After this, came to him ij. rulers of the temple called Templars: one Richard de Haſt: an other Coſtans de Heuerio with their company: lamenting & bewayling their great peril which they declared vnto him to hang ouer his head: yet neyther with their teares nor with their kneelinges, would he be remoued. At length came yͤ laſt meſſage from the kyng, ſignifying vnto him with expreſſe wordes (and alſo with teares) what he ſhould truſt to, if he woulde not geue ouer to the kinges requeſt.

Becket yeldeth to the king.

By reaſon of which meſſage, he (either terrified or els perſwaded) was content to ſubmit hymſelfe. Whereupon, the king incontinent aſſembling the ſtates together: the Archbiſhop firſt before all other beginneth to promiſe to the king obedience and ſubmiſſion vnto his cuſtome, and that Cum Bona fide leauing out of hys former addition, Saluo ordine, mentioned before: in ſteede whereof he promiſed in Verbo veritatis, to obſerue and keep the kings cuſtomes and ſweare to the ſame. After him the other Byſhoppes likewiſe gaue the like othe. Whereupon, the king commaunded incontinent certayne inſtruments obligatory to be drawne: of yͤ which: the king ſhould haue one: the archbiſhop of Canterbury an other: the Archbiſhop of Yorke the third: requiring alſo the ſayde Archbiſhop to ſet hys hand and ſeale. To the whiche, the Archbiſhop (although not denying but that he was ready ſo to do) yet deſired reſpite in the matter, while that he (being but newly come to hys biſhoppricke) might better peruſe with himſelfe the foreſayd cuſtomes and ordinaunces of the king. This requeſt as it ſeemed but reaſonable, ſo it was lightly graunted: and ſo the day being well ſpent, they departed for that ſeaſon and brake vp.

Becket repenteth of hys good deede.

Alanus one of the iiij. writers of yͤ life of this Thomas Becket, recordeth: that the archbiſhop in his viage toward Wincheſter, begã greatly to repẽt that he had done before, partly through the inſtigation of certayne about him, but chiefly of hys croſſebearer, who going before the Archbiſh. did ſharply and earneſtly expoſtulate with him, for geuing ouer to the kings requeſt agaynſt the priuelege & liberties of the Church: polluting not onely his fame and conſciẽce, but alſo geuing a pernitious example to them that ſhould come after, with many like wordes. To make the matter ſhort: the Archbiſhop was ſo touched vpon the ſame with ſuch repentaunce, that keeping himſelfe from al company, lamenting with teares, with faſting, and with muche penaunce macerating and afflicting himſelf, did ſuſpend himſelfe from all deuine ſeruice: and would not receaue comfort, before that (word being ſent to hys holy graundfather the pope) he ſhoulde be aſſoild of him: who tenderyng the teares of hys deare chicken, directed to him letters agayne by the ſame meſſenger which Thomas had ſent vp to hym before. In whiche letters not onely he aſſoyled hym from hys treſpaſſe: but alſo with words of great conſolation did incourage him to be ſtout in the quarrel he tooke in hand. The copy of which letters conſolatory ſent from the Pope to Popiſh Becket, here follow vnder written.

A letter of pope Alexander to T. Becket.

Alexander Byſhop &c. Your brotherhoode is not ignoraunt that it hath bene aduertiſed vs, how that vpon the occaſion of a certayne tranſgreſſion or exceſſe of yours: you haue determined to ceaſe henceforth from ſaying of Maſſe, and to abſtayne from the conſecration of the body and bloud of the Lord. Which thing to doe, how daungerous it is (eſpecially in ſuch a perſonage) and alſo what inconuenience may riſe thereof: I will you aduiſedly to conſider, and diſcreetly alſo to ponder. Your wiſedome ought not to forget what difference there is betwixt them which aduiſedly and willingly doe offend, and thoſe whiche through ignoraunce, and for neceſſitie ſake do offend. For as you reade, ſo muche the more greater is wilfull ſinne: as the ſame not being voluntary is leſſer ſinne. Therefore if you remember your ſelfe to haue done any thing that your owne cõſcience doth accuſe you of, whatſoeuer it be: we cõſell you (as a prudent and wyſe prelate) to acknowledge the ſame. Which thing done, the mercifull and pittifull God, who hath more reſpect to the hart of the doer then to the thing done, will remit and forgeue you the ſame according to his accuſtomed great mercy. And we truſting in the merites of the bleſſed Apoſtles S Peter and Paule doe abſolue you from the offence committed, and by the authoritie Apoſtolicall we releaſe you vnto your fraternitie, counſailing you and commaunding you, that henceforth you abſtayne not (for this cauſe) from the celebration of the Maſſe.

Thys letter with other moe after like ſort, the pope thẽ wrote to him: animating and comforting him in this quarrell ſo neerely pertaining to the popes profite. By the occaſion whereof, Becket toke no ſmall hart and conſolation In ſo much, yͭ thereof ſeemeth to me to proceed, al the occaſiõ yͭ made him ſo ſtout & malipart againſt his prince, as hereafter followeth to be ſeene by his doynges. What yͤ other letters were that the pope wrote vnto hym, ſhortly after (when we come to the appellatiõs made to the pope) ſhall appeare God willing. In the meane ſeaſon (as he ſat thus mourning at home) the king hearing of hym, & howe he denyed to ſet hys ſeale to thoſe ſanctions, which he condeſcẽded to before, tooke no little diſpleaſure againſt him. In ſo much that he (threatning to him and hys, baniſhmẽt & death) began to call hym to reconinges, and to burden hym with paymentes: that all men might vnderſtand that yͤ kings minde was ſore ſet agaynſt him. The Archbiſhop hereupon (whether more for the loue of the pope, or dread of hys prince) thought to make an eſcape out of the realme, and ſo wẽt about in the night (with two or three with hym ſtealing out of hys houſe) to take the ſea priuely. Now amongeſt other the kinges ordinances and ſanctions, this was one: that none of the prelacy or nobilitie without the kinges licence (or of his iuſtices) ſhoulde depart out of the realme. So Becket twiſe attempted the ſea, to flee to the ſee of Rome: but the wether not ſeruing, was driuẽ home agayne, and hys deuiſe for that tyme fruſtrated. After his departure began to be knowne and noyſed abroad, the kinges officers came to Canterbury to ſeaſon vppon hys goodes in the kinges behalfe. But as it chanced the night before their comming, Becket being returned and founde at home, they did not proceede in their purpoſe.

Becket enterpriſing agaynſt the kings lawes to flye out of the realme.

Becket taunted of the king.

Upon this, the Archbiſhop (vnderſtanding the kyng ſore bent agaynſt hym, and the ſeas not to ſerue hym) made haſt to the court, lying then at Woodſtock. Where the king receaued him (after a certayne maner) but nothing ſo familiarly as he was wont: taunting him geſtingly & merily, as though one realme were not able to hold them both. Becket (although he was permitted to go and come at his pleaſure to the court) yet could not obtaine the fauour that he would: perceiuing both in himſelfe, and confeſſing no leſſe to other, how the matter would fall out: ſo that eyther he ſhould be cõſtrayned to geue ouer with ſhame, or ſtoutly ſtand to that which he had ſo boldly taken in hand. The Archbiſhop of Yorke in the meane time (going betweene yͤ kyng and the Archbiſh.) laboured to make a peace & loue betweene them, but the King in no caſe would be reconciled, vnleſſe the other would ſubſcribe to his lawes. So the while, neyther the K. would otherwiſe agree, nor yet the archb. in any wiſe would ſubſcribe: there was a foule diſcorde. Where the fault was, let the reader here iudge betwene thẽ both. The K. (for his regall authoritie thought it much, that any ſubiect of hys, ſhould ſtand agaynſt him. The Archb. agayne (bearing himſelfe bold vppon the authoritie, & eſpecially vpon the letters of the P. lately writtẽ to him) thought hym ſtrong inough agaynſt the king & all hys realme. Againe, ſuch was his quarell for the maintenance of liberties and glory of the Church, that he could lacke no ſetters on, & fauourers in that behalfe, in ſo ſwete a cauſe amongeſt the clergy. Wherfore the Archb. (truſting to theſe thinges) would geue no place, but by vertue of his Apoſtolike authoritie gaue cenſure vpon theſe lawes and conſtitutions of the king: condemning ſome, & other ſome approuing for good and catholicke, as is before declared. Beſides this, there came alſo to the K. Rotrodus Archbiſhop of Rotomage (ſent from the Pope) to make peace betweene the K. and Canterbury. Whereunto the king was well content, ſo that the Pope would agree to ratifie hys ordinaunces. But whẽ that could in no wiſe be obtayned at the Popes handes: then the king beyng ſtopped and fruſtrate of hys purpoſe by reaſon of Beckets Apoſtolike legacie (being legatus a Latere) thought good to ſend vp to the pope and ſo dyd: to obtayne of hym that the ſame authoritie, toritie of the Apoſtolike Legacy might be conferd to an other after his appointment, which was the Archbiſhop of Yorke. But the pope denied. Notwithſtanding at the requeſt of the kings Clergy, the Pope was content that the king ſhould be Legate hymſelfe: whereat the kyng tooke great indignation (as Houeden writeth) ſo that he ſent the Pope hys letters agayne. Here the Pope was perplexed on both ſides.

The kinge to be the Popes Legate.

If he ſhould haue denied the kyng, that was to hote for him. For the Pope vſeth always to hold in with kings howſoeuer the world ſpeedeth. Agayne, if he ſhould haue forſaken ſuch a churchly chaplen (the cauſe being ſo ſweete, and ſo gainefull) that ſhould haue bene agaynſt himſelfe: what did he thẽ? Here now commeth in the old practiſe of popiſh prelacy, to play with both hands: priuily he cõſpireth with the one, and openly diſſembleth with the other. Firſt, he granted to the kings ambaſſadors their requeſt, to haue the Legate remoued, and to place in that office the Archbiſhop of Yorke, after his owne contentation, and yet notwithſtanding (to tender the cauſe of Tho. Becket) he addeth this promiſe withall, that the ſayd Becket ſhould receiue no harme or damage therby. Thus the Pope craftily conueying the matter betwene them both (glad to further the Archbiſhop for his owne aduantage, and yet lothe to deny the king for diſpleaſure) writeth to the king openly, and alſo ſecretly directeth another letter to Becket: the contents wherof here follow.

The crafty diſſimulation of the Pope.

Alexander the Pope, to Thomas Archb. of Caunterbury.

The popes ſecret letters to Becket.

Although we condeſcending to the kings requeſt, haue graũted the gifte of our legacie after his minde from you, yet let not your minde therby be diſcomforted, nor brought into ſighes of diſpaire. For before that we had graunted that, or gaue oure conſent thereunto: the kings ambaſſadours firmely promiſed in the word of trueth (ready alſo to be ſworne vpon the ſame, if I would haue ſo required) that their letters alſo, which he had obtained, ſhould not be deliuered to the Archbiſhop of York, without our knowledge and conſent therein. This is certaine, and ſo perſwade your ſelf boldly without any ſcruple, doubt or miſtruſt, that it was neuer my minde or purpoſe, nor euer ſhalbe God willing, to ſubdue you or your Church vnder the obedience of any perſon, to be ſubiect ſaue onely to the Biſhop of Rome. And therfore we warne you and charge you, that if you ſhall perceiue the king to deliuer theſe foreſaide letters, which we truſt he will not attempt, without our knowledge to doe, forthwith by ſome truſtie meſſenger or by your letters, you will geue vs knowledge therof: wherby we may prouide vpõ the ſame, both for your perſon, your Churche, and alſo your citie committed to you, to be clerely exempt by our authoritie Apoſtolicall, from all power & iuriſdiction of any legacie.

Vpon theſe letters and ſuch other, as is ſayd before: Becket ſeemed to take all his boldneſſe to be ſo ſtoute and ſturdy againſt his Prince as he was. The Pope (beſide theſe) ſent ſecretly this Chaplaine of hys, and directed an other letter alſo vnto the king: granting and permitting at his requeſt, to make the Archbiſhop of Yorke Legate Apoſtolicall.

The king (after he had receiued his letters ſent from the Pope) beganne to put more ſtrength to his purpoſed proceedings againſt the Archbiſhop: firſt beginning wyth the inferiors of the clergy, ſuch as were offenders agaynſt his lawes, as fellons, robbers, quarellers, breakers of peace, and eſpecially ſuch as had committed homicide and murders, wherof more then an hundred at that time were prooued vpon the clergy (as witneſſeth Guliel. Neuburgẽſis, in his booke de geſtis Anglorum, lib. 2. cap. 16) vrging and cõſtraining them to be arreigned after the order of the lawe temporall, and iuſtice to be miniſtred to them according to their deſerts: as firſt to be depriued, and ſo to be committed to the ſecular hands. This ſeemed to Becket to derogate frõ the liberties of holy church, that the ſecular power ſhould paſſe in cauſes criminall, or ſit in iudgemẽt againſt any eccleſiaſticall perſon. This law, the roiſters (then of the clergy) had picked and forged out of Anacletus & Euariſtus by whoſe falſly alleaged and pretenſed authoritie, they haue deduced this their conſtitution from the Apoſtles, which geueth immunity to all eccleſiaſticall perſons to be free from ſecular iuriſdiction. Becket therfore like a valiãt champion (fighting for his liberties, and hauing the Pope on his ſide) would not permit his clerkes infamed, otherwiſe to be conuẽted, then before eccleſiaſtical iudges, there to be examined & depriued for their exceſſe, and no ſeculare iudge to proceede againſt them. So that after their depriuation, if they ſhould incurre the like offence agayne, then the temporall iudge to take hold vpõ them, otherwiſe not. This obſtinate and ſtubburne rebellion of the Archb. ſtirred vp much anger and vexation in their king, & not only in him, but alſo in the nobles and in al the biſhops (for the greater part) that almoſt he was alone a wonderment to all the realme.

More then an C. murthers done by the clergye.

Guliel. Neuburg. lib. 2. ca. 16.

The Kings wrath daily increaſed more and more againſt him (as no meruaile was) and cauſed him to be cited vp to appeare by a certaine day at the town of Northhampton, there to make anſwer to ſuch things as ſhould be layd to his charge. So when the day was come (all the Pieres and nobles, with the prelates of the Realme vpon the kings proclamation beyng aſſembled in the Caſtle of Northhampton) great fault was found with the Archb. for that he (perſonally cited to appeare) came not hymſelf, but ſent another for him. The cauſe why he came not, Houeden aſſigneth to be this: for that the king had placed his horſe and horſemen in the Archb. lodging (whiche was a houſe there of Chanons) wherwith he being offended, ſent word agayne that he would not appeare, vnleſſe hys lodgyng were voyded of the kynges horſemen, &c. Wherupon (by the publike ſentence as well of all the Nobles, as of the biſhops) all his moueables were adiudged to be confiſcate for the kyng, vnleſſe the kyngs clemency would remit the penaltie. The ſtubburne Archbiſhop agayne (for his part) quarellyng agaynſt the order & forme of the iudgement, complayneth: alleagyng for himſelf (ſeyng he is their Primate and ſpirituall father not onely of all other in the realme, but alſo of the king hymſelfe) not to be conuenient, the father ſo to be iudged of his children, nor the paſtor of his flocke ſo to be condẽned: ſaying moreouer that the ages to come ſhould know what iudgement was done, &c. But eſpecially he complaineth of his fellow biſhops (when they ſhould rather haue taken his part) ſo to ſit in iudgement againſt their Metropolitane, and this was the firſt dayes action.

Becket cited to Northampton.

The Archbiſh. condemned in the Councell of Northapmtõ, in the loſſe of all hys moueables.

The next day following, the king layd an actiõ againſt him in the behalfe of one that was his Marſhall (called Iohn) for certaine iniury done to hym, and required of the ſaid Archb. the repaying agayne of certayne money, which he (as is ſayd) had lent vnto him being Chauncellor, the ſumme wherof came to 500. markes. This mony ẏ Archb. denyed not but he had receiued of the kyng, howbeit (by the way and title of gift as he tooke it) though hee coulde bring no probation thereof. Wherupon, the king required him to put in aſſuraunce for the payment therof: whereat the Archbiſh. makyng delayes (not well contented at the matter) was ſo cald vpon, that either he ſhould be countable to the kyng for the mony, or els he ſhould incur preſent daunger, the king beyng ſo bent againſt hym. The Archbiſhop being brought to ſuch a ſtraite (and deſtitute of his owne ſuffragans) could here by no meanes haue eſcaped, had not v. perſons of their owne accord ſtepped in, beyng bound for him, euery man for one C. markes a piece. And this was vpon the ſecond day concluded.

Becket required to geue an accompt.

The morrow after (which was the third day of the councell) as the Archb. was ſitting below in a certain cõclaue with his fellow biſhops about him conſulting together (the dores faſt locked to them, as the king had willed & commaunded) it was propounded vnto him in the behalfe of the king, that he had had diuers biſhoprikes & Abbarikes in his hand which were vacant (with the fruites and reuenues therof due vnto the king for certaine yeres) whereof he had rendred as yet no accompt to the kyng: wherfore it was demaunded of him to bring in a full and a cleare reckoning of the ſame. This (with other ſuch lyke) declared to all the councel great diſpleaſure to be in ẏ king and no leſſe danger toward the Archbiſhop.

The aduiſe of the biſhops for Thomas Becket.

Thus while the biſhops and prelates were in councell, (aduiſing and deliberating what was to bee done) at length it came to voyces, euery man to ſay his mynd, and to geue ſentence what were the beſt way for their Archb. to take. Firſt began Henry biſhop of Wincheſter, who thẽ tooke part with Becket ſo much as he durſt for feare of the king, who ſayd, he remembred that the ſayd Archb (firſt beyng Archdeacon, and then Lord Chancellor, at what time as he was promoted to the church of Caunterbury) was diſcharged from all bandes and reckonings of the temporall court, as all the other biſhops could not but beare record to the ſame.

The verdite of Wincheſter.

Next ſpake Gilbert biſhop of London, exhortyng and motioning the Archbiſhop that he ſhould cal with himſelf to mynde, from whence the kyng tooke hym, and ſet hym vp, what and how great things he had done for him, alſo that he ſhould conſider with himſelfe the dangers and perils of the tyme, and what ruine he might bring vpon the whole church (and vpon them all there preſent) if he reſiſted the kings mynde in the things he required. And if it were to render vp his Archbiſhoprike (although it were x. tymes better then it is) yet he ſhould not ſticke with the kyng in the matter. In ſo doing it might happen, the kyng ſeyng that ſubmiſſion and humilitie in him, would releaſe him peraduenture of all the reſt. To this the Archbiſhop aunſwering, well, well (ſayth he) I perceiue wel inough my Lord, whether you tend, & where about you go. Then ſpake Wincheſter, inferring vpon the ſame. This forme of councell (ſayth he) ſeemeth to me very pernicious to the Catholike Church, tending to our ſubuerſion, and to the confuſion of vs all. For if our Archbiſhop and Primate of all England do leane to this example, that euery Byſhop ſhould geue ouer his authoritie and the charge of the flock committed to him, at commaundement & threatning of the prince: to what ſtate ſhall the Church be brought thē, but that all ſhould be confounded at his pleaſure and arbitrement, and nothing to ſtand certaine by any order of lawe, and ſo as the prieſt is, ſo ſhall the people be?

The counſell of the Byſhop of London.

Chicheſter.

Moderate counſell.

Hilarie the biſhop of Chicheſter replieth again to this ſaying: If it were not, that the inſtance and the great perturbation of tyme did otherwiſe require and force vs, I would thinke this counſail here geuen were good to be folowed. But now ſeing the authoritie of our canon fayleth, & cannot ſerue vs, I iudge it not beſt to go ſo ſtraightly to worke, but ſo to moderate our proceedings, that diſpenſation with ſuffrance may win that which ſeuere correction may deſtroy. Wherfore my counſaile and reaſon is, to geue place to the kings purpoſe for a tyme, leaſt (by ouer haſtie proceeding, we excede ſo farre) that both it may redounde to our ſhame, & alſo cannot rid our ſelues out again when we would.

Lincolne.

Much to the ſame end ſpake Robert the biſhop of Lincoln after this maner: Seing (ſayth he) it is manifeſt that the lyfe and bloud of this man is ſought, one of theſe two muſt needes be choſen: that eyther he muſt part with hys Archbiſhoprike, or els with his lyfe. Now what profite he ſhall take in this matter of his Biſhoprike, his life being loſt, I do not greatly ſee.

Exceter.

Next followed Bartlemew biſhop of Exceter, with his aduiſe, who (inclining his counſaile to the ſtate of tyme) confirmed their ſayings before, affirmyng how the dayes were euill and perillous. And if they might ſo eſcape that violence of that raging tempeſt vnder the couer of bearing and relenting, it were not to be refuſed. But that he ſayd could not be, except ſtraight ſeueritie ſhould geue place to tractabilitie, and ſo the inſtance and condition of tyme then preſent, required no leſſe, eſpecially ſeyng that perſecution was not generall, but perſonall and perticular, & thought it more holy and conuenient, one head to run in ſome part of danger, then the whole church of England to be ſubiect and expoſed to inconuenience ineuitable.

The anſwer of Roger biſhop of Worceſter was deuided in a double ſuſpence, neither affirming the one, nor denying the other, whoſe ſaying was this: that he would geue no anſwer on neither part. For if I (ſaith he) ſhal ſay that the paſtorall function & cure of ſoules, ought to be relinquiſhed at the kings will or threatning, then my mouth ſhall ſpeake againſt my conſcience to the condemnation of myne owne head. And if I ſhal geue againe contrary coūſail to reſiſt the kings ſentence, here be they that will heare it, and report it to his grace, and ſo I ſhall be in danger to be thruſt out of the ſinagoge, and for my part to be accōpted amōgſt the publike rebels (with them to be condemned) wherfore neither do I ſay this, nor counſaile that.

Worceſter.

Becket the Archbiſhop replyeth agaynſt the Byſhops.

And this was the conſultation of the Biſhops in that place, aſſembled together by the kings commaundement. Againſt theſe voyces & cenſures of the biſhops Becket the Archbiſhop replyeth agayne, expoſtulatyng and checking them with rebukefull wordes. I perceiue (ſayth he) and vnderſtand ye go about to maintaine and cheriſh but your owne cowardnes, vnder the colorable ſhadow of ſuffrāce: and vnder pretence of diſſembling ſoftnes, to choke the liberty of Chriſtes church. Who hath thus bewitched you, O vnſatiable biſhops? What meane ye? Why do ye ſo vnder the impudent title of forbearing, beare a double heart, and cloke your manifeſt iniquitie? What call ye this bearing to tyme, the detriment of the Church of Chriſt? Let termes ſerue the matter, why peruert you the matter that is good, with vocables & termes vntrue? For that ye ſay we muſt beare with the malice of tyme, I graunt with you, but yet we muſt not heape ſinne to ſinne. Is not God able to help the ſtate and condition of his church, but with the ſinnefull diſſimulatiō of the teachers, of the church? Certes God is diſpoſed to tempt you. And tell me (I pray you) whether ſhould the gouernors of the church put themſelues to dāgers for the church in time of tranquillitie, or in tyme of diſtreſſe? Ye will be aſhamed to deny the contrary but in diſtreſſe. And now then (the church lying in ſo great diſtreſſe and vexation) why ſhould not the good paſtor put himſelfe into perill therfore? For neither do I thinke it a greater act or merite for the auncient biſhops of the olde tyme, to lay the foundation of the church then (with their bloud) then now for vs to ſhed our bloud for the liberties of the ſame. And to tel you plain, I thinke it not ſafe for you to ſwarue from an example, which you haue receiued of your holy elders. After theſe things were ſpoken, they ſate all in ſilence a certayne ſpace, beyng locked in together. At length (to find a ſhift to cauſe the dore to be opened) I will ſayth the Archbiſhop ſpeake with two Earles which are about the kyng, and named them whome they were. Which (beyng called) opened the dore and came in with haſt, thinking to heare ſome thyng which ſhould appeaſe the kyngs mynd. To whom the Archbiſhop ſpake in this maner: As touching and concerning the matters betwene the king & vs, we haue here conferred together. And for as much as we haue them not preſent with vs now, which know more in the matter then we do (whoſe aduiſe we would be glad alſo to followe) therefore we craue ſo much reſpite as to the next day followyng, and then to geue vp our anſwer vnto the king. With this meſſage two biſhops were ſent to the kyng, which was the biſhop of London, and the biſhop of Rocheſter.

A great diſtreſſe growen in the church, becauſe tha Byſhops may not be aboue kings and princes.

London (to helpe the matter, and to ſet quietneſſe as I take it, addyng ſomethyng more to the meſſage) ſayd to the king, that the Archb. craued a litle delay of tyme to prepare ſuch writings and inſtruments, wherin he ſhould ſet forth and declare his mynd, in accompliſhing the kings deſire, &c. Wherfore, two barons were ſent to hym from the king to graunt him that reſpite or ſtay, ſo that he would ratifie that which the meſſengers had ſignified to the kyng. To the which the Archb. aunſwereth, that he ſent no ſuch meſſage as was intimate in his name: but only, that the next day he would come and geue aunſwer to the king, in that which he had to ſay. And ſo the conuocation of the biſhops was diſſolued, and diſmiſſed home: ſo that the moſt part of them that came with the Archb. and accompanied hym before, (for feare of the kings diſpleaſure) ſeuered thēſelues from him. The Archb. thus forſaken and deſtitute (as hys ſtory ſayth) ſent about for the poore, the lame, and the halt, to come in and furniſh his houſe, ſaying, that by them he might ſooner obtaine his victory, than by the other which had ſo ſlipt from him.

Becket deſtitute and forſaken.

On the next day following, becauſe it was ſonday, nothing was done. So the day after (which was the ſecond fery) the Archbiſhop was cited to appeare. But the nyght before (beyng taken with a diſeaſe called paſſio iliaca, the colicke) all that day he kept his bed, and was not able, as he ſayd, to ryſe. Euery man ſuppoſing this to be but a fayned ſickenes, as it ſemed no leſſe, certayne of the chiefe Nobles were ſent to try the matter, and to cite hym to the Court: namely, Rob. erle of Leiceſter, and Reginald Erle of Deuonſhire. To whom the Archb. anſwered, that as that day he was ſo diſeaſed that he could not come, yea though he were brought in an horſelitter. So that day paſſed ouer. The morow after certayne that were about hym, fearyng no leſſe, but that ſome danger would happen to him, gaue him counſaile in the morning to haue a maſſe in the honor of the holy Martyr S. Steuen, to keepe him from ý hands of his enemies that day. When the morrow was come (beyng Tueſday) there came to hym the Biſhops & Prelates, counſailyng and perſwadyng hym couertly by inſinuation (for apertly they durſt not) that he would ſubmit hymſelfe with all hys goodes (as alſo his Archbiſhoprike) to the wyll of the kyng, if peraduenture his indignation by that meanes myght ſwage. Adding moreouer, that vnleſſe he would ſo do, periury would be layd agaynſt hym: for that he beyng vnder the othe of fidelitie to keepe the kyngs lawes and ordinaunces, now would not obſerue them. To this, Becketh the Archbiſhop anſwereth again: Brethren ye ſee and perceyue well how the world is ſet agaynſt me, and how the enemy riſeth and ſeeketh my confuſion. And although theſe things be dolorous and lamentable, yet the thing that grieueth me moſt of all, is this: the ſonnes of mine owne mother be pricks & thornes agaynſt me. And albeit I do holde my peace, yet the poſteritie to come will know and report how cowardly you haue turned your backs, and haue left me your Archbiſhop & Metropolitane alone in this conflict. And how you haue ſittē in iudgemēt againſt me (although vnguilty of crime) now ij. dayes together, and not that only in the ciuil & ſpirituall court, court, but alſo in the temporal court ready to doe the ſame. But in generall this I charge and command (by the vertue of pure obedience, and in peril of your order) that ye be preſent perſonally in iudgement againſt me. And that yee ſhal not faile ſo to do, I here appeale to our mother (the refuge of all ſuch as be oppreſſed) the church of Rome: and if any ſecular men ſhall lay hands vpon me (as it is rumord they will) I ſtraightly enioyne and charge you in the ſame vertue of obedience, that you exerciſe your cẽſure eccleſiaſtical vpon them, as it becommeth you to doe for a father & an Archbiſhop. And this I doe you to vnderſtande: that though the world rage, & the enemy be fierce, and the body trembleth (for the fleſh is weake) yet God ſo fauoring me, I will neither cowardly ſhrinke, nor vily forſake my flock committed to my charge, &c.

Becket taken with ſickenes when he ſhould appeale.

A maſſe of S. Steuen to ſaue hym from hys enemies.

Becket appealeth to Rome.

But the biſhop of London, contrary to this commandement of the archbiſhop: did incõtinent appeale frõ him. And thus the biſhops departed from him to the court, ſaue only two (Henry Wincheſter and Ioceline of Saliſburie, who returned with him ſecretly to his chamber and comforted him. This done, the Archbiſhop (which yeſterday was ſo ſore ſick that he could not ſtirre out of his bed) now addreſſeth him to his maſſe of S. Steuen with all ſolemnity, as though it had bene an hie feſtiual day, with his Metropolitane Pall, which was not vſed but vpon the holy day to be worne, &c. The office of his maſſe began, Sederunt principes, & aduerſum me loquebantur: that is, Princes ſate and ſpake againſt me, &c. (the kings ſeruauntes being alſo there and beholding the matter). For this maſſe, Gilbert biſhop of London accuſed Becket afterward, both for that it was done per artem magicam, & in cõtemptum regis (as the wordes of Houeden purport) that is, both by arte, magike, and in contempt of the king, &c.

London appealeth from the Archbiſh.

A maſſe to charme away perſecutors.

The maſſe being ended, the Archbyſhop (putting of his pall, his miter and other robes) proceedeth to the kings Court: but yet not truſting peraduenture ſo greatly to the ſtrength of his maſſe (to make the matter more ſure) he taketh alſo the ſacrament priuily about him, thinking thereby himſelfe ſufficiently defenced againſt al bugs. In going to the kings chamber (there to attend yͤ kings comming) as he was entring the dore, he taketh from Alexander his croſier, the croſſe with the croſſeſtaffe, in the ſight of al that ſtode by, and carieth it in himſelfe (the other Biſhops following him & ſaying) he did otherwiſe then became him. Amongſt other Robert biſhop of Hereford offred himſelfe to beare his croſſe rather then he ſhoulde ſo doe, for that it was not comely: but the Archbiſh. woulde not ſuffer him. Then ſayde the biſhop of London to him: if the king ſhall ſee you come armed into his chamber, perchaunce hee will drawe out his ſworde againſt you, which is ſtronger then yours: and then, what ſhal this your armour profite you? The Archb. aunſwereth againe: if the kings ſworde do cut carnally, yet my ſword cutteth ſpiritually, & ſtriketh down to hell. But you my lord as you haue plaid the foole in this matter, ſo you will not yet leaue of your folly for any thing I can ſee: and ſo he came into the chamber. The king hearing of his comming and of the maner thereof, taryed not long but came where Becket was ſet in a place by himſelf, with his other Biſhops about him. Firſt, the crier called the prelates and all the lordes of the temporaltie together. That being done, (and euery one placed in his ſeate, according to his degree) the king beginneth with a great complaint againſt the Archb. for his maner of entring into the court: not as (ſayeth he) a ſubiect into a kings court: but as a traitor, ſhewing himſelf in ſuch ſort, as hath not ben ſene before in any chriſten kings court, profeſſing chriſtiã faith. To this, all (there preſent) gaue witnes with the king, affirming him alwaies to be a vain & a proud man, and that yͤ ſhame of his fact did not only redound againſt the prince himſelf, but alſo againſt his whole realme. Moreouer they ſayde that this had ſo happened to the king, for that he had done ſo much for ſuch a beaſt, aduauncing him ſo highly in ſuch a place and roume next vnder himſelf. And ſo altogether with one crie called him traitor on euery ſide, as one that refuſed to geue terrene honour to the king, in keeping (as he had ſworne) his lawes and ordinaunces: at whoſe handes alſo he had receiued ſuch honour and great preferments: and therefore was well worthy (ſayde they) to be hãdled like a periured traitor and rebell. Wherupon, great doubt and feare was what ſhould befall vpon hym. The Archb. of Yorke comming downe to his men ſaid, he could not abide to ſee what the archb. of Cant. was like to ſuffer. Likewiſe, the Tipſtaues and other miniſters of the aſſemblie comming downe with an outcrie againſt him, croſſed them to ſee his hauty ſtubburnneſſe, and the buſines there was about him. Certaine there were of his diſciples ſitting at his feete, comforting him ſoftly, and bidding him to lay his curſe vppon them. Other (contrary) bidding him not to curſe, but to pray and to forgeue them, and if he loſt his life in the quarell of the church and the liberty therof, he ſhould be happy. Afterwarde, one of them named Ioannes Stephani, deſired to ſpeake ſomething in his eare, but could not be ſuffred by the kings Marſhal, who forbade, that no man ſhould haue any talke with him. Then he (becauſe he could not otherwiſe ſpeake to him) wrought by ſigns, making a croſſe, and looking vp with his eies & wagging hys lips, meaning that he ſhoulde pray, and manfully to ſtand to the croſſe. In the meane time commeth to him Bartlemew B. of Exceter: deſiring him to haue regard and compaſſion of himſelf, and alſo of them, or els they were all like to periſh for the hatred of him: for there commeth out (ſaith he) a precept from the king that he ſhalbe taken, & ſuffer for an open rebel, that heereafter taketh your part. It is ſayde moreouer, that Iocelinus B. of Saliſburie, and William B. of Norwich, are to be had to the place of execution for their reſiſting and making interceſſion for the B. of Canterbury. When he had thus ſaide, the Archbyſhop (looking vppon the ſayde Biſhop of Exceter) auoide hence from me (ſayth he) thou vnderſtandeſt not, neither doeſt ſauor thoſe things that be of God.

Becket caryeth with hym the ſacrament going to the king.

Houeden referreth not this ſaiing to the Biſhop of London, but to the Archbiſhop of Yorke.

Becket called traytor of the king and of all hys nobles.

A bliode zeale for the proud liberties of the Church.

Who ſo taketh Beckets part is counted a rebell.

The Byſhop and Prelates then going aſide by themſelues from the other nobles (the king ſo permitting them to do) tooke cõſel together what was to be done. Here the matter ſtoode in a doubtful perplexitie, for either muſt they incur the daungerous indignation of the king, or els with yͤ Nobles they muſt procede in condemnation againſt the archbiſhop for reſiſting the kings ſanctions: which thing neither, they themſelues did fauor. In this ſtraight neceſſitie (they deuiſing what way to take) at length agreed vpon this: that they with a common aſſent ſhoulde cite the Archb. to the ſea of Rome vppon periurie. And that they ſhould oblige and bind themſelues to the king with a ſure promiſe, to work their diligence in depoſing the Archbiſh. (vpon this condition) that the King ſhould promiſe their ſafetie, & diſcharge them from the peril of that iudgement, which was toward them. So all the biſhops obliging thẽſelues thus to the king, went forth to the Archbiſhop: of whom, one ſpeaking for the reſt (which was Hillarie Biſhop of Chicheſter) had theſe wordes: Once you haue bene our Archbiſhop, and ſo long we were bound to your obedience: but nowe for aſmuch as you (once ſwearing your fidelitie to the king) do reſiſt him: neglecting his iniunctions and ordinaunces concerning and appertaining to his terrene honor and dignitie: we here pronounce you periured, neither be we bounde to geue obedience to an Archbiſhop thus being periured. But putting our ſelues and all ours in the popes protectiõ, do cite you vp to his preſence. And vpon the ſame, aſſigned him his day and time to appeare. The Archbiſhop aunſwering againe, ſaid: he heard him wel inough. And vpon this ſendeth vp to Rome in al haſt to yͤ pope, ſignifying to him by letters the whole matter, how and wherefore, and by whome he was cited. To whom the Pope directed againe his letters of comfort (as he had done diuers before) the copie whereof here inſueth.

Becket cited to Rome vpon periury by the Byſhops.

Becket condemned of periurie.

Becket cited to Rome.

Alexander Pope, to Thomas Archb. of Canterburie.

YOur brotherly letters which you directed to vs, & ſuch other matters which your meſſenger by word of mouth hath ſignified vnto vs, we haue diligently heard the reading therof: & therby fully vnderſtand the grieuous vexations and dolorous griefes wherewith your minde is daily encombred: by reaſon wherof, we hearing and vnderſtanding, are not a litle diſquieted in our ſpirit for your ſake: in whoſe proſperities we do both gladly reioyce, & no leſſe do ſorrow in your aduerſities as for our moſt deare brother. You therefore (as a conſtant and wiſe man) remember wyth your ſelfe that which is written: The Apoſtles departed away (reioyſing) from the face of the Councel. &c. With like pacience doe you alſo ſuſtaine that mans moleſtations, and let not your ſpirite be troubled therein more then needeth, but receaue in your ſelfe conſolation: that we alſo together with you, may be comforted in the Lord, who hath preſerued you to the corroboration of his Catholike and Chriſten veritie, in this diſtreſſe of neceſsitie: and from whome alſo it hath pleaſed him to wipe away the blotte of ſuch things which haue bene vnorderly of you cõmitted, & heere to puniſh the ſame through ſundrie afflictions: whereby (in the ſtrait iudgement of God) they might not be called to accoũt hereafter. But hencefoorth let not this much grieue you: neither let your hart be ſo deiect or timerous in the matter (for that you are cited vp to the Apoſtolike ſea) which to vs is both gratefull and accepted. And this we wil you, that if they which haue cited you ſhall chaunce to come: draw not you backe, but folow the appele (if ye pleaſe) and ſpare not (all doubt and delay ſet aparte) for the authoritie of the Church tendring this your conſtancie, may not do that which may put you either in feare, or doubt. But our diligence ſhalbe withall labour and ſtudie, to conſerue the right and preheminence (God willing) of that Church committed to you, ſo muche as in vs lieth (ſauing our iuſtice and equitie) as to one whom in working for the Church, we finde to be both a conſtant and a valiant champion. Further, this I brotherly require you, to repaire vnto the Church of Canterburie: and reteining but a fewe Clerkes about you (ſuch onely as ſerue your neceſſitie) make no excurſes out (as litle as you can) in that countrey: but in this eſpecially I thought to premoniſh you (that in no caſe) neither for fear or any aduerſitie, whatſoeuer may happen: yee be brought to renounce and geue vp the right and dignity of your Church. Written at Sene the vij. before the Kalendes of Nouember.

Becket called to a full accompt.

Ex Rogero Houedeno.

Becket iudged to be layd in priſon.

Ex quadripartita hiſtoria. lib.1 cap.38.

Becket appealeth to the Pope.

Becket thinketh not ſufficient the protection of God without the pope.

As the Archbyſhop was thus cited vp to Rome (ſitting with his croſſe waiting in the Court, neither geuing place to the kings requeſt, nor abaſhed with the clamor of the whole court againſt him calling him traitour on euery ſide, neither following the aduertiſement of his fellow Biſhops) at length the king by certaine Earles and Barons ſent commaundement to him, (Robert Earl of Leceſter doing the meſſage) that he ſhould without delay come & render a full accompt of all things that he had receiued, as the profites and reuenues of the Realme, in the time he was Chauncelor: and eſpecially for the 30000. Markes, for the which he was accõptable to the king. To whom the archbiſhop aunſwereth againe: the king knew, how oft he had made his reckening of thoſe things which nowe were required of him. Farther and beſides, Henry his ſonne and heire of his realme, with all his Barons, and alſo Richard Lucie chief Iuſtice of England, told him: that he was free and quit to God and to holy Church, from al receipts and computations, and from al ſecular exactions on the kings behalfe. And ſo he taking thus his diſcharge at their hãds, entred into his office, and therefore other accompt beſides this he would make none. When this word was brought to the king, he required his Barons to do the law vppon him. Who ſo doing, iudged him to be apprehended, & laide in priſon. This done, the king ſendeth to him Reignalde Earle of Cornewall & Deuonſhire, and Robert Earle of Leyceſter, to declare to him what was his iudgement. To whom the Archbyſhop anſwereth: heare (my ſonne & good Earl) what I ſay vnto you: how much more precious the ſoule is more then the body, ſo much more ought you to obey me in the lord, rather then your terrene king. Neither doth any law or reaſon permit the children to iudge or cõdemne their father. Wherfore, to auoid both the iudgement of the king, of you, and all other: I put my ſelfe only to the arbitrement of the Pope, vnder God alone to be iudged of him, and of no other. To whoſe preſence heere before you all, I doe appeale: committing the ordering of the Church of Cant. (my dignitie, with all other things appertaining to the ſame) vnder the protection of God and him. And as for you my brethren & fellow Byſhops (which rather obey man, then god) you alſo I call and cite to the audience and iudgement of the pope, and depart hence forth from you, as from the enemies of the Catholike Church, and of the authoritie of Apoſtolike ſee.

Becket flyeth out of the court.

Becket chaungeth his name, and is called Derman.

Hiſtories differ ſomething in the order of hys flight.

While the Barons returned with this aunſwere to the king, the Archbiſhop paſſing through the throng, taketh to him his Palfrey (holding his Croſſe in one hande, and his bridle in yͤ other) the courtiers following after and crying: traytor, traytor, tary & heare thy iudgement. But he paſſed on till he came to the vttermoſt gate of the Courte, which being faſt locked there had ben ſtaid, had not one of his ſeruants, called Peter (ſurnamed Demunctorio) finding ther a bunche of keyes hanging by: firſt prooued one key, then an other (till at laſt finding the true key) had opened the gate, and let him out. The archbiſhop went ſtraight to the houſe of Chanons, where hee did lie, calling vnto hym the poore, where they could be found. When ſupper was done, making as though he would go to bed (which he cauſed to be made betwixt two altares) priuely while the king was at ſupper, prepareth his iorny ſecretly to eſcape away: and chaunging his garment and his name (being called Derman) firſt went to Lincolne, from thence to Sandwiche, where he tooke ſhip, and ſailed into Flaunders: and from thence iourneyed to Fraunce, as Houedenus ſayth. All be it Alanus differing ſomething in the order of his flight, ſayth: that he departed not that night, but at ſupper time came to him the biſhop of London, & Chicheſter (declaring to him) that if he would ſurrender vp to the king his two maners of Otforde & Wyngecham, there were hope to recouer the kings fauour, & to haue all remitted. But when the Archbiſhop would not agree therunto (foraſmuch as thoſe maners were belonging to the Churche of Canterburie) the king hearing thereof, great diſpleaſure was taken: In ſo much that the next day, Becket was faine to ſende to the king two biſhops and his chaplein, for leaue to depart the realme. To the which meſſage the king anſwered, that he would take a pauſe therof til the next day, & then he ſhould haue an anſwere. But Becket not tarying his anſwere, the ſame day conueied himſelfe away ſecretely (as is aforeſayde) to Ludouicus the French king. But before he came to the king, Gilbert the biſhop of London, & William the earle of Arundel (ſent frõ the king of England to Fraunce) preuented him: requiring of the ſaid French king (in yͤ behalf of the king of England) that he would not receiue nor retaine in his dominion the archb. of Canterbury. Moreouer (that at his inſtance) he wold be a meanes to yͤ pope, not to ſhewe any familiaritie vnto him. But the King of England in this point ſemed to haue more confidence in yͤ French king, then knowledge of his diſpoſition. For thinking that the French king would haue bene a good neighbour to him (in truſting him to much) he was deceiued. Neither conſidered he to himſelfe inough the maner & nature of the Frenchmen, at that tyme agaynſt the realme of England: who then were glad to ſeeke and take all maner of occaſions to doe ſome act agaynſt England.

The French king ſupporteth Becket agaynſt the king of England.

Ambaſſadours ſent to the pope.

And therefore Ludouicke the French king, vnderſtanding the matter: & thinking (percaſe) therby to haue ſome vauntage againſt the king, and realme of England, by the occaſion hereof: contrary to the kings letters and requeſt: not onely harboreth and cheriſheth this Derman: but alſo (writing to the pope by his Almener and brother) entreateth him (vpon al loues, as euer he would haue his fauor) to tender the cauſe of the Archbiſhop Becket. Thus the kinges Ambaſſadours repulſed of the French king, returned, at what tyme he ſent an other ambaſſage (vpõ the like cauſe) to Alexander the pope thẽ being at Sene in France. The Ambaſſadours ſẽt in this meſſage were Roger archbiſhop of Yorke, Gilbert biſhop of London, Henry Biſh. of Wincheſter, Hilary Biſh. of Chicheſter, Bartholomew byſhop of Exceter, with other doctors & clerkes: alſo William Earle of Arundell, with certayne moe Lordes & Barons. Who comming to the popes court, were friendly accepted of certayne of the Cardinals: amongſt yͤ which cardinals, roſe alſo diſſention about the ſame cauſe: ſome iudgyng the Biſhop of Canterbury, in yͤ defence of the liberties of the Church (as in a good cauſe) to be mayntayned: Some thinking agayn, that he (being a perturber of peace and vnitie) was rather to be bridled for hys preſumption, then to be foſtered & incouraged therein. But the P. partly bearing with his cauſe (which onely tended to his exaltation and magnificence) partly again incenſed with the letters of the French king: did wholy incline to Becket as no maruell was. Wherfore (yͤ next day folowing) the pope ſitting in conſiſtory with his Cardinals, the ambaſſadours were called for, to the hearing of Beckets matter: and firſt beginneth the biſhop of London: next, the Archbiſhop of Yorke: then Exceter: and the other Biſhops, euery one in their order to ſpeake. Whoſe orations being not well accepted of the Pope, and ſome of them alſo diſdayned: the Earle of Arundel perceauing that (and ſomewhat to qualifie and temper the matter to the Popes eares) began after this maner.

The oration of the earle of Arundel to the pope.

ALthough to me it is vnknowen (ſayth he) which am both vnlettered and ignorant, what is that theſe Byſhops heere haue ſayde, neither am I in that toung ſo able to expreſſe my minde as they haue done: yet being ſent and charged thereunto of my Prince, neither can nor ought I but to declare (as well as I may) what the cauſe is of our ſending hether. Not (truely) to contende or ſtriue with any perſon, nor to offer any iniurie or harme vnto any man (eſpecially in this place) and in the preſence here of ſuch a one, vnto whoſe becke and authoritie all the world doth ſtoupe and yeelde. But for this intent is our legacie hether directed, to preſent here before you, and in the preſence of the whole church of Rome, the deuotion and loue of our king and maiſter, which euer he hath had, and yet hath ſtill toward you. And that the ſame might the better appeare to your excellencie: he hath aſſigned & appointed to the furniture of this legacie, not the leaſt, but the greateſt: not the worſt but the beſt and chiefeſt of al his ſubiects: both Archbiſhops, Biſhops, Earles, Barons, with other potentates mo: of ſuch worthines and parentage, that if he could haue found greater in all his Realm, he would haue ſẽt thẽ, both for the reuerence of your perſon, and of the holy Church of Rome. Ouer and beſides this, I might adde to more (which your ſanctitude hath ſufficiently tried and proued already) the true and hartie fidelitie of this our king and ſoueraigne toward you Who (in his firſt entrance to his kingdome) wholy ſubmitted himſelfe, with all that is his beſides, to your will and pleaſure. And truely to teſtifie of his maieſtie howe hee is diſpoſed to the vnitie of the Catholike faith: we beleue there is none more faithful in Chriſt then he, nor more deuout to God, nor yet more moderate in keeping the vnitie of peace whereunto he is called. And as I may be bold this to proteſt for our king & maiſter: ſo neither do I denie the Archbiſhop of Caunterbury, to be a man deſtitute or vnfurniſhed with gifts and ornaments in his kinde of calling: but to be a man both ſage and diſcrete, in ſuch things as to him appertaineth: ſaue onely that he ſeemeth to ſome more quicke and ſharpe then needeth. This blotte alone if it were not, and that the breach betweene our king and him had not ſo happened: both the regiments together, (of the temporaltie & ſpiritualtie) might quietly haue flouriſhed one with the other in much peace and concorde: both vnder a prince ſo worthy, and a paſtor ſo vertuous. Wherfore (the caſe ſo ſtanding as it doeth) our meſſage hether, and our ſupplication to your vigilant prudence is, that (through your fauour & wiſedom) the necke of this diſſention may be broken: and that reformation of vnitie and loue (by ſome good meanes) may be ſought.

The Pope tendereth Beckets cauſe againſt the king.

¶ This oration of his, although it was liked of them for the ſoftneſſe and moderation therof: yet it could not ſo perſwade the Romiſh Biſhop to condeſcende to their ſute and requeſt. Which ſute was, to haue two legates or arbiters to be ſent from his Popiſh ſide into England, to examine and take vp the controuerſie betweene the king and the Archbyſhop. But the pope incenſed (as is ſayd before) would not graunt to their petition: forasmuch as it ſhuld be (ſayeth he) preiudiciall, and tending to the oppreſſion of the archbiſhop to graũt vnto it, he being not preſent. And therefore he willed them to tarrie his comming vp, otherwiſe (he being abſent) he would not (he ſayde in any caſe) procede againſt him. But they (alledging againe their time to be expired appointed them of the king, hauing beſides other lets and cauſes as they alledged) ſayd that they coulde not there waite for the comming of Becket: but retourned backe (their cauſe fruſtrated) without the Popes bleſſing to the king. Within iiij. daies after, Becket commeth to the Popes courte, where he proſtrating himſelſe at his feete, brought out of his boſome a ſcrolle conteining the cuſtomes and ordinances of the king, afore mentioned fol. 207. The Pope receiuing the foreſayd ſcrolle, and reading it in the open hearing of his Cardinals, condemned and curſed the moſt parte of the ſayde decrees of the King, which he called conſuetudines auitas, that is, hys grandfathers ordinaunces. Beſides this: the Pope moreouer blameth Becket, for that he ſo much yelded to them at the beginning, as he did: yet notwithſtanding (becauſe he was repentant for his vnaduiſed fact) he was content to abſoil him for the ſame, and the rather becauſe of his great troubles, which he for the liberties of holy church did ſuſteine: and ſo with great fauour for that day dimiſſed him.

Becket cõplayneth of the king to the pope.

Repentance for his well doyng.

The next day (Alexander the Pope aſſembling hys cardinals together in his ſecret chamber) appeareth before them archbyſhop Becket, hauing this oration to the pope and his popelings: which here I thought to ſet out in our vulgare Engliſh tongue (tranſlated out of Latine) to the entent that the poſteritie heereafter may vnderſtand, eyther the vaine ſuperſtition or vile ſlauery of the Churchmẽ in thoſe dayes: who (being not content with their owne naturall Prince and king geuen them of God) muſt ſeeke further to the Pope: thinking no eccleſiaſticall liuing to be geuen, which is not taken at his handes. The wordes of his Oration be ſtoried rightly thus.

FAthers and Lordes, I ought not to lie in any place, much leſſe before God, and in your preſence here. Wherefore with much ſighing and ſorrowe of heart I graunt and confeſſe, that theſe perturbations of the Church of England, be raiſed through my miſerable fault. For I entred into the folde of Chriſt, but not by the dore of Chriſt: for that, not the canonical election did cal me lawfully thereunto, but terrour of publike power droue me in. And albeit I againſt my will tooke this burden vpon mee, yet not the will of God, but mannes pleaſure placed me in the rowme. And therefore no maruell though all things haue gone contrary and backward with me. And as for the reſigning vp againe thereof: if I had ſo done, & geuẽ vp to their hands, the priuiledge of my byſhoply authoritie which I had graunted to me at the commaundement of the king (ſo as my fellow Byſhoppes did inſtantly call vpon me to doe) then had I left a pernicious and daungerous example to the whole catholike Church. By reaſõ wherof, I thought to deferre that vnto your preſence. And now therefore (recogniſing with my ſelfe my ingreſſe not to be Canonicall, and therefore fearing it to haue the worſe end: and againe pondering my ſtrength and abilitie not to be ſufficient for ſuch a charge) leſt I ſhould be found to ſuſteine that roome to the ruine of the flock, to whome I was appointed a paſtor vnworthy: I render vp to your fatherly handes the Archbiſhopprike here of Canterburie, &c. And ſo putting of his ring from his finger, and offering it to the Pope: deſired a Byſhop for the Church of Caunterburie to be prouided: ſeeing he thought not himſelf meete to fulfil the ſame, and ſo (with teares, as the ſtorie ſayth) ended his oration.

Beckets argument: the Pope brought him not in, but the K. Ergo God brought him not in.

And why might ye not (M. Becket) reſigne it as well to his handes of whome ye tooke it?

This done, the Archbyſhop was bid to ſtande a parte. The Pope conferring vpon this with his Cardinals, about the reſignation of Becket what was beſt to be done: ſome thought it beſt to take the occaſion offered, thinking thereby the kinges wrathe might eaſely be ſwaged if the church of Cãterbury were aſſigned to ſome other perſon, and yet the ſayd Becket otherwiſe to be prouided for notwithſtanding. Cõtrary, other againe thought otherwiſe, whoſe reaſon was: If hee (which for the liberties of the church had ventred not onely his goodes, dignitie and authority, but alſo his life) ſhould now at the kings pleaſure be depriued: like as it might be a preſident heereafter to others in reſiſting their king in like ſort (if hys cauſe were maintained) ſo contrariwiſe if it quailed: it ſhoulde be an example to all other heereafter, none to reſiſt his Prince in the like caſe. And ſo, might it redounde not onely to the weakening of the ſtate of the Catholike Churche, but alſo to the derogation of the Popes authoritie. Briefly, this ſentence at length preuailed: and ſo Becket receaueth hys paſtorall office of the Popes hand againe, with commendation and much fauour. But for ſomuch as he coulde not be well placed in England: in the meane while, the Pope ſendeth him with a monkes habite into the abbay Pontiniak in Fraunce: where he remained 2. yeres, from thence he remoued to Senon where he abode 5. yeares. So the time of his exile continued a 7. yeares in all. &c.

A conſultation betweene the Pope and the Cardinals about Beckets matter.

Becket in banishment vii. yeares.

Vppon this, the King being certified by his Ambaſſadours of the Popes aunſwere, howe his fauoure enclined more to Becket then to him: was moued (and worthely) with wrathful diſpleaſure. Who vpon the ſame ſailing frõ England vnto Normandy, directed ouer certain Iniunctions againſt the Pope, and the Archbiſhop of Canterburie, as were recited aboue. Fol. 207. The contents wherof were declared to be theſe.

If any perſon ſhalbe found to bring from the Pope, or from the Archbiſhop of Canterburie. &c.

Of theſe and ſuche other iniunctions Becket ſpecifieth partly in a certaine letter, writing to a frend of his in this maner.

THomas Archbiſhop of Canterburie, to his welbeloued frend. &c. Be it knowen to your brotherly goodnes, that we with al ours heere (by Gods grace) are ſafe and in good health. Hauing a good hope and truſt to your faithfull amitie, I charge you and require you: that either by the bringer heereof or by ſome other, (whome ye know faithfull and truſty to our church of Canterburie, and to vs) you write with al ſpede, what is done. As touching the kings decrees here ſet out, theſe they be: that all hauens and portes ſhoulde be diligently kept: that no letters of the Popes interdict or curſe be brought in. And if religious men bring them in, they ſhall haue their feete cut off: if he be a prieſt or clearke, he ſhall loſe his priuie members: If he be a lay man, let him be hanged: If he be a leper, let him be burned. And if any biſhoppe, for feare of the Popes interdict, will depart (beſides his ſtaffe onely in his hand) let him haue nothing els. Alſo the kings will is: that all ſcholers and ſtudents beyonde the ſeas ſhall repaire home, or elſe loſe their benefices. And if they yet ſhall remaine ſtill, they ſhall loſe the libertie of all returning. Further if any ſuch Prieſts ſhalbe found (that for the Popes ſuſpenſe or interdict, wil refuſe to ſing) they ſhall loſe their priuie members. In ſumme, all ſuch Prieſts as ſhew themſelues rebels to the king, let them be depriued of their benefices. &c.

The kinges decrees.

Beſides theſe and ſuch like iniunctions, it was alſo ſet forth by the Kings proclamation. An. 1166. that all maner of perſons (both men and wemen, who ſoeuer were foũd of the kindred of Thomas Becket) ſhould be exiled wythout taking any part of their goodes with them and ſent to him, where he was: which was no litle vexatiõ to Becket to behold them. Moreouer, for ſo much as he then was lying with Gwarine Abbot of Pontiniacke (to whome the pope as is aforeſaid had cõmended him) therefore the king wryting to the ſame Abbote, required him not to retaine the Archbiſhop of Canterbury in his houſe: for if he did, he would driue out of his realme, all the monks of his order. Whereupon Becket was enforced to remoue from thence, and went to Lewes the French King, by whome he was placed at Senon, and there founde of him the ſpace of fiue yeares, as is aboue mentioned.

Anno. 1166.

Beckets kindred baniſhed.

Theſe monkes were of the Ciſtertian order.

In the meane time, meſſengers went daily with letters betwene the king and the pope, betwene the Pope againe and him, and ſo betwene the Archbiſhop and other. Whereof if the Reader (peraduenture) ſhalbe deſirous to ſee the copies: I thought here to expreſſe certaine of them, to ſatiſfie his deſire: firſt beginning with the Epiſtle of Becket complaining of his prince, to the Pope in maner and forme as foloweth.

The copie of an Epiſtle ſent of Thomas Becket, to Pope Alexander.

To keepe vnder the pride of prelates is no cauſe ſufficient to vnking a Prince.

If ye meane by ſpiritual things, ſuch as pertaine to the ſpirituall part of man, I graunt, but your liberties be not ſuch as which pertayne to the inward or ſpirituall man but rather are thinges more corporall.

TO your preſence and audience I flee (moſte holy father) that you, who hath bought the libertie of the Church with your ſo great daunger: might the rather attend to the ſame (either being the onely or chiefeſt cauſe of my perſecution) vſing and folowing therein the example of you. It grieueth me that the ſtate of the Church ſhould fall to any decay, and that the liberties thereof ſhould be infringed thorough the auarice of princes. For the which cauſe, I thought to reſiſt betime that inconueniencie beginning ſo to grow. And the more I thought my ſelfe obliged to the ſame my Prince (vnto whome next vnder God, I am moſte chiefly bound) the more boldneſſe I tooke to me, to withſtand his vnrightfull attempts: till ſuch that were on the contrary part (my aduerſaries) preuailed, working my diſquietneſſe, and incenſing him againſt me. Whereupon (as the maner is amongſt Princes) they raiſed vp againſt me citations and ſlaunders, to the occaſion of my perſecution: but I had rather to be proſcribed, then to ſubſcribe. Beſides this, I was alſo called to iudgement, and cited before the king to make anſwere there as a lay perſon, to ſecular accomptes: where as they whome I moſt truſted did moſt forſake me. For I ſaw my fellow brethren the Biſhops, through the inſtigation of ſome, ready to my condemnation. Wherupon all being ſet againſt me, & I thus oppreſſed on euery ſide, tooke my refuge to appeale to your goodneſſe, which caſteth off none in their extremities: being ready to make my declaration before you, that I ought neither to be iudged there in that place, nor yet of them. For what were that (father) but to vſurpe to thēſelues your right? and to bring the ſpiritualtie vnder the temporaltie? Which thing (once begon) may breede an example to many. And therefore, ſo much the more ſtouter I thought to be in withſtanding this matter: how much more prone and procliue, I ſaw the way to hurt: if they once might ſee vs to be faint and weake in the ſame. But they will ſay to me here againe: geue to Ceſar, that which belongeth to Ceſar. &c. But to anſwere againe therunto (albeit we are bou͠d to obey our king in moſt things) yet not in ſuch maner of things, whereby he is made to be no king: neither were they then things belonging to Ceſar, but to a tyrāt. Concerning the which points, theſe Biſhops ſhould (not for me onely, but for themſelues) haue reſiſted the king. For if the extreme iudgemēt be reſerued to him which is able to iudge both body and ſoul: is it not then extreme pride for men there to iudge, which iudge but by themſelues? If the cauſe of the biſhops and of the clergie, (which I maintaine) be right: why be they ſet againſt me? Why do they reprehēd me? For if that I appealed to him, before whome either it was not lawfull, or els not expedient for me to do: what ſeeme they by this, but either to blame me cauſeleſſe, or els to diſtruſt your equity? For me to be conuicted before your holineſſe: it had bene a double confuſion. Or wherein haue I deſerued to be perſecuted of them, for whoſe cauſe I haue ſet my ſelfe to ſtande in their behalfe? And if they had willed, I had preuailed: but it is ill with the head, when he is left of his members and forſaken: as if the eyes ſhoulde take the toung to ſpeake againſt the head. If they had had eyes to haue foreſene the matter, they might vnderſtand themſelues to ſpeake their owne deſtruction: and that the Princes did vſe their helpe, but to their owne ſeruitude. And what ſo great cauſe of hatred had they againſt me, to procure their owne vndoing, in vndoing of me? So, while they neglected ſpirituall things in ſteade of temporall, they haue loſt them both. What ſhoulde I ſpeake more of this, that I repugning them and appealing to your audience (yet notwithſtanding) they durſt preſume to ſtand in iudgement and condemnation againſt me, as children againſt their father? Yea, and not againſt me onely, but againſt the vniuerſall Church of God (conſpiring together with the Prince) being with me offended. And this ſuſpection might alſo as well pertaine to you holy father. But to this they will ſay: that they owe their duety and ſeruice vnto the king, as their Lord: to whom they are bound, vpon their allegeance. To whom I anſwer, that to him they ſtand bound bodely, to me ſpiritually. But to whom ought they rather to ſtand bound, then to themſelues? And were it not better to ſuſtaine the loſſe of corporall, then of ſpirituall things? But here they wil ſay againe: at this time the Prince was not to be prouoked. Howe ſubtily do theſe men diſpute for their owne bondage? Yea, they themſelues prouoke him by their owne exceſſe, miniſtring wings vnto him to fight againſt them, for he woulde haue reſted if they had reſiſted. And when is conſtancie more to be required, then in perſecution? Be not a mans chiefe frendes moſt tried in perſecution? If they geue ouer ſtill, how ſhall they obtaine the victorie? Sometime they muſt needes reſiſt. Condeſcend therefore (holy father) to my exile and perſecution. And remember, that I alſo once was a great man, in the time when it was: and now for your ſake thus iniuriouſly I am intreated. Vſe your rigour and reſtraine them, by whoſe inſtigation the name of this perſecution began. And let none of theſe things be imputed to the king, who rather is to be counted the repairer then the author of this buſineſſe.

Perſe tryeth a true fri but euery cauſe ma keth not a true perſe cution.

Beſides this Epiſtle ſent vnto the Pope: he wryteth alſo an other letter, ſent to the King in Latine: the tenour whereof (he that is diſpoſed to read) may peruſe in our former edition, with the notes adioyned withall.

Beſides which Epiſtle to the king in Latin, he ſent alſo one or two mo, to the ſaid king Henry the ſecond, much after the like rate & ſort. The one thus beginning: Loqui de Deo, liberæ mentis eſt & valdè quietæ. Indè eſt quòd loquar ad Dominum meum, & vtinam ad omnes pacificum. &c. Which Epiſtle, for that I woulde not ouercharge the volume of theſe Hyſtories with to much matter ſuperfluous, I thought here to omit. The other he ſent afterward, whereof the wordes be theſe.

¶ An other letter of Becket, Archbiſhop of Canterburie, ſent to the king.

TO his Lorde and frende Henry by the grace of God, king of England, Duke of Normandy & Aquitane, Earle of Angeow: Thomas by the ſame grace, humble miniſter of the church of Cāterburie (ſometime his temporally, but now more his in the Lord) health and true repentaunce with amendement. I haue long looked for, that the Lord would looke vpon you: and that you would conuert and repent, departing from your peruerſe way: and cutte off from you your wicked and peruerſe counſellours, by whoſe inſtinction (as it is thought) you are fallen into that deepe, whereof the Pſalme ſpeaketh. A ſinner when he commeth to the depth of miſchiefes, is without all care or feare. And albeit, we haue hetherto quietly ſuffred and borne: conſidering and earneſtly looking if there woulde any meſſenger come that woulde ſay: Your ſoueraigne Lorde the king (which nowe a long time hath erred and ben deceiued, and led euen to the deſtruction of the church) through Gods mercy with aboundant humility, doth now againe make ſpeede for the deliueraunce of the Church, and to make ſatisfaction and amendement. Yet notwithſtanding, we ceaſe not (day by day continually) to call vpon almightie God, with moſt humble deuotion: that, that which we haue long deſired for you and by you, we may ſpeedely obtaine with aboundant effect And this is one poynte, that the care of the Church of Canterburie, whereunto God hath preſently appoynted vs (albeit vnworthy) you being K. doeth ſpecially conſtraine me (in that as yet, we are deteined in exile) to write vnto your maieſtie letters commonitorie, exhortatorie, and of correction. But I woulde to God they were fully able to correct leaſt that I be to great a cloker of your outragies (if there be any) as in deede there are: for the which we are not a litle ſorie. I meane ſpecially of them which are done by you in euery place, about the Church of God and the Eccleſiaſticall perſons, without any reuerence either of dignitie or perſon: and leaſt alſo that I appeare negligent to the great danger of my ſoule: for without doubt hee beareth the offence of him which doth commit any offence: who neglecteth to correct that, which an other ought to amend. For it is written not onely they which doe commit euill, but alſo they which conſent therunto are cou͠ted partakers of the ſame. For they verely do cōſent, which when they both might and ought, doe not reſiſt or at the leaſt reproue. For the errour which is not reſiſted is alowed, and the truth whē it is not defended is oppreſſed: neither doth it lacke a priuie note of ſociety in him, which ceaſeth to withſtand a manifeſt miſchief.
1. (2) For like as (moſt noble Prince) a ſmall Citie doeth not diminiſh the prerogatiue of ſo mighty a kingdome as your is: ſo your royal power ought not to oppreſſe or chaunge the meaſure of the religious diſpenſatiō. For it is prouided alwaies by the lawes, that al iudgemēts agaynſt Prieſts, ſhould proceede by the determination of Prieſtes. For whatſoeuer Byſhoppes they are: albeit that they do erre as other men do, (not exceeding in any poynt contrary to the religion of faith) they
3. (3) ought not, nor can in any caſe be iudged of the ſeculare power. Truely, it is the parte of a good and religious Prince, to repaire the ruinous Churches, to builde newe, to honour the Prieſtes: and with great reuerence to defend them (after the example of the godly prince of moſt happy memory.
4. (4) Conſtantinus which ſayd, when a complaint of the Clergy was brought to him. You ſaid he, can be iudged by no ſecular iudge, which are reſerued to the only iudgement of God. And for ſo much as we doe read that the holy Apoſtles and their ſucceſſors (appoynted by the teſtimonie of God) cōmanded that no perſecution nor troubles ought to be made, nor to enuie thoſe which laboure in the fielde of the Lorde: and that the ſtewardes of the eternall King ſhoulde not be expelled and put out of their ſeates. Who then doubteth, but that the Prieſtes of Chriſt ought to be called the fathers and maiſters of all other faithfull princes? Is it not a miſerable madneſſe then,if the ſonne ſhoulde

5. go about to bring the (5) father vnder obedience? or the ſcholer his maiſter? and by (6) wicked bondes to bring him in ſubiection
6. by whome he ought to beleue,that he may be bounde and looſed, not only in earth,but alſo in heauen? If you be a good and a catholike king.and will be ſuch a one as we hope, or that we rather deſire you ſhould be,(be it ſpoken vnder your licence)you are the childe of the church,and not the ruler of the Church. You ought
7. to learne of the prieſtes,and not to teach them: you ought to (7) folow the Prieſts in eccleſiaſticall matters, and not to goe before them, hauing the priuiledge of your power geuen you of God to make publike lawes: that by his benefites you ſhoulde not be vnthankfull againſt the diſpenſation of the heauenly order, and that you ſhoulde vſurpe nothing, but vſe them with a wholeſome diſpoſition.

Wherfore,in thoſe things which contrary vnto that,you haue (through your malitious counſel,rather then by your own mind) wickedly vſurped: with all humilitie & ſatisfaction ſpeedily geue place, that the hande of the moſt higheſt be not ſtretched out againſt you,as an arrowe againſt the marke. For the moſt higheſt hath bended his bowe openly to ſhoote againſt him, that will not confeſſe his offences. Be not aſhamed (whatſoeuer wicked men ſay vnto you,or that traitors do whiſper in your eare) to humble your ſelfe vnder the mightie hande of God. For it is he which exalteth the humble, and throweth downe the proude: which alſo reuengeth himſelfe vpon Princes: he is terrible,and who ſhall reſiſt him? You ought not to haue let ſlip out of your memorie, in what ſtate God did finde you: howe he hath preferred,honoured, and exalted you: bleſſed you with children: enlarged your kingdome:
and eſtabliſhed the ſame in deſpite of your enemies. In ſo much,that hetherto(in a maner)all men haue ſayd with great admiration, that this is he whome God hath choſen. And howe will you reward (or can you reward)him for all theſe things which he hath done vnto you? Will you(at the prouocation and inſtaunce
8. of thoſe which are about you: that (8) perſecute the Church and the eccleſiaſticall miniſters, and alwaies haue according to their power perſecuted them,rendring euil for good,bringing oppreſſions, tribulations, iniuries and afflictions vpon the Church and church men)do the like? Are not theſe they of whome the Lorde ſpeaketh: he that heareth you heareth me, he that deſpiſeth you deſpiſeth me, & he that toucheth you toucheth the apple of mine eie? Verely forſaking al that thou haſt,take vp thy croſſe,that thou maiſt folow thy God our Lorde Ieſus Chriſt. Yet wil it ſcarſely be (or not at all) that thou ſhalt appeare a thankefull recompencer of the benefits receaued at his hand. Search the ſcriptures of ſuch
9. as are learned, and you ſhall vnderſtande: that (9) Saul (albeit he was elect of the Lord) peariſhed with his whole houſe,becauſe he departed from the waies of the Lord.

Ozias alſo king of Iuda(whoſe name is ſpoken of and ſpread ouer all) through the manifould victories geuen him of God, hys heart was ſo puffed vp to his deſtruction (becauſe the Lorde did helpe and ſtrengthen him in euery place)that he contemning the feare and reuerence of the Lord would vſurpe vnto himſelfe, that which was not his office (that is to ſay, the prieſthoode) & to offer incenſe vpon the altar of the Lord, for the which he was ſtricken with a leproſie,and caſt out of the houſe of the Lorde: Manie other kings and holy men of great ſubſtaunce (becauſe they haue walked aboue their eſtate in the meruails of the world, preſuming to rebel againſt God in his miniſteries)haue periſhed: and at the laſt, they haue founde nothing of their ſubſtance in their power.
Alſo king Achaz(becauſe he did vſurpe the office of Prieſthoode) was likewiſe ſtriken with a leproſie by God.

Oza alſo (albeit he was not king) yet for ſomuch as he touched the arke and held it, when it would haue fallen by the vnrulines of the Oxen (which thing perteined not vnto him, but vnto the miniſters of the Church) was ſtriken by the wrath of God & fell downe by the Arke. O king, it is a famous prouerbe: that a man forewarned by an other mans misfortune, will take the better heede vnto himſelfe For euery man hath his owne buſines in hand,when his neighbours houſe is on fire.

Dearely beloued king, God woulde haue the diſpoſing of thoſe things which pertaine vnto the church, to belong only vnto prieſts,and not vnto the ſecular power. Do not chalenge vnto thy ſelfe therefore,another mans right:neither ſtriue againſt him, by whom al things are ordained,leaſt thou ſeeme to ſtriue againſt his benefites,of whome thou haſt receiued thy power. For by the 10. common (10) lawes and not by the ſeculare power, and by the biſhops and prieſts:almighty God would haue the cleargie of the chriſten religion to be ordered and ruled. And Chriſtian Kings ought to ſubmit al their doings vnto eccleſiaſtical rulers,and not to preferre themſelues:for it is written,that none ought to iudge the biſhops but onely the Church, neither doeth it pertaine vnto mans law to geue ſentence vpon any ſuch. Chriſtian princes are accuſtomed to be obedient vnto the ſtatutes and ordinaunces of the church, and not to prefer their owne power. A prince ought to ſubmit himſelfe vnto the biſhops, & not to iudge the biſhops:
for there are two things wherwith the world is chiefly gouerned (that is to ſay) the ſacred authoritie of biſhops and royall power.
(11)In the which,the biſhops charge is ſo much the more waighty, 11.
in that they ſhal at the latter iudgement render accompt,euen of the kings themſelues. Truely you ought to vnderſtande, that you depend vpon their iudgement,and can not reduce them vnto your owne will: for many Biſhops haue excommunicated both Kinges and Emperours. And if you require an eſpeciall example thereof,Innocentius the Pope did excommunicate Arcadius the Emperour,becauſe he did conſent that Iohn Chriſoſtome ſhould be expulſed from his ſeate: and S. Ambroſe alſo did excommunicate (12)Theodoſius the great Emperour,for a fault (which ſee- 12. med not ſo waighty vnto other Prieſtes) and ſhut him out of the Church: who afterward by condigne ſatisfaction was abſolued.

There are many other like examples for Dauid when he had committed adulterie and murther, the prophet Nathan was ſent vnto him by God to reproue him, and he was ſoone corrected.
And the king (laying aſide his ſcepter and Diademe, and ſetting apart all princely maieſtie) was not aſhamed to humble himſelfe before the face of the Prophet to confeſſe his faulte,& to require forgeuenes for his offence: what wil you more? he being ſtricken with repentance asked mercy, and obtained forgeuenes So likewiſe you(moſt beloued king and reuerend Lord)after the example of this good king Dauid (of whom it is ſayde: I haue founde a man after mine owne heart) with a contrite and humble heart, turne to the Lorde your God: and take holde of repentaunce for your tranſgreſsions. For you are fallen and erred in many things; which yet I kepe in ſtore ſtill,if (peraduenture) God ſhall inſpire you to ſay with the prophet:haue mercy on me O god,according to thy great mercye,for I haue ſinned much againſt thee, & done euil in thy ſight. Thus much I haue thought good to write to you my deare Lorde at this preſent, paſsing other things in ſilence,till
I may ſee whether my wordes take place in you,and bring foorth fruits in you worthy of repentance: and that I may heare and reioyce with them that ſhall bring me worde and ſay: Oh king,thy ſonne was dead,and is aliue againe,was loſt and is founde againe.
But if you will not heare me: looke where I was wont * before the maieſtie of the body of Chriſt to pray for you in aboundance of teares & ſighes: There in the ſame place I will crie againſt you, and ſay: Riſe vp Lord and iudge my cauſe,forget not the rebukes and iniuries which the king of England doeth to thee and thine:
forget not the ignominie of thy Church,which thou haſt builded in thy bloud. Reuenge the bloud of thy ſaintes which is ſpilt: reuenge (O Lord)the afflictions of thy ſeruants, of whome there is an infinite number. For the pride of them which hate & perſecute thee, is gone vp ſo highe, that we are not able to beare them any longer. Whatſoeuer your ſeruant ſhall do,all thoſe things ſhall be required at your handes: for he ſeemeth to haue done the harme, which hath geuen the cauſe thereof. Doubtleſſe,the ſonne of the moſt higheſt (except you amende and ceaſe from the oppreſsing of the church and clergie, and keepe your hand from troubling of them)wil come in the rod of his furie, at the voices of ſuch as cry to him,and at the ſighes of them that be in bands: when the time ſhal come for him to iudge the vnrighteouſneſſe of men in equitie and ſeueritie of the holy ghoſt. For he knoweth how to take away the breath of Princes, and is terrible among kings of the earthe.
Your deare and louing grace I wiſh well to fare. Thus fare ye well againe and euer.

Note the iudgement of God againſt this Becket, who was ſlaine at his maſſe making the bodie of Chriſt.

¶Certaine notes or elenches vpon this Epiſtle: which by the figures you may finde out, and their places.

1. The ſcope of this Epiſtle is this, to proue that biſhops and prieſts ought not to come vnder the court and controlment of temporall power.

2. This ſimilitude holdeth not. For though the ſmalneſſe of a Citie blemiſheth not the prerogatiue of a kingdome: yet the cuilnes and rebellion of a Citie, doth worthely blemiſh his owne prerogatiue.

3. So ſayth the Popes decrees, Diſt. 10. but the Scripture of God importeth otherwiſe. Abiathar the Prieſt was depoſed of king Salomon, not for any hereſie, but for other cauſes. 3. Reg. 1. 2. Jonathas tooke his prieſthoode of king Alexander. And Simon of Demetrius. 1. Mach. 7. Chriſt offered tribute to Ceſar for him and for Peter. Alſo Peter ſayeth: be ye ſubiect to euery humaine creature: and it foloweth, whether it be to the king as to the chiefe. &c. Item Pope Leo ſubmitted himſelfe to Ludouicus the Emperor with theſe words: And if we do any thing incompetently, and do ſwarue from the path of righteouſnes, we wil ſtand to your reformation, or of them whom you ſhall ſend. 2. q. 7. Hoſ.

4. Notwithſtanding the ſaide Conſtantinus wryting to the biſhops, cõgregated at Tyrus, firſt chideth them, then commãdeth them to reſort vnto his preſence, to haue their cauſe iudged and decided. Trip hiſt. lib. 3 cap. 7.

5. The father vnder obedience, &c. If fatherhoode goe by age, I ſuppoſe that king Henry was elder then Becket.

If fatherhode conſiſt in authoritie, I iudge the authoritie of a king, to be aboue the authoritie of an Archbiſhop. If the ſee of Canterburie make the fatherhode: yet had Becket no cauſe to claime fatherhood ouer the king, ſeeing the ſonne ordeined the father (that is) ſeeing the king made him his Archbiſhop, and not he made him his king.

6. By wicked bonds. Al is wicked with the Papiſts, that bringeth them in ſubiection to their Princes.

7. Eccleſiaſticall matters be ſuche, as properly belong to doctrine and deuine knowledge, for the inſtitution of the ſoule, and information of conſcience. In which both Princes and ſubiects ought to followe their paſtors, ſo long as they go truely before them without error, or els not. But what maketh this for the lands & liberties of churchmen?

8. Puniſhment due to malefactors and rebelles, is not to be called perſecution, but due correction.

9. Saule brake the commandement of God and was reiected. Ozias cōtrary to the commandement of God toke the office of a prieſt, and was ſtriken. Oza againſt the expreſſe word of the law put his hand to ye arke, & was puniſhed. But what expreſſe word had k. Hēry, why he ſhould not correct and puniſh rebellious biſhoppes, and wicked prieſts within his owne realme? wherefore theſe ſimilitudes accorde not. As for Achas he was not ſo much puniſhed for taking the prieſts office, as for ſpoyling the temple of the Lord, and offering to Idoles.

10. Common lawes. S. Auguſtin wryting to Boniface, ſayeth thus: Whoſoeuer obeyeth not the lawes of the Emperor (being made for the veritie of God) procureth to himſelfe great puniſhment. For in the time of the prophets, all the kings which did not forbidde and ſubuert all ſuch things as were vſed of the people againſt the law of God, are rebuked. And ſuch as did withſtand them, are commended aboue the reſt. Auguſt.

11. Iſidorus hath theſe wordes. Let temporal princes know, that they muſt render accōpt to God for the church, which they haue at the hands of God to gouerne &c.

12. The caſe of Archadius, Theodoſius, Dauid, & of this king (as touching this mater) hath no ſimilitude. In them was murder: This king doeth nothing, but claime that which is his due. And though by the ſpiritual ſword thoſe kings were reſiſted: yet it argueth not therefore, that the perſons of them which haue the vſe of the ſpirituall ſword, are aboue the perſons of them which haue the temporall ſworde.

Beſides theſe letters of the Archbyſhoppe ſent to the king, the Pope alſo in the ſame cauſe wryteth to the king, beginning after this ſort: Alexander Papa ad Henricum regē. Et naturali ratione, & forma iuris dictante, prouidentiam tuam credimus, edoctam fuiſſe, quòd quanto quis ab aliquo maiora ſuſcepiſſe dignoſcitur, tanto ei obnoxior & magis obligatus tenetur. &c. The whole tenour of the letter as ye wrote it to the king I would heere expreſſe, but for treating of the tyme & ſtraightneſſe of rowme, hauing ſo many things els in this ſtorie (by the grace of Chriſt) to be comprehended. But the letter tendeth to this effect: to exhort and charge the king to ſhew fauour to Thomas Becket. Where, in the proceſſe of the Epiſtle, it followeth in theſe wordes: Ea propter ſeueritatem tuam per Apoſtolica ſcripta rogāmus, monemus, & exhortamur in domino: nec non in remeſsionem peccatorum ex parte dei omnipotentis, & beati Petri principis Apoſtolorum antoritate noſtra iniungimus, vt memoratum Archiepiſcopum pro deo & eccleſia ſua & honore tuo, nec non & totius regni tui in gratiam & fauorem tuum recipias. &c. That is: therfore we deſire you, moniſh and exhort your honor by theſe our Apoſtolical wrytings, and alſo enioyne you vpō the remiſſion of your ſinnes, in the behalfe of almighty God, and of S. Peter Prince of the Apoſtles, by our authoritie, that you will receiue againe the foreſayde Archb. into your fauour and grace, for the honour of God, his Church, and of your owne Realme, &c. Thus you heard the Popes intreating letter: nowe here is an other letter ſent vnto the foreſaid king, wherein he doth manace him, as in the tenor thereof here followeth.

✠ Biſhop Alexander, ſeruant of the ſeruants of God, to kyng Henry king of England, health and bleſsing Apoſtolicall.

How fatherly and gently we haue oft times entreated and exhorted both by Legates and letters your princely honour, to be reconciled againe with our reuerend brother Thomas Archb. of Cant. ſo that he and his may be reſtored againe to their Churches and other poſſeſsions to them appertaining: your wiſdome is not ignorant, ſeeing it is notified and ſpred almoſt throughout all Chriſtendome. For ſo much therefore, as hetherto we coulde not preuaile with you, neither moue nor ſtirre your minde with faire and gentle wordes: it lamenteth vs not a little, ſo to be fruſtrate and deceiued of the hope and expectation which we had conceiued of you. Eſpecially ſeing we loue you ſo dearely, as our owne dearely beloued ſonne in the Lorde, and vnderſtanding ſo great ieopardie to hang ouer you.

But foraſmuch as it written, Cry out and ceaſe not, lift vp thy voice like a trumpe, and declare to my people their wickedneſſe, and their ſinnes to the houſe of Iacob. Alſo for as much as it is in Salomon commaunded, that the ſluggiſh perſon ſhould be ſtoned with the dung of Oxen: we haue thought good therefore, not to forbeare or ſupporte your ſtubburnes any longer againſt iuſtice and ſaluation. Neither that the mouth of the foreſaid Archbiſhop ſhoulde be ſtopped from henceforth any more: but that he may freely proſecute the charge of his office and duetie, to reuenge with the ſworde of Eccleſiaſticall diſcipline, the iniuries both of himſelfe, and of his Church committed to his charge.

And here I haue ſent vnto you two Legates, Petrus de ponte dei, and Bernardus de Corilio, to admoniſh you of the ſame. But if ye wil neither by vs be aduertiſed, nor geue eare to them in obeying: it is to be feared (doubtles) leaſt ſuch things as they ſhall declare to you from vs in our behalfe, may happen & fal vpon you. Dated at Beneuent, the 9. day before the kalends of Iune.

To anſwer theſe letters againe: there was an other certain wryting drawne out & directed to the Pope, made by ſome of the Clergy, as it ſeemeth: but not without conſent of the king, as by the title may appeare, inueying and diſprouing the miſbehauior of the Archbiſhop. The tenor whereof here followeth, and beginneth thus.

An anſwere to the Pope.

Answere to the Popes letter.

Time nowe requireth more to ſeeke helpe then to make complaints. For ſo it is nowe that the holy mother Churche (our ſinnes deſeruing the ſame) lieth in a dangerous caſe of great decay, which is like to enſue, except the preſent mercy of the Lord ſupport her.

Fredericke falſly compared to Pharao, but this was to clawe the pope withal.

Such is the wickednes now of ſchiſmatikes: that the father of fathers Pope Alexander (for the defence of his faith, and for the loue of righteouſnes) is baniſhed out of his countrey: not able to keepe free reſidence in his owne proper ſee, by reaſon of the indurate heart of Fredericke the Pharao.

Farther and beſides, the Church alſo of Canterburie is miſerably impaired and blemiſhed, as well in the ſpirituall as in the temporall eſtate: much like vnto the ſhip in the Sea, being deſtitute of their guide, toſſed in the floudes, and wraſteling with the windes, while the paſtor being abſent from his prouince dare not there remain through the power of the king. Who being ouer wiſe, (to the ieoperdie both of himſelfe, his Churche, and vs alſo) hath brought and intangled vs likewiſe with himſelfe in the ſame partaking of his puniſhments and labours: not conſidering howe we ought to forbeare, and not to reſiſt ſuperior powers. And alſo ſheweth himſelfe to vs vnkinde, which with al our affections bear the burden with him of his afflictions, not ceaſing yet to perſecute vs which ſtand in the ſame condemnation with him. For betwixt him, and our ſoueraigne prince, king of Englande, aroſe a certaine matter of contention: wherupon they were both agreed that a day ſhoulde be appoynted, to haue the controuerſie diſcuſſed by equitie and iuſtice.

The day being come, the king commaunded all the Archbyſhops, Biſhops, and other prelates of the Church to be called, in a great and ſolemne frequencie: ſo that the greater and more generall this councell was, the more manifeſt the detection of this ſtubburne malice ſhould appeare and be eſpied,

At the day therefore aboue mentioned, this troubler of the realme and of the Church preſenteth himſelfe in the ſight of our Catholicke king: who not truſting the qualitie and condition of his cauſe, armeth him with the armour of the croſſe, as one which ſhould be brought to the preſence of a tyrant. By reaſon whereof, the kings maieſtie, being ſomething agreeued (yet becauſe hee would be deliuered from all ſuſpition) committeth the matter to the hearing of the Biſhops. This done, it reſted in the biſhops to decide and ceaſe this contention, and to ſet agreement betweene them, remouing all occaſion of diſſention. Which thing they going about: commeth in this foreſayd Archbiſhop, forbidding and commaunding, that no man proceede in any ſentence of hym before the king.

This being ſignified to the kings hearing, his minde was greuouſly prouoked thereby to anger: whoſe anger yet notwithſtāding had bene eaſily ſwaged, if the other woulde haue ſubmitted himſelfe, and acknowledged his default. But he adding ſtubburneſſe to his treſpaſſe, through the quantitie and greatneſſe of his exceſſe, was the author of his owne puniſhment: which nowe by the law ciuill he ſuſtaineth, and yet ſhameth to craue pardone for his deſert, at the kings hande whoſe anger he feared not to ſturre vp, in ſuch a troubleſome time of the perſecution of the Church, greatly againſt the profite of the ſame: augmenting & increaſing therby the perſecution which now the Church lieth vnder. Much better it had bene for him to haue tempered himſelf with the bridle of moderation, in the high eſtate of his dignitie: leaſt in exceeding too farre, in ſtraining the ſtraite poyntes of things by ouer much preſumption (peraduenture through his preſumption being not in meane and tollerable things) might fall from higher. And if the detriments of the Church woulde not moue him: yet the great benefits and preferments of riches, and honours ought to perſwade him, not to be ſo ſtubburn againſt the king. But here peraduenture his friend and our aduerſary wil obiect: that his bearing and ſubmitting to the king in this behalfe, were preiudiciall againſt the authority and ſea Apoſtolical: as though he did not or might not vnderſtand, that although the dignity of the Church, ſhould ſuffer a little detriment in that iudgement: yet he might & ought to haue diſsimuled (for the time) to obtaine peace into the Church. He will obiect againe, alleaging the name of father, that it ſoundeth like a poynt of arrogancie, for children to procede in iudgement of cōdemnation againſt the father: which thing is not conuenient. But he muſt vnderſtand againe: that it was neceſſary that the obedience and humilitie of the children ſhoulde temper the pride of the father: leaſt afterwarde, the hatred of the father might redounde vpon the children. Wherefore, of theſe premiſes your fatherhoode may vnderſtand: that the action of this our aduerſary ought to fall downe (as void and of none effect) who only vpon the affection of malice hath proceeded thus againſt vs, hauing no iuſt cauſe nor reaſon to ground vpon.

And forſomuch as the care and charge of all churches (as ye knowe) lieth vpon vs: it ſtandeth vs vpon, to prouide concerning the ſtate of the Churche of Canterbury, by our diligence and circumſpection: ſo that the ſayd Church of Canterbury through the exceſſe of his paſtor, be not driuen to ruine or decay.

By this Epiſtle it may appeare to the Reader therof: that Becket (being abſent from Englande) went about to worke ſome trouble againſt certaine of the Clergy and of the laitie (belike) in excommunicating ſuch as he toke to be his euill willers.

Now to vnderſtand further what his working was, or who they were whom he did excommunicate: this letter (ſent to William Biſhop of Norwitch) ſhall better declare the matter.

A letter of Becket to the B. of Norwitch.

A letter of Becket to the byſhop of Norwych

HE bindeth himſelfe to the penalty of the crime, whoſoeuer receiuing power and authoritie of God, vſeth and exerciſeth not the ſame with due ſeueritie, in puniſhing vice: but (wincking & diſsimuling) doth miniſter boldneſſe to wicked doers, maintaining them in their ſinne. For the bloud of the wicked is required at the hand of the Prieſt, which is negligent or diſſembleth. And as the Scripture ſayth, thornes and brambles grow in the handes of the idle dronkard. Wherfore, leaſt (through our too much ſufferance and diſſembling) the tranſgreſsions of manifeſt euill doers ſhould alſo be laid to our charge, and redound to the deſtruction of the Church through our giltie ſilence: We therfore (following the authoritie of the Popes commaundement) haue laid our ſentence of curſe & excommunication, vpon the Earle Hugo: commaunding you throughout all your Dioceſſe publickely to denounce the ſayde Earle as accurſed: ſo that (according to the diſcipline of the Church) he be ſequeſtred from the fellowſhip of all faithfull people. Alſo, it is not vnknowen to your brotherhoode, how long we haue borne with the tranſgreſsions of the Biſhop of London. Who (amongeſt other his factes) I would to God were not a great doer and fautor of this ſchiſme, and ſubuerter of the right and liberties of holy Church. Wherefore, we (being ſupported with the authoritie of the Apoſtolicke ſea) haue alſo excommunicated him, beſides alſo the Biſhop of Salesbury, becauſe of his diſobedience and contempt: and others likewiſe (vpon diuers and ſundrie cauſes) whoſe names here followe ſubſcribed. Hugo Bernardes ſonne, Radolph of Brocke, Robert of Brocke a clearke, Hugode of S Cleare, and Letardus a clearke of Northfolke, Nigellus of Scacauil, and Richard Chapleine, William of Haſting, and the Frier which poſſeſſeth my Church of Monchote. We therfore, charge and commaunde you by the authoritie Apoſtolicall and ours, and in the vertue of obedience, and in the perill of ſaluation, and of your order: that yee cauſe theſe openly to be proclaimed excommunicate, throughout all your Dioceſſe, and to command all the faithful to auoide their companie. Fare ye wel in the Lord. Let not your heart be troubled, nor feare: for we ſtande ſure thorough the aſsiſtance of the Apoſtolike ſea (God being oure borowe) againſt the pretenſed ſhiftes of the malignant ſorte, and againſt all their appellations. Furthermore, all ſuch as haue bene ſolemnely cited of vs: ſhall ſuſtaine the like ſentence of excommunication (if God will) in the Aſcenſion day: vnleſſe they ſhall otherwiſe agree with me. That is to witte: Geffray Archdeacon of Canterburie and Robert his vicare, Rice of Wilceſter, Richard of Lucie, William Gifferd, Adam of Cheringes, with ſuche other moe: which eyther at the commaundement of the king, or vppon their own proper temeritie, haue inuaded the goods and poſſeſsions either appertaining to vs, or to our clearkes about vs. With theſe alſo we doe excommunicate all ſuche as be knowen eyther with aide or counſel, to haue incenſed or ſet forward the proceeding of our king againſt the liberties of the Churche, and exiling of the innocents. And ſuch alſo as be knowen to impeche or let by any maner of way the meſſengers (ſent either from the Pope, or from vs) for the neceſsities of the Churche. Fare you well againe and euer.

The Biſhop of London excommunicated. This Biſhop was excommunicated becauſe he let in the Deane of Salesbury without the licence of him being then beyōde the ſeas.

Becket a ſtubburne treſpaſſer, Ergo no martyr.

Hetherto haſt thou ſeene (gentle reader) diuers & ſundry letters of Thomas Becket, whereby thou maiſt collect a ſufficient hiſtorie of his doings & demeanor (though nothing els were ſaid further of him) concerning his luſty and hauty ſtomack, aboue that beſeemed either his degree or cauſe which he toke in hand. And here peraduenture I may ſeme in the ſtory of this one man to tary to long, hauing to write of ſo many others better then it; yet for the weaker ſort (which haue coſted him, and yet do count him for a Saint, hauing in themſelues little vnderſtanding to iudge or diſcerne in the cauſes of men) I thought to adde this letter more, wherein he complaineth of his king to a forreine power: doing what in him did lie, to ſtirre for hys owne cauſe mortall warre to the deſtruction of many. For ſuppoſe wrong had bene offred him of his Prince: was it not inough for him to flie? what cauſe had he for his owne priuate reuēge, to ſet potentates in publiſke diſcord? Now hauing no iuſt cauſe but rather offering iniurie in a falſe quarell, ſo to complaine of his prince: what is to be ſaid of this, let euery man iudge, which ſeeth this letter.

¶ An Epiſtle of Thomas Archbyſhop of Canterburie to Pope Alexander.

A ſeditious complaint of Becket to the pope againſt his king.

AMantiſsimo patri & D. Alexandro, Dei gratia ſummo pont. Thomas Cant. Eccleſiæ humilis miniſter, debitam & deuotam obedientiam.

In Engliſh thus.

To our moſt louing father and Lord, Alexander by the grace of God biſhop: Thomas the humble miniſter and ſeruaunt of the Church of Canterburie due & reuerend obedience. Long inough and too long moſt louing father haue I forborne, ſtill loking after amendement of the king of England. But no fruite haue I reaped of this my long patience: Nay rather, whileſt that vnwiſely I doe thus forbeare: I augment and procure the detriment and diminiſhing of my authoritie, as alſo of the Church of God. For oftentimes haue I by deuout and religious meſſengers, inuited him to make condigne ſatisfaction, as alſo by my letters (the Copies whereof I haue ſent you) intimate and pronounced, Gods ſeueritie and vengeaunce againſt him, vnleſſe he repent and amende. But he (that notwithſtanding) groweth from euill to worſe: oppreſsing and conculcating the Church and ſanctuarie of God: perſecuting both me & thoſe which take part with me: In ſomuch that with feareful threatning woordes his purpoſe is to terrifie ſuch, as (for Gods cauſe and mine owne) ſeeke any way to relieue and help me. He wrote alſo his letters vnto the Abbot of the Ciſtercian order, that as hee fauoured the Abbacie of that his order (which was in his power ſayde he) he would not accept me into the fellowſhip thereof, nor doe any thing els for me. What ſhould I vſe many woordes? So much hath the rigour and ſeueritie as well of the king as of his officers, vnder our patience and ſufferaunce ſhewed it ſelfe: that if a great number of men yea and that of the moſt religious ſort, ſhould ſhewe vnto you the matter as it is in deede (and that vpon their othe taken) I partly doubt whether your holineſſe woulde geue credite vnto them or not. With heauineſſe of minde therefore I conſidering theſe things, and beholding as well the pearill of the king as of our ſelfe, haue publiquely condemned not onely thoſe pernitious cuſtomes: but all thoſe peruerſities and wicked doings wherby the church of England is diſturbed and brought to confuſion: as alſo the wryting whereby they were confirmed: Excommunicating generally as well the obſeruers and exactours thereof, as alſo the inuentours and patrones of the ſame, with their fauourers, counſailours, and coadiutors whatſoeuer, either of the clergie or laitie: abſoluing alſo, our Biſhops from their othe, whereby they were ſo ſtraightly inioyned to the obſeruation of the ſame. Theſe are the Articles which in that wryting I haue principally condemned. Firſt that 1.

it is inhibited to appeale vnto the ſea Apoſtolicall, for any cauſe but by the kings licence. That a biſhop may not puniſh any man for periurie or for breaking of his troth. That a biſhop may not 2.

cence. That Clerkes and religious men may be taken from vs to 5.

and decide the cauſes of the church and tithes. That it ſhal not be lawfull for any Archbiſhop or biſhop to goe out of the realme, and to come at the Popes call without the kings licence: and di-uers others ſuch as theſe. Namely alſo I haue excommunicated Iohn of Oxenforde, who hath communicated with the ſchiſmaticke and excommunicate perſone (Reginalde Colonienſis) the which alſo contrary to the commandement of the Lord Pope & ours, hath vſurped the Deanrie of the Church of Saliſburie: and hath (to renew his ſchiſme) taken an oth in the Emperors court. Alſo I haue denoūced & excommunicate Richard of Worceter, becauſe he is falne into the ſame damnable hereſie, and cōmunicated with that famous ſchiſmatike of Colen: deuiſing & forging al miſchiefe poſsible, with the ſchiſmatikes and Flemings to the deſtruction of the church of God, & eſpecially of the Church of Rome, by compoſition made betweene the king of England and them. Alſo Richard de Lucy, and Ioceline de Baliol, which haue furthered the fauourers of the kings tiranny and workers of their hereſies. Alſo Ranulphe de Broc, and Hugo de Sancto Glaro, and Thomas the ſonne of Bernard which haue vſurped the poſſeſsiōs and goods of the Church of Canterbury without our licence & conſent. We haue alſo excommunicated all thoſe which without our licence do ſtretch out their hāds to the poſſeſsions & goods of the church of Caunterburie. The king himſelfe we haue not yet excommunicated perſonally: ſtill waiting for his amendement: whome (notwithſtanding) we will not defer to excommunicate: vnleſſe he quickly amende and be warned by that he hath done. And therefore that the authoritie of the ſea Apoſtolike, and the libertie of the Church of God (which in theſe partes are almoſt vtterly loſt) may be by ſome meanes reſtored: it is meete and very neceſſary that what we herein haue done, the ſame be of your holineſſe ratified and by your letters confirmed. Thus I wiſh your holineſſe long to proſper and flouriſh.

Becket reprehēded for complayning of his king.

Excommunication abuſed in priuate reuenge about lands and poſseſsions.

By this Epiſtle, hee that liſteth to vnderſtande of the doings & quarels of Becket, may partly iudge what is to be thought thereof. Which his doings, although in ſome part may be imputed either to ignorāce of mind, or blindnes of zeale, or humain fragilitie: yet in this point (ſo vilely to complaine of his naturall Prince, for the zeale of the Pope) hee can by no wiſe be defended. But ſuch was the blindneſſe then of the prelates in thoſe daies, who meaſured and eſteemed the dignity and liberty of Chriſtes church by no other thing, then only by goods and poſſeſſions flowing and abounding in the clergy: and thought no greater point of religion to be in the church then to maintaine the ſame. For the which cauſe they did moſt abhominably abuſe chriſtian diſcipline & excommunication of the church at that time: as by this foreſaid Epiſtle may appeare. And what maruaile if the acts and doings of this Archb. ſeeme now to vs in theſe daies both fond and ſtrange: ſeeing the ſuffraganes of his owne church & clergy wryting to him: could not but reprehend him, as in this their Epiſtle tranſlated out of Latin into Engliſh may be ſeene.

An effectuall and pithie letter, full of reaſon and perſwaſion, ſent from all the Suffraganes of the Church of Cant to T. Becket their Archb.

QVa Veſtro (pater) in longinquo diſceſſu inopinata rei ipſius nouitate turbata ſunt: Veſtra ſperabamus humilitate. &c.

The letters of the Byſhops to Becket.

Suche trouble and perturbations as happened through the ſtrangeneſſe of your departure out of the Realme: we hoped by your humilitie and prudence ſhoulde haue bene reduced againe (Gods grace working with al) into a peaceable tranquillity. And it was no litle ioy to vs, to heare ſo of you in thoſe partes where you are conuerſant, howe humbly you there behaued your ſelfe, nothing vaunſing your ſelfe againſt your prince and king: and to attempt no riſings of wraſtlings againſt his kingdome: but that you bare with much patience the burden of pouertie, and gaue your ſelfe to reading and praier, and to redeme the loſſe of your time ſpent, with faſting, watchings, and teares: and ſo being occupied with ſpiritual ſtudies, to tend and riſe vp to the perfection of vertue, &c. But now through the ſecrete relation of certaine, wee heare (that wee are ſorie of) that you haue ſent vnto him a threatning letter, wherein there is no ſalutation premiſed: In the which alſo, ye pretende no intreating nor prayers for the obtaining of fauour, neither doe vſe any friendly maner in declaring what you write: but manaſing with much auſteritie, threaten to interdict him, & to cut him frō the ſociety of the churche. Which thing if you ſhall accompliſh, with like ſeueritie as in wordes ye threaten to doe, you ſhall not onely put vs out of all hope of any peace, but alſo put vs in feare of hatred and diſcord without meaſure, and without all redreſſe amongeſt vs. But wiſedome will conſider before, the ende of things: labouring and endeuouring to finiſh that which ſhee wiſely beginneth. Therfore your diſcretion ſhall doe wel diligently to forecaſt and conſider whereto ye tend, & what end may enſue therof, & where about ye go. Certes we (for our parts) hearing that we do heare, are diſcouraged from that we hoped for, which before hauing ſome good comfort of tranquilitie to come, are caſt from hope to diſpaire: ſo that while one is drawen thus againſt an other, almoſt there is no hope nor place left to make entreaty or ſupplication. Wherfore, writing to your fatherhoode, we exhort and counſel you by way of charitie, that you adde not trouble to trouble, & heape iniury vpon iniury. But ſo to behaue your ſelfe, that al manaſſes ſet aſide, ye rather geue your ſelfe to patience and humilitie, & to yeld your cauſe to the clemency of God & to the mercy of your Prince: which in ſo doing ſhall heap coales of charity vpon the heads of many. Thus charity ſhalbe kindled, & that which manaſings can not doe (by Gods help and good mens counſel) pitie peraduenture & godlines ſhall obtaine. Better it were to ſuſtaine pouertie with prayſe, then in great promotions to be a common note to all men. It is right well knowen vnto all men, howe beneficiall the king hath ben vnto you, from what baſenes to what dignity he hath aduanced you, & alſo into his owne familiaritie hath ſo much preferred you, that from the North Ocean, to the mount Perineus he hath ſubdued all things to your authoritie: in ſo much that they were amongſt all other accounted for men right fortunate, whoſoeuer coulde finde any fauour with you.

And furthermore, leaſt that your eſtimation ſhould be ouermatched by any nobilitie: he (againſt the minde of his mother, and of his realme) hath placed and ratified you ſubſtantially in eccleſiaſticall dignitie, and aduaunced in this honour wherein ye ſtand: truſting through your helpe and counſaile to reigne more ſafely and proſperouſly. Now, if he ſhall finde diſquietnes, wherin he truſted to haue quietnes: what ſhall al men ſay or think of you? What recompence or retribution ſhall this be thought to be for ſo many and great benefits taken? Therefore (if it ſhal pleaſe you) ye ſhall do wel to fauor and ſpare your fame & eſtimation and to ouercome your lord and ſoueraigne with humilitie and charitie. Whereunto, if our aduertiſement cannot moue you, yet the loue and fidelitie you beare to the biſhop and holy churche of Rome, ought to incline you therunto, & not to attempt any ſuch thing, wherby the troubles of the church our mother may encreaſe: or wherby her dolor may be augmented in the loſſe of them, whoſe diſobedience nowe ſhe doeth bewaile. For, what if it ſo happen through prouocatiō, that the king (whom all his ſubiects & kingdoms obey) ſhould relinquiſh the Pope, which God forbid: and ſhould deny all obedience to him, as he denieth to the king helpe or aide againſt you: what inconuenience would growe thereof? And thinke you, hee hath not great inſtigations, ſupplications, gifts, and many faire promiſes ſo to do? Yet he (notwithſtanding) abideth firme hetherto in the rocke, deſpiſing with a valiāt minde all that the worlde can offer. This one thing feareth vs, leaſt his minde (whome no wordly offers can aſſaile: no glory, riches, nor treaſure can ouerturne) only through indignation of vnkindnes, be ſubuerted. Which thing if it chaunce to happen through you, then may you ſit downe and ſing the ſong of lamentation of Ieremie, and weepe your belly full.

Conſider therefore (if it ſhal pleaſe you) and foreſee well with your ſelfe, this purpoſe of yours (if it proceede) how hurtfull and perillous it wil be: not only to the Pope, & to the holy church of Rome, but alſo to your ſelfe moſt eſpecially. But ſome peraduenture about you (of hauty and high minded ſtoutnes, more ſtoute percaſe thē wiſe) wil not ſuffer you to take this way: but wil giue you contrary counſaile to proue rather and declare what yee are able to do againſt your Lord and Prince, and to practiſe agaynſt him and al his, the vttermoſt of your power and authority: which power and authoritie of yours (to him that offendeth) is fearfull: and to him that will not amende, terrible. Such counſell as this, ſome peraduenture wil whiſper in your eare. But to theſe againe, this we ſay and anſwer for our king, whome notwithſtanding to be without fault, we doe not affirme. But yet alwaies that hee is ready to amend and make ſatisfaction, that we ſpeake confidently and proteſt in his behalfe.

The king (appoynted for the Lords annoynted) prouideth for the peace of his ſubiectes all that he is able: and therefore, to the intent he may conſerue this peace in his Churches and amongſt his ſubiects committed to him: he willeth and requireth ſuch ordinances due to kings, and exhibited to them before time, alſo to be exhibited to him. Wherein, if there hath any contradiction ſprong betwixt him and vs, he (being thereupon conuented and admoniſhed from the Pope by the reuerende Biſhops of London & Herf.) braſt not out in any defiance: but meekely & humbly anſwered, that wherin ſoeuer the church or any eccleſiaſtical perſō can ſhew himſelf grieued, he wold therin ſtād to the iudgemēt of the church of his kingdom. Which alſo, he is ready no les to perform in dede: thinking nothing more ſwete vnto him then to be admoniſhed of his fault (if he haue offended the Lord,) and to reforme the ſame: and not only to reforme and amend his fault, but alſo to ſatisfy it to the vttermoſt, if the law ſhall ſo require him. Wherfore, ſeing he is ſo willing to recōpēce & ſatisfy the iudgemēt of the church in al things appertaining to the church: refuſing no order that ſhalbe takē, but in al thīgs ſubmitting his neck to the yoke of Chriſt: with what right, by what canon or reaſon can you interdict him, or vſe excommunication againſt him? It is a thing laudable & a vertue of great cōmendation in wiſe men:

wiſely to goe with iudgement and reaſon, and not to be caried with puffes of haſty violence. Whereupon this is the onely and common petition of vs all: that your fatherly care will diligently prouide for your flocke and ſheepe committed to you: ſo that they miſcary not, or runne to any ruine through any inconſiderate, or to much heady counſell in you: but rather through your ſoftnes and ſufferance, they may obtayne life, peace and ſecurity. It doth moue vs all, that we heare of late to be done by you agaynſt the Byſhop of Saliſbury, & the Deane of the ſame church, (proſperouſly) as ſome men ſuppoſe, againſt whom you haue geuen out the ſentence of excommunication and condemnation, before any queſtion of their crime was: following therein (as ſeemeth) more the heat of haſtyneſſe, then the path of righteouſneſſe. This is a new order of iudgement (vnheard of yet to this day in our lawes and canons) firſt to condemne a man, and then to enquire after of the fact committed. Which order, leaſt ye ſhould hereafter attempt to exerciſe in like maner agaynſt our ſoueraigne and king, or agaynſt vs and our Churches and Pariſhes committed to vs, to the detriment of the Pope, and the holy church of Rome, and to the no little confuſion of vs all: therefore we lay here agaynſt you for our ſelues, the remedy of appellation. And as before, openly in the publicke face of the Church with liuely voyce, we appealed to the Pope for feare of certayne perils that might haue happened: So now agayn in writing, we appeale to the ſame, aſsigning the terme of our appellation, the day of the Lordes Aſcention. Moſt humbly and reuerently beſeching your goodneſſe, that you (taking a better way with you in this matter) will let your cauſe fall: ſparing herein both the labours and charges as well of your ſelfe, as ours alſo. And thus we wiſh you right well to fare (reuerend) in the Lord.

Your brotherly letters ſent (albeit not by the whole aſſent of your wiſedomes written, (as I ſuppoſe) of late I receiued vpon a ſodayne: the contentes whereof, ſeeme to contayne more ſharpeneſſe then ſolace. And would to God they proceeded more of ſincere zeale, of godlineſſ, or affection of charity: then of diſobedience or froward wilfulneſſe. For charity ſeketh not the thinges that be his owne, but which appertayne to Ieſus Chriſt. It had bene your duety (if there be truth in the Goſpel, as moſt vndoubtedly there is) and if you would faythfully haue accompliſhed his buſines, whoſe perſon you repreſent: rather to haue feared him, which can caſt both body and ſoule to hell: then him, whoſe power extendeth no further then to the body, rather to haue obeyed God then man: rather your Father then your Maiſter or Lord: after the example of him who was to his Father obedient vnto the death. Which dyed for vs, leauing vs example to follow hys ſteps. Let vs dye therefore with him, and lay downe our liues for the deliueraunce of his Church, out of the yoke of bondage and tribulation of the oppreſſor: which Church he hath founded, and whoſe libertye he hath procured, with his owne proper bloud: Leaſt if we ſhall do otherwiſe, it may happely fall vpon vs, which is written in the Goſpell: Who ſo loueth his owne life more then me, is not worthy of me. This ye ought to know, that if it be right which your captayne commaundeth: your duety requireth to obey his will: if not, ye ought then, rather to obey God then men.

Scripture in wordes rightly alledged but falſly applyed.

One thing I will ſay (if I may be ſo bolde to tell it vnto you): I haue now ſuffered and abſtayned a long ſpace, wayting if the Lord had geuen you to take a better hart vnto you, which haue turned away cowardly your backes in the day of battayle: or if any of you would haue returned againe to ſtand like a wall for the houſe of Iſrael: at leaſt if he had but ſhewed himſelfe in the field, making but the countenaunce of a warrier agaynſt them, which ceaſe not dayly to infeſt the Lambe of God. I wayted and none came: I ſuffered, and none roſe vp: I held my peace & none would ſpeake: I diſſembled and none would ſtand with me in like ſemblance. Wherefore ſeing I ſee no better towardneſſe in you: thys remayneth onely, to enter action of complaynt agaynſt you, and to cry agaynſt mine enemies. Riſe vp (O Lord) and iudge my cauſe, reuenge the bloud of the church which is waſted and oppreſſed. The pride of them which hate his libertye, riſeth vp euer: neyther is there any that doth good, no not one. Woulde God (brethren beloued) there were in you any minde or affection to defend the libertye of the Churche: for ſhe is builded vpon a ſure rocke, that although ſhe be ſhaken, yet ſhe can not be ouerthrowne. And why then ſeek ye to confoūd me? Nay rather, your ſelues in me, then me in you? A man which hath taken vpon me all the peril, haue ſuſtained all the rebukes, haue ſuſtained all the iniuries, haue ſuffered alſo for you all, to the very baniſhment.

I deny your Minor, M. Becket.

The church of Chriſt cā not be ouerthrowen: Ergo, Bec. ought not to be reſiſted.

And ſo it was expedient one to ſuffer for that Church, that thereby it might be releaſed out of ſeruitude. Theſe thinges diſcuſſe you ſimply with your ſelues and weigh the matter. Attend I ſay dilligently in your mindes for your partes: that God for his part remouing from your eies, all maieſty of rule and impery (as he is no accepter of perſons) may take from your hartes the veile, that ye may vnderſtand and ſee what ye haue done, what ye entend to do, and what ye ought to do. Tell me which of you all can ſay I haue taken from him ſince the time of my promotion, either Oxe or Aſſe: if I haue defrauded him of any peny: If I haue miſiudged the cauſe of any man wrōgfully: Or if by the detrimēt of any perſon I haue ſought my owne gaine, let him complayn & I will reſtore him fourefolde. And if I haue not offēded you, what then is the cauſe that ye thus leaue and forſake me in the cauſe of God?

Seruitude and libertie of the Church wrongfully defined. The wordes of holy ſcripture clarkely applyed.

Why bend ye ſo your ſelues agaynſt me in ſuch a cauſe, that there is none more ſpeciall belonging to the Church?

Brethren ſeeke not to confound your ſelues and the church of God (ſo much as in you is) but turne to me & you ſhalbe ſafe.

Turne to thee? Nay turne thou to the Lord and thou ſhalt be ſaued.

For the Lord ſayth, I will not the death of a ſinner, but rather he ſhould conuert and liue. Stand with me manfully in the warre take your armour and your ſhield to defend me. Take the ſword of the word of the mighty God, that we altogether may withſtand more valiauntly the malignant enemies, ſuch as goe about to take away the ſoule of the church, which is her liberty: without which liberty, ſhe hath no power agaynſt them that ſeeke to incroche to their inheritaunce, the poſſeſsion of Gods ſanctuary. If ye will heare and follow me, know ye that the Lord will be with you, and with vs all in the defence of the libertye of his church. Otherwiſe if ye will not, the Lord iudge betwixt me and you, and require the confuſion of his Church at your handes. Which church (whether the world will or no) ſtandeth firmely in the word of the Lord, whereupon ſhe is builded, and euer ſhall till the houre come that ſhe ſhall paſſe from this world to the Father. For the Lord euer doth ſupport her with his hand.

The ſoule of the Church is the libertie of the Church ſaith Becket.

Wherefore, to returne to the matter: brethren remember well with your ſelues (which thing ye ought not to forget) what daunger I was brought vnto, and the Church of God alſo while I was in England: at my departing out of England, and after my departure from thence: alſo in what daunger it ſtandeth at thys preſent day: But eſpecially at that time, when as at Northampton Chriſt was iudged agayne in my perſon, before the iudgement ſeat of the high preſident. Who euer heard the Archb. of Canterbury (being troubled for iniuries done to him and to his church, and appealing to the Pope of Rome to be iudged, condemned appealed and put to his ſureties, and that of his owne ſuffraganes? Where is this law ſeene or the authority (nay rather peruerſity) of this Canon heard of? And why yet ſhame ye not at this your enormity? Why are ye not confounded? Or why doth not this confuſion worke in you repentaunce, and repentance driue you to due ſatiſfaction before God and men? For theſe and ſuche other iniuries done to God and to his church, and to me for gods cauſe (which with a good conſcience I ought to ſuffer, becauſe that without daunger of ſoule I ought not to diſſemble them) I chooſe rather to abſent my ſelfe for a ſeaſon, and to dwell quietly in the houſe of my Lord, then in the tabernacle of ſinners: vntill the time that (their iniquity be complete) the hartes of the wicked and the congitations of the ſame ſhalbe opened. And theſe iniuries were the cauſe both of my appeale from the king, and of my departure from thence, which ye terme to be ſodaine. But if ye will ſpeake the truth which ye know, it ought no leſſe then to be ſodaine: leaſt (being foreknowne) it might haue bene preuented and ſtopped. And as God turned the matter it happened for the beſt, both for the honor of the king and better ſafety of them, which (ſeeking my harme) ſhould haue brought ſlaunder to the king. If ſuch troubles followed vpon my departing as ye ſay, let them be imputed to him which gaue cauſe: the fault is in the worker, not in the departer: in him that purſueth, not in him that auoydeth iniuries: what would ye more? I preſented my ſelfe to the court, declaring both the cauſes of my comming and of my appeale: declaring alſo the wronges and iniuries done to me & to my Church, and yet could haue no anſwere: neither was there any that layd any thing agaynſt me, before we came to the king. Thus while we ſtood wayting in the court, whether any would come agaynſt me or not, they ſent to my officials: charging them not to obey me in my temporalities, nor to owe any ſeruice to me, or to any of mine. After my appellation made in the Court: my Church was ſpoyled: we (and they about vs) depriued of our goods: outlawed both of the Clergy, and of the layty, men, women, and infantes: the goods of the Church (that is, the patrimony of the crucifix) confiſcate: and part of the mony turned to the kinges vſe, part to your owne coffers. Brother Byſhop of London, if this be true that we here of you: and that to the vſe of your owne Churche, ye conuert this money: we charge you and require you forthwith by vertue of obedience: that within fourtye dayes after the ſight of theſe letters (all delaye and excuſe ſet aſide) ye reſtore agayne within the time aforeſayd: all ſuche gooddes and percelles as you haue taken away. For it is vnmeete and contrarye to all lawe, one Churche to be enriched

Vnbeſeeming wordes of high preſumption.

Chriſt is not iudged in the perſons of any traytor.

Cōſcience made where is none.

But he leaueth out here the maner of his comming to the court and the ſturdines of his behauiour.

riched with the ſpoil of an other church. If ye ſtand vpon the authoritie that ſet you a worke: you muſt vnderſtand, that (in matters concerning the church goods) he can geue no lawfull autoritie, which committeth violent iniurie &c.

Becket ſeemeth here more ſkilfull of his maſſe booke then of the booke of holy ſcripture, either els hee might ſee it no new thing in the old law for kings to depriue prieſtes, and to place whom they would. Kings in the old law did not intermedle with the Prieſtes office in ſome thinges that were forbidden: But yet kinges were officers ouer prieſtes to correct them when they did amiſſe.

What authoritie, and what ſcripture geueth this prerogatiue to Princes vpon Church goodes, which you would attribute to them? What? will they lay for them the remedie of appeale? God forbid It were euill with the Church of God, if when the ſacrilegious extorcioner hath violently inuaded other mennes goodes (eſpecially the goods of the church) he ſhoulde after defend him with the title of appeale &c.

Doe not brethren, ſo confounde altogether the right of the Church and of the temporall regiment: For theſe two are muche differẽt, one borowing his authority of the other. Read the ſcriptures, and ye ſhall finde what and how many kings haue periſhed for taking vpon them the prieſtly office. Therefore, let your diſcretion prouide: leaſt for this your doing, Gods puniſhmẽt light vpon you: which if it come, it will be hard for you very eaſely to eſcape. Prouide alſo and ſee to your king, whoſe fauour ye prefer before the wealth & profit of the Church: leaſt if it happen (which God forbid) that he doth periſh with all his houſe, after the example of them, which for the like crime were plagued. And if yee ceaſe not off from that ye begin: with what conſcience can I diſſemble or forbeare, but muſt nedes puniſh you? let him diſſemble with you who liſt (hauing authoritie ſo to doe, truely I will not) there ſhalbe no diſſimulation found in me. And where you write in your letters, cõcerning my promotion, that it was againſt the voice of the whole realme, & that the church did reclaime againſt it: What ſhould I ſay to you, but that ye knowe right well: the lie which the mouth doeth willingly ſpeake, killeth the ſoule: but eſpecially the wordes of a Prieſtes mouth ought euer to goe with verity. As touching this matter, I appeale to your own cõſciẽce, whether the forme of my election ſtoode not fully with the conſent of them all to whome the election belonged: hauing alſo the aſſent of the prince by his ſonne, & of them which were ſent therto. And if there were ſome that repugned the ſame, hee that was troubled and is giltie, let him ſpeake.

If ye meane of Achas, and Oze in the old teſtament, then we denie your Minor.

Ye ſay moreouer, that I was exalted and promoted from a baſe and lowe degree, to this dignity by him. I graunt that I came of no royall or kingly bloud: yet notwithſtanding, I had rather be in the number of them whome the vertue of the minde, then of birth maketh noble. Peraduenture I was borne in a pore cotage: of poore parentage, and yet through Gods clemencie, which knoweth howe to worke mercie with his ſeruants, and which cheriſheth the humble and low things, to confound the hie and mightie: in this my poore and lowe eſtate, before I came to the Kings ſeruice, I had aboundantly and wealthely to liue withall (as yee know) amongſt my neighbours and frends. And Dauid euen from the ſhepefold, was taken vp and made a king. Peter of a fiſher was made a prince of the church: who for his bloud being ſhedde for the name of Chriſt, deſerued to haue in heauen a crowne, and in earth name & renowne: would to God we could do the like. We be the ſucceſſors of Peter, aud not of Kings and Emperors.

They be the ſucceſſours and ſonnes of ſaints, not that holde the places of ſainctes, but that doe the workes of ſaints. Hierom.

And where ye ſeeme to charge me (by inſinuation) wyth the blot of ingratitude: This I anſwere: there is no offence capitall or infamous, vnleſſe it proceede from the heart and intention. As if a man commit a murther vnwillingly (although he be called a murtherer) yet he is not thereby puniſhable: And ſo, although I owe my duetie & ſeruice with reuerence to my king: yet if I haue forborne him as my Lorde, if I haue warned him, and talked with him fatherly and gently as with a ſonne, and in talking with him could not be heard: If therefore (I ſay) being enforced thereunto, and againſt my wil, doe exerciſe vpon him the cenſure of due ſeueritie: in ſo doing (I ſuppoſe) I make rather with him, then againſt him, and rather deſerue at his hande thanke for my correction, then note or ſuſpicion of vnkindneſſe or puniſhment for the fact. Sometimes a man againſt his will receiueth a benefite: as when neceſſitie cauſeth a mã to be reſtrained from doing that which he ought not: he that doth ſo reſtrain him (though he ſtop him) doeth not hurt him, but rather profiteth him for hys ſoules health. An other thing that defendeth vs from ingratitude, is our father & patron Chriſt. Which, in that he is our father (to whome we as children owe obedience) then are we bounde as children by neceſſitie to obey his commaundement, in warning the euill doer: in correcting the diſobedient: and in brideling the obſtinate: which if we do not, we runne into danger to haue his bloud required at our hands. Ye ſet foorth likewiſe and ſhew, what loſſe we thereby may ſuſtaine of our temporalties. But yee ſpeake no worde of the loſſe of our ſoules.

If the king had bene an adulterer or tyrant againſt the true doctrine or preaching of Chriſt, then might this reaſon ſerue, and God more to be obeyed then mã. Now where did Bec. learne, that the king in his temporall right was not to be obeyed? Take heede, ye marre all, and ye open that dore.

Moreouer, as concerning the departure of the king from the homage of the Church of Rome (which in your letters ye ſeme to pretende, or rather threaten) God forbid I ſay, that the deuotion or faith of our king ſhould euer ſwarue away from the obedience and reuerence of the church of Rome, for any temporal commoditie or incommoditie: which thing to doe is very damnable in any priuate ſubiect, much more in the prince which draweth many other with him: therefore, God forbid, that euer any faithfull man ſhould once thinke ſo hainous a deede. And you according to your diſcretion take heede, leſt the wordes of your mouth infect any perſone or perſons therein: occaſioning them by your wordes to ſuch dangerous and damnable matter: like to the golden cup which is called the cup of Babylon, which for the outwarde golde no man will refuſe to drinke of, but after they haue dronke thereof, they are poyſoned.

And where ye lay to my charge for the ſuſpending out of the reuerende father biſhop of Saliſburie, and for excommunicating of Iohn, Deane of the ſame Churche for a ſchiſmatike (by knowledge and proceſſe had of the matter) to this I anſwere: That both theſe are iuſtly and condignely excommunicate, and if ye vnderſtande perfectly the condition of the matter, and the right order of iudgements, yee will ſay no leſſe. For this ſtandeth with good authoritie (as ye know) that in manifeſt & notorious crimes, this knowledge and order of proceeding is not requiſite Perpende with your ſelues diligently, what the biſhop of Saliſburie did (cõcerning the Deanrie) after that he was prohibited of the Pope & of vs, vnder paine of excommunication: and then ſhall you better vnderſtand (vpon ſo manifeſt diſobedience) ſuſpenſion did rightly followe: as ye read in the decree of S. Clement, ſaying: If they do not obey their Prelates, all maner of perſons of what order ſo euer they be, whether they ſhall be Princes of high or lowe degree, and all other people: ſhall not onely be infamed, but alſo baniſhed from the kingdome of God, and the fellowſhip of the faithfull. As concerning Iohn of Oxford, this we ſay: that excommunication commeth diuers wayes: Some are excommunicate, by the lawe denouncing them excõmuuicate. Some by the ſentence of the Prelate Some by communicating with them which are excommunicate. Nowe, he that hath fallen into this damnable hereſie, in participating with ſchiſmatikes, whome the Pope hath excommunicate: he draweth to himſelfe the ſpot and leproſie of like excommunication. Wherefore, ſeeing hee (contrary to the Popes expreſſe commaundement and ours, being charged vnder paine of excommunication to the contrary) tooke vpon him, the Deanrie of Saliſburie: we haue denounced him, and holde hym excommunicate: and all his doings we diſanull, by the authoritie of the viij. Synode, ſaying. If any man either priuely or apertly ſhall ſpeake or communicate with him that is excommunicated, he draweth vnto himſelfe the puniſhment of like excommunication. And nowe for ſo much as you (brother biſhop of London) which ought to know that ſaying of Gregorie vij. if any biſhoppe ſhal conſent to the fornication of Prieſts, Deacons, &c. within his precinct: for reward, fauour, or peticion, or doth not by authoritie of his office correct the vice, let him be ſuſpended from his office. And againe that ſaying of Pope Leo, which is this: If any biſhop ſhall inſtitute or conſecrate ſuch a prieſt as ſhall be vnmeete and vnconuenient: if he ſcape with the loſſe of his owne proper dignitie, yet he ſhall loſe the power of inſtituting any more. &c.

This Iohn was called a ſchiſmatike, becauſe he tooke part with Reginald Arch of Colen & the Emperour againſt Alexander the Pope.

Clemens decree.

Diuers wayes of excommunication.

The councel ſpeaketh of ſuch which be worthely excommunicated.

This Gregory otherwiſe called Hildebrãd, was he that firſt tooke away prieſtes mariage, condemning all prieſtes for fornicators which had wiues.

Therefore, forſomuch I ſay, as you (knowing this) haue double wiſe offended againſt the ſentence of theſe Canons: we commaunde you, and in the vertue of obedience enioyne you, that if it be ſo: within three monethes after the receite hereof, you will ſubmit and offer your ſelfe to due correction and ſatisfaction to the counſell of our fellowbiſhops, for theſe your ſo great exceſſes: Leaſt other (through your example) runne into the like offence, and we ſhall be conſtrained to proceede againſt you with ſeuerer ſentence.

Finally (in the cloſing vp of your letter) where ye bring in for your appellation againſt me, a ſafegarde for you: which rather in deede is an hinderance to you: that we ſhoulde not proceede againſt the inuaders of the Churche goodes, nor againſt the King in like cenſure, as we haue done againſt the biſhoppe of Saliſburie (as yee ſay) and hys Deane. To this I aunſwere, God forbidde that we haue, or els ſhoulde heereafter proceede or do any thing againſt the king or his lande, or againſt you or your Churches, inordinately or otherwiſe then is conuenient. But what if you ſhall exceede in the ſame or like tranſgreſſion, as the Byſhoppe of Salesburie hath done: thinke yee then your appellation ſhall helpe you from the diſcipline of our ſeueritie, that ye ſhall not be ſuſpended? Marke yee diligently whether this be a lawful appeale, and what is the forme thereof. We knowe that euery one that appealeth, eyther doeth it in his owne name, or in the name of an other, if in hys owne name, either it is for ſome greeuance inferred alreadie, or els for that he feareth after to be inferred againſt him. Concerning the firſt, I am ſure there is no greuance that you can complaine of as yet (God be thanked) that you haue receiued at my hand, for the which you ſhould appeale frõ me: neither haue you (I truſt) any cauſe ſpeciall againſt me ſo to doe. If ye doe it for feare that is to come, leaſt I ſhoulde trouble you and your Churches: conſider whether this be the feare that ought to fall in conſtante men, or whether this be the appeale which ought to ſuſpende or ſtay our power and authoritie that we haue vppon you and your Churches. It is thought therefore, of wiſe men (and we alſo iudge no leſſe) your appeale to be of no force.

Diſcuſſing of a true appellation.

Firſt, for that it hath not the right forme of a perfect appellation, The forme of a true appellation.

tion, and alſobecauſe it is not conſonante to reaſon, and lacketh order and helpe of the lawe.

Furthermore, if your appellation be in an other mans name, either it is for the King (as moſte like it is) or for ſome other. If it be for the king, than ye ought firſt to vnderſtande, that appellations are woont to be made to repell, and not to inferre iniurie: or to releaſe ſuch as be oppreſſed, that they ſhoulde not be oppreſſed any more.

Wherſore, if any man ſhall enter any appellation (not truſting to the ſuretie of his cauſe, but to delay the time, that ſentence be not geuen vpon him) that appellation is not to be receaued. For what ſtate will there be of the Church, if the libertie therof being taken away: the goods of the Church ſpoyled: the biſhops driuen from their places: or at leaſt not receiued with full reſtitution of their goodes: the inuaders and ſpoylers therof, may defend themſelues by appealing, thereby to ſaue themſelues from the penalty of their deſert?

What a ruine of the Church will this be? See what ye haue done, and what ye ſay. Be you not the vicares of Chriſt, repreſenting him in earth? Is it not your office to correcte and bridle ill doers, whereby they may ceaſe to perſecute the Church? And is it not inough for them to be fierce & to rage againſt the church, but that you ſhould take their part, ſetting your ſelues againſt vs, to the deſtruction of the church? Who euer heard of ſo monſtrous doings? Thus it ſhall be heard and ſayde of all nations and countries: that the Suffraganes of the Church of Caunterburie (which ought to ſtande with their Metropolitane vnto death in defence of the Churche) nowe goe about by the kings commaundement ſo much as in them doth lie, to ſuſpend his autoritie: leaſt he ſhuld exerciſe his Diſcipline of correction vppon them that rebell againſt the Church. This one thing I knowe, that you cannot ſuſtaine two ſortes of perſons at once: both to be the appeale makers, and to be appealed vp your ſelues. You be they which haue made the appellation, and you be they againſt whome the appellation is made. Is there any more churches then one, and the body of the ſame? And howe meete were it than, that you being the members of the Churche, ſhoulde holde together with the heade thereof? I am afraide brethren leaſt it may be ſayde of vs: Theſe be the Prieſtes which haue ſayde where is the Lorde? and hauing the lawe doe not knowe the law. Furthermore this I ſuppoſe you (being diſcrete men) are not ignoraunt of: that ſuch as enter any appellation there, are not wont to be hearde: vnleſſe the matter of their appellation either belongeth to themſelues, or except ſpeciall commaundement force them thereunto, or elſe vnleſſe they take an other mannes cauſe vpon them. Firſt, that it belongeth nothing vnto you, it is plaine: for ſo muche as the contrary rather pertaineth to your duetie: that is, to puniſh and to correct all ſuch as rebell againſt the Church. And if he which ſubuerteth the libertie of the Churche, and inuadeth the goodes therof (conuerting them to his owne vſe) be not heard appealing for hys owne defence: much leſſe is an other to be heard appealing for him. Wherefore, as in this caſe neither he can appeale for himſelf, not yet commaund you ſo to do: ſo neither may you receiue the commaundement to appeale for him.

One perſon can not both be the appeale maker, and the partie appealed.

Thirdly, as touching the taking of an other mannes cauſe or buſineſſe vpon you, to this I ſay and affirme: that yee ought in no maner of wiſe ſo to doe, ſpecially ſeeing the matter pertaineth to the oppreſsion of the Church, and whereupon enſueth great damage to the ſame.

Wherfore, ſeeing it neither appertaineth to you, neither ought yee to receiue any ſuch commaundement, nor yet to take vppon you any ſuch cauſe as that is: your appeale is neither to be hard, nor ſtandeth with any lawe. Is this the deuotion and conſolation of brotherly loue which you exhibite to your Metropolitane, being for you in exile? God forgeue you this clemencie. And how nowe? will ye looke for your letters and meſſengers to be gently receiued heere of vs? Neither doe I ſpeake this, as though there were any thing in hande betwixt your part and oures: or that we haue done any thing inordinately againſt the perſon of the king, or againſt his lande, or againſt the perſones of the Church, or intende (by Gods mercie) ſo to doe. And therefore we ſay briefly & affirme conſtantly: that our Lorde the king can not complaine of any wrong or iniurie to be done vnto him, if he (being often called vpon by letters and meſſengers to acknowledge his fault, neither will confeſſe his treſpaſſe nor yet come to any ſatisfaction for the ſame) haue the cenſure of ſeueritie by the Pope and vs laide vpon him. For no man can ſay that he vniuſtly is entreated, whome the lawe doeth iuſtly puniſh. And briefly to conclude, knowe you this for certaine: that extortioners, inuaders, detainers of the Church goodes, and ſubuerters of the liberties therof: neither haue any authoritie of the lawe to maintaine them, neyther doth their appealing defend them. &c.

Though the Popes lawe will not defend them yet the lawe of the ſcripture will and doth.

If the king of England had bene an idolater, couetous, an adulterer, an inceſt, a murderer, with ſuch like: than the zeale of this Archbiſhop (threatning the king and ſuch as tooke his part) had deſerued praiſe in this Epiſtle, & the ſcripture would haue borne him out therein. For theſe and ſuche cauſes, ſhould byſhops proſecute the authoritie of the Goſpell againſt all perſones. But the matter ſtanding onely vpon Church goods, libertie (or rather licentiouſnes of Prieſts) making of Deanes, titles of Churches, ſuperioritie, of crowning the king, with ſuch other: to ſtand ſo ſtiffe in theſe, is not to defend the church: but to rebel againſt the king. Againe, if the principles which hee heere groundeth vpon, were true: to witte that the Pope were to be obeied before Princes: that the liberty of Church ſtandeth vpon the immunitie of prieſts exempted from princes lawes: or vpon ample poſſeſsions of the Churche: or that the Popes lawe ought to preuaile in all forreine countreis: and to binde all princes in their owne dominions: or that the ſentence of the Pope & his Popelings, (how, or by what affection ſo euer it is pronounced) may ſtande by the vndoubted ſentence of God: Then all the arguments of this Epiſtle doe proceede and conclude wel. But if they ſtand not ratified vpon gods worde: but tottering vpon mans traditions: Then whatſoeuer he inferreth or concludeth thereupon (his aſſumpt being falſe) can not be true, according to the ſchoole ſaying: One inconuenience being graunted in the beginning, innumerable follow therupon. So in this Epiſtle it happeneth as is aboue noted, that the Maior of this man is true, but the Minor is cleane falſe, and to be denied.

¶ The letter of Matild the Empreſſe and mother of the king, To Thomas Becket.

The letter of the Empreſſe to Becket.

My Lord the Pope commanded me (and vpon the forgeuenes of my ſinnes inioyned me) that I ſhould be a mediatour and meanes of peace and concorde betweene my ſonne and you, by reconciling of your ſelfe to him: wherunto (as you know) ye requeſted me. Wherefore, the earneſter and with more affection (as well for the diuine honour as for holy Church) I tooke the enterpriſe vpon me. But this by the way I aſſure you, that the king, his Barons, and counſell, taketh it grieuouſly: that you, whome he entirely loued, honored, and made chiefeſt in al his Realme (to the intent to haue more comfort and better truſt in you) ſhould thus (as the report is) rebell and ſtirre his people againſt him. Yea and further, that (aſmuch as in you lieth) you went about to diſherite him, and depriue him of his crowne. Vpon the occaſion whereof, I ſent vnto you our truſtie and familiar ſeruant Laurence Archdeacon, by whome I pray you that I may vnderſtand your minde herein, and good wil towarde my ſonne: and howe you meane to behaue your ſelfe (if my prayer and petition may be heard of him in your behalfe) toward his grace. But this one thing I aſſure you off, that vnleſſe it be through your great humilitie and moderation (euidently in you appearing) you can not obtaine the fauour of the king. Heerein what you meane to do, I pray you ſende me word by your proper letters and meſſengers.

Anno. 1169.

But to proceede farther in the order of the hiſtorie: After theſe letters ſent to & froe (the yeare of our Lorde 1169) which was the 15. of the raigne of Henry the 2. The King miſdoubting and fearing wyth himſelfe that the Archbyſhop would proceede (or exceede rather) in his excommunication againſt his owne perſon (to preuent yͤ miſchiefe) made his appeale to the preſence of the pope: requiring to haue certaine Legates ſent downe from Rome from the popes ſide, to take vp the matter betwene the Archbiſhop and him: requiring moreouer that they might alſo be abſolued, that were interdicted. Wherupon, two Cardinals (being ſent from Alexander the Pope with letters to the King) came into Normandie: where they appoynted the Archb. to meete them before the King vpon S. Martines day. But the Archb. (neither agreeing wyth the day nor place) delaied his comming to the viij. day after: neyther would any further go then to Griſorſium. Where (the two Cardinals and the Archb. with other biſhops conuenting together) had a certaine intreatie of peace and reconciliation, but came to no concluſion. The cõtents of which intreatie or action (becauſe it is ſufficiently contained in the Cardinals letters, who were called Gulielmus & Otho, written to the pope) it ſhal require no further labour, but to ſhew out the wordes of the letter, where the ſumme of the whole may appeare. The wordes of the letter be theſe.

¶ The copie of the Epiſtle written and ſent by two Cardinals to the Pope, concerning the matter of the Archbiſhop Becket.

William, & Otho, Cardinals of the Church of Rome, to Alexander the Pope, &c. Cõming to the land of the K. of Englãd we founde the controuerſie betwixt him and the Archb. of Canterburie, more ſharpe and vehement then we would. For the king and the greater part of them about him ſaid, that the Archbyſhop had ſtirred vp the French king grieuouſly againſt him. And alſo, the Earle of Flāders his kinſman (who bare no diſpleaſure to him before) he made his open aduerſary, ready to warre againſt him, as is by diuers euidences moſt certaine. Thus when we came to Cadomus firſt to the kings ſpeach, we gaue the letters of your fatherhode to his hands: which after that he had receiued and conſidered (bringing foorth withall other letters receiued from you before, ſomething diuers and altering from theſe which he receiued of vs (was moued & ſtirred with no litle indignation, ſaying: that the Archbiſhop after our departure from you, had receiued of you other contrary letters, by the vertue whereof he was exempted from our iudgement: ſo that he ſhould not be compelled to aunſwere vs. Moreouer the ſaid king to vs added and affirmed (and ſo did the biſhops there preſent teſtifying the ſame) that cōcerning the old and ancient cuſtomes of his progenitors, (wherof complaint was made to you) al that, for the moſt part was falſe & vntrue which was intimate to you. Offering farther to vs, that if there were any ſuch cuſtomes or lawes in his time that ſeemed preiudicial or diſagreeable to the ſtatutes of the Church, he wold willingly be content to reuoke and diſanul the ſame. Wherupon, we with other Archbiſhops, Biſhops, & Abbotes of the land (hearing the king ſo reaſonable) laboured by al meanes we might that the king ſhould not vtterly breake from vs, but rather ſhould incline to vs to haue the matter brought before vs betwixt him & the forenamed Archbiſhop: By reaſon whereof, we directed out our own Chapleins with letters vnto him, appoynting him both time and place where ſafely hee might meete with vs in the feaſt of S. Martin. Neuertheleſſe, he pretending certaine excuſes made his dilatories, driuing of the time from the day of S. Martin to the Octaues following: which thing ſtirred the kings hart more then is to be thought.

Becket ſtirring vp the French king againſt the king of England

A communication betweene Becket and the Cardinalles.

Thus, although we offered to the Archbiſhop ſafe comming, yet when he refuſed to meete vs in the borders of the king: we to ſatisfie his minde, condeſcended to meete him within the land of the French king, in the place where hee himſelfe appoynted: becauſe there ſhoulde be no let in vs whereby to ſtoppe his profite. After we had entred communication, we began to exhort him all that we coulde, to ſubmit and humble himſelfe to his ſoueraigne and king, who had heaped him with ſuch benefits and dignities: wherby matter might be geuen vs to further occaſion of reconciling them together. He being thus moued and exhorted by vs, departed aſide to conſult with his counſell vpon the matter. At length after counſel taken, he commeth againe anſwering in this maner. That he woulde ſubmit and humble himſelfe to the King, Saluo honore Dei, & eccleſiæ libertate, ſalua etiam honeſtate perſonæ ſuæ, & poſſeſsionibus Eccleſiarum: & amplius, ſua & ſuorū in omnibus ſalua iuſticia. That is: Sauing the honour of God, and libertie of the Church: ſauing alſo the honeſtie of his perſon, and the poſſeſsions of Churches: and moreouer, ſauing the iuſtice of him and of all his in all things &c. After which communication had among vs: we moued & required him more inſtantly, tha the wold come to the ſpecialities: whēas yet he had brought nothing in, either which was certaine or particular. Likewiſe we demanded of him, if he would in all ſuch things contained and comprehended in our letters, ſtand & ſubmit himſelfe to our letters, ſo as the king and the biſhops before were contented to doe. To the which he anſwering againe ſaid, that he had receiued from you a commandement, not to anſwere before he and all his were reſtored full to all their poſſeſsions. And then he would ſo procede in the matter according as he ſhould receiue cōmandement frō the ſea Apoſtolicall. Thus, we breaking of cōmunication (ſeeing that he neither would ſtand to iudgement, nor come to conformitie) thought to make relation thereof to the king, and ſo did: declaring that which he had expreſſed to vs: yet not vttering all, but keeping backe a great part of that which we had heard and ſeene. Which when the king and his nobles had vnderſtanding of, affirmed to vs againe: that he therein was cleared ſo much the more, for that the Archbiſhop would not ſtand to their iudgement nor abide theit triall. After much heauineſſe and lamentation of the king, the archbiſhop, biſhops, and abbots of the Realme requiring of vs, whether we had any ſuch power by vertue of our commiſsion, to withſtand him and proceede againſt him: and perceiuing that our authoritie would not ſerue thereunto, and fearing leaſt the foreſaid Archbiſhop (refuſing all order of iudgement) woulde woorke againe diſquietneſſe to ſome noble perſonages of the Realme: and ſeeing our authoritie could not extend ſo far to help them againſt him (taking a conſultation among themſelues) agreed together with one aſſent, to make their appellation to your audience, prefixing accordingly the terme of their appeale.

Beckets addition.

Becket would neither ſtand to iudgement nor triall.

And this is the Epiſtle of theſe two Cardinals ſent to the pope: wherin, may ſufficiently appeare al the diſcourſe and maner of that aſſembly (although particularly euery thing not expreſſed) concerning the talke betwixt the Cardinals and the Archbiſhop. As whē that William (who of the two Cardinals was the more eloquent) amongſt other communication had, reaſoned long wt him concerning the peace of the church: which Becket ſaid he preferred aboue all things. Well then (ſayeth the Cardinall) ſeeing all this contention betwene the king and you, riſeth vpon certain lawes & cuſtomes to be abrogate, and that you regard the peace of the Church ſo much: then what ſay you: will you renounce your Biſhopricke, and the king ſhall renounce his cuſtomes? The peace of the Church now lieth in your handes, either to retaine or to let goe, what ſay you? To whom he anſwereth againe, that the proportion was not like. For I ſaith he (ſauing the honour of my Church and my perſon) can not renounce my Byſhopricke. Contrary, it ſtandeth the king vpon, for his ſoules health and honor, to renounce theſe his ordinaunces and cuſtomes. Which thing he thus prooued, becauſe the Pope had condemned thoſe cuſtomes, and he likewiſe with the church of Rome had done the ſame, &c.

Becket loueth better his biſhopricke then the peace of the church, for all his gaye talke.

¶ The talke betweene the French king, the king of England, and Becket.

After the Cardinals were returned: the French king ſeeing the king of England diſquieted and ſolicitous to haue peace (or at leaſt wiſe pretending to ſet agreemēt betweene them) brought the matter to a communication among them. In which communication the French king made himſelfe as vmpeare betweene them. The King of England hearing that the Archb. would commit himſelfe to his arbitrement, was ẏ more willing to admit his preſence. Whereupon, many being there preſent, the Archb. proſtrating himſelfe at the Kings feete, declared vnto him kneeling vpon his knees that he would cōmit the whole cauſe (whereof the diſſention roſe betwene them) vnto his owne arbitrement: adding thereto (as he did before) Saluo honore Dei, that is, ſauing the honour of God. The king, who (as is ſaid before) being greatly offēded at this word: hearing & ſeeing the ſtiffeneſſe of the man ſticking ſo much to this worde Saluo honore. &c. was highly therewith diſpleaſed: Rebuking him with many grieuous wordes as a man proude and ſtubburne, and alſo charging him with ſondry & great benefites beſtowed vpon him, as a perſon vnkinde & forgetting what he had ſo gently done and beſtowed vpon him.

Becket charged with vnkindnes.

And ſpeaking to the French king there preſent: See ſir (if it pleaſe you, ſayth the king of England) whatſoeuer diſpleaſeth this man: that he ſayeth, to be contrary to the honor of God. And ſo by this meanes, he will vendicate & chalenge to himſelfe both that is his and mine alſo. And yet notwithſtanding: for that I will not ſeeme to doe any thing contrary or preiudiciall to Gods honor, this I offer him. There hath bene kings in England before, both of greater and les puiſſance then I am: Likewiſe there hath bene biſhops of Cant. many, both great & holy men: what the greateſt and moſt holieſt of all his predeceſſours before him hath done to the leaſt of my progenitors and predeceſſors before me, let him do the ſame to me & I am content. They that ſtoode by hearing theſe wordes of the king, crying all wt one voice: the king hath debaſed himſelfe inough to the byſhop. The Archb. ſtaying a little at this with ſilence: what (ſaith the French king to him) my lorde Archbiſhop, will you be better then thoſe holy men? will ye be greater then Peter? what ſtand you doubting? Here now haue you peace & quietnes put in your owne handes, if ye will take it. To this ẏ Archb. anſwered againe: truth it is (ſayth he) my predeceſſors before me were much both better and greater then I, and of them euery one for his time (although he did not extirpe and cut off all) yet ſomething they did plucke vp and correct which ſeemed aduerſe & repugnant againſt Gods honor. For if they had taken altogether away: no ſuch occaſion then had bene left for any man to raiſe vp this fire of temptation now againſt vs, as is nowe raiſed to proue vs with all: that we being ſo proued wt them might alſo be crowned with them being likewiſe partakers of praiſe and reward, as we are of their labour and trauaile. And though ſome of them haue bene ſlacke, or exceeded in their duetie doing: in that we are not bounde to follow their example.

The kings offer to Becket both charitable and reaſonable.

The words of the French king.

Peter, when he denied Chriſt, we therfore rebuke him: but whē he reſiſted ẏ rage of Nero, therin we cōmēd him. And therfore, becauſe he could not finde in his cōſcience to cōſent vnto ẏ he ought in no wiſe to diſſemble: neither did he: by reaſon thereof he loſt his life. By ſuch like oppreſſions the church hath alwaies growne. Our forefathers & predeceſſors, becauſe they would not diſſemble the name & honor of Chriſt, therfore they ſuffred. And ſhall I, to haue the fauour of one man, ſuffer the honor of Chriſt to be ſuppreſt? The nobles ſtanding by (hearing him thus ſpeake) were greatly agreeued with him: noting in him both arrogancy & wilfulnes, in perturbing and refuſing ſuche an honeſt offer of agremēt, But ſpecially one among the reſt was moſt agreeued, who their openly proteſted: that ſeing the Archbiſhop ſo refuſed the counſaile and requeſt of both the kingdome, he was not worthye to haue the helpe of eyther of them: but as the kingdome of Englande had reiected, ſo the kingdome of Fraunce ſhoulde not entertayne him.

Alanus, Herbertus, and certayne other of his Chaplaines that committed to ſtory the doynges of Becket, doe record (whether truely or no I cannot ſay) that the French king ſending for him as one much ſorrowing and lamenting the wordes that he had ſpoken: at the cōming of Becket did proſtrate hymſelfe at his feete: confeſſing his fault in geuing counſel to him in ſuch a cauſe (pertayning to the honor of God) to relent therein & to yeld to the pleaſure of mā: wherfore declaring his repentance, he deſired to be abſolued thereof. So that after this, the French king and Becket were great frendes together: in ſo much, that kyng Henry ſending to the king to entreate him, and deſire him that he would not ſupport nor maintayn his enemy within his Realme: the French king vtterly denyed the kinges requeſte, taking part rather with the Archbiſhop then with him.

Anno. 1170.

Beſides theſe quarrels and grudges betwixt the kyng and the Archbiſhop aboue mentioned: there followed yet moreouer an other, which was this. Shortly after this cōmunication recited betweene the king and Becket: the K. of England returning againe frō Normandy to England (which was the yeare of our Lord. 1170. and the 16. yeare of his raigne) about Midſomer, kept his court of Parliament at weſtminſter, In yͤ which Parliament he (through the aſſent both of the Clergy, and the Lordes temporall) cauſed hys ſonne Henry to be crowned king. which coronation, was done by the handes of Robert Archb. of York with the aſſiſtāce of other biſhops miniſtring to the ſame, as Gilb. of Londō, Goceline of Saliſbury, Hugo of Dureſme and Gualter of Rocheſter. By reaſon wherof Becket of Cant. beyng there neither mentioned nor called for, took no little diſpleaſure: and ſo did Lodouike the French king, hearing that Margaret hys daughter was not alſo crowned wͭ her huſband. wherupon he gathering a great army forthwith marched into Normādy. But the matter was ſoone cōpaſſed by the king of England, who ſending hys ſonne to him in Normandy, intreated there and concluded peace with him: promiſing that his ſonne ſhould be crowned agayne, & then hys daughter to be crowned alſo. But the Archb. not ceaſing his diſpleaſure and emulatiō, ſent vnto the Pope complaining of theſe foure biſhops, eſpecially of the Archb. of Yorke, who durſt be ſo bold in his abſence & without his knowledge or his licence, to intermedle to crowne the king, being a matter proper and peculiar to his iuriſdiction. At the inſtaunce of whom the P. ſent downe yͤ ſentnce of excommunication againſt yͤ B. of London. The other 3. biſhops with the Archb. of York, he ſuſpended: whoſe ſentence and letters thereof, for auoyding prolixitie, I here omit.

The Biſhop of London excommunicated, with foure other Byſhops ſuſpēded.

Beſides theſe foreſayd biſhops excommunicated diuers other clerks alſo of the court he cited to appeare before him by vertue of his large commiſſion whiche he gate from the Pope, to whō they were bound to obey, by reaſon of their benefices, And ſome he commanded in vertue of obediēce, to appeare in payne of forfeting their order and benefices. Of which, whē neyther ſort would appeare, he curſed thē openly. And alſo ſome lay men of the court & the kings familiars: ſome as intruders, and violent withholders of Church goodes, he accurſed: as Richard Lucy, and Iocelin Balliot, and Rafe Brocke which tooke bels and goods that belonged to the Church of Caunterburye, and Hugh Saincteleare, and Thomas the ſonne of Bernard, and all that ſhould hereafter take any church goodes without hys conſent, ſo that almoſt all the court was accurſed eyther by the name, or as pertakers.

This being done, the Archb. of Yorke with the foreſaid biſhops, reſorted to the king with a greuous cōplaint: declaring how miſerably their caſe ſtood, and what they had ſuſtayned, for fulfilling his commaundement. The kyng hearing this, was highly moued as no maruell was. But what remedy. The tyme of the ruine of the Pope was not yet come: and what Prince then might withſtand the iniurious violence of that Romiſh poteſtate?

The cauſe of the kinges wrath againſt Becket.

In the meane ſeaſon the Frenche King for his parte his clergy, and courtiers, ſlackt no occaſion to incite, and ſollicite Alexander the Pope agaynſt the king of England to excōmunicate him alſo: ſeeking thereby and thinking to haue ſome vauntage agaynſt the realme. Neither was the king ignorant of thes, which made him more ready to apply to ſome agreement of reconciliation. At length cōmeth downe from the Pope two Legates (the Archb. of Rhotomage and the Byſhop of Nauerne) with direction and full commiſſion eyther to driue the king to be reconciled, or to be interdicted by the popes cēſures out of the church. The king vnderſtanding himſelfe to be in greater ſtraites then he coulde auoyde: at length (through the mediation of the Frenche king, and of other Prelates and great Princes) was content to yeld to peace and reconciliation with the Archbiſhop whome he receaued both to hys fauour, and alſo permitted and graunted him free returne to his Church agayne. Concerning hys poſſeſſions and landes of the Churche of Canterburye, although Becket made great labour therefore: yet the king (being then in Normandy) would not graunt him, before he ſhould repayre to England, to ſee how he would there agree with hys ſubiectes.

Becket returneth out of baniſhment.

Thus, peace after a ſort concluded betwene the king & him, the Archb. after ſixe yeares of his baniſhment, returned to England: where he was right ioyfully receiued of the church of Cant. albeit, of Henry the yong king he was not ſo greatly welcomed. In ſomuch that comming vp to London to the king, he was returned back to Canterburye and there bid to keepe hys houſe, Roger Houeden maketh mention in hys Chronicle, that the Archbiſhop (vpō Chriſtmas day) did excōmunicate Robert de Broke, for cutting of the tayle of a certayne horſe of hys the day before. In the meane tyme, the foure biſhops before mentioned whom the Archb. had excōmunicate (ſent to him, hūbly deſiring to be releaſed of their cenſure. To whō when the archb. would not graunt clearly and ſimplye, without cautels and exceptions: they went ouer to the king, declaring to him and complayning of their miſerable ſtate and vncurtuous handling of the archbiſhop. wherupō the K. conceaued great ſorrow in hys minde, and diſpleaſure toward the party. In ſo much, that he lamented oft & ſundry times to thē about him, that (amōg ſo many yͭ he had done for) there was none that would reuenge him of his enemy by the occaſion of which wordes, certayne that were about the king (to the number of foure) hearing him thus to cōplayne and lament: addreſt thēſelues in great heat of haſt, to ſatiſfye the agreeued minde and quarrell of their prince. who within foure dayes after the ſayde Chriſtemmas day (ſayling ouer to England, & hauing a forward and a proſperous wynde in their iorney, being in yͤ deepe of winter) came to Caunterbury, where Becket was commaunded to keepe. After certayne aduiſement and conſultation had among themſelues, they preaſed at length into the pallace where the archbiſhop was ſitting with his companye about hym: firſt to aſſay hym with wordes, to ſee whether he would relent to the kinges minde, & come to ſome conformitie. They brought to him (ſayd they) commaundement from the king: whiche whether he had rather openly there in preſēce, or ſecretly to be declared to him, they bad hym chuſe. Then the company being bid to auoyde, as hee ſat alone, they ſayd: you are commaunded from the Kyng beyond the ſea, to repayre to the king here is ſonne, and to do your duety to him: anſwering to him your fidelitie, for your baronage and other things, & to amend thoſe things wherein you haue treſpaſſed agaynſt him, wherupon, the archbiſhop denying to ſweare, and perceauing their intēt, called in his company again, and in multiplying of wordes to and fro, at length they came to the biſhops which were excommunicate for the coronation of the king, whom they commaunded in the kinges name, he ſhoulde abſolue and ſet free agayne. The archbiſhop anſwered, that he neither ſuſpended nor excommunicated them, but the pope: wherfore, if that were the matter that greued them, they ſhould reſort to the Pope, he had nothing to doe with the matter. Then ſayd Reignald, one of the foure: although you in your own perſō did not excommunicate them, yet through your inſtigation it was done. To whom the Archbiſhop ſayd againe: and if the Pope (ſaid he) tendring the iniuries done to me and my Church, wrought this reuenge for me: I confeſſe it offendeth me nothing. Thus then (ſayd they) it appeareth wel by your own wordes, that it pleaſeth you right well (in contempt and contumely of the kinges maieſty) to ſequeſter his biſhops from their miniſtery, who at the commaundement of the king did ſeruice in the coronation of hys ſonne. And ſeeing ye haue ſo preſumed thus to ſtād againſt the exaltation of this our ſoueraigne, our new K. it ſeemeth likely that you aſpired to take his crown frō him, & to be exalted king your ſelfe. I aſpire not ſayd he, to yͤ crown & name of the K. But rather if I had 4. crownes (to geue him more) I would ſet them all vpon him: ſuche good will I doe beare him, that onely (his father the king excepted) there is none, whoſe honour I more tender and loue. And as concerning the ſequeſtring of thoſe Biſhops this I geue you to vnderſtand: that nothing was done in

The wordes of the king, which were the cauſe of Beckets death

If the Papiſtes will needes meaſure the ſucceſſe of things by ſeaſons and wether: then muſt they by that reaſon condemne the cauſe of Becket, his aduerſaries hauing ſuch forwardnes of wether in doing their feate.

that behalfe, without the knowledge & aſſent of the king himſelfe. To whom when I had made my complaynt, at the feaſt of Mary Magdalen, of the wrõg and iniury done to me and my Church therein: he gaue me his good leaue to obtayne at the Popes hand ſuche remedy therein as I could, promiſing moreouer his helpe to me in the ſame. What is this, quoth they, that thou ſayeſt? Makeſt thou the king a trator, and betrayer of the king his owne ſon? that when he had commaunded the biſhops to crown his ſonne, he would geue thee leaue afterward to ſuſpend thẽ for ſo doyng? certes it had bene better for you not to haue accuſed ſo the king of this prodition. The Archb. ſayde to Reignald, that he was there preſẽt at that tyme, and hard it himſelfe. But that he denyed, and ſwore it was not ſo: and thinke you (ſay they) that we the kinges ſubiectes wil or ought to ſuffer this? And ſo approching nearer to hym, ſayd: he had ſpoken inough agaynſt hys own head. Wherupon followed great exclamation and many threatning wordes. Then ſayd the archb. I haue ſyth my comming ouer, ſuſtayned many iniuries and rebukes, concernyng both my ſelfe, my men, my cattel, my wynes, and all other goodes: notwithſtanding, the kinge (writinge ouer to hys ſonne) required hym that I ſhoulde lyue in ſafety and peace: and now beſides all other, you come hither to threaten me. To this Reignald anſwering agayn ſaid: if there be any that worketh you anye iniury otherwiſe then right is, the law is open: why do you not complayn? To whom, ſaid Becket ſhould I complaine? To the yong king ſayd they. Then ſayd Becket, I haue complayned inough if that would helpe, and haue ſought for remedy at the kinges handes, ſo long as I could be ſuffered to come to his ſpeach: but now ſeeing that I am ſtopt from yͤ, neither can find redreſſe of ſo great vexations and iniuries as I haue and do dayly ſuſtayne: nor can haue the benefite of yͤ law or reaſon: ſuch right and law as an archb. may haue that will I exerciſe, and let for no man. At theſe wordes one of thẽ burſting out in exclamation, cryed, he threatneth he threatneth, what, will he interdict the whole realme & vs altogether? Nay yͤ he ſhall not ſayth an other, he hathe interdicted to many already. And drawing more neare to hym, they proteſted and denounced him to haue ſpoken wordes to yͤ ieoperdy of hys own head. And ſo departing in great fury and many high words, ruſhed out of yͤ dores: who by the way returning to the Monkes, charged them in the kings name to keep him forth comming, yͭ he ſhold not eſcape away. What quoth the archb. thinke ye I wyll flee away? Nay neyther for the king, nor any man alyue, will I ſtirre one foot from you. No ſay they thou ſhalt not auoyd, though thou wouldeſt, and ſo thedeparting with many wordes, the arch. followeth them out of the chamber dore crying after them: here, here here, ſhall you finde me, laying his hand vpon hys crowne.

The ſtout heart of Becket.

The name of theſe foure ſouldiours aboue mentioned were theſe. 1. Reignald Bereſõ. 2. Hugh Morteuil. 3. William Thracy, and 4. Richard Brito: who going to harneſſe themſelues, returned the ſame day agayne. But finding the hall dore of the palace of Canterbury ſhut againſt them: they went to an inward backe dore leading into the Orcharde: there brake they vp a window and opened the dore, and ſo iſſued into the place. The Monkes (beyng about Euenſong tyme) had got the Archbiſhop into the Church: who beyng perſwaded by them, cauſed hys croſſe to be borne before hym, and ſo through the Cloyſter (by a doore whiche was broke vp for him) proceeded into the quire. The harneſt men following after, at length came to the Churche doore: whiche doore the monkes woulde haue ſhut agaynſt them, but (as the ſtory ſayth) the Archbiſhop would not ſuffer them. So they approching into yͤ Church, and the Biſhop meeting them vpon the ſtayres, there was ſlayne: euery one of the foure ſouldiors ſtriking him with his ſword into the head. Who afterward flying into the North, at length with much adoe obtayning their pardon of the Pope (through the kinges procurement, as ſome ſtoryes recorde) went to Ieruſalem.

The death of Tho. Becket.

What is to be thought or iudged of Thomas Becket.

Thus you haue heard the life and death of this Tho. Becket: of whom what is to be iudged, let his owne actes and facts declare. And albeit the ſcripture ought to be onely the rule to vs to iudge all thinges by: yet if any ſhall require farther teſtimony (partly to ſatiſfy their minds therin) ye ſhal heare the iudgementes of certayn men, in yeres and tymes almoſt as auncient as himſelf, what they writ, and affirme of him.

What is to be thought whether Thomas Becket dyed a ſainct or not.

And firſt to begin with the teſtimony of one of his owne religion, and alſo not farre (as it appeareth) frõ hys owne tyme: who writing of his martyrdome & myracles, thus teſtifieth of the iudgement and ſentence of diuers cõcerning his promotion and behauiour. The Chronicle being written in lattin, & hauing the name of the author cut out, thus beginneth: Quoniam verò multi.&c. And in the firſt booke, cap. 8. it followith in this maner: Nonnullis tamen id circa promotionem eius viſum eſt minus canonicũ, quòd ad eam magis operata eſt regis inſtantia, quàm cleri vel populi vota. Præſumptionis quoq; vel indiſcretionis fuiſſe notatum eſt, quòd qui remũ tenere vix idoneus videbatur, primum gubernaculi locum ſuſcepit, &c. & mox: magis etiam ſecularia tũ ſapiens, tam ſanctum tantæ dignitatis faſtigium non horrens renuiſſe, ſed vltroneus aſcendiſſe creditus. Aliter dei amicus Moſes &c. With much more as in latine inſueth, whiche for the Engliſhe Reader here foloweth tranſlated. Diuers notwithſtãding there be, which as touching his promotion, ſuppoſe the ſame not to be canonicall. For that it was wrought rather by the inſtance of the king (thinking him to be a man ready and inclinable to his vtilitie) then by the aſſent eyther of the clergy or of the people. Farther it is noted in him for a poynt of preſumption, and lack of diſcretion: for that he beyng ſcarce worthy to take the Ore in hand and play the boteſwane, would take vpõ him to ſit at the healm, and guide the ſhip: namely in that church, where the Couent being in geſture and veſture religious, be wont to haue their prelate taken out of the ſame profeſsion. Where as he, ſcant bearing the babite of a Clarke, and goyng in hys chaunges and ſoft apparell, is more conuerſaunt among the delicate rufflers in the court, ſauoring rather of worldly thinges: not refuſing moreouer without any dread, to clime vp to the high preferment of ſuche an holy dignitie, but rather willingly of hys owne accord, to aſpire vnto it. Moſes, we read did otherwiſe, who beyng the frend of God and ſent of him to cõduct his people Iſraell out of Egipt, trembled at the meſſage, and ſayd. Who am I Lord, that I ſhoulde goe to Pharao: and bring thy people Iſraell out of Egipt? And agayne, I pray thee (ſayth hee) O Lorde: I am nothing eloquent, ſend him whome thou wilt ſend. Likewiſe Ieremias alſo being ſent to the Lord to prophecy agaynſt Ieruſalem, was abaſhed to take the office vpon hym, anſwering agayn with much dread of hart, A, a, a. Lorde I cannot vtter my minde for I am a Childe.

The promotion of Becket iudged not canonicall.

Becket charged with preſumptiõ and lacke of diſcretion.

Ambition noted in Becket, in not refuſing but taking his promotion.

After like maner we reade of the ſaintes of the newe teſtament, wherof many were preferred oftẽtimes to their biſhopriks, and functions of the Churche by meere forcement and compulſion rather of other, then by their owne willes. So was bleſſed Gregory after hys flight, and goyng away, brought backe agayne, and placed in the ſea & chayre of Rome. Likewiſe S. Ambroſe ſore agaynſt hys mynde, who alſo of purpoſe accuſing and confeſſing hys owne defectes, becauſe he would be repealed: yet by the cõmaundement of Valentinian the Emperour was inforced to take the burden vpõ him, which he could by no wiſe ſhake of. S. And although ſcarcely any teſtimony is to be taken of that age (being all blinded and corrupted with ſuperſtitiõ) yet let vs heare what Neuburgenſis an auncient Hiſtoriographer ſayth: who in the dayes of the ſonne of thys K. Henry the ij. proſecuting his hiſtory vnto King Richard the firſt hath theſe wordes: writing of Thomas Becket: Sanè cum pleriq; ſoleant in his quos amant & laudant affectu quodam propenſiori, ſed prudentia parciori, quicquid ab eis geritur, approbare: planè ego in viro illo venerabili ea quæ ita ab ipſo acta ſunt, quum nulla exindè proueniret vtilitas ſed feruor tantùm accenderetur regius, ex quo tot mala poſtmodum pullulaſſe noſcuntur, laudanda nequaquam cẽſuerim, licet ex laudabili zelo proceſſerint: Sicut in beatiſſ. apoſtolorum principe, quòd gentes ſuo exemplo iudaizare coegit: in quo eum doctor gentium reprehenſibilem declaret fuiſſe, licèt eum conſtet Laudabili hoc pietate feciſſe &c. That is in Engliſh.

Acta Beckets improbata.

Whereas many be wont, in them whome they loue or prayſe (iudging them more by affection, then prudence) to allow & approue, what ſoeuer they do: yet for me to iudge vpon this reuerend man: verily I think not his doings & acts to be prayſe worthy, or to be allowed. Foraſmuch as therof came no vtilitie but onely the anger and ſtirring vp of the king, whereupon afterwarde ſprong ſo great miſchiefes (although the king that he did, might procede of a certayne laudable zeale) like as in the bleſſed Prince of the Apoſtles, in that he taught the Gentiles by his example to play the Iewes: Paule the doctor of the Gentiles, did declare him therein to be rebukeable: albeit it cannot be denyed, but that he did it of good affection. &c. And in the ſame author, in an other place it followeth to the like effect, in theſe wordes: Literas has in Angliam ad ſuſpenſionem Epiſcoporum præmiſſas ipſe ſequebatur, zelo iuſtitiæ feruidus, verùm an plenè ſecundum ſcientiam nouit Deus: Noſtræ enim paruitati nequaquam conceditur, de tanti viri actibus temerè iudicare. Puto enim quòd in molli ad huc teneraq; regis cōcordia minus prouidè egiſſet, & ea quæ ſine fidei Chriſtianæ periculo tolerari potuiſſent, ratione temporis & cōpēſatione pacis diſsimulanda dixiſſet, iuxta illud propheticum: prudens in tempore illo tacebit, quia tempus malum eſt. Itaq;, quod a venerabli pontifice tunc actum eſt, nec laudandum eſſe iudico, nec vituperare præſumo: ſed dico ſi vel modice in huiuſmodi a ſancto viro per zeli immoderatiorē impetū eſt exceſſū, hoc ipſū eſt ſacræ, quæ cōſecuta noſcitur, igne paſsionis excoctū. Ita quippe ſācti viri vel amādi vel laudādi ſūt a nobis, qui nos illis lōgè impares eſſe cognoſcimus, vt ea, in quibus homines fuerunt, vel fuiſſe noſcuntur nequaquam vel amemus vel laudemus: ſed ea tantū, in quibus eos ſine ſcrupulo imitari debemus. Quis enim eos dicat in omnibus, quæ ab ipſis fiant, eſſe imitabiles? Non igitur in omnibus, quæ faciūt, ſed ſapientèr & cautè debent laudari, vt ſua Deo prærogatiua ſeruetur, in cuius vtiq; laudib⁹ nemo poteſt eſſe nimius, quantumcunq; laudare conetur &c. That is in Engliſh.

The letters which were ſent before for the ſuſpending of the Biſhops, hee purſued with burning zeale of iuſtice but whether according to knowledge, god knoweth it. It is not for my rude and ſlender witte to iudge of the doings of ſuch a perſō. But yet thys I ſuppoſe: that he did not behaue himſelfe ſo circumſpectly as hee ought (conſidering the tyme) and that the concorde betwene him and the king as yet was but ſoft and tender. who for the conſideration of the time, and for the recompēce of peace: might haue forborne or diſſembled ſuch things, which without any perill of Chriſtian religion might be tollerate wel inough according to the prophetical ſaying: A wiſe mā in his time wil keepe ſilence, becauſe ẏ tyme will not ſerue him. wherfore, as the doings of that reuerend Prelate I iudge in that behalfe not to be cōmēded: ſo neither did I preſume to diſcommend them. But this I ſay, that if that holy man through immoderate violence of zeale, did excede in a part therin: the ſame was excocted again and purged by the fire of his ſuffering: which afterward enſued. And ſo far, holye mē are to be loued or praiſed of vs, which know our ſelues much inferiour to their vertues: that in ſuch things wherin they haue bene men & alſo knowne to be men: therein, we neyther hold with them nor commend them, but onely ſuch thinges wherein without all daunger or ſcruple we ought to imitate thē. For who is able to ſay, that they are to be imitated in all that they doe, and therefore are not to be eſteemed and prayſed in al things generally whatſoeuer they do: but conſiderately & with aduiſement: wherin they deſerue prayſe: ſo that the onely prerogatiue in this behalfe be reſerued to God, in whoſe prayſe no man can exceede how feruent ſoeuer he be in his prayſing. &c.

And heare yet more what the ſayde author writeth in the ſame cauſe of the kinges wrath & Beckets faults. Pluſquam 100. homicidia a clericis commiſſa ſub Hen. ij. dicuntur. In quibus plectendis rex aliquanto vehementior. Sed huius immoderationis regiæ, noſtri temporis Epiſcopos tantum reſpicit culpa, quantum ab eis proceſsit & cauſa. Cum enim ſacri præcipiūt canones, clericos nō ſolùm facinoroſos & grauioribus irretitos criminibus, verùm etiam leuiorum criminum reos degradari, & tot millia talium, tanquam innumeras inter pauca grana paleas Eccleſia Anglicana contineat, tamen quam paucos a multis retro annis clericos in anglia contigit officio priuari. Nempe Epiſcopi dū defendendis magis clericorum libertatibus vel dignitatibus quam eorum vitijs corrigendis reſecandiſque inuigilant: arbitrātur obſequiū ſe præſtare Deo & Eccleſiæ, ſi facinoroſos clericos quos pro officij debito canonicæ vigore cenſuræ coercere debeant, contra publicam tueantur diſciplinam. Vndè clerici qui in ſortem domini vocati, tanquam ſtellæ in firmamento cœli poſitæ, vita & verbo lucere deberent ſuper terram, habentes pro impunitate agendi quodcunque libuerit, licentiam & libertatem, neque Deum, cuius iudicium tardare videtur, neque homines poteſtatem habētes reuerentur, cum & Epiſcopalis circa eos ſollicitudo ſit languida, & ſeculari eos iuriſdictioni ſacri eximat ordinis prærogatiua. That is.

More then 100. murders are ſayd to be committed by the Clergy vnder king Henry the 2. In puniſhing of whō the king was ſomewhat to vehement: but the fault (ſayth he) of this immoderate dealing of the king reſteth moſt in the Biſhops of our tyme: for as much as the cauſe thereof proceedeth of them. For where it is decreed and commaūded by the Canon law (concerning the ſpirituall men of ẏ clergy) that not onely ſuch as be notorious, but ſuche as be ſpotted with lighter crimes ſhould be diſgraded: wherof, haue we ſo many thouſandes and whole ſwarmes of ſuch now in England, as innumerable chaffe among the little good grayne? and yet how few do we ſee theſe many yeares in England depriued of their office? For why? the Byſhops while they labour more to mayntayne the liberties and dignities of Church men, then to correct their vices: thinke they do God and the Churche great ſeruice, if they reſcue and defend the enormities of the Church men agaynſt publike diſcipline, whome they ought rather to puniſh by the vertue of the cenſure eccleſiaſticall. whereupon, the Church men: ſuch as be ſorted peculiarly to the Lord, and ought like ſtarres to ſhyne in earth by worde & example, taking licence and libertie to doe what they luſt: neyther reuerence god (whoſe iudgement ſeemeth to tary) neyther men ſet in authoritie: when as both the Biſhops are ſlacke in their charge doyng, and alſo the prerogatiue of their order exempteth thē frō the ſecular iuriſdictiō. &c. And thus much out of Nuburgenſis.

Ex Cæſario Monacho. lib. 8. dialo. cap. 69.

To this matter alſo pertayne the words of Ceſarius the monke, in hys 8. booke of Dialogues cap. 69 about the 48. yeare after the death of Thomas Becket, which was the yeare of the Lord. 1220. whoſe wordes in ſumme come to this effect. Quæſtio Pariſijs inter magiſtros ventilata fuit, vtrum damnatus an ſaluatus eſſet ille Thomas. Dixerat Rhogerius tunc Normānus, fuiſſe illum morte ac damnatione dignum, quòd contumax eſſet in dei miniſtrum regem. Protulit econtra Petrus Cantor Pariſienſis quòd ſigna ſaluationis, & magne ſāctitatis eſſent eius miracula: & quòd martirium probaſſet Eccleſiæ cauſa pro qua mortem ſubierat. &c. In Engliſh.

Whether Tho. Becket be ſaued or damned.

There was a queſtion moued among the maiſters of Paris, whether Tho. Becket were ſaued or damned. To this queſtion anſwereth Roger a Norman: that he was worthy death and damnation, for that he was ſo obſtinate agaynſt Gods miniſter hys K. Contrary, Peter Cantor a Perſian diſputed, ſaying & affirming that his miracles were great ſignes and tokens of ſaluatiō, and alſo of great holines in that man: affirming moreouer that the cauſe of the Church did allow and confirme hys martyrdome, for the which Church he dyed.

If God in theſe latter dayes geueth no miracles to glorifie the glory of his own ſonne: much leſſe wil he giue myracles to glorifie Thomas Becket.

And thus haue ye the iudgement, and cenſure of the ſchole of Paris touching this queſtion, for the ſaincting of Thomas Becket. In which iudgement for ſo much as the greateſt argumēt reſteth in the miracles wrought by him after hys death: let vs therefore pauſe a little vpon ẏ ſame, to try and examine theſe his miracles. In the tryall wherof we ſhall finde one of theſe two to be true, that eyther if they were true, they were wrought not by God, but by a cōtrary ſpirit: of whō Chriſt our Lord geueth vs warning in his goſpell, ſaying: whoſe comming ſhal be with lying ſignes and wonders to deceiue, if it were poſſible, the elect. Math 24. for els we ſhall finde that no ſuche were euer wrought at all, but fayned and forged of idle Monkes and religious bellies for the exaltatiō of their churches, & profit of their powches: whiche thing in deede ſeemeth rather to be true: And no leſſe may appeare by the miracles thēſelues, ſet forth by one of his own Monks & of his owne time, who in fiue ſolemne books hath comprehended all the reuelation, vertues, and miracles of this archb. the which bookes (as yet remayning in the hands of William Stephenſon Citizen of London) I haue ſeen and peruſed: wherein is contayned the whole ſumme of all his miracles to the number of 270, being ſo far of from all trueth & reaſon, ſome ridiculous, ſome monſtrous, vayne, abſurd, ſome alſo blaſphemous & ſome ſo impudēt: that not onely they deſerue no credit (altogether ſauoring of mere forgery) but alſo for very ſhame will abaſh an honeſt penne to write vpō thē. Firſt if miracles ſerue for neceſſity & for infidels: what cauſe or neceſſity was there (in a Chriſtian realme hauing the word of God) for God to worke ſuch miracles after his death, who neuer wrought any in all his life? Thē to conſider the end of theſe miracles: whether do they tend, but onely to bring men to Canterbury, with their vowes and offeringes to enrich the couent?

Miracles of Bec. conſidered.

Beſide the nūber of the miracles which be ſayd ſo many, that they loſe theyr owne credit: what diſeaſe is there belonging to man or woman in the curing whereof, ſome miracle hath not bene wrought by this θαυματουργός: as feuers, fiſtula, the gout: tothache: palſey, conſumption, falling ſickneſſe, leproſie, headache, broken armes, maymed legs, ſwelling throates, the rayſing vp of the dead, which haue bene two dayes departed, with infinite other. And as all theſe haue healed (for the moſt part) by one kinde of ſalue (as a certayne panacea) which was, with the water onely of Caunterbury, like as a cunning Smith which ſhould open with one key all maner of lockes: ſo agayne in reading of the ſtory of theſe miracles, ye ſhall finde the matter ſo conueyed, that the power of this dead Saynt, was neuer twiſe ſhewed vpon any one diſeaſe, but euery diuers diſeaſe to haue a diuers miracle.

To recite in order all theſe prodigious reuelatiõs and phãtaſticall miracles, falſely imagined and aſcribed to this archbiſhop: were nothing els, but to write a legend of lies, & to occupy the people with trifles. which, becauſe it perteineth rather to yͤ idle profeſſiõ of ſuch dreaming monks and cloyſterers, that haue nothing els to maintain that religion withal: I will not take their profeſſion out of theyr hands. wherfore, to omit all ſuche vayne & lying apparitions and miracles, as how this angry ſainct (3. dayes after his death) appeared by viſion at the altar in his pontificalibus, commaunding the quere not to ſing, but to ſay this office of his maſſe: Exurge, quare obdormis Domine. &c. which viſion the author himſelfe of yͤ book doth ſay he did ſee. To omit alſo yͤ blaſphemous lye, how in other viſion the ſayd Archbiſhop ſhould ſay: that hys bloud did cry out of the earth to God, more then the bloud of iuſt Abell. Itẽ, in an other viſiõ it was ſhewed to a monk of Lewes, how S. Thomas had hys place in heauen appoynted with the Apoſtles: aboue Stephen, Laurence, Uincent, and al the other Martyrs. whereof this cauſe is rendered, for that S. Stephen. Laurence, and ſuch other, ſuffered only for their own cauſe. But this Th. ſuffered for the vniuerſal church. Item, how it was ſhewed to a certayne young man (Ormus by name) xij. yeares before the death of this Becket: that among the Apoſtles & martyrs in heauen, there was a vacaunt place left, for a certayn prieſt, as he ſayd of England: which was credibly ſuppoſed to be this Tho. Becket. Item, how a certain knightes ſonne being two dayes dead, was reuiued agayne ſo ſoone as he had the water of Caunterbury put in his mouth, & had by his parentes 4. peeces of ſiluer bended, to be offered in Cãterbury in the childes behalfe. All theſe, I ſay, with ſuch other like, to omit (the number wherof commeth to an infinite varietie) onely this one ſtory or an other that followeth ſhall ſuffice to expreſſe the vanitie and impudent forgery of all the reſt.

Singing at the maſſe forbidden by Tho. Becket after his death.

A blaſphemous lye.

Beck. aboue the Martirs in heauen.

A place prepared in heauen for Becket xii. yeares before his death.

In the fourth book of this fabulous author, and in the 3. chap. a miracle is there contayned of a certayn countryman of Bedfordſhire in kinges weſton, whoſe name was Eilwardus: which Eilwardus in his drõkẽnes bruſting into an other mans houſe, which was his debter, took out of his houſe a great whetſtone, & a paire of hedging gloues: The other party ſeyng this value not ſufficient for hys cõdemnation (by the councell of the towneclerk) entred an action of felony agaynſt him for other thinges beſides, as for ſtealing his wimble, his axe, nette, and other clothes. Wherupon, Eilwardus being had to yͤ Iaile of Bedford, and afterward condemned for yͤ ſame: was iudged to haue both his eyes put out, & alſo thoſe members cut of, which nature with ſecret ſhame hath couered. which puniſhmẽt by the malice of his aduerſary being executed vpon him, he lying in great danger of death by bleeding, was cõſayled to make his prayer to this Tho. of Caunterbury. whiche done (ſayth the myracle) appeared one to him by night, in white apparell, bidding him to watch and pray, & put his truſt in God, and our Lady, and holy S. Thomas. In concluſion, the miracle thus fel out: the next day at the euening, yͤ man rubbing his eye lids began to feele hys eyes to be reſtored agayne: firſt in a litle, after in a greater meaſure: ſo yͤ one was of a gray colour, yͤ other was of a black. And here was one miracle rong. After this folowed an other miracle alſo vpon the ſame perſon. For going but the ſpace of 4. myles whẽ his eyes were reſtored, he chaunced (in like maner) to rubbe the place, where his ſecret partes were cut of. And immediately vpon the ſame, his pendẽda (to vſe the wordes of my ſtory) were to him reſtored, Principio parua quidem valdè, ſed in maius proficientia, whiche he permitted euery one to feele, that woulde and ſhamed not to deny. In ſo much that he comming vp to S. Thomas: firſt at London was receaued with ioy of the B. of Dirhã, who then ſending to the burgers of Bedford for the truth of the matter, receaued from thẽ again letters teſtimonial: wherein the Citizens there (ſayth this fabulous feſtiuall) confirmed firſt to the byſhop, thẽ to the couent of Canterbury, the relation of this to be as hath bene told. This one miracle (gentle reader) ſo ſhameleſſe & impudẽt, I thought here to expreſſe, that by this one, thou mighteſt iudge of all yͤ reſidue of his miracles: & by the reſidue thereof mighteſt iudge moreouer of al the filthy wickednes of all theſe lying monks and cloyſterers, which count it a light ſport ſo impudently to deceiue the ſimple ſoules of Chriſtes Churche with trifling lyes and dreaming fables. wherefore, (as I ſayd) if the holy saynting of Thomos Becket, ſtandeth vpon no other thing but vpon his miracles: what credite is to be geuen thereto, & vpon what a weak groũd his ſhrine ſo lõg hath ſtand, by this may eaſily be ſeen. Furthermore, an other fable as notable as this, and no leſſe worthy of yͤ whetſtone, we read in the ſtory of Geruaſius: That Thomas Becket appearing to a certayne prieſt, named Thomas, declared to him that he had ſo brought to paſſe, that all the names of the Monks of the Church of Caunterbury, with the names of the prieſtes and Clerkes, & with the families belonging to that citty and church of Cant. were written in the booke of lyfe, Ex Geruaſ. fol. 6.

An impudent and a lying myracle.

Ex hiſtoria monachi Cantua. de miraculis b. Thoma.

A blaſphemous viſion.

A falſe and impudent myracle.

But whatſoeuer is to be thought of hys miracles, or how ſoeuer the teſtimony of the ſchole of Paris, or of theſe auncient tymes went with him or agaynſt hym: certayn it is, that this Antheme or Collect lately collected & primered in hys prayſe, is blaſphemous, and derogateth frõ the prayſe of him, to whome al prayſe onely and honor is due, where it is ſayd.

Tu per Thomæ ſanguinem quem pro te impendit, Fac nos Chriſte ſcandere quò Thomas aſcendit. That is.

For the bloud of Thomas, which he for thee did ſpend, Graunt vs (Chriſt) to climbe, where Tho. did aſcend.

The blaſ mous a theme of Becket. Tu per Th ma ſangu nem, quẽ pro te im dit: Fa nos Chriſ ſcãdere q Thomas cendit.

Wherin is a double lye contayned: firſt, that he dyed for Chriſt. Secondly, that if he had ſo done, yet that his bloud could purchaſe heauẽ. which thing, neyther Paul nor any of the apoſtles durſt euer chalẽge to themſelues. For if any mans bloud could bring vs to heauen, then the bloud of Chriſt was ſhed in vayne.

And thus much touching the teſtimony or cenſure of certayne auncient tymes concerning the cauſe of Thomas Becket. In the explication of whoſe hiſtory I haue ſtoode now the longer (exceding peraduenture in ouermuch prolixitie) to the intent that his cauſe beyng fully opened to the world and duely weyed on euery part: mens mindes (therby long deceiued by ignoraunce) might come vnto the more perfect certayntie of the truth therof, and therby to iudge more ſurely what is to be receaued, and what to be refuſed.

Wherby the way is to be noted out of the teſtimony of Rob. Crikeladenſis, which in him I finde: that the Pieres and nobles of this land neere about the king, gaue out in ſtraight charge vpon payne of death, and confiſcating of al their goodes, no man to be ſo hardy to name Tho. Becket to be a martyr, or to preach of hys miracles. &c. Ex Crikeladenſi.

After the death of Thomas Becket, the king fearing yͤ Popes wrath and curſe to be layd vpon him (whereunto Ludouike the French king alſo helped what he could to ſet the matter forward) ſent to Rome the archb. of Rotomage with certayn other biſhops and Archdeacons vnto the P. with hys excuſe, which, the Pope would in no wiſe heare. And after other meſſengers beyng ſent, whome ſome of the Cardinals receaued, it was ſhewed to them that on good Friday (beyng then nye at hand) the pope of cuſtome was vſed to aſſoyle or to curſe, & that it was noyſed, how the king of Englãd with his biſhops ſhould be curſed and his land interdicted, and that they ſhould be put in priſon. After this certaine of the Cardinals ſhewed the pope, that the meſſengers had power to ſweare to the Pope, that the king ſhould obey his puniſhment and penaunce. whiche was taken both of the King and the Archb. of Yorke. So that in the ſame day the pope curſed the deede doers, with ſuch as were of their conſent, eyther that ayded or harboured thẽ. Concerning theſe deede doers it is touched briefly before: how they fled vnto Yorkeſhire lying in Gnarſborough. who after hauing in penaunce to go in their linnen clothes barefoot (in faſting and prayer) to Ieruſalem: by reaſõ of this hard penance are ſayd to dye in fewe yeres after.

The king ſendeth to Rome.

Ex libro notatio hiſtoric manuſcr to I. Ske

The pen of the fou knightes.

The kinges Ambaſſadours lying as is ſaid in Rome: could finde no grace nor fauor a long tyme at the Popes handes. At length with much ado it was agreed, that two Cardinals ſhuld be ſent down to enquire out the matter, concerning them that were conſenting to Beckets death. The king perceauing what was preparing at Rome, neither being yet certayne: whereto the intent of the Pope, & comming down of the Cardinals would tend: in yͤ meane tyme addreſſed hymſelfe with a great power to enter into Ireland, geuing in charge and commaundement (as Houedenus writeth) that no bringer of any brief or letter ſhuld come ouer into England or paſſe out of yͤ realme (of what degree or condition ſo euer he were) without ſpecial licẽce and aſſuraunce to bring nothing that ſhould be preiudiciall to the realme.

Ex Houe no.

This order being ſet and ordained, the king with 400. great ſhippes taketh hys iourney to Irelande: where he ſubdued in ſhort tyme the whole land vnto hym, which at that tyme was gouerned vnder diuers kings to the number of v. Anno. 1172.

In the meane ſeaſon while the king was thus occupied in Ireland, the two Cardinals that were ſent from ẏ Pope (Theodinus and Albertus) were come to Normādy. Vnto whom, the king the next yeare following reſorted, about the month of October, an 1172. But before (during the time of the kinges being in Ireland) the Biſh. of London, and Ioceline b. of Saliſbury, had ſent to Rome, and procured their abſolution from the pope. The K. returning out of Ireland by wales into England, & from thence to Normandy: there made his purgation before the Popes legates, as touching the death of the foreſayd Becket: to the which he ſware he was neither ayding or conſenting, but onely that he ſpoke rigorous wordes againſt hym, for that his knightes would not auenge him againſt the ſayd Thomas. For the which cauſe, this penaunce was enioyned him vnder his othe.

The kings penance for the death of Becket.

Firſt, that he ſhould ſend ſo much to the holy lande, as would find two C. knightes or ſouldiours for the defence of that land.

Alſo, that frō Chriſtmas day next folowing, he ſhould ſet forth hys owne perſon to fight for the holy land ẏ ſpace of 3. yeares together, vnleſſe he ſhould be otherwiſe diſpēſed withall by the Pope.

Item, that if he would make hys iorney into Spaine (as hys preſent neceſſitie did require) there he to fight agaynſt the Saracens: And as long tyme as he ſhuld there abide, ſo long ſpace might he take in prolonging his iorney toward Ieruſalem.

Item, ẏ hee ſhould not hinder nor cauſe to be hindred by hym, any appellations made to the Pope of Rome.

Item, that neyther he nor hys ſonne, ſhould depart or diſſeuer from pope Alexander, or from his catholicke ſucceſſors: ſo long as they ſhould recount him or his ſonne for kinges catholike.

Item, that the goodes and poſſeſſions taken from the Church of Caunterbury, ſhould be reſtored agayne (fully and amply) as they ſtode the yeare before Thom. Becket departed the realme, and that free libertie ſhould be graū to all ſuch as were outlawed for Beckets cauſe to returne agayne.

Item, that the foreſayd cuſtomes & decrees by him eſtabliſhed againſt the Church, ſhould be extinct and repelled (ſuch onely except, ẏ concerned his own perſon) &c beſides other ſecret faſtinges and almes enioyned hym.

Ex quadrilogo.

All theſe former conditions, the king with his ſonne did both agree vnto: debaſing himſelfe in ſuch ſorte of ſubmiſſion before the two Cardinals: by the occaſion wherof, the Cardinall took no little glory, vſing thys verſe of the pſalme: Qui reſpicit terram, & facit eam tremere: qui tangit montes & fumigant. That is, which looketh vpon the earth, and maketh it to tremble: which toucheth the hilles, and they ſmoke &c. Moreouer it is mētioned in hiſtories of the ſayd king: that a little after william king of Scots with hys army had made a rode into ẏ realme, he returning out of Normandy into England, came firſt to Caunterbury: who by the way (ſo ſoone as he came to the ſight of Beckets church, lighting of his horſe and putting of hys ſhoes went barefoote to his tombe: whoſe ſteppes were found bloudy through the roughnes of the ſtones. And not onely ẏ, but alſo receaued further penance by euery mōke of the cloyſter certayn diſcipline of a rod. By whiche ſo great deiection of the K. (if it were true) ẏ mayeſt ſee the blind and lamentable ſuperſtition and ignorance of thoſe daies. If it were pretenſed (as might ſo be in tyme of warre, to get the hartes of the people) yet mayeſt thou learned Reader ſee, what ſlauery kinges and Princes were brought into at ẏ tyme, vnder the popes Clergy. The ſame yeare (as Houeden writeth) which was 1174. the whole citty of Caunterbury, was almoſt al conſumed with fire, and the ſayd minſter Church cleane burnt.

Alſo about the Biſhopricke of Lincolne, of Chichiſter, of worceſter, & of Herford: whether theſe churches were vnder the iuriſdiction of the ſee of Yorke or not, &c. Vpon theſe and other like matters: roſe ſuch controuerſie betweene theſe 2. ſeas, that the one appealed the other to the preſence of the Biſhop of Rome.

In theſe and ſuche cauſes like, howe much better had it bene, if the ſupremacy had remayned more nere in the kinges handes at home, whereby not onely much labour & trauell had bene ſaued, but alſo the great and waſtfull expences beſtowed at Rome, might with muche more fruite and thanke haue beene conuerted to their cures and flockes committed vnto thē, and alſo percaſe their cauſe no leſſe indifferently heard (at leaſt more ſpeedely might haue bene decided) but to the purpoſe again. In this cōtrouerſie diuerſe of ẏ biſhop of Yorks clergy (ſuch as were of Gloceſter, belong to the church of S. Oſwald) were excōmunicate by the Archb. of Cant. becauſe they being ſommoned, refuſed to appeare before hym. &c. At length the ſame yeare which was 1175. there was a Cardinall ſent downe from Rome by the kinges procurement: who ſtudyed to ſet a peace betwene the two archbiſhops. wherupon, this way of agreement was takē (by the meanes of the king) at wincheſter: that as touching the church of S. Oſwald at Gloceſter, the Archbiſhop of Canterb. ſhould ceaſe of hys clayme therof, moleſting the ſee of Yorke no more therein. Alſo ſhould abſolue agayne the Clerkes thereof, whom he had excommunicated before. And as concerning the bearing of the croſſe and all other matters: it was referred to the Archbiſhop of Rhotomage, and of other Biſhops in Fraunce: ſo that for fiue yeares, a league or truce was taken betwixt them, till they ſhould haue a full determination of their cauſe.

The clerkes of S. Oſwald in Gloceſter excommunicated.

Agreement betweene the Archb. of Cant. and of Yorke.

Anno. 1176.

The next yeare following, the foreſayd king Henry the 2. (deuiding the realme of England into 6. partes) ordeyned vpon euery part 3. Iuſtices of aſſiſe. The circuit or limitation of which Iuſtices was thus diſpoſed. The firſt vpon Northfolke, Suffolke, Cantbridſhire, Huntendſhire, Bedfordſhyre, Buckinghamſhire, Eſſex, Hertfordſhire. 2. Vpon Lincolnſhire, Notinghamſhire, Darbiſhire, Stamfordſhyre, warwickſhire, Northamptonſhire, Leiceſterſhire. 3. Vpon Kent, Surrey, Southamptonſhyre, Southſaxe, Barkeſhire, Oxfordſhire. 4. Euerwickſhire, Richmondſhire, Lancaſter, Copland, weſtmarland, Northumberland, Cumberland.

Iuſtices of aſsiſe deuided into vj. circuites.

Ex Epitome Math. Pariſenſis & aliarum hiſtoriarum.

In the which yeare alſo, Richard Archb. of Caunterbury, made 3. Archdeacons in his dioces, where as before there was but one. About which tyme alſo it was graunted by the kyng to the popes legate, that a Clerke ſhoulde not be called before a temporall iudge, except for offence in the foreſt, or for hys lay fee that he holdeth.

A friuolous cōtention betwene the Archb. and the Abbot of Canterbury. Where was here the precept of the goſpel: he that wil be greateſt amōgſt you, let him be an vnderling to other.

Item, that no Archbiſhop or Biſhoprick, nor Abbey ſhould remayne in the kings handes ouer one yeare ẏout great cauſe. It chaunced the ſame yeare, ẏ this was done there was at Canterbury one elected to be Abbot in the houſe of S. Auſten named Albert: who made great labor and ſute vnto the Archbiſhop that he would come to hys Church, and there conſecrate him Abbot of S. Auſtens. To whome the archb. ſent word agayne, that he was not bound to come to him but rather the other ſhould repayre to the Metropolitane church of Caunterbury, there to receiue hys conſecration. wherupon (controuerſie riſing betwene them) the foreſaid new Elect appealed vp to the audience of the Pope, and ſo laboured vp hymſelfe to Rome. where, he ſo handled the matter (by what meanes I cannot tell, vnles with his golden bottle, wherewith he quēched the popes thirſty ſoule, for Abbots neuer trauel lightly without fat purſes to Rome) that with ſhort diſpatche he procured letters from Alexander the pope, to Roger biſhop of worceſter: Signifying to hym, that he had geuen in charge and commaundement to the archb. of Cant. (in the behalfe of hys deare ſonne Albert) that he ſhould conſecrate hym within hys own monaſtery: which monaſtery properly and ſoly without mediation, belonged to the iuriſdiction of Rome, and ſo likewiſe ſhould do to his ſucceſſors after him, without any exaction of obedience of thē. which thing further he ſayd if the archb. woulde refuſe to do, within the terme appoynted: that then he the foreſayd B. of worceſter (ſhould by the authoritie committed vnto him) execute the ſame, al maner of appellatiō or other decree whatſoeuer ſhould come notwithſtāding. This letter being obtayned, the Abbot (that would be) returneth home ſuppoſing with hymſelfe all things to be ſure. The archb. vnderſtanding the caſe, and ſeeing hymſelfe ſo ſtraightly charged, and yet lothe to yeld and ſtoupe to the Abbot, tooke to him pollicy where authoritie would not ſerue: and both to ſaue himſelfe, and yet to diſapoynt the Abbot, he watcheth a tyme when the Abbot was about buſines of hys houſe. And comming the ſame tyme to the monaſtery (as he was cōmaunded to do) with all things appointed, that to ſuche a buſines appertayned: called for the Abbot, pretending no leſſe but to geue him his conſecration. The Abbot beyng called for, was not at home. The archb. ſayning hymſelfe not a little agreued at his labour & good wil ſo loſt departed, as one in whome no redy diligence was lacking: if in caſe that the Abbot had bene at home. Whereupon, the Abbot (being thus diſapoynted) was fayne to fill his ſiluer flagon a freſh, & make a new courſe to Rome to hys father the pope, of whome he receiued his conſecration, and ſo came home agayne with as much witte as he went forth: but not with ſo much mony peraduenture as he went withall.

Houedenus Giſburgenſis.

Anno. 1177.

We haue declared a little aboue, pag. 175. touching the actes and doynges of this Pope Alexander the 3. howe he had brought the Emperours head vnder hys foote in S. Markes Church at Venice: at which time and place peace was concluded, and a compoſition made betweene the P. and the ſayd Fredericke the Emperor. Which pacificatiō, Rog. Houedenus, and Gualterus Giſburgenſis, referre to this tyme beyng the yeare of our Lord. 1177. bringing in two ſeuerall letters ſent from the ſayd Pope to Richard Archbiſhop of Canterbury, and to Roger Archbiſhop of York, and Hugh byſhop of Dureſme. Out of the whiche letters (ſo much as ſerueth to our purpoſe) I haue taken and here inſerted.

✻ The letter of Pope Alexander, ſent to Roger Archbyſhop of Yorke, and to the Byſhop of Dureſme.

ALexander, ſeruaunt of the ſeruaunts of God, to his reuerend brethren Roger Archbiſhop of Yorke, and Hugh Byſhop of Dureſme greeting, and Apoſtolicall bleſsing. The obſequy and ſeruice of your kinde deuotion, which hitherto you are knowne to haue geuen, bothe deuoutly and laudably to vs and to the Church: requireth that we ſhould deſcribe to you as to our ſpeciall frendes, the proſperous ſucceſſe of the Churche: and to let you know as ſpirituall children of the Churche, what hath happened to the ſame: For meete it is, conuenient and alſo honeſt, that you whome we haue had ſo firme, and ſure in our deuotion: ſhould now be cheriſhed and made ioyous in the proſperitie of vs, and of the Churche. And about the end of the Epiſtle it followeth thus.

A meeke Emperour & a proude Pope.

The Emperour holdeth the Popes ſtirrup.

The next day following, which was the feaſt of S. Iames (the ſayd Emperour ſo requeſting) we came to the foreſayd Churche of S. Marke, there to celebrate our ſolemne Maſſe: where (as we were comming in the way) the ſayd Emperor met vs without the Church, and placing vs agayne on his right hand, he brought vs ſo into the ſayd Church. After the maſſe was done, placing vs agayn on his right hand, he brought vs to the Church dore. And moreouer, when we ſhould take our palfrey: he held our ſtirrup: exhibiting to vs ſuch honor and reuerence as hys progenitours were wont to exhibite to our predeceſſors. Wherefore theſe ſhal be to incite your diligence and ſtudy towardes vs: that you reioyce with vs and the Church in theſe our proſperous ſucceſſes, and alſo that you ſhall open the ſame effect of peace to other deuout childrē of the church: that ſuch as be touched with the zeal of the houſe of the Lord, may congratulate & reioyce alſo in the Lord, for the great working of peace which he hath geuen. Geuē at Venice in the deepe riuer, the xxvi. of Iuly.

This yeare the contention reuiued agayne, ſpoken of little before, pag. 173. betwene the 2. archbiſhops of York and Canterb. The occaſion whereof was this. The maner and practiſe of the pope is, when he beginneth to lacke money, he ſendeth ſome limitting Cardinall abroad, to fetch his harneſt in. So there came this yeare into Englād (as lightly few yeares were without them) a certayn Cardinall from Rome called Hugo, or as Houedenus nameth him, Hugezun, who would needes keepe a Councell at Weſtm. To this Councel reſorted a great cōfluence (about middle of Lent) of Biſhops, Abbots, Priors, Doctors, & ſuch other of the Clergye. As euery one was there placed in his order, and after his degree: firſt commeth the archb. of Yorke named Roger: who (thinking to preuent yͤ other Archbiſhop) came ſomething ſooner, & ſtraightway placed hymſelfe on the right hand of the Cardinall. Richard yͤ Archbiſhop of Cant. following ſhortly after: and ſeing the firſt place taken vp, refuſeth to take the ſecond: complayning of the Arch. of York, as one preiudicial to his ſea. So, while the one wold not riſe, & the other part not ſit down, roſe no ſmall contention betweene them two. The archb. of Canterb. claymed the vpper ſeate by the preheminence of hys church. Contrary yͤ archb. of York alledged for hym the old decree of Gregory, whereof mētion is made before, pag. 118. By which this order was taken betweene the 2. Metropolitanes of Canterbury and York: that, which of them two ſhould be firſt in electiō, he ſhould haue the preheminence in dignitie, & goe before the other. Thus they contending to and fro, waxed ſo warme in wordes, that at laſt they turned to hote blowes. How ſtrong the Archbiſhop of Yorke was in reaſon and argument I cannot tell: but the Archbiſh. of Cant, was ſtronger at the armes end, whoſe ſeruauntes beeing moe in number (like valiaunt men) not ſuffering their maiſter to take ſuch a foyle: ſo preuailed agaynſt York (ſitting on the right hand of the Cardinall) that they pluckt him downe from the hand, to the foote of the Cardinall vpon the ground: treading & trampling vpon him with their feete, that maruel it was he eſcaped with life. His Caſule, Chimer, and Rochet, were all to be rent and torne from his backe. Here no reaſon woulde take place, no debating would ſerue, no praying could be heard, ſuch clamour and tumulte was there in the houſe among them: much like to the tumulte, which Virgill deſcribeth.

Contention betweene two Archbiſhops who ſhould ſit on the right hand of the Cardinal.

Ac veluti in magno populo, cum ſæpe coorta eſt
Seditio, ſæuitq; animis ignobile vulgus,
Iamq; faces & ſaxa volant, furor arma miniſtrat.

Now, as the firſt part of this deſcription doth well agree, ſo ſome peraduenture will looke agayne, that according to the latter part alſo of the ſame; my Lord Cardinall with ſageneſſe and grauitie (after the maner of the olde Romaynes ſtandyng vp) ſhould haue ceaſed and aleyed the diſturbaunce: according to that whiche followeth in the Poete.

Tum pietate grauem meritis ſi fortè virum quem
Conſpexêre, ſilent, arrectiſq; auribus aſtant:
Ille regit mentes dictis, & pectora mulcet. &c.

But what did the noble Romaine Cardinall? Like a pretty man of hys handes (but a pretier man of hys feete) ſtanding vp in the midſt, & ſeing the houſe in ſuch a broyle, committed himſelfe to flight, and (as Houedenus writeth) abſcondit ſe a facie illorum. The next day after, the Archbiſhop of Yorke bringeth to the Cardinall his Rochet, to beare witnes what iniury and violence he had ſuſtayned: appealing and citing vp the Archbiſhop of Caunterbury with certayne of hys men, to the Biſhop of Rome. And thus the holy counſell (the ſame day it was begon) brake vp and was diſſolued.

The large dominion of K. Henry the 2.

Homage of Scotland in paine of interdiction.

K. Hēry the 2. protector of Fraunce.

K. Henry choſen king of Ieruſalē & refuſed it.

Under the raygne of this K. Henry the 2. the dominion and crowne of England extended ſo farre as hath not bene ſeene in this realme before him, whome hiſtories recorde to poſſeſſe vnder hys rule and iuriſdictiō, firſt Scotland, to whom William king of Scots, with all the lords temporall and ſpiritual did homage, both for them and for their ſucceſſors (the ſeale whereof remayneth in the kyngs treaſury) as alſo Ireland, England, Normandy, Aquitane, Gaunt. &c. vnto the moūtaynes of Pireney, which be in the vttermoſt partes of the great Ocean in the Brittiſh ſea: being alſo protector of Fraunce, to whom Phillip the French king yelded both himſelfe and Realme wholy to his gouernaunce, an. 1181. Moreouer, he was offred alſo to be the king of Ieruſalem, by the Patriarch & maiſter of the hoſpital there: who then being diſtreſſed by the Soldane, brought him the keyes of their Citty, deſiring hys ayd agaynſt the infidels: which offer he thē refuſed, alledging the great charge which he had at home, & the rebelliō of hys ſonnes, which might happen in hys abſence.

Ayde not to be denied to our neighbours the cauſe being godly.

¶ And here, the olde hiſtoryes finde a great fault with the king for hys refuſall, declaring that to be the cauſe of Gods plagues, which after enſued vpon him, by his children: as the Patriarche (in hys Oration, beyng offended with the king) prophecied ſhould ſo happen to him for the ſame cauſe. Which ſtory if it be true, it may be a leſſon to good Princes: not to deny their neceſſary helpe to their diſtreſſed neighbors, eſpecially the cauſe appertayning vnto God.

Ex Polychron.
Ex Giraldo Cambrienſi.

The wiſedome, diſcretion, manhood, and riches of thys Prince was ſo ſpred and renowmed through all quarters: that meſſages came from Emanuell Emperour of Conſtantinople, Fredericke Emperour of Rome, and William Archbiſhop of Treuer in Almayne, & Duke of Saxon, and from the Earle of Flaunders, and alſo from the French K. (vpon determination of great queſtions and ſtrifes) to aſke councell & determination therof, of this K. Henry: as of one moſt wiſe and ſcholemayſter of al wiſedome & iuſtice, to haue ſolutiō of their queſtions & doubts. Moreouer, Alphonſus king of Caſtile, and Sauncius king of Nauerne, being in ſtrife for certayne Caſtels, and other poſſeſſions: ſubmitted them (of their free accord) and by their othe, to abide the award of this king Henry: who ng Henry en arbi-er by two nges.

made councell, and pleaſed them both: whereby it is to be preſuppoſed that this king, to whom other princes did ſo reſort, as to their arbiter & decider of their cauſes either in any doubt or variaunce. Wherefore it may ſeme, the actes of this prince worthy to be remembred as the Engliſh writers do declare.

Among many other thinges in this king notable, this one is to be noted, which though he reigned 35. yeares: and hauing ſuch warres with his enemies yet neuer upon his ſubiectes put any tribute or taxe, nor yet upon the ſpiritualty, firſt fruites, and appropriations of benefices. Whether they were yet unknowne, or els not uſed: And yet his treaſure after his death (weyed by king Richard his ſonne) amounted to aboue nine hundreth thouſand poundes, beſides Iewels, precious ſtones, & houſhold furniture. Of the which ſubſtance eleuen thouſand pound came to him by the death of Roger Archbiſhop of Yorke, who had procured a Bull of the Pope, that if any prieſt dyed within his prouince without teſtament, that he ſhould haue all his goods. And ſhortly after the Archbiſhop dyed, and the king had all his goods: which extended (as is ſaid) to eleuen thouſand pound beſide plate. &c.

A couetous Archbiſhop.

But as there is no felicitye or wealth in this mortall world ſo perfect, which is not darckened with ſome ſhadow of incommoditie and aduerſitie: So it happened to this king, ÿ among his other princely ſucceſſes: this incommoditie followed him withall: that his ſonnes rebelled & ſtoode in armor agaynſt him, taking the part of the French king againſt their father. Firſt at the coronation of Henry his ſonne, whom the Father ioyned with him as king, he being both Father and king, toke upon him (that notwithſtanding) as but a ſteward: and ſet downe the firſt diſh as Shewer unto his ſonne: renouncing the name of a king. At what time, the foreſayd Archbiſhop of Yorke, ſitting on the right hand of ÿ young king ſayd: Sir ye haue great cauſe this day to ioy. For there is no Prince in the world that hath ſuch an officer this day. &c. And the yong king diſdayning his wordes, ſaid: my father is not diſhonored in this doing. For I am a King and a Queenes ſonne, and ſo is not he. And not onely this, but after he alſo perſecuted his father. And ſo in his youth, whē he had raigned but a few yeares, dyed: teaching us what is the price and reward of breaking the iuſt commaundement of God.

Pride deſtroyeth all.

After him likewiſe Richard his ſonne (who was called Richard Cœur de Lyon) rebelled agaynſt his father: And alſo Iohn his youngeſt ſonne did not much degenerate from the ſteps of his brethren. In ſomuch that this foreſayd Richard (like an unkinde childe, perſecuting and taking part agaynſt his father) brought him to ſuch diſtreſſe of body and minde: that for thought of hart he fell into an ague, and within foure dayes departed, after he had raigned 35. yeares. whoſe corps as it was caried to be buried, Richard his ſonne cōming by ÿ way & meeting it, & beginning for compaſſion to weepe: the bloud braſt incontinent out of the noſe of the king at the comming of his ſonne: geuing therby a certayne demonſtration how he was the onely author of his death.

And thus much concerning the raign of Henry the ſecond, and the death of Thomas Becket: whoſe death (as is aforeſayd) happened in the dayes of pope Alexander the thyrd: which pope uſurping the keies of Eccleſiaſticall regiment 21. yeares (or as Giſburgenſis writeth, 23. yeares) gouerned the Church with much tumult: ſtriuing and contending with Fredericke the Emperour not ſhaming like a moſt proud Lucifer, to tread with his foote upon the necke of ÿ ſayd Emperour, as is aboue deſcribed pag. 205.

Anno. 1179.

This Pope among many other his actes, had certain Councels (as is partly before touched) ſome in Fraunce, ſome at Rome in Laterā. by whom it was decreed: that no Archbiſhop ſhould receiue the palle, unleſſe he ſhould firſt ſweare. Concerning the ſolemnity of which palle: for the order and maner of geuing and taking the ſame with obedience to the pope, as it is cōteined in their own wordes: I thought it good to ſet it forth unto thee, that thou mayeſt well conſider and underſtand their doings therein.

¶ The forme and maner how and by what wordes the Pope is wont to geue the palle vnto the Archbyſhop.

Geuyng of the pall.

AD honorem omnipotentis Dei, & beatæ Mariæ virginis & beatorum Petri & Pauli, & Domini noſtri N. Papæ, & ſanctæ Romanæ Eccleſiæ, nec nō N. Eccleſiæ tibi commiſſæ tradimus tibi pallium de corpore beati Petri ſumptum, plenitudinem pontificalis officij, vt vtaris eo intra Eccleſiam tuam certis diebus, qui exprimuntur in priuilegijs tibi ab Apoſtolica ſede conceſsis.

That is in Engliſh.

To the honor of almighty God, and of bleſſed Mary the virgine, and of bleſſed S. Peter and Paule, and of our Lord Pope N. and of the holy Church of Rome, and alſo of the Church of N. committed to your charge, we geue to you the palle taken frō the body of S. Peter, as a fulnes of the office pontificall, which you may weare within your owne church, upon certaine dayes, which be expreſſed in the priuiledges of the ſayd church, graunted by the ſea Apoſtolicke.

¶ Notes vpon the ſame.

¶ To the honour. &c. with what confidence durſt the Pope couple the honor of almighty God, and the honor of Mary, of S. Peter, and of the Pope, and of the Romiſh Church altogether if he had not bene a preſumptuous Luciſer, equalling himſelfe not onely with ſuch Saints, but alſo euen with him which is God alone, to be bleſſed for euer?

Taken from the body. &c. If S. Peters body be not all conſumed, let him ſhew it if he can. If he can not ſhew it, how then is this palle taken from the body of S. Peter? or if he meane it to be of S. Peters owne wearing then belike S. Peter had a godly wardrop of palles, when euery Archbiſhop in all Chriſtendome receiueth from the Pope a diuers palle.

As a fulnes of the office &c. Rather he might ſay, the fulneſſe of his owne purſe, when as Archbiſhops payd ſo ſweetely for it. In ſo much that Iacobus the Archbiſhop of Mentz, as is aboue touched pag. 172. a litle before in the councell of Baſile where the price was wont to be but a thouſand florences, could not obtein it without 26. thouſand florences.

Ex libro grauaminum nationis germanicæ.

Vpon certayne dayes. &c. This difference there was betwene the Pope and other Archbyſhops. For the Pope might weare the palle at all times and in all places at his pleaſure. Archbiſhoppes might not weare it, but vpon certayne dayes, and in their church onely within their prouince. Moreouer, this palle ſhould not be asked but with great inſtaunce, and within three monethes without which palle he is not to be named Archbiſhop, but may be depoſed, hauing it not after three monethes. And the ſame palle muſt alſo be buried with him when he dieth. And when it is geuē, ſome priuiledge muſt be geuen withall, or the olde renued.

* In like maner proceedeth the othe of euery Byſhop ſwearing obedience to the Pope, in like wordes as followeth.

The ſolemne oth of Byſhops made to the Pope.

A note vpon the ſame.

¶Hereby thou haſt by the way (gentle Reader) to note and conſider among other thinges which here may be vnderſtand, that ſince the time the othe began to be layd and thruſt vpõ Byſhops, all generall Cou̅cels began to looſe theyr libertie. For how could any freedome remayn for men to ſpeake theyr knowledge in redreſſe of things: being by their othe ſo bound to the Pope, to ſpeake nothing but on his ſide, to maintayne the Papacy and the church of Rome in all times and places? Coniecture by thy ſelfe (Chriſten Reader) what is more hereby to be conſidered.

Beſides this it was alſo decreed in the ſayd Councell at Rome of 310. Byſhops, by pope Alexander: that no mã ſhould haue any ſpirituall promotion, except he were of lawful age, and born in wedlock. That no pariſh Church ſhould be voyd aboue 6. moneths. That none within orders ſhould meddle with temporall buſines. That prieſts ſhould haue but one benefice. And that the Biſhop ſhould be charged to finde the prieſt a liuing till he be promoted.

That open vſurers ſhould not cõmunicate at Eaſter, nor be buried within the Churchyard.

That nothing ſhould be taken for miniſtring Sacraments, or burying.

Item, that euery cathedrall church ſhould haue a maſter to teach children freely, without taking any thing for the ſame.

The vowe of chaſtitie layde vpon prieſtes.

In this councell the vow of chaſtitye was obtruded & layd vpon Prieſtes. Thomas Becket alſo, and Bernard were canoniſed for Saintes.

Richardus Baldwinus Archb of Canterb.

Moreouer, in the raigne of ỹ ſayd king Henry, about the yeare of our Lord. 1178. I find in the ſtory of Rog. Honeden and other, that in the city of Tholouſe was a great multitude of men and womẽ, whom the popes Commiſſioners, to wit, Peter Cardinal of S. Criſogoim, and the Popes Legate: with the Archbiſhops of Narbone & Byturienſis: Reginald Biſhop of Bathe, Iohn Biſhoppe of Pictauia, Henry Abbot Clareuallẽſis. &c. did perſecute & condẽne for hereticks: Of whom ſome were ſcourged naked, ſome chaſed away, ſome compelled to abiure. Concerning whoſe articles & opinions I haue no firme grou̅d to make any certain relation: for ſo much as I ſee ỹ Papiſtes many times ſo falſe in their quareling accuſatiõs, vntruly collecting mens ſayinges, not as they ment, & meanings, not as they ſayd: but wreſting and depraning ſimple mẽs aſſertions after ſuch a ſubtle ſort as they luſt themſelues to take them. But this I finde how one of the ſayd commiſſioners or Inquiſitors (Henry the Abbot) in a certaine letter of his, writ thus of them: Nam & panem ſanctum vitæ æternæ ſacerdotis miniſterio in verbo Domini conſecratum non eſſe corpus Domini, nouo dogmate contendebat aſſerere. That is: After a new opinion he affirmed, that the holy bread of eternall life, cõſecrated by the miniſtery of the Prieſt, was not the body of the Lord. &c.

In the time of this Alexander ſprong vp the doctrine and name of them: which were then called Pauperes de Lugduno which of one Waldus a chiefe Senatour in Lyons were named, Waldenſes: item Leoniſtæ, & Inſabbatati: about the yeare of our Lord, 1160. or (as Laziardus writeth) an. 1170.

Waldenſes ſeu pauperes de Lugduno, Leoniſtæ, Inſabbatati.

Not long before this time (as is expreſſed aboue) roſe vp Gratianus maiſter of the decrees, & Petrus Lombardus, maiſter of the ſentence, both archpillers of all papiſtry. After whom followed alſo two as euill, or worſe then they, Franciſcus and Dominicus, maintayning blinde hypocriſie, no leſſe thẽ the other maintayned proud prelacy. As theſe labored one way, by ſuperſtition and worldly aduau̅cement to corrupt the ſincerity of Religion: So it pleaſed Chriſt the contrary way, laboring againſt theſe, to raiſe vp therefore the ſayd Waldẽſians, againſt the pride and hypocriſy of the other.

4. Arch pillers of papiſtry.

Thus we neuer ſee any great corruptiõ in the church, but that ſome ſparkle, yet of the true light of the Goſpell, by Gods prouidence doth remayne. Whatſoeuer Doctor Auguſtinus, Reinerius, Siluius, Cranzius with other in their popiſh hiſtories, do write of them (defaming them through miſreport) and accuſing them to Magiſtrates, as diſobedient to orders, rebels to the Catholick church, and contemners of the virgin Mary: Yet they that cary iudgement indifferent, rather truſting trueth then wauering with times, in weying their Articles, ſhall finde it otherwiſe: that they mayntayned nothing els, but the ſame doctrine, which is now defended in the Church. And yet I ſuppoſe not contrary, but as they did with the Articles of Wickliffe, and Hus: ſo the Papiſts did in like maner with their articles alſo, in gathering and wraſting them otherwiſe then they were ment.

The hiſtory of the Valdenſes, concerning their originall, and doctrine, with their perſecutions.

The hiſtory of Waldenſes or Albigenſes.

The firſt originall of theſe Waldenſes came of one Waldus, a man both of great ſubſtance, and no leſſe calling in the City of Lyons: the occaſion whereof is declared of diuers writers, thus to come. About the yeare of the Lord 1160. it chaunced that diuers of the beſt and chiefeſt heades of the City of Lyons, talking and walking in a certayne place, after their olde accuſtomed maner, eſpecially in the Sommer time, conferred and conſulted together vpon matters, either to paſſe ouer time, or to debate thinges to be done. Amongſt whom it chaunced one (the reſt looking vpon) to fall downe by ſodeine death. In the number of whom this foreſayd Waldus there being amongeſt them was one. Who beholding the matter more earneſtly then the other, and terrified with ſo heauy an exãple, being (as is ſayd) a rich man, and Gods holy ſpirit working withall: was ſtroken with a deepe & inward repẽtance whereupon folowed a new alteratiõ, with a carefull ſtudy to reforme his former life. In ſomuch that firſt he began to miniſter large almes of his goods, to ſuch as needed. Secõdly to inſtruct himſelfe and his familye, with the true knowledge of Gods word: Thirdly, to admoniſh all that reſorted to him, by any occaſion, to repentaunce and vertuous amendment of life.

Wherby, partly through his large geuing to the poore, partly through his diligent teaching, & wholeſome admonitions: more reſort of people daily frequẽted about him. Whom when he did ſee ready and diligent to learne, begã to geue out to them certayne rudiments of the Scripture, which he had tranſlated himſelfe into the French tongue. For as he was a man welthy in riches, ſo he was alſo not vnlearned.

Although Laziardus Volateranus, with other: note him vtterly vnlearned, & charge him with ignoraunce, as who ſhould procure other to write and tranſlate for him. By other that haue ſeene his doings, yet remaining in old parchment monuments, it appeareth he was both able to declare and tranſlate the books of ſcripture, alſo did collect the doctors mind vpon the ſame.

The true nature of Antichriſt, neither him ſelfe to further the word nor ſuffer other men to do it.

But whatſoeuer he was (lettred, or vnlettred) the byſhops and prelats ſeing him ſo to intermeddle with ſcriptures, and to haue ſuch reſort about him: albeit it was but in his own houſe, vnder priuate conferẽce: could not abide either that the ſcriptures ſhould be declared of any other, neither would they take the paines to declare it thẽſelues. So being moued to great malice againſt the man: threatned to excommunicate him, if he did not leaue ſo to doe.

Valdus ſeing his doing to be but godly, and their malice ſtirred vp vpõ no iuſt nor godly cauſe: neglecting ẏ threatninges & frettinges of the wicked, ſaid, that god muſt be obeied more then man: to be brief, the more diligẽt he was in ſetting forth the true doctrine of Chriſt againſt the errors of Antichriſt: the more maliciouſly their fierceneſs increaſed. Inſomuch that when they did ſee their excommunication to be deſpiſed, & would not ſerue: they ceaſed not with priſon, with ſword and baniſhment to perſecute, till at length they had driuen both Valdus, and all the fauourers of his true preaching out of the city.

Wherupon came firſt their name, that they were called Valdenſes, or pauperes de Lugduno, not becauſe the would haue all things cõmon amongſt them: or that they profeſſing any wilfull pouerty, would imitate to liue as the Apoſtles did (as Siluius did falſly belie them) but becauſe they being thruſt out both of coũtrey and goods, were cõpelled to liue poorly, whether they would or no. And thus much touching the firſt occaſion and beginning of theſe men, and of the reſtoring and maintayning the true doctrine of Chriſts goſpell, agaynſt the proud proceedings of popiſh errors. Now concerning their articles: whiche I finde in order, and in number to be theſe.

The articles of Waldenſes.

Solis ſacris literis credendum eſſe in ijs, quæ ad ſalutem. &c. That is: Onely the holy Scripture is to be beleued in matters pertayning to ſaluation: and no mans writing, or man beſides.

2. All things to be contayned in holy Scripture neceſſary to ſaluation: and nothing to be admitted in religion, but what onely is commaunded in the word of God.

3. To be one alonely mediator. Other ſaintes in no wiſe to be made mediators, or to be inuocated.

4. To be no purgatory, but that all men either by Chriſt are iuſtified to life: or without Chriſt to be condemned: and beſides theſe two, neither any third or fourth place to be.

5. That all maſſes, namely ſuch as be ſong for the dead to be wicked, and to be abrogate.

6. All mens traditions to be reiected, at leaſt not to be reputed as neceſſary to ſaluation: and therefore this ſinging & ſuperfluous chaunting in the chauncell to be left: conſtrained & prefixed faſts, boũd to dayes & times: difference of meates: ſuch variety of degrees and orders of Prieſtes, friers, monkes, & nunnes: ſuperfluous holidayes: ſo many ſundry benedictions & hallowing of creatures: vowes peregrinations: with all the rabblement of rites & ceremonies brought in by man to be aboliſhed.

7. The ſupremacy of the Pope, vſurping aboue all churches, and eſpecially aboue all politick realmes, & gouernments, or for him to occupye or vſurpe the iuriſdiction of both the ſwordes to be denied neither that any degree is to be receiued in the Church, but onely Prieſts, Deacons, and Biſhops.

8. The communion vnder both kindes to be neceſſary to all people, according to the inſtitution of Chriſt.

9. Item, the church of Rome to be the very Babilon ſpoken of in the Apocalips: And the Pope to be the fountaine of all error, and the very Antichriſt.

*This article ſeemeth to be giuen vp of them in Bohemia lõg after, for indulgences came not in before Bonifacius. 8.

10.* The popes pardons and indulgences they reiect.

11. The mariage of Prieſtes, and of eccleſiaſticall perſons, to be godly and alſo neceſſary in the Church.

12. Such as heare the word of God, & haue a right faith, to be the right Church of Chriſt. And to this Church the keyes of the church to be geuen, to driue away wolues, & to inſtitute true paſtors, to preach the word, and to miniſter the Sacraments.

Theſe be the moſt principall articles of the Valdenſes albeit ſome there be, that adde moe to them: ſome agayne deuide the ſame into moe partes. But theſe be the principall to which the reſt be reduced.

The ſame Valdenſes at length exiled, were diſperſed in diuers & ſundry places: of whom many remayned long in Bohemia, which writing to theyr king Vladiſlaus, to purge themſelues agaynſt the ſlaunderous accuſations of one D. Auguſtine, gaue vp theyr confeſſion with an Apology of theyr chriſtian profeſſion: defending with ſtrong & learned argumẽts, ẏ ſame which now is receiued in moſt reformed churches: both concerning grace, fayth, charitye, hope, repentaunce, and workes of mercy. As for purgatory, they ſay, that Tho. Aquinas is the author thereof.

Thomas Aquin firſt finder of Purgatory.

Ex Orthuino Gratio.

Concerning the Supper of the Lord, their fayth was, that it was ordayned to be eaten, not to be ſhewed & worſhipped: for a memoriall, not for a ſacrifice: to ſerue for the preſẽt miniſtration, & not for reſeruation: to be receiued at the table, not be caryed out of the dores: according to the auncient vſe of the primitiue church, when they vſed to cõmunicate ſitting. And this they proue both by an old chronicle called Chronica geſtorum: as alſo by auncient Origen vpon the third booke of Moſes: bringing in his wordes which be theſe: prouing that this ſacramental bread ought not to be reſerued: Quicunque hunc panem cœnæ Chriſti, ſecunda, vel tertia die ſumpſerit, non benedicitur anima eius, ſed inquinabitur: Propterea Gabaonitæ, quia antiquos panes portauerũt ad filios Iſrael, oportuit eos ligna, ac aquam portare. &c. That is, whoſoeuer receiueth this bread of the Supper of Chriſt vpon the ſecond or iij. day after: his ſoule ſhall not be bleſſed but polluted. Therfore the Gabaonites, becauſe they brought olde bread to the children of Iſrael, it was enioyned them, to cary wood and water. &c.

Chronica Geſtorum.

Origines ſuper tertium librum Moſis.

The ſacramentall bread ought not to be kept or reſerued.

Part of the diſputatiõ betwene Doct. Auſten and Waldenſes.

D. Auſten (of whom mẽtion is made before) diſputing agaynſt them, about this matter of the holy Euchariſt, vrgeth them with this interrogation: whether it be the ſame Chriſt, (preſent in the Sacrament) which is preſent at the right hand of the father? If it be not the ſame Chriſt, how is it true in the Scripture, Vna fides, vnus Dominus noſter Ieſus Chriſtus. One fayth, one Lord Ieſus Chriſt? If it be the ſame Chriſt, thẽ how is he not to be honored and worſhipped here as well as there?

Dilemma. That is a captious queſtion, in conferring on both ſides an inconuenience.

The anſwere of the Waldenſes.

To this the Valdenſes aunſwere againe, and graunt that Chriſt is one, and the ſame with his naturall body in the ſacrament, which he is at the right hand of his Father: but not after the ſame exiſtence of his body. For ẏ exiſtence of his body in heauen is not perſonall and locall, to be aprehended by the fayth and ſpirit of men. In the ſacramẽt the exiſtence of his body is not perſonall or locall, to be aprehẽded or receiued of our bodies, after a perſonal or corporall maner, but after a ſacramẽtal maner: that is, where our bodies receiue the ſigne, & our ſpirit the thing inſignified. Moreouer in heauen the exiſtence of his body is dimenſiue, and complete with the full proportion and quãtity of the ſame body wherewith he aſcẽded: here the exiſtẽce of his complete body, with the full proportion, meaſure & ſtature therof: doth not, neither can ſtand in the ſacramẽt. Briefly, the exiſtence of his body in heauen is naturall not ſacramentall: that is, to be ſene, and not remembred: here it is ſacramentall, not naturall: that is, to be remembred, not to be ſene.

What it is to receiue after a ſacramentall maner.

Naturall.
Sacramentall.

An other Dilemma againſt Tranſubſtantiation.

That aunſwere being made to the captious propoſitiõ of D. Auguſtine. The Valdenſes (retorting the like interrogation to him againe) demaund of him to anſwere them in the like obiection: whether it be all on chriſt ſubſtãtially & naturally, which ſitteth in heauen: & which is vnder the formes of bread and wine, and in the receiuers of the Sacrament? If he graunt to be: Then they bid him ſay, ſeing Chriſt is as well in the ſacrament as in heauen, & as well in the receiuer as in the ſacrament, & all one Chriſt in ſubſtance & nature: why then is not the ſame Chriſt as well in the breſt of the receiuer to be worſhipped, as vnder the formes of bread and wine in the ſacramẽt? ſeing he is there after a more perfect maner in man, then in the ſacrament: for in the ſacrament he is but for a time, and not for the ſacraments ſake, but for the mans cauſe. In man he is not for the ſacraments cauſe: but for his owne, and that not for a ſeaſon but for euer: as it is written: Qui manducat hunc panem viuet in æternum, that is: he that eateth this breade ſhall liue for euer. &c.

Moreouer and beſides, ſeing trãſubſtantiation is the going of one ſubſtance into an other: they queſtion againe with him, whether the formes of bread and wine remayning, the ſubſtaũce thereof be chaũged into the whole perſon of our Lord Chriſt Ieſus: that is, both into his body, ſoule, and diuinitye: or not into the whole Chriſt? If he graunt the whole: Then ſay they, that is impoſſible (concerning the diuinity) both to nature and to our fayth, that any creature can be chaũged into the creator. If he ſay, the bread is chaunged into the body and ſoule of Chriſt, not to his diuinity: then he ſeperateth the natures in Chriſt. If he ſay into the body alone, and not the ſoule: then he ſeparateth the natures of the true manhood. &c. And ſo cannot be the ſame Chriſt that was betrayed for vs: for that he had both body & ſoule. To conclude, to what part ſoeuer he would aunſwere: this doctrine of tranſubſtantiation cannot be defended without great incõueniẽce of al ſides.

Eneas Syluius Bohemica hiſtoria de Valdẽſium dogmatibus.

Ouer and beſides, Eneas Syluius writing of theyr doctrine and aſſertions (perchaunce, as he foũd them, perchaunce making worſe of them, then they taught or ment) reporteth them after this maner, which I thought here to ſet out as it is in the Latin.

Romanum præſulem reliquis epiſcopis parem eſſe. Inter ſacerdotes, nullum diſcrimen. Præſbyterum non dignitatem ſed vitæ meritum efficere potiorem. In Engliſh.

The byſhop of Rome to be equall with other biſhops.

Amongſt prieſtes to be no difference of degree. No Prieſt to be reputed for any dignity of his order, but for the worthineſſe of his life.

The ſoules of men departed, either to enter into paine euerlaſting or euerlaſting ioy. No fire of Purgatory to be found. To pray for the dead to be vayne, and a thing onely found out for the lucre of Prieſtes.

The images of God (as of the Trinity and of ſaintes) to be aboliſhed. The halowing of water & palmes to be a mere ridicle. The religion of begging Fryars to be found out by the deuill. That prieſtes ſhould not incroch riches in this world, but rather follow pouerty, being content with their tythes, and mens deuotion. The preaching of the word to be free to all men called thereunto.

That no deadly ſinne is to be tollerate, for whatſoeuer reſpect of a greater commodity to inſue therupon. The cõfirmation which biſhops exerciſe with oyle, and extreme vnction: are not to be counted amongſt the ſacraments of the Churche. Auriculare confeſſion to be but a toy: to ſuffice for euery man to confeſſe himſelfe in his chamber, to God. Baptiſme ought to be miniſtred onely with pure water, without any mixture of halowed oyle. The temple of the Lord to be the wide world. The maieſty of God not to be reſtrayned more within the walles of temples, monaſtaries and chappelles, ſo that his grace is rather to be found in one place then in an other.

The Temple of the Lord that is, the proper habitatiõ wherin God moſt properly dwelleth and worketh.

That is, the verie place maketh not the miniſtration of holy thinges either more or leſſe holy.

Prieſtes apparell ornaments of the high aulter, veſtimentes, corporaces, chalices, patines, and other Churche plate to ſerue in no ſtead. For the difference and reſpect of the very place: to make no matter, where the prieſt doth conſecrate, or doth miniſter to them which do require. To be ſufficient to vſe onely the ſacramentall wordes without all other ſuperfluous ceremonies.

The ſuffrages of ſaintes reigning with Chriſt in heauen, to be craued in vayne, being not able to helpe vs. In ſaying or ſinging the houres and Mattens of the day, the time to be but loſt. A man ought to ceaſe from his labour no day, but onely vpon the Sonday.

The feaſtes and feſtiuals of ſaintes, ought to be reiected. Item, ſuch faſtes as be coacted and inioyned by the Church, haue no merite in them.

These aſſertions of the Waldenſes, being thus articled out by Eneas Siluius, I thought to geue them abroad in Engliſh as they are in Latine: to the intent, that as they are the leſſe to be doubted, being ſet out of a popes pen: ſo we may the better know both them hereby, what they were: and alſo vnderſtand how this doctrine now preached and taught in the Church, is no new doctrine, which here we ſee both taught and perſecuted almoſt 400. yeares agoe. And as I haue ſpoken hetherto ſufficiently concerning theyr doctrine: So now we will briefly ſomewhat touch, of the order of theyr life and conuerſation, as we finde it regiſtred in a certayne olde written booke of Inquiſition.

¶ Ex Inquiſitorio quodam libello.

De moribus et conſuetudine Valdenſium.

Modus autem Valdenſium talis eſt.&c. The whole proces commeth to this effect in Engliſh. The maner of the Waldenſes is this: They kneeling vpon their knees, leaning to ſome banke, or ſtay, doe continue in their prayers with ſilence, ſo long as a mã may ſay 30. or 40. times Pater noſter. And this they doe euery day with great reuerence, being amongeſt thẽſelues, & ſuch as be of their owne religion, & no ſtrangers with thẽ, both before dinner & after: likewiſe before ſupper and after: alſo what time they go to bed: and in the morning when they riſe, & at certain other times alſo, as well in yͤ day as in yͤ night. Itẽ, they vſe no other prayer but the prayer of yͤ Lord, & that without any Aue Maria and the Creed, which they affirme not to be put in for any prayer by Chriſt, but only by yͤ church of Rome. Albeit they haue and vſe yͤ ſeuẽ articles of fayth cõcerning the diuinity: and ſeuen articles concerning the humanity, and the x. commaundements, and ſeuen workes of mercy, which they haue compiled together in a cõpendious book, glorying much in the ſame, & therby offer themſelues, ready to anſwere any man for theyr fayth.

Their maner of grace before meate.

Their grace after meate.

Before they go to meate, they haue this grace, Benedicite Korieeleyſon. Chriſte eleyſon. Kyrieeleyſon. Pater noſter: which being ſayd, then the elder amongeſt them beginneth thus in their owne tongue: God which bleſſed the fiue barely loaues and two fiſhes in the deſert, before his diſciples, bleſſe this table & that is ſet vpon it, or ſhalbe ſet vpon it. In the name of the father, of the ſonne, and of the holy Ghoſt. Amen. And likewiſe agayne when they riſe from meat, the ſeniour geueth thankes: ſaying the wordes of the Apocalips: Bleſſing, and worſhip, and wiſedome, & thankeſgeuing, honor, vertue, and ſtrength to God alone for euer and euer, Amen. And addeth moreouer: God reward them in their boſoms, and be beneficiall to all them, that be beneficial to vs, and bleſſe vs. And the God which hath geuen vs corporall feeding, graunt vs his ſpirituall life, and God be with vs, and we alwayes with him. To which they anſwere agayn. Amẽ. And thus ſaying grace, they hold their hands vpward, looking vp to heauẽ. After their meat and grace ſayd, they teach and exhort amongeſt themſelues conferring together vpon their doctrine. &c.

Reinerius a olde inquiſitor againſt Waldenſes.

In their doctrine and teaching they were ſo diligent & painefull, that Reinerius a writer about their time, (an extreme enemy agaynſt them) in a long proces, wherin he deſcribeth their doctrine and teaching, teſtifieth: yͭ he heard of one which did know the party, that a certayne heretick (ſayth he) onely to turne a certaine perſon away from our faith, and to bring him to his, (in the night, and in yͤ winter time) ſwamme ouer the riuer called Ibis, to come to him and to teach him: moreouer ſo perfect they were then in the Scriptures, that the ſayd Reinerius ſayth, he did heare and ſee a man of the cõutry vnlettered, which could recite ouer the whole booke of Iob word by word, without booke: with diuers other, which had the whole new teſtament perfectly by hart.

Pius Videtur locus in laſciuos ſacerdotes.

The power and multitude of Waldenſes.

And although ſome of them, rather merely then vnſkilfully, expounded the wordes of 1. Ioan. Sui non receperunt eum, Swine did not receiue him: yet were they not ſo ignoraunt and voyd of learning, nor yet ſo few in number but that they did mightely preuayle. Inſomuch that Reinerius hath theſe wordes. Non erat qui eos impedire auderet propter potentiam & multitudinem fautorum ſuorum Inquiſitioni & examinationi ſæpe interfui. Et computatæ ſunt 40. Eccleſiæ, quæ hæreſi infectæ fuerunt: ac in vna parochia Cammach fuerunt decem eorum ſcholæ.&c. That is. There was none durſt ſtoppe them, for the power and multitude of their fauourers. I haue often bene at their inquiſition. & examination. And there were numbred 40. churches, infected with their hereſie, inſomuch that in one pariſh of cãmach, were x, open ſcholes of them. &c. Hæc ille.

Waldenſes in all other points ſound, but onely for holding againſt the church of Rome.

Ex Orthuino Gratio.

And the ſayde Reinerius, when hee hath ſayd all he can, in depraung and inpugning them: yet is driuen to confeſſe this of them, where he doth diſtinct their ſect frõ other ſectes and hath theſe wordes: Hæc verò Leoniſtarum ſecta magnam habet ſpeciem pietatis, eò quòd coram hominibus iuſtè viuant, & benè omnia de Deo credant, & omnes articulos, qui in ſymbolo continẽtur. Solam Romanam Eccleſiam blaſphemãt & oderũt. That is. This ſect of Leoniſtes, hath a great ſhew of holyneſſe: in that both they liue iuſtly before men and beleue all things well of God, and holde all the articles conteined in the Creed. Onely they blaſpheme yͤ Romiſh church, and hate it, &c.

Now to touch ſomewhat their perſecutiõs. After they were driuen out of Lions, they were ſcattered into diuers & ſundry places (the prouidence of God ſo diſpoſing) that the ſound of their doctrine might be heard abroad in the world: Some, as I ſayd, went to Bohemia. Many did flie into their prouinces of Fraunce. Some into Lombardy, other into other places, &c. But as the croſſe commonly foloweth the verity & ſincere preaching of Gods word: ſo neither could theſe be ſuffered to liue in reſt. There are yet to be ſeen, the conſultations of Lawiers, Archbiſhops and byſhops of Fraunce, as Narbonenſis, Arelatenſis, Aquẽſis and Albanenſis, deuiſed amongſt themſelues, and yet remayne in writing, for the aboliſhing, & extirping of theſe Waldenſes. written aboue 300. yeres agoe: wherby it appeareth, there was a great number in Fraunce.

The croſſe commonly foloweth the word.

Waldenſes perſecuted more then 300. yeares agoe by Antichriſt.

Beſides, there was a whole councell kept in Theolouſe about 355. yeares to fore, and all agaynſt theſe Waldenſes: The which alſo were condemned in an other cõcell at Rome before that.

What great perſecutions were rayſed vp agaynſt thẽ in Fraunce. by theſe 4. Archbiſhops before mentioned, it appeareth by their writings, whereof I will recite ſome of their words, which towardes the end be theſe: Quis enim eſt ſolus ille peregrinus, qui condemnationem hæreticorũ Valdenſium ignoret a longe retro annis factam, tam famoſam, tã publicam, tot & tantis laboribus, expenſis, & ſudoribus fidelium inſecutam, & tot mortibus ipſorum infidelium ſolemniter damnatorum, publiceq; punitorum tam fortiter ſigillatam. &c. That is: Who is ſuch a ſtraunger, that knoweth not the condemnation of Waldenſes the heretickes, done and paſt ſo many yeres ago: ſo famous, ſo publick, followed vpon ſo great labours, expences, and trauayle of the faythfull, and ſealed with ſo many deathes of theſe Infidelles, ſo ſolemnelye being condemned and openlye puniſhed. Whereby we may ſee perſecution to be no newe thing in the Churche of Chriſte, when Antechriſt ſo long before(euen 300.yeares) began to rage agaynſt theſe Waldēſes. In Bohemia likewiſe after that, the ſame called by the name of Thaborites(as Siluius recordeth) ſuffred no litle trouble. But neuer perſecution was ſtirred vp againſt them, or any other people more terrible, then was in theſe latter yeares in Fraunce by the French king, an. 1545. which lamentable ſtory is deſcribed in Sleidan: and hereafter in the proces of this booke, as we come to the order of yeares, ſhall be ſet forth (by the grace of Chriſt) more at large. In the which perſecution is declared in one towne Cabriera to be ſlayne by the Captayne of Sathan (Minerius) eight hūdred perſons at once, without reſpect of women or children of any age: Of whome 40. women (and moſt of them great with childe, thruſt into a barne and the windowes kept with pikes, and ſo fire ſet to them) were all conſumed. Beſides in a caue not farre from the towne Muſſium, to the number of xxv. perſons, with ſmoke and fire were the ſame time deſtroyed: At Merindolum, the ſame tyraunt (ſeing all the reſt were fled away, finding one yong man) cauſed him to be tyed to an Oliue tree, & to be deſtroyed with tormentes moſt cruelly: with much other perſecution as may appeare hereafter, in the hiſtory tranſlated out of Sleidan into Engliſh.

Antichriſt with whom he firſt begā his perſecution.

An horrible murther of Chriſts holy martyrs.

Minerius an horrible perſecutor.

A worthie ſtorie of Sibilla and Guido, in Ieruſalem.

Mention was made a little aboue of Amalrike king of Ieruſalẽ, which deſtroyed Babylon, ſo that it was neuer after to this day reſtored, but lyeth waſt and deſolate: wherein was fulfilled that, which in the Prophets in ſo many places was threatened to Babylõ before. This Amalrike had a ſonne named Baldwin, & a daughter called Sibilla. Baldwine from the beginning of his raigne was a Leoper, and had the falling ſickeneſſe, being not able for feebleneſſe of body (although valiaunt in hart and ſtomacke) to ſatiſfy that function.

Sibilla his ſiſter was firſt maried to one Willermus, Marques of Mõut Ferrat, by whom ſhe had a ſonne called alſo Balwinus. After him ſhe was maried to another huſband, named Guido de Liziniaco, Earle of Ioppe and of Aſcalon. Vpon this befell, that the foreſaid Baldwine the Leoper ſonne of Amalricus, being thus feeble & infirme, as is ſayd: called his nobles together with his mother & the Patriarche, declaring to thẽ his inability, and by the conſentes of them, committed the vnder gouernement of the City to Guido the huſband of Sibilla his ſiſter. But he being found inſufficiẽt or els not lucky in yͤ gouerning thereof: the office was tranſlated to another, named Raimundus Earle of Tripolis. In the meane time the Soldan with his Saraſins mightely preuayled agaynſt the Chriſtiãs, & ouerran the countrey of Paleſtina. In which meane time Baldwine the king departed. Whereby the kingdome fell next to Baldwinus the ſonne of Sibilla by her firſt huſband Willermus. The which Baldwinus being but fiue yeares olde, was put to cuſtody of Raimundus aforeſayd. Who alſo in his minority, before he came to his crowne, dyed: whereby the next ſucceſſion by diſſent fell to Sibilla, the wife of Guido aboue mentioned. To whom the pieres and nobles ioyning together in cõſell, offred to the ſayde Sibilla as to the lawfull heyre to the crowne, to be theyr Queene: with this condition, that ſhe ſhould ſequeſter from her by ſolemne deuorſement the foreſayd Guido her huſband. But ſhe refuſed the kingdõe offered to her on that condition: till at laſt, the Magiſtrats with the nobles ingenerall graunted vnto her, & by theyr othes confirmed the ſame, that whomeſoeuer ſhe woulde chooſe to be her huſband, all they would take and obey as theyr king. Alſo Guido her huſband with like petition among yͤ reſt, humbly requeſted her: that the kingdom not for his ſake, or for his priuate loſſe, might be deſtitute of gouernement. At length ſhe with teares conſenting to theyr entreaty was contented, and ſolemnely was crowned theyr Queene: who after the maner, agayne receiued theyr fidelity by theyr othe. Whereupon Guido without all hope both of wife and kingdome, departed home quietly to his owne. This done, the Queene aſſembling her ſtates and prelates together, entred talke with thẽ about the chooſing of the king, according to that which they had promiſed and ſworne vnto her: and to obey him as theyr king, whom ſhe would name to be her huſbande. Thus, while they were all in great expectation wayting euery man whome ſhe would nominate: The Queene with a loud voyce ſayd to Guido that ſtood amongſt them: Guido my Lord, I chooſe thee for my huſbãd, and yelding my ſelfe and my kingdome vnto you, openly I proteſt you to be the king. At theſe words al the aſſembly being amaſed, wondred that one ſimple woman ſo wiſely had beguiled ſo many wiſe men. And worthy no doubt was ſhe to be commended and extolled for her ſinguler vertue both of faythful chaſtity and high prudẽce: ſo tempering the matter that both ſhe obtayned to her huſband the kingdome, and retayned to her ſelfe agayne her huſband, whom ſhe ſo faythfully loued. an. 1186. As I haue hetherto deſcribed the publick acts of king Henry, ſo now I meane to touch ſomething of his priuat conditions. He was of meane ſtature, eloquent and learned, manly and bolde in chiualry. Fearefull of the mutability and chaunce of warre, more lamenting the death of his ſouldiars dead, thẽ louing them aliue, none more curteous & liberall for the obtayning of his purpoſe: in peace and tranquility none more rougher: ſtubberne agaynſt the ſtubberne: ſometimes mercifull to thoſe whom he had vanquiſhed: ſtraight to his houſeholde ſeruauntes, but liberall to ſtrãgers: publickly of publick thinges liberall, ſparing of his owne: whom once he tooke a diſpleaſure agaynſt, hardly or neuer would he receiue agayne to fauor: ſomewhat lauaſh of his tongue, a willing breaker of hys promiſe, a louer of his eaſe, but an oppreſſor of his nobility: a ſeuere reuenger and furtherer of iuſtice: variable of word, and crafty in his talke: an open adulterer: a nouriſher of diſcord amongſt his children. Moreouer the Papiſtes bearing him (for Thomas Beckets quarell & ſuch like, as may be gathered) no good will: terme him to be an aduerſary of the fayth, the maule and beetle of the church.

Alſo in the Chronicle intituled Scala mundi, I finde of him: that he followeth the ſteppes, maners and conditiõs of Henry the firſt his graũdfather in euery poynt. He preſerued firme peace, & executed ſtraight iuſtice through all his dominions. He loued maruellous well his forreſt: & agayne thoſe that were tranſgreſſors either to his crown or perſon, he moſt ſeuerely puniſhed.

The king admoniſhed to amende his life.

Sonday to be free from bying and ſelling.

Moreouer, in a certayne hiſtory intituled De regibus Angliæ, I finde that this king was ſondry times admoniſhed to reforme and amẽd his life. And firſt by one that was an olde man at the caſtle of Cardif in Wales, at that time of the yeare called Dominica in albis, the eight day after Eaſter. Where alſo, after that he had heard maſſe, and was going to take his horſe: there ſtood a certayne man by him, ſomewhat yelowiſh (his heare being rounded, leane, and illfauoured) hauing on a white coat, and being barefoote, looked vpon the king, and ſpake in this wiſe: good olde king. That done, thus he proceedeth. The king ſaluteth you and his bleſſed mother, Iohn Baptiſt, & Peter: ſtraightly charging you, that vpon the Sundayes throughout all your dominions there be no buying & ſelling or other ſeruile buſineſſe (thoſe onely except, which appertayne to the preparation of meat and drinke) which thing if thou ſhalt obſerue, whatſoeuer thou takeſt in hãd thou ſhalt happely finiſh and bring to paſſe. Then ſpake the king in French to the knight that held his horſe by the bridle: Aſke of this chourle whether he dreamed this or not. And in the meane while that the knight ſhould haue interpreted the kinges wordes and meſſage, he ſpake before, and ſaid. Whether this be a dreame or not, mark wel what day this is: for vnleſſe that thou do theſe things, and amend thy life: ſuch newes ſhalt thou heare within theſe 12. monethes, that will make thee lament and mourne, till thy dying day. And when theſe wordes were ſpoken the man vaniſhed out of his ſight. And within one yeare next after: Henry, Gawfride, and Richard his ſonnes, forſooke him their father, and took part with the Frenchking. The king of Scottes, the Earle of Cheſter, and Earle of Leciter, made an inſurrection agaynſt the king. Many other premonitions were geuen alſo to the king, but all theſe did he little eſteme. The ſecond which did admoniſh him was a certayne Iriſh man, geuing him certayne ſecret ſignes. And thirdly, a certayne knight of Fyndeſey, named Phillip de Eaſterby: ſayling with him ouer into Fraunce, declared vnto the king in Normandy ſeuen articles, which he ſhould amend. Which thing if he wold do, he ſhould raigne ſeuẽ yeares moſt honorably, and ſhould take the holy croſſe from his enemies: or els he, in yͤ fourth yeare ſhould dye in great ignominye. The 3. firſt thinges were theſe, which he at his coronation ſware to obſerue (that is) to defend the Church, to mayntayne good lawes, and to condemne no man to death without iudgement. The fourth was, for the reſtoring of inheritaũce wrongfully takẽ. The fift was in doing iuſtice without reward. The ſixt was of miniſters & officers wages and ſtipẽdes. The ſeuenth was of expelling the Iewes, leauing them ſome money to depart withal. But the king not amẽding his life, there roſe vp agaynſt him 3. ſtrong enemies, that is to ſay his three ſonnes with the Frenchking. But after that the king (forſooth) had gone a pilgrimage to the Martyrs tombe, barfoote: William the king of Scots, the Earles of Cheſter and Leceſter, were taken at Alnewick.

The ſecond and third admonition to the king to reforme his life.

Seuẽ things to be amended.

The kinges victory was falſely imputed to the cauſe of his pilgrimage.

The death K. Henry the 2.

In the 35. yeare of his raigne, being in the Caſtle of Chiuen in Normandy, he dyed: at whoſe death thoſe that were preſẽt, were ſo greedy of the ſpoyle, that they left the body of the king naked, and not ſo much could be foũd as a cloth to couer it: till that a Page comming in, and ſeing the king ſo ignominiouſly to lye, threw his cloke vpõ his nether partes, wherein (ſayth the author) was verified the ſurname, which from his youth he bare, being called Hẽry court Mantill.

¶ King Richard.

Anno. 1189. K. Richard crowned.

IN this yeare of the Lord aboue recited, which was 1189. King Richard the eldeſt ſonne of Henry 2. ſucceeding his Father, entred his crowne: at which time Pope Clement ſate at Rome, ſucceeding after Gregory which dyed a litle before with ſorrow for the loſſe of the holy croſſe.

The kinges reſtraint that no Iew ſhould enter the place nor Church during his coronation.

During the time of whoſe coronatiō it befell, that notwithſtanding the king the day before his coronation, and by publicke edict commaunded both the Iewes and their wiues not to preſume either to enter the church, or els his pallace, during the ſolemnization of his coronation amōgeſt his nobles and Barons: yet (whileſt the king was at dinner) the chiefetayne of the Iewes with diuers other of his Iewiſh affinity and ſuperſticious ſect, agaynſt the kings prohibition (together with other preaſe) entred the court gates. Wherat a chriſtian man being offēded, ſtroke one of them with his hand or fiſt, & bad him ſtand further from the court gate, as the king had geuen in commaundement: whoſe example others alſo following being diſpleaſed agaynſt the Iewes, offered them the like contumely. Other alſo, ſuppoſing that the king had ſo cōmaunded in deed (as vſing the authority of the king) fel vpō all the Iewes that ſtood by without the court gate. And firſt they bet them with theyr fiſtes: but afterward they tooke vp ſtones and ſuch other thinges, as they could get, and threw at them, and bet them therewith. And thus driuing them from the court gates, ſome of them they wounded, ſome they ſlew, and ſome they left for dead.

A Iewe through feare was baptized.

The Iewes in London ſlaine and their houſes ſet on fire.

There was amongſt this number of the Iewes, one which was called the bleſſed Iew of Yorke: which was ſo ſore wounded and beaten with the reſt, that for feare of his lyfe he ſayd he would become a chriſtian: and was in deed of Williā the Prior of the church of S. Mary of York baptiſed: whereby he eſcaped the great perill of death he was in, and the perſecutors hands. In the meane whyle, there was a great rumor ſpred throughout all the City of London, that the king had cōmaunded to deſtroy all the Iewes. Wherupon, as well the Citizens as innumerable people more, being aſſembled to ſee the kings coronation: armed themſelues and came together. The Iewes thus being (for the moſt part) ſlayn, the reſt fled into their houſes: where, for a time through the ſtrōg and ſure building of them, they were defēded. But at length, theyr houſes were ſet on fire, and they deſtroyed therein.

The ſmall regard of nobilitie had in tumults and inſurrectiōs.

A new chriſtian reuolteth to an olde Iewe.

An vnaduiſed anſwere of an Arch.

These thinges being declared to the king, whileſt he with his nobles and Barons were at dinner: he ſendeth immediatly Ranulph de Glanuile, the Lord high Stuard of England, with diuers other noble men to accompany him: that they might ſtay and reſtrayne theſe ſo bold enterpriſes of the Londiners, but all was in vayne. For in this ſo great a tumult, none there was that either regarded what the nobility ſayd, or els any whit reuerēced theyr perſonages: but rather with ſterne looks and threatning wordes, aduiſed them and that quickely to depart. Whereupon, they with good deliberation thinking it the beſt ſo to do, departed: the tumult and inſurrection continuing till the next daye. At which time alſo the king ſending certayne of his officers into the Citty, gaue them in commaundement to apprehend and preſent ſome ſuch as were the chiefeſt of the malefactours: of the which, three were condemned to be hanged, and ſo were. The one, for that he had robbed a Chriſtiās houſe in this tumult: and the other two, for that they fired the houſes to the greate daunger of the City. After this the king ſent for him that from a Iew was conuerted to Chriſtiannitye: and in the preſēce of thoſe that ſaw where he was baptiſed, the king aſked him whether he was become a Chriſtian or not. He aunſwering the king ſayd no: but to the intent he might eſcape death, he promiſed to do whatſoeuer the chriſtians would haue him. Then the king aſked the Archbiſhop of Caunterbury (other Archbiſhops and Byſhoppes being preſent) what were beſt to be done with him: who vnaduiſedly aunſwering ſaid: If he will not be a man of God, let him be a man of the deuill: and ſo reuolted he agayne to Iewdaiſme.

Ex Chron. Weſtm. cuius initium: Aeneas cum Aſcanio, &c.

Then the king ſent his writs to the ſhiriffes of euery country to enquire for the authors & ſtirrers of this outrage. Of whom 3. were hanged, diuers were impriſoned. So great was thē the hatred of Engliſhmen agaynſt the Iewes, that as ſoone as they began to be repulſed in the court the Londiners taking example thereof, fell vpon them, ſet theyr houſes on fyre, and ſpoyled theyr goodes. The country agayne following the example of the Londiners ſemblably did the like. And thus the yeare, which the Iewes tooke to be theyr Iubily, was to them a yeare of confuſion. In ſo much as in the city of Yorke yͤ Iewes obtayning the occupying of a certayne Caſtle for theyr preſeruation, and afterward not willing to reſtore it to the Chriſtians agayne, when they ſaw no other remedye but by force to be vanquiſhed, firſt they offered much mony for theyr liues: when that would not be taken, by the counſell of an olde Iew among them, euery one with a ſharpe razer cut an others throate, whereby a thouſand & fiue hundred of them were at that preſent deſtroyd. Neither was this plague of theyrs vndeſerued. For euerye yeare commonly theyr cuſtome was to get ſome chriſten mans childe from the parentes, and on good Fridaye to crucify him in deſpite of our religion. Ex chron. Weſtm.

King Richard after the death of his father, comming to remembraunce of himſelfe, and of his rebellion againſt hys father, ſought for abſolution of his treſpaſſe, and in part of ſatiſfaction for the ſame, agreed with Phillipp the French King about Eaſter next enſuing to take his voyage with him for the recouerye of Chriſtes patrimonye, which they called the holy land. Wherupon the ſayd king Richard immediatly after his coronation, to prepare himſelfe the better toward his iourny, ſet to ſale diuers of his manors. Wherof Godfrey Lucy then B. of Wint. bought a couple for 2. M. markes, to witte, Wergraue, and Melenge. The Abbot of Bury bought another for a M. markes, called Middleſale. Hugh Puſaz B. of Durhā, bought the Lordſhip of Seggesfield, or Sedberga with the wapintake, and all the appertenaunce thereto belonging. He bought alſo the Earledome of Northumberland. Whome when the king ſhould ſolemnize after the maner of ſecular Earles, merily with a mocking ieſt, loe (ſayd he) of an olde Byſhop I haue made a young Earle. Ouer and beſides, the King ſet out all that he had to ſale, woddes, caſtles, townſhips, Lordſhips, Earledoms, Baronages. &c. ordayning alſo diuers new Byſhops, & not without ſome aduauntage (as appeared) to his purſe: fayning moreouer, his olde ſeale to be loſt, that they which had landes to hold, might be driuen to renew their writinges agayne by the new ſeale, wherby great ſubſtaunce of mony was gayned.

The Deane and Treaſurer wold not ceaſe euenſong at the archbiſhops commandement

The next yeare then enſued, which was 1190 in the beginning of which yere, vpon Twelfe euen, fel a foule northren brawle, which turned welnere to a fray, betweene the Archbyſhop new elected of the Church of Yorke, and his company on the one ſide, and Henrye Deane of the ſayd Church, with his Catholicke partakers on the other ſide, vpon occaſion as followeth. Gaufridus or Geffray, ſonne to King Henry 2. and brother to King Richard, whom the King had elected a little before to the Archbyſhoprick of Yorke, vpon the euen of the Epiphany, which we call Twelfe day, was diſpoſed to heare Euēſong with all ſolemnity in the Cathedrall church, hauing with him Hamon the Chaunter, with diuers other Canons of the church. Who tarying ſomething long, belike in adourning and attyring himſelfe: in the mean while Henry the Deane, and Bucardus the treaſurer, diſdayning to tary his comming, with a bolde courage luſtilye began theyr holy Euenſong, with ſinging theyr Pſalmes, ruffling of deſcant, and mery piping of Organs. Thus this Catholicke Euenſōg with as much deuotion begon, as to gods high ſeruice proceeding, was now almoſt halfe complete, when as at lenth (they being in the midſt of theyr myrth) commeth in the new elect, with his trayne and gardeuaunce, all full of wrath and indignatiō, for that they durſt be ſo bolde, not wating for him to begin gods ſeruice, and ſo eftſoones commaunded the Quyre to ſtay & holde theyr peace. The Chaunter likewiſe, by vertue of his office, cōmaūdeth the ſame. But the Deane and Treaſurer on the other ſide willed them to proceed, and ſo the ſong on, and would not ſtint. Thus the one halfe crying agaynſt the other, the whole Quyre was in a roare, theyr ſinging was turned to ſcolding, theyr chaunting to chiding, and if in ſtead of the Organes they had had a Drumme, I doubt, they would haue ſolſede by the eares together.

The Archb. beginneth euenſong againe being halfe done before.

The Treaſurer putteth out the candels at euenſong.

The Popes Church can do nothing without candle light

The Deane and Church of York ſuſpended by the Archb. from diuine ſeruice.

At laſt, through the authority of the Archb. and of the Chaunter, the Queare began to ſurceaſe and geue ſilence. Then yͤ newe elect not contented with that had bene ſong before, with certayne of the Quire beganne the Euenſong new agayne. The Treaſurer vpō the ſame cauſed by vertue of his office, the candles to be put out. wherby yͤ euenſong hauing no power further to proceede, was ſtopped forthwith. For like as without the light and beames of the ſun there is nothing but darcknes in all the world: euen ſo you muſt vnderſtand, the Popes church can ſee to do nothing without candle light, albeit the ſun do ſhine neuer ſo cleare and bright. This being ſo the archb. thus diſapointed on euery ſide of his purpoſe, made a greeuous plaint, declaring to the clergy and to the people, what the Deane, and Treaſurer had done, and ſo vpon the ſame ſuſpended both them and the church from all diuine ſeruice, till they ſhould make to him due ſatiſfaction for their treſpaſſe.

The ſtoutnes of the Deane and Treaſurer in not ſubmitting them ſelues to Archb.

The people incenſed againſt the Deane of Yorke and his Canons.

Ex Chron. anonimo cui initium: Anno gratia.

The next day which was the day of Epiphany, when all the people of the City were aſſembled in the Cathedrall church (as theyr maner was, namely in ſuch feaſts) deuoutly to heare diuine ſeruice (as they call it) of the church, there was alſo preſent the Archb. and the Chaunter with the reſidue of the Clergy, loking when the Deane and Treaſurer would come and ſubmit themſelues, making ſatiſfaction for theyr crime. But they ſtill cōtinuing in their ſtoutnes, refuſed ſo to do, exclaiming & vttering contemptuous wordes agaynſt the Archb. & his partakers. which when the people heard, they in a great rage would haue fallē vpon them, but the Archb. would not ſuffer that. The Deane thē & his fellowes perceiuing yͤ ſtirr of the people for feare like prety men were fayne to flye, ſome to the tombe of S. william of Yorke, ſome ran to the Deanes houſe, & there ſhrowded themſelues: whom the Archb. then accurſed. And ſo for that day the people returned home without any ſeruice. Ex veteri Chronico manu ſcripto, cui initium: Anno gratiæ Milleſ.&c.

K. Richard prepareth toward his iourney.

William Biſhop of Ely the kings Chauncellor, & Hugh Byſh. of Durham made chiefe ouerſeers of the Realme in the kinges abſence.

William Byſhop of Ely made the popes Legate in England and Scotland.

After this King Richard preparing to ſet all thinges in an order before his going, committed the whole gouernement of the realme principally to william Biſhoppe of Ely his Chauncellor, & to Hugh B. of Durhā, whom he ordayned to be the chiefe Juſtice of all England in his abſence, the one to haue the cuſtody of the tower, with the ouerſight of all other parts of the land on this ſide of Humber: the other (which was yͤ B. of Durham) to haue charge vpon all other his dominions beyond Humber: Sending moreouer to Pope Clement in the behalfe of the foreſayd william B. of Ely, to be made the Popes Legate through all England and Scotland, which alſo was obtayned. Thus the B. being aduaunced in high authority, to furniſh the king toward his ſetting forth, prouideth out of euery city in England ij. Palfreys, and ij. ſumpters, & out of euery Abbey, one palfrey, and one ſumpter.

Captaines and Conſtables of the kinges nauie appointed.

The long contention between Baldwyn Arch. of Cant. and the Monks of Chriſtes Church.

Archbyſhops of Canterbury commonly were wont to worke the kinges of England much ſorrow.

Kings of England euer carefull about the chuſing of the Archbiſhop and wherefore.

Ex chron. Geruas.

Theſe thinges and other thus ſet in a ſtay, the king according to his former appointment, about the time of Eaſter, ſailed to Fraunce, where the French king and he conferring together, becauſe they could not make redy at that time of Eaſter, concluded to take a longer day, proroging their voyage till after midſommer. In which meane time yͤ king occupying himſelfe in redreſſing & ſtabliſhing ſuch things as further were to be ordred, there determined, that Gaufridus & John his brethrē ſhuld not enter into England in 3. yeres after his departure: Neuertheles he releaſed that band afterward to his brother John. Thē he appoynted the Captaynes & Conſtables ouer his nauy, & ſet lawes to be obſerued in his iourney vpon the ſeas. But eſpecially his care was to make vnity and concord betwene parties that were at variaunce, and to ſet them together at one. At which time the long contētion began alſo to be appeaſed which ſo many yeres had continued betwene Baldwinus Archb. of Cant. and his monkes of Chriſts church. The diſcourſe whereof, although it be ſomewhat tedious to be ſet forth at large being enough to make a whole tragedy, yet to yͤ intent yͤ age now preſent may ſee what great conflictes and diſquietnes, vpō what litle trifles hath bene ſtirred vp, what litle peace & vnity hath bene not onely in this church, but commōly in all other churches, vnder the popes catholicke regiment: I thought it labour not ill beſtowed, ſomewhat to intermeddle in opening to yͤ eyes of the Reader, the conſideration of this matter. wherein firſt is to be vnderſtood that the Archbiſhops of Cant. cōmonly being ſet vp by the pope, eſpecially ſince yͤ time of yͤ conqueſt, haue put the Kinges of this land to much ſorrow & trouble: as appeared by william Rufus & Lanfrāck, and alſo Anſelme. By Henry 1. and Anſelme, King Stephen & Theobald, Henry 2. & Becket. &c For which yͤ Kinges of this land haue vſed the more care & circumſpectiō, to haue ſuch Archbiſhops placed in that ſea, as either ſhould ſtand with them, or at leaſt ſhould not be agaynſt them.

Jeremy the Prior of Canter. appelleth to Pope Innocent.

Ieremie the Prior depoſed by the Archb.

Ieremie reſtored to his place againe by the Pope.

Conſilium Remenſem. 1140.

Now to the purpoſe of our matter entended. Firſt after Lanfrancus who was Archb. xx. yeares, the ſea ſtanding vacant v. yeares, ſucceded Anſelmus, & ſat 17. yeares. After whom the ſea ſtādyng vacant 4. yeres, ſucceded Radulphus, and continued 9. yeares. Then followed williā, who ſat 12. yeares, and dyed, an. 1137. After whom came Theobaldus in the time of king Stephen. This Theobaldus being no great fauourer of the monkiſh generatiō, fell out with Jeremias Prior of the houſe of Cant. for certaine cauſes betweene them: for which the Archb. taking ſtomack againſt the Prior, would lay the ſentence of interdiction againſt him. The Prior, ſeing that, to ſaue himſelf, made his appeale to Pope Innocent. The Archb. prouoked the more by that, depoſed him from the Priorſhip, and placed one walter in his room. Jeremias notwithſtāding making his complaint and appeal to Rome, obteined letters from the Pope to Henry B. of wint. being the popes Legate: by the vertue wherof, he againſt the hart of yͤ Archbiſhop was reſtored, and walter diſplaced. Neuertheles, the ſayd Jeremy not willing there to continue wͭ diſpleaſure of the Archb, ſhortly after of his owne accord, renoūced his Priority, and walter againe was receiued in hys ſtead. Not long after this followed the generall councel of Rhemes, an. 1140. To yͤ which councell Theobald cōtrary to the commaūdement of the king, would needs reſort, to ſhew his obedience to the pope, wherfore at his returning home again the king tooke ſuch diſpleaſure with him, that within a while after the Archbiſhop was driuen to voyde the realme, and flie into Fraūce: where he by cenſure of interdiction ſuſpended diuers churches, and religious houſes which refuſed to come to the councell, and alſo hearing how the king had ſeized vpon all his goods, he interdicted likewiſe all the kings lands, whatſoeuer belonged to the crown, ſo that the king in concluſion was fain to cōpound with him and fall to agreemēt, which was about the yere. 1148. Ex Geruaſio.

A friuolous ſtrife betwene Theobald Arch. and Silueſter Abbot of S. Auſtens about the place, in what church the Abbot ſhoulde take his conſecration.

Silueſter geeth vp to Rome.

After this in the yeare of our Lord 1151. after the death of Hugh Abbot of S. Auſtens in Cant. Silueſter was elected by the Couent to be their Abbot, in the raigne of K. Stephen. which Silueſter when he came to Theobald yͤ Archb. to make his profeſſion of ſubiction vnto him, and to receiue of him conſecration: the Archb. was contented, ſo that the Abbot would come to chriſtes church in Cant. and there make his profeſſion. But to this Silueſter in no caſe would graūt to take his conſecration there, but els in any other church whereſoeuer the Archbiſhop would, he was contented. wherunto when the Archbiſh. in no wiſe would agre, Silueſter making a great bag of mony, went to Rome, where he obtained of yͤ pope for mony, (for what can not money do at Rome?) letters that the Archbiſhos ſhould conſecrate the Abbot in his own church of S. Auſten, and alſo not exact of him any profeſſion of canonicall ſubiection. whereupon the Archb. was compelled againſt his will, to come to the Abbots Churche, and there at the popes commaundement to conſecrate him ſimply, & without any further profeſſion to be required.

The Monkes of Chriſtes church ſtriue againſt the Monkes of S. Auſtens in Cant. for the honour of their houſe.

Walter Prior of Chriſtes Church appealeth the Archb. vp to Rome.

Silueſter trudgeth againe to Rome.

Silueſter conſecrated Abbot in his own church whether the archb. wold or not.

Then walter Prior of Chriſtes Churche in Cant. ſeing that, and perceiuing how preiudiciall and derogatory the example therof would be to yͤ honor & maieſty of theyr church, through counſell of his brethren, went thither, and notwithſtanding the dores were ſtraitly watched & kept, yet by meanes he at laſt gate in. And as he ſaw the Archb. attired in his Pontificalibus, ready to miniſter conſecration to the Abbot, he ſtepped ſtraighte to the Archb. & eftſoones appealeth him vp to Rome, for the great iniury wrought againſt the church of Cant. forbidding him in the name of him to whom he appeled, not to proceed any further. And ſo this holy conſecration was for the preſēt time ſtayd. For the which Silueſter with a new purſe of mony was faine to trauell & trot againe to Rome. where he complaynyng of the Archb. and accuſing him of contempt to the Pope in not executing the commaundement ſent down, obteineth again new letters with more effectuall charge to the foreſayd Archb. that he without any profeſſion, ſimply ſhould geue to Silueſter his conſecration in his own church: omni occaſione & appellatione remota, all maner of ſtay or let, or appellation to the contrary notwithſtanding, and ſo in concluſion the Abbot contrary to whatſoeuer the Archb. & al the Monks of Cant. would do, was in his own church made Abbot, and had the victory for that time. Notwithſtanding the Archb. left not the matter ſo, but within fiue yeres after obtained of pope Adrian, that Silueſter ſhould make profeſſion of his obedience to the Archb. and ſo did. Ex Geruaſ.

In few yeres after this, dyed king Stephen. an. 1154. and after him Theobald the Archb. an. 1159. after he had ſit 23.yeres. After whom through thinſtant procurement of king Henry the 2. was placed Tho. Becket, the kinges Chaūcellor.an.1162. of whoſe ſturdy rebellion againſt the king, becauſe ſufficient hath bene ſayd before, it ſhall not need to make a double labor now about the ſame.

Petition of kyng Henry to the Prior of Cant. for chuſing of the Archb. & yet coulde not be granted.

Odo Prior of Cant.

After the death of Becket, much adoe there was betwene king Henry and Odo Prior of Cant. about the election of a new Archb. For the king ſeing the Realme ſo oftentimes encombred by thoſe Popiſh Archbiſhops, and fearing leaſt the Monkes of Cant. ſhould elect ſuch an other as would follow the ſteps of Tho. Becket, moſt hūbly with cappe in hand & curteſy of knee, deſired Odo the Prior, that at his requeſt, & for contentation of his minde, ſuch a one might be elected, whom he would appoint (appointing and naming a certayn biſhop, which was a good ſimple man after the kinges liking:) but the Prior diſſēblingly anſwering the king agayne, that he neither could nor would without ẏ conſent of his Couent geue promiſe to any man, in fine contrary to the kinges ſo humble requeſt, agreed to the electiō of an other, which was the prior of Douer, called Richard.an.1173. who continued in ẏ ſeat xi. yeares.

Richarde Prior of Douer elected Archb.of Cant. anno. 1173.

Another friuolous contention betweene Richard Arch. and Roger Abbot of the Auſten Monkes in Cant.about profeſsion of obedience.

And here was renewed againe the like variaunce betwene this Archbyſhop and Roger Abbot of the Auſten monkes in Canterbury as was before mētioned betwene Theobaldus, and Silueſter. For when the ſaid Roger after his election to be Abbot.muſt needes take his cōſecration at the Archbiſhops hand, neither would the Archbyſhop graūt it vnto him vnleſſe he made profeſſion of obediēce, according to the aūcient cuſtome of his predeceſſors: then Roger conſulting with his Monkes, firſt denyed ſo to do but at length was contēted, ſo it might not be done in the Archbiſhoppes Church, but in any other Churche where he would, vnder writing this clauſe withall: Saluis vtriuſq; Eccleſiæ priuilegijs, that is, ſauing the priuileges of both Churches. To this the Archbiſhop ſayd agayn, firſt that he ſhould make his due, & canonicall profeſſion & that he ſhould not come to him with writing or vnderwriting but ſhould ſay in his hart: Salue ſancta parens: or Salue feſta dies: not Saluis priuilegijs, or any ſuch like thing. Wherunto when the Auſten Monkes in no caſe would conſent, nor the Archbiſhop otherwiſe would graunt his benediction: Roger the Abbot was fayn to poſt to Rome, and there to bring the Archb. in hatred in the Court of Rome, made his Abbay tributary to Pope Alexander.

Roger Abbot of Saint Auſtens maketh his houſe tributary to pope Alexander. anno.1177.

The Pope well contented with this, not onely graunteth the Abbot his deſire, but alſo in cōtumely of the archbiſhop dubbeth the Abbot with all ſuch ornaments as to a Prelate apperteined, and ſo in the yeare.1178.ſent home the Abbot triumphantly with his ring and mitre, and other enſignes of victory, with letters alſo to the Archbiſhop inioyning him immediatly vpon the ſight thereof to conſecrate the Abbot in his own Church, & without making any profeſſion. Although with theſe letters the archbiſhop was ſhrewdly preſſed, yet notwithſtanding hys ſtout hart would not ſtoupe for this, but layd his appeale againſt the ſame: and ſo the conſecratiō for that time was ſuſpended.

Roger the Abbot returneth home with tryumph.

Appellation of the archb.

Concilium Lateranum ſub Alexandro Papa.

Roger Abbot of S.Auſt. trauayleth vp againe to Rome.

Then Roger for his more defence, getting the kings letters, trauailed vp the ſecond time to Rome, where greuouſly he complayned to Pope Alexander of the Archbyſhop. At the ſame time a generall councell was ſummoned to be kept at Lateran, where Richard ẏ foreſayd arch biſhop was alſo looked for amongſt other Biſhops to be preſent. Who thē came as farre as Paris, but being there, durſt approch no further, & ſo retyred home again. Whervpon the Pope being offended with his contēpt, without any more delay exalted the Abbot with his own conſecration, and inueſted him with all pompe and glory: howbeit prouiding before that the ſayd conſecration ſhould redoūd to no preiudice agaynſt the liberties of the mother church of Canterbury, and ſo vpon the ſame wrot to the Archbiſhop his letters of certificate, with this additiō annexed, Saluo iure & dignitate Cant. Eccleſiæ, that is to ſay, Sauing the liberties and dignity of the Church of Cant. &c.

Roger Abbot cōſecrated at Rome by the pope.

The houſe of the Auſtē Monkes in Cant.not able to ſhewe for them any deedes or writinges of antiquitie.

After the counſell ended, Roger the Abbot returneth home, although with an empty purſe, yet full of victory & triūph. The Archbiſhop againe thinking to worke ſome greuaunce to the Auſten Monkes, had procured in this meane time letters from Pope Alexander to the Biſhop of Durhā, and Abbot of S. Albons, that they ſhould cauſe the ſayd Roger Abbot of the Auſten monks, to ſhew vnto the Archbiſhop al ẏ old priuiledges of his houſe, which in deed being ſhewed ſeemed to be raſed, & new written, with Bulles of lead not after the maner nor ſtile of that age, nor pretending no ſuch antiquity as ſhould ſeeme to reach frō the time of Auſten, but rather newly coūterfeit.

Ex hiſt. Geruaſij.

Richard the Archb.going toward Rome to complaine of the Abbot, was ſtayed by the kyng.

All this notwithſtanding, the Abbot bearing him bold vpon the Popes fauour, ceaſed not ſtil to diſquiet & ouercrow the Archbiſhop by all wayes he could, in exempting all his Prieſtes and laymen belonging to his iuriſdiction, from the archb. obedience: forbidding alſo that none of his ſhould come to his Chapters or Sinods, nor to feare any ſentence of his curſe or excommunication. Wherupon the Archbiſhop about the month of Nouember the ſame yere ſayling ouer to Normandy where the king was, thought to take his iourney to the pope, to complain of the Abbot: but being ſtayd by the king was not ſuffered to paſſe any further, the king labouring what he could, to bring them to agreement, neuertheleſſe the Pope and his Romaines (ſayth my ſtory) Aurum & argentum magis quàm iuſticiam ſitientes, ſeditiones inter eos & litigia commouebant, that is, caring more for golde and ſiluer, then for iuſtice, ſtill ſtirred coales of ſedition and debate betweene them. Ex Hiſtoria Geruaſij.

A Catholicke practiſe of the Romiſh Court to ſet men together at variance, that they might get their mony.

Trouble in chuſing the Archb. of Cant, after the death of Richard.

The next yere after this inſuing, which was the yeare of our Lord 1184. dyed Richard the Archbiſhop aforeſaid: in the 38. yere of king Henry 2. After whoſe deceaſe much trouble happened about the election of a new Archb. betwene the king and monkes of Canterbury. And now to enter here into the ſtory of Baldwin aboue mētioned, firſt the king ſet to the monks, that they ſhould conſider with themſelues about the election of their Archbiſhop and to be ready agaynſt the time that he would ſend for them to the court. Vpon this the Couent gladly aſſembling together, agreed in themſelues vpon one, whom they thought chiefly to preferre, yet naming foure moe, that if the king would refuſe one, the other yet might ſtand. Now ẏ practiſe in the monkes was, firſt to keepe the election only in their owne handes, as much as they could. And ſecondly euer to geue the election either to ſome Prior or Monk of their own houſe, or to ſome Abbot or Biſhop, which ſome time had bene of theyr company. Wherby as much inconuenience and blind ſuperſtition was bred in the church of England: ſo the ſame diſliked both the king and the Byſhops not a litle.

Monkes of Cant. ſent for by king Henry.2.about chuſing of their Archbiſhop.

Monkes of Cant. partiall in chuſing their Archb.

Monks of Cant. againe ſent for to the kyng about their election.

As this paſt on, the king when he ſaw his time willed the monks of Canterbury, to be cited or ſent for, to vnderſtand what they had concluded in their election. Wherupō the Monkes ſent vp their Prior called Alanus, with certaine other Monks to Reding, where the king thē lay, about the moneth of Auguſt. Who at firſt were curteouſly entertained: but after the king had intelligēce whom they had nominated & elected: they were ſet home agayne with cold cheare, the king willing thē to pray better, and to aduiſe more earneſtly vpon the matter amongſt themſelues. Alanus the Prior, with his felowes thus departed, who comming home, in concluſion ſo concluded amongſt themſelues, that they would remitt no iote of their liberties to the king, without the popes conſent and knowledge. The king vnderſtanding hereof, ſent his Ambaſſadours likewiſe to the Pope, for the fortefying of his cauſe, being in ẏ mean time grieuouſly offēded with the Prior: ſaying: that he was proud & would make archbiſhop whom he liſted, and would be the ſecond Pope in England. &c.

Alanus Prior of Canterbury.

The king offended with the Prior & Monks of Canterbury.

The ſtubburnes of the Monkes againe the king.

The king ſendeth to Rome againſt the Monkes.

The kinges gentle wordes to the Monkes.

Not long after this, as theſe letters were ſent vp to Rome, the king ſent for Alanus the Prior, and moe of the monks, to come to him. Whom he entreateth, deſiring thē in gentle ſpeech, that they would ſhew ſo much gentlenes & fauor to him being their Lord & King as becōmeth hys frendes and ſubiects to doe, as to conferre with the Byſhops of the Realme about this matter, and to take ſome better councel, ſo as might redoūd to Gods glory, his honor, & wealth of the publicke ſtate, with other like words to the ſame effect.

To whom when ẏ Prior agayne had anſwered with thankes & due reuerence, according to the kinges requeſt, the Biſhops and Monks went to confer together about the matter. And firſt, the Biſhoppes marueled why the monks ſhould exclude them out of the election, ſeing they were profeſſed & Suffragans to the ſayd church of Canterbury: Neither is there any Prince, quoth the biſhop of Bathe, that will refuſe our counſell. There be ſome counſels, ſayd the Monkes, whereat you may be called: but as touching ẏ doing of this electiō, it pertaineth nothing vnto you further then to publiſh onely and denounce ẏ party whō we haue choſen, The biſhop of London then aſked, if they had already made any election. No election, ſayd ẏ Prior, as yet, but onely we haue denominate the perſons. Thē haue ye proceeded further, quoth he, thē ye ought, hauing a cōmaundement from the pope not to proceed without vs. And with that was brought forth the popes letter commaunding that within xl. dayes the biſhops of England and the Prior, & Couent of Canterbury ſhould elect Biſhops of England clayme to haue intereſt in the election of the Archb. of Cant.

The popes letters commaunding the Byſhops of the realme with the Prior and Couent to chuſe the Archb.

an able and fitte perſon to be their Archbiſhop. About the ſcanning of theſe letters was much a doe. The Byſhops ſayd, they were firſt named, & therfore ought to haue moſt intereſt in this election. The Mōks ſaid agayne, that they alſo were not excluded, and required to haue a tranſcript of the letter, wherof much doubt was made.

The king ſeparateth the Byſhops from the Monkes.

The Monkes will loſe no preeminence of their Church.

After long concertation, whē they could not agree, the king comming betwene them both, called away the Byſhops from the Monks, ſuppoſing by ſeparating the one from the other, to draw both parties to his ſentence. But that would not be, for the Monks ſtifly ſtāding to their liberties, would loſe no preeminēce of their church, ſtill alledging how by the auncient priuiledges of the church of Canterbury the Couent ſhould chooſe their Paſtor & Byſhop, and the Prior to publiſh and denoūce the perſō. The Byſhops again replied, that it was their right to appoint their Archbiſhop & Metropolitane, which were Biſhops and Suffraganes, and namely the byſhop of London alſo being Deane of the ſaide church of Canterbury. The king thē as vmpere betwene them, yet fauoring rather the ſide of the Biſhops, deſired them to agree together in peace. Whē that would not preuaile, he ſet the Lord Stuard, and other noble mē to entreat the Prior, to draw to ſome agrement: at leaſt to be contented with this forme of election, which was that the Biſhop of London or ſome other Biſhop ſhould declare the election in theſe wordes.

The forme of election of the Archb. ſet betweene the Byſhops and the Monks of Cant.

We Byſhoppes, and the Prior and Couent of Chriſtes Churche in Caunterbury, with the aſſent of our Lord our Kyng doe chooſe ſuche a perſon to be Archbiſhop.&c. or els thus, that the Prior ſhoulde pronounce forth the election in theſe wordes ſaying: The Byſhoppes of England and I Prior and the Couent of Caunterbury, with the aſſent of our Lord & King do chooſe ſuch a perſon.&c.

The Biſhops & Monks could not agree about the forme of election.

Upon this the Prior ſayd, he would conuent with his Couent. Who with much ado were contēt to graūt to the kinges deſire, but afterward being required to put downe yͤ ſame in writing, that they refuſed to do: yet notwithſtāding relented at laſt to the king. But when the Byſhops made excuſes for the abſēce of theyr felow Byſhops, ſo the matter for that time ſtayd. And the king ſending home the Monkes agayne to their houſe in peace, deferred that buſines to a further day, which was till yͤ firſt day of Decēber cōmaunding the Prior with his felowes the ſame day not to fayle but to be at London about the chooſing of yͤ Archbyſhop.

The election of the Archb. differred to the moneth of December, an. 1184

As the day prefixed came, the Prior with his company were alſo preſent, who geuing attendance all that day and the next day alſo following, ſo were driuen off till the third day after. At lēgth the Lord Stuard with other nobles of the realme, were ſent to them from the king, to declare, that where as the king before had deuided the biſhops frō the Monkes, that they both might haue theyr election by themſelues after the forme of a bill, which was put downe in writing: now the minde of the King was, that the Monks taking an other way, ſhould ioyne with the Byſhops, and ſo hauing the matter in talke together, ſhoulde proceed ioyntly in the election.

The kings meſſage to the Monkes of Can. to agree and ioyne with the Byſhops.

Agaynſt this, many things were alledged by the prior & his mates, complaining much vpon the biſhops, which ſayd that the Byſhops had euer holden with the kings agaynſt the liberties of their Church and Archbyſhops. As firſt they ſtood agaynſt Anſelme, for king William: Then agaynſt Theobalde for king Stephen: After that agaynſt Thomas Becket for king Henry: And after him did ſupplant the election of Richard their Archbyſhop: And now again went about to practiſe and worke againſt this their election preſent. &c. At laſt the Prior with his felows concluding, deſired they might ſpeake with the king himſelfe. Who eftſoones comming to them, willed them as good mē to be contented, and goe talke with the Byſhoppes about the election, promiſing that whō they agreed vpon, he alſo would graunt his aſſent to the ſame. To whom when the Prior agayne had obiected the writinges that before were made: truth it is ſayd the king, ſuch writings were made: but I neither may, nor will go agaynſt the councell of my realme: and therfore agree ſayd he, with my Biſhops and Abbots, and remember, that the voyce of the people is the voyce of God.

The kinges wordes to the monkes of Can.

The Monkes of Cant. compelled againſt their wylles to ioyne with the biſhops touching the election of the Archbiſhop.

Upon this the Prior with his Monkes ſeing no other remedy, went to the Byſhops to confer according to the kinges requeſt about the election. Who then were willed by the biſhops to nominate whom they would, & the Byſhops would likewiſe name theirs. So that whē the Prior with his cōplices had named three after their chooſing, the Biſhops ſaid they woulde nominate but one, & ſo did, which was the Biſhop of Worceſter: willing the Prior to go home, and to cōferre with his Couent about the ſame. To whom ſhortly after the Biſhops ſent certeine Prieſts to ſignify to the Couent, that they, according to the Popes letters, ſhould repayre to the Biſhops concerning the election of the Archbiſhop, alſo to declare moreouer to them, that the perſons whom they had named were good mē, but he whom they had nominated, was a more worthy man, whom they both had nominated & alſo would elect. The Monkes marueiling hereat, ſent two Monkes, with the Arcedeacon of Canterbury to the king.

This done, immediatly after the returne of the prieſts, the Biſhops cauſed all the bels of the city to be rong, and Te Deum to be ſong for the Archbiſhop new elect. Whereof when the two Monkes brought tidings to the Couent at Canterbury what was done at Londō, they were all in a marueilous dumpe. The king hearing this & perceiuing the ſtifnes of the monks, in all haſte ſēt meſſēgers to Caūterbury with gentle wordes to will the Prior to come to the king, & certify him of the purpoſe of his Monks. Unto whom the Prior eftſoones being come, declareth in the name of the whole Couēt, that in no caſe he nor yͤ Monks would neuer while yͤ world ſtood, agree to that election of the biſhops, vnles the king in his own perſō would come to Canterbury, and there openly before the whole Couēt, proteſt by his own month yͤ forſayd election to be nought and voyd: and ſo returning to London again openly likewiſe before yͤ Clergy & the people would repudiate and reiect the ſame: And furthermore that the partye alſo elected ſhould openly in the ſame place proteſt, & ſay, that he neither would nor ought to take that functiō vpon him, vnles he entred by the conſent of the Prior & Couent of canterbury: And all this to be done in the ſame place where the biſhops had made their election before & ſo peraduenture (ſayd they) at the kinges ſo earneſt ſute and requeſt, they would gratify his will & ratify the ſaid election with the voyces of theyr conſent. To make the ſtory ſhort, after great holde betwene the ſeculare Clergy on the one ſide, & the regular order on the other ſide, and after the kinges indignation agaynſt the Prior, and the ſwounding of the Prior before the king, at length the king to take vp yͤ matter, and to ſaue the Priors life was fayne to performe in hys owne perſon all theſe conditions aboue preſcribed by the Monkes. Baldwine Biſhop of Worceſter elected Archb. of Cant. an 1184.

And thus haue ye heard the tradgicall election of yͤ biſhop of Worceſter, named Baldwinus made Archbiſhop of Cant. Now what a troubleſome time the ſayd Baldwin had with the Monks, in gouerning yͤ church of Cāt. here followeth likewiſe not vnworthy to be conſidered.

The troubles betwene Baldwine Archbiſhop of Caunterbury and, the Monkes of the ſame Church.

The gre trouble a contentio betweene Baldwi Archb.& Monkes o Cant.

IN the firſt yeare the Archbiſhop ſhewed himſelfe frendly and louing to the Monks: the next yere following he began to appeare ſomewhat rough vnto them. The maner then was of the houſe of Chriſtes Church toward the time of the Natiuitye and of Eaſter, to receiue certayne preſentes or giftes of theyr fermers or tenauntes, whiche the cellarer ſhould take & lay vp. Thoſe preſents the archbiſhop began firſt to intercept from the Monkes, & to beſtow them vpon his ſeculare Clerkes. After this he toke three Churches or benefices (which the Monkes claymed as proper to themſelues) and placed in them 3. of his chaplaines. After this he encroched to his handes certein tenements, reuenewes & victuall belōging before to yͤ monks (as they ſayd) and committed the cuſtody therof to certayn of his own Clerkes and houſholde ſeruaunts.

Reconcilia tiō betwe the Archb. and the Monkes, which did not lōg hold

The monkes which had borne ſo much with the archbiſhop before ſeing this, could forbeare him no longer, but needes would make their appeale againſt him. The archbiſhop not much regarding yͭ, waxed thereby more fierce agaynſt them, inſomuch that ſuch fermes and tenements, as he before had let alone, now he receiued to his own occupying: wͭ many other greuaunces, wherwith he greatly vexed the Monkes, ſo that 3. Abbots were fayne to come and reconcile the Archbiſhop and the Monkes. Which reconciliatiō was this, yͭ the Monks ſhould let fall their appeale, and the archbiſhop ſhould reſtore again to thē their fermes and tenementes. But as touching the benefices & the preſentes, the archbiſhop ſtill kept thē in his hands for a further triall of their obedience and patience. Neuertheleſſe ſome there were of the auncient monkes, which in no caſe would geue ouer the foreſayd appeale before the archbiſhop made a full reſtitution of all together.

After this agremēt, ſuch as it was, betwene yͤ Monks and him, the archbiſhop ſoon after ſent vp to Rome one of his chaplaines (to whō he had geuen one of the benefices afore mētioned) partly for cōfirmatiō of his benefice, partly alſo to obtein licence for yͤ archbiſhop to build a church, which he entended to erect of ſecular Prieſts neare to the town of Canterbury. which being obteined of the Pope, the archbiſhop not a litle glad thereof, began now more & more to waxe fierce againſt the monks, not only in taking from them their churches & oblations, but alſo in aggrauating the whole ſtate of their houſe, which he entēded either to ſubuert, or greatly to diminiſh, to pluck down the pride & ſtubbernes of the Monks. wherfore taking with him certaine other biſhops (whom he knew bare no good will to yͤ Monkiſh generatiō) he wēt to yͤ king, declaring how he had a good purpoſe in his minde, to erect a new & a ſolemne Church in the honor of S. Tho. of Cant. of ſecular prieſts or Canons, and therfore deſired of the king, to haue his fauorable licence to the ſame. The king right well perceiuing the purpoſe of the archbiſhop whether it tended: as to yͤ brideling of the ſtifnecked monks, was the more willing to geue aſſent, if he were not alſo the chiefe worker of that matter himſelfe.

The purpoſe of the archb. in building his newe Church at Cant.

The intent of the archbiſhop in planting of that new church was to found there diuers prebends, and to make both the king and euery Biſhop being his Suffragans, prebendaries therof, ſo that euery one of them ſhould cōfer one prebendſhip to the ſame foūdation, minding there to conſecrate Biſhops, to make his Chriſmatory, to celebrate his Sinodes, and to adminiſter all other things belonging to the function of his Sea, and the ſame to be called Hakington Church. The Monkes not ignorant how the Archb. priuily intended the deſolation and ſubuerſion of theyr houſe & liberties, conſulting vpon the matter, determined at length among themſelues to appeale to yͤ ſea of Rome, namely for theſe 3. cauſes againſt the Archbiſh: Firſt for ſpoyling them of their gifts & oblations: Secōdly, for depriuing them of their Churches & benefices: And thirdly for erecting a new foūdation of ſecular Canons to the derogation & ouerthrow to their religious order geuing admonition to the archb. before by their Monks ſet vnto him of this theyr appellation. To whom the Archb. anſwered, that the foundation which he went about, was to no derogation, but rather to the fortification and honor of their houſe. who anſwered agayne that it was & could not otherwiſe be, but to theyr ſubuerſiō. And what ſhould let me then (ſayd the Archb.) but I may builde in myne owne ground what I will? No (ſayd they) no ground of yours, but your ground is our groūd, as all other things that you haue, by right are ours, for ſomuch as you haue them not of your ſelfe, but of the church & for the churches cauſe: all which things haue bene geuē neither to you, nor to the archbiſhops, but to the church of Chriſt: and therefore (ſaid they) al ſuch as appertain vnto vs inwardly and outwardly, with the perſons alſo, & the whole ſtate of our church we ſubmit vnder the popes protectiō: & now here make our appeal to the Sea Apoſtolick, aſſigning alſo the terme when to proſecute the ſame.

Appellation agaynſt the Archb.

The Archbiſhop receiuing this appellation, & ſaying that he would anſwere to the ſame either by himſelf or by his reſponſall, ſo within 3. dayes after, which was the 16. of December, he came to Canterbury: where the Monks vnderſtanding how he was in mind to place new ſecular Prieſts in the church of S. Stephen, where the Monkes had ſerued before, came to the Church to ſtoppe the proceding of the archbiſhop by way of appeal. wherof the archbiſhop hauing warning before, deferred that matter till yͤ next day after. On which day the Monks again being ſet by Honorius the Prior into the Church, charged yͤ Archbiſhop in the name of almighty God, & by vertue of theyr appeale made to the Apoſtolick Sea, to ſurceaſe thoſe his doinges, forbidding alſo the Parſon of the Church in no wiſe to ſuffer thoſe ſecular Clerks to be admitted into the Church. All which yet notwithſtanding the Archb. procedeth in his buſineſſe. And firſt placing in his Clerkes he ſuſpendeth the Prior from his adminiſtration. Thē he adiureth the Porters of the gate vpon theyr othe to let none of yͤ Monks paſſe out of the houſe without his licēce. The Monks likewiſe he cōmaūded by vertue of obediēce, not to ſtray any where abroad without his leaue. And further more one of the foreſayd Monks, which ſerued the appeal againſt him, he vtterly baniſhed from that Couent. Vpon this, the day next folowing Honorius the Prior truſting (ſayth the ſtory) on God, and S. Thomas, tooke his way to Rome, ſent in commiſſion by the Couent, to proſecute the appeale agaynſt the Archbiſhop.

An other garboile betwene the monkes of Cant. & their Archb.

In this meane ſeaſon a new iar began betwene yͤ ſaid Archb. and the Monkes, about their rents and reuenues, which the Archb. would haue committed to the receiuing & keeping of 3. Monkes, but the Supprior Geffray, with the Couent, in no caſe would ſuffer that: wherabout there was a foule ſtirre. The Archb. crauing the ayd of the king firſt had 3. Biſhops ſent downe to him, of Couentry, Norwich and worceſter. who being inſtant with the Monks to ſubmitte their cauſe into the kinges handes, like as the Archb. had done, they vtterly refuſed it, eſpecially ſeing they had already referred the whole ſtate of their cauſe to yͤ determinatiō of yͤ Apoſtolicall ſea. The king ſeing no other remedy came himſelfe with the Archb. into the chapter houſe, where he commaunded firſt the doors to be kept faſt, that none ſhould enter but which by name were called for. Amongſt whō were two Biſhops, to wit, of Norwich, and Durham, and one Petrus Bleſenſis a learned man (whoſe Epiſtles be yet extant in Libraries) a chiefe worker in this matter againſt the Monkes. Then was called in Geffrey the Supprior, with a few other Monks whom he brought with him. The king then firſt talking with the Archb. and his companye, & afterward with the Monkes, labored to entreat them that they would let fall their appeal, and ſo ſtand to the arbitremēt of him and of the Biſhops, concerning the cauſe which was betwene yͤ Archb. and them in trauers.

The k. commeth into the Chapter of Cant.

Petrus Bleſenſis a great doer againſt the Monkes.

The kyng entreateth peace betweene the Monkes and the Archb.

To this the Monkes anſwered, that theſe were good wordes, but ſerued not for that time, for ſomuch as theyr cauſe was alredy tranſlated to the court of Rome, & now was preſently in hearing before the Popes holineſſe: and therfore they could not, ne would that iniury to their lord pope, to refuſe him, and to put the matter to the iudgemēt of any other. Then was it required of the Monkes, that they would put the matter in comprimiſe, in caſe the prior would conſent thereto, vpon this entent, that if the Prior conſented and the Monks not, then ſhould they runne in contempt and diſobedience: or if the Monkes would conſent, and the Prior not, then ſhould the Prior be excluded the Realme. The wily Monkes being not vnprouided of this ſubtlety, made theyr anſwere, that ſeing they had ſent their prior forth in their commiſſion, it ſtood not with their honeſty, to geue any determinate conſēt, without yͤ knowledge and before the returne of the ſayd Prior, vnleſſe the Archb. firſt would promiſe to make full reſtitution of all yͭ he had wrongfully wraſted from thē. when the king could get no other anſwere of the Monks, neither could moue the Archb. to releaſe the ſentence of their ſuſpenſion, vnles they would confeſſe and knowledge theyr fault, he ſo parting from them paſſed ouer into Fraunce.

The Monkes deny to put their matter from the Pope to the kings hearing.

The Monkes excuſe to the kyng.

Not long after this, came a meſſenger frō Rome, bringing letters from Pope Vrbanus to the Archb. wherin yͤ pope conſidering & tendering (as he ſayd) the enorme greuaunces done againſt the Monkes, ſtraightly enioined & commaunded him, within x. dayes after yͤ receiuing thereof, to releaſe the ſentence of his ſuſpenſion againſt yͤ Prior and other of the ſayd Couent, and alſo to retract & reſtore agayne to the Monkes whatſoeuer he plucked from them ſince the time of their appeale firſt made. who in caſe he ſhould deny, or forſlack the doing hereof, commiſſion was geuen to 3. Abbots, of Battaile, of Feuerſham, of S. Auſtens, with ample authority to performe the ſame. &c. The Archb. receiuing theſe letters brought to him by a Monk of the foreſayd houſe, firſt made his excuſe, that the Pope was miſinformed. But the Monkes not contented wyth that excuſe, when they would needs know what anſwere he would make to yͤ Popes nuncio: his anſwere was that he had yet x. dayes geuen him of the pope. In which mean time the Archb. went to Lōdon and there in the church of S. Paul. conſecrated his holy oyle & creame (making one of the Popes 7. Sacraments) which was grieuouſly takē in the church of Cant. At laſt, the x. daies being ended whē the Archb. refuſed to accōpliſh that was in the popes letter enioyned him, the 3. Abbots aforeſayd to execute the Popes commaundement, came at their day aſſigned, to Cant. and there aſſoyled all ſuch as the Archb. before had ſuſpēded, and in the end certified pope Vrbane by letters, what they had done.

The archb. meſſengers come to the Popes court

Letters of the kyng, the archb. and of other Biſhops to the Pope.

By this time Petrus Bleſenſis, with other meſſengers of the Archb. ſeing Honorius the Prior to be gone from the court to Fraunce, reſorted to the court of Rome, bringing with them letters of credite from the king, from the Archb. & alſo frõ other Biſhops of the realme: but the pope reading onely the kings letters & the archbiſhops, ẏ reſidue he caſt into a window by, ſaying he would read thẽ at further leiſure. Thẽ the pope geuing audience in his cõſiſtory to heare their cauſe: firſt came in Petrus Bleſenſis with the agents of the Archb. exhibiting their letters and propounding their requeſts to the Pope, which were that reſtitution ſhould be made by the Monkes to the Archb. wherin they had iniuried him: Itẽ that the thinges which had bene graunted before to the Prior in the Court, might be called in againe. Thirdly, that the archb. might haue licence to proceed in building his Colledge of Canons. &c. After this was called in M. Pilleus, the attorney for the Monkes of Cant. who alledging many great thinges againſt the archb. for his contempt and diſobedience to the popes precepts, required that he rather ſhould make reſtitution to the Monks for his iniuries done to them: & alſo that his new foundation of ſecular canons, tending to the ouerthrow of the conuentuall Church of Cant. ſhould be vtterly raſed and throwne down to the ground. Thus betweene theſe two parties pleing & repleing one againſt ẏ other, much hard hold there was. But in concluſiõ for al ẏ kings letters, & for all that the Archb. and Biſhops could do, the matter wẽt on the Monks ſide. So that there was no remedy, but the pope would nedes haue ẏ archbiſhops new building to come down, and the Monks to be reſtored agayne to their full poſſeſſions. The executiõ whereof was committed to the 3. Abbottes aforeſayd, to witte, of Battail, of Feuerſham, of S. Auſtens in Cant. & to Geffrey Supprior of Cant.

And likewiſe the 3. Abbots in the kings name, were commaunded in no wiſe to execute the popes commaundement agaynſt the archb. Not long after this, the Archb. tooke ſhipping at Douer, and went ouer to the king, where he ordeyned three principall officers ouer the Monkes of Chriſts Church: the Sacriſt, the Cellarer and Chamberlaine, contrary to the will of the Couent, with other greuances mo: wherby the Monks were not a little offended so that vpon the ſame, they made a new appellation to the Pope. Whervpon pope Vrbane, by the ſetting on of Honorius the prior, who was now come agayn to the court, wrote to him another letter after a ſharper and more vehement ſort, to the effect as followeth.

In that we haue borne with your brotherhood hitherto, and haue not proceeded in ſuch grieuous maner agaynſt you, as wee might, although being thereto greatly prouoked, the chiefeſt cauſe was this, that we ſuppoſed your hart would haue relented from the oppreſſion of the conuentuall church of Cant. committed vnto you, if not for our reuerence, which you ſeeme to haue contemned more then became you, yet at leaſt for feare of Gods iudgemẽt. For well we hoped, our conſcience perſwading vs to the ſame, that after you had obteined that high ſtate & dignity in the church of England, you would haue bene an example to other of obedience and reuerence to be geuen to the ſea Apoſtolick, of all Eccleſiaſticall perſons. Wherfore at the firſt beginning both of our and alſo of your promotion we did not ſpare to aduaunce and honor you as we haue done few other beſides, thinking no leſſe, but that we had found a faithfull frend of the church, for our honor. Wherein we perceiue now (which maketh vs not a litle to maruell) our expectation greatly deceiued. And whome we well truſted to be a ſure ſtay for the maintenaunce of our eſtate, him now we finde a perſecuter agaynſt vs in our members.

Note how the Pope ſtand all vp on their ho nour.

The Pope expectation deceaued in the Archb. of Cant.

For where as we ſondry times haue written to you in the behalfe of our brethren, and the church committed to your charge, that you ſhould deſiſt from diſquieting them, and not to vexe or diſturbe their liberties, at leaſt for reuerence of vs: you not onely in this, but in other thinges moe (as commonly is reported of you in all places) ſetting at light our letters and appellations made to the Apoſtolicall Sea, what you haue wrought agaynſt them after their ſo manifolde appellations layd vnto vs, and our inhibitions agayn vnto you, we are aſhamed to vtter. But reuolue and conſider in your minde, if ye haue well done, and aduiſe in your owne conſcience what you haue done. We for our part becauſe we may ne ought not with deafe eares to paſſe ouer the clamours of the brethren, and ſuch contempt of the Apoſtolick Sea, although our biddings and warninges geuen to you ſeeme to be all in vayne, yet notwithſtanding we ſend our mandates agayne to your brotherhood, in theſe Apoſtolicall writinges, diſtrictly, and in vertue of obedience commaunding you, that whether ye be preſent in your Church, or abſent, all that notwithſtanding, whatſoeuer you haue done in building of your Chappell (which you to the deſtruction of the Monaſtery of Cant. haue erected) after the time of their appeale made to vs or our inhibition ſent to you, you fayle not of your proper coſtes and charges to demoliſh, vndoing agayne, and making voyde, whatſoeuer ye haue begon and innouated concerning the inſtitution of the canons, and other things belonging to the erection of the ſayd Chappell: accounting moreouer and reputing the place where the Chappell was, to be accuſed and prophane: and alſo that all ſuch whoſoeuer haue celebrated in the ſame place, ſhall ſtand ſuſpended, till the time they appeare before our preſence: Commaunding furthermore, that all thoſe Monkes whom you haue preſumed to remoue from their office or to excommunicate, ſince the tyme of their appeale made, you ſhall reſtore and aſſoyle agayne, rendring alſo and reſtoring all ſuch farmes, manors, tenementes, and oblations, as you after their appeale made, haue inueigled from them: And finally that you innouate nothing touching the ſtate of that Monaſtery, during the time of this controuerſye depending before vs. Geuing you to vnderſtand, that in caſe you ſhall continue in your ſtubberneſſe and rebellion vpon this preſent warning, or differre the execution of this precept 30. dayes after the receiuing herof, we ſhall appoint others to execute the ſame, inioyning alſo your Suffraganes, that as you ſhall ſhew your ſelfe diſobedient and rebelling to vs: ſo they all ſhall refuſe likewiſe to geue any obedience or reuerence vnto you. &c.

In the which yere, and about the which month, Baldwinus king of Ieruſalem was taken with many noble men of Saladine the Saracen: and Ieruſalem loſt, after it had bene in the poſſeſſion of the Chriſtians, and ſo continued the ſpace of 88. yeres, & 80. dayes, from the time that Godfridus Bolonius did firſt win it from the Infidels.

Baldwine king of Ieruſalẽ with many noble taken of the Saracens, & the citie wonne.

After the receiuing of thoſe letters of pope Vrbane aboue ſpecified, both the king and archb. with all ẏ biſhops of ẏ realme wer marueilouſly quailed, glad now to pleaſe, and ſpeake fayre to the Monks, promiſing al things to be done and reſtored to them after the beſt ſort. Neither was the king now and Archb. ſo ſubmiſſe: but the Monkes on the other ſide, were as brag and iocant, being fully aſſured that all now was their own. In the narratiõ of which hiſtory (as it is ſet in Geruaſius at large) this we haue to note by the way in what feare & thraldome kings in thoſe daies were vnder the Pope, who could not be maiſters ouer their owne ſubiectes, but ẏ euery pild Monke, or pelting Prior, vpon vertue of theyr appeale to the Court of Rome, & making theyr houſe tributary to the Pope, was

The miſerable ſubiection of kings vnder the Pope to be noted.

Calypha is the high Prieſt of the Saracens, ſitting in Damaſcus, vnto whom all the Sultans were ſubiect, as our princes now are to the Pope.

It followeth then in the ſtory of theſe Monkes, that as they were thus in the midſt of theyr ioy and iolity, ſodenly commeth newes of the death of Pope Vrbane their great Calypha, and alſo how that Gregory 8. was placed in his roome, who was a ſpeciall frend & fauourer of the archb. which as it did greatly encourage the king and the Archb. ſo the Monkes on the other ſide were as much diſcomforted, ſo that now all was turned vpſide down. For wheras the king and the archb. before thought they had loſt all, & were glad to compoũd with the monks, and to ſeek their fauour: now were the Monkes an the contrary ſide fayne to crouch to the king, and glad to haue a good coũtenance, who thẽ reſorting to him, and finding him altered both in word and geſture, deſired he would confirme & graũt that which of late before he had promiſed. To whom it was aũſwered againe by the king, that ſeing the archb. had graũted to them their Sacriſt, their Chamberlain, & their Celerar, they ſhould haue no more reſtored of him, neither would he ſuffer the liberties and priuiledges of the archb. to be empayred or take any wrong. And as touching the new Chappell of S. Thomas (ſayd he) whereaboutes ye ſtriue ſo long, with the Canonſhips and other buildings, belonging thereto, the ſame I receiue into my handes, ſo that none ſhall haue any thing to doe therein but my ſelfe. &c. In like maner of the archb. ſuch an other like aũſwere they receiued, & of the biſhops little better. So ẏ monkes ſent away with a flee in their eare, went home agayne out of Normandy vnto their Celle.

The kinges anſwere to the monkes of Cant.

Nowe the Archb. hauing the Monkes where as hee would, wrought them much greuance, but that continued not very long. For within two monthes after & leſſe, died pope Gregory 8. about the 16. day of December folowing. After whom ſucceded Pope Clement 3. who folowing the ſteps of Vrbane, bent all hys power with the Monkes againſt the Archb. ſending diuers precepts and mandates in the yere next following, which was 1188. with an Imperious letter, willing & commanding him to deſiſt from his oppreſſion of the monkes, & to throw downe his new chappel. wherupon the archb. made his appeale and minded to go to Rome: but was called back of the king, being ready to ſaile ouer. In the which yere Honorius the prior died at Rome of the plague, which was ſome help & comfort to the archb. For whom the archb. made Roger Noris Prior, againſt the wils of the Couent. After this about the latter end of the ſame yere, Pope Clement ſent downe his Legate called Radulfus a Cardinal, to Cant. with an other letter more ſharpely written to the ſame effect vnto the Archb. Furthermore, in the yeare next after, which was 1189. he wrote alſo the thirde letter to him. In the which yeare alſo died king Henry 2. After whome ſucceeded king Richarde his ſonne, who ioyning likewiſe with the Archbyſhop, toke his part ſtrongly agaynſt the ſayde Monkes. At laſt, after much a do on both partes, and after great diſturbance, and impriſoning diuers of the Monkes, king Richard preparing his viage toward Ieruſalem, and ſtudying firſt to ſet peace betwene them, conſulted and agreed with the Biſhops and Abbots about a finall concorde in this matter, betweene the Archb. and monkes of Cant. which at length on both partes was made, vpon theſe cõuentions as follow.

Agreement betweene the Archb. and Monkes of Cant. vpon what conditions.

1. Firſt, that Roger Noris ſhould be depoſed, whom the Archbiſhop had made Prior againſt their willes. whome the king then at the requeſt of the Archb. promoted to be Abbot of Euſham. 2. Item, that the Archbiſhop ſhoulde plucke down his chappel, which he builded in ẏ ſuburbes of Cant. againſt the mindes of the Monkes. 3. Item, that the foreſaid monks ſhould make profeſſion of their obedience and ſubiection to the Archb. as they had done to hys other predeceſſors before him. 4. Itẽ, as touching al other complaintes and iniuries (except onely the Chappel, and depoſition of Roger Noris the Prior) the monkes ſhould ſtand to the arbitrement of the king, of the Archb. and the Prelates. 5. Item, that the monkes kneeling downe before the king in the Chapter houſe, ſhould aſke the Archb. forgeueneſſe. which being done, they went altogether to the Church, & ſang Te Deum for this reformation of peace. Ex veteri Chronico manuſcripto & ex Geruaſio.

The next day after ẏ Archb. comming into the Chapter, reſtored to the Couent their manors & farmes againe: alſo diſcharged the Prior which he had made before, deſiring them likewiſe, that if hee had offended them either in worde or deede, they would from their heart remitte him. This reconciliation being made betwene the Archb. and ẏ couent, then the Archb. going about to diſſolue the building of hys new Church, though he chaunged the place, yet thought not to chaunge his intent, and therefore making exchaunge of landes with the Byſhop and Monkes of Rocheſter, purchaſed of them their ground in Lambeth an. 1191. which done, he came to hys Clerkes whome he had placed to be Canons in his new Colledge of Hakingtõ, and willed them to remoue al their goodes & furniture to Lambeth ouer agaynſt Weſtminſter, where he erected for them an other church, and there placed the ſaid Canõs. Furthermore after the depoſing of Roger Norys Pryor of Cant. aforeſaid, Baldwyn the archb. enforeſaid to graũt them an other Pryor by the aſſent of the king and of the Couent, aſſigned Oſbernus to theyr Pryor, who had takẽ part before with the archbiſh. but the monkes not pleaſed with him, after the death of Baldwine the Archb. remoued hym agayne.

King Richard taketh his iourney toward the land of Hieruſalem.

Theſe thinges thus diſcourſed touching the tragicall diſſention betweene Baldwyne archbiſhop and monks of Canterbury. Now to proceed (by the Lords aſſiſtance) in conuocatiõ of our ſtory: After king Richard had thus, as is declared, ſet the monkes and the Archbiſhop in ſome agreement, & had compoſed ſuch thinges as were to be redreſſed within the realme, he aduaunceth forward his iorny, & came to Turon, to meete with Phillip the Frenche king: & ſo after that went to Vizeliace, where the French K. and he ioyning together for yͤ more continuance of their iourney, aſſured them ſelues by ſolemne othe, ſwearing fidelitie one to the other: the forme of whoſe othe was this: That eyther of them ſhould defend and mayntayne the honour of the other, and beare true fidelitie vnto hym, of lyfe, members, and worldly honour, and that neyther of them ſhoulde fayle one the other in their affayres: but the Frenche king ſhoulde ayde the king of England in defending hys land and dominions, as hee would hymſelfe defend hys owne Citie of Paris if it were beſieged: and that Richard King of England likewiſe ſhoulde ayde the French king in defending his land and dominions, no otherwiſe then he woulde defend his owne Citty of Roan, if it were beſieged. &c But how ſlenderly thys othe dyd holde betweene theſe 2. kinges, and by whoſe chiefe occaſion firſt it fell aſunder, the ſequele of the ſtory (the Lord willing) ſhall declare hereafter.

The oth of fidelitie betweene Philip ſecond French king, and king Richard the firſt, going to the holy lãd.

Diſcipline and orders ſet by king Richard for malefactors.

Furthermore touching the lawes and ordinances appointed by the king Richard for his nauy, the forme thereof was this.

1. That who ſo killed any perſon on ſhypbord, ſhould be tyed with hym that was ſlayne and throwne into the ſea.
2. And if he killed him on yͤ land, ſhould in like maner be tyed with the party ſlayne, & be buryed wͭ him in the earth.
3. He that ſhalbe cõuicted by lawful witnes to draw out his knife or weapon, to the intent to ſtrike any man, or yͭ hath ſtrickẽ any to the drawing of bloud, ſhal loſe his hãd.
4. Alſo, he that ſtriketh any perſon with his hand, wͭout effuſion of bloud, ſhall be plunged three times in the ſea.
5. Itẽ, who ſo ſpeaketh any opprobrious or contumelius words, in reuiling or curſing one an other, for ſo oftẽtimes as he hath ſo reuiled, ſhall pay ſo many vnces of ſiluer.
6. Item, a theefe, or felon that hath ſtolne, being lawfully conuerted, ſhall haue his head ſhorne and boyling pitche poured vpon his head, & fethers or downe ſtrawed vpon the ſame, wherby he may be knowne, & ſo the firſt landing place they ſhall come to, there to be caſt vp. &c.

The Frẽ king & kin Rich.cõ to Lyons,

Theſe thinges thus ſet in a readines, kyng Richard ſending his nauy by the Spaniſh ſeas, and by the ſtraytes of Iubaltarie betweene Spayne and Africa, to meet hym at Marſilia, he himſelfe went (as is ſayd) to Vizeliace, to the French King. which two kinges from thence went to Lyons, where the bridge ouer the floud Rhodanus, for preſſe of people brake, and many both men & womẽ were drowned. By reaſon whereof the two. kinges for the combraunce of their traynes, were conſtrayned to deceiuer thẽ ſelues for tyme of their iourny, appoynting both to meete together in Sicilia: and ſo Phillip the French king tooke his way to Genua, & king Richarde to Marſilia, where he remayned 8. dayes, appoynting there his nauy to meet him. Frõ thence croſſing ouer to Genua, where yͤ Frenche king was, paſſed forward by the coaſt of Italy, and entered into Tyber not farre from Rome, where meeting wͭ Octomanus Cardinall and Byſhop of Hoſtia, he did cõplayne greatly of the filthy Symonye of the pope and the Popes Court, for receauing vii. hundred Markes for cõſecrating the Biſhop Cenomanenſis: Alſo a thouſand and fiue hundreth Markes of william Byſhop of Ely for hys office Legatiue. And likewiſe an infinite ſumme of money of the Byſhop of Burdeaux, for acquiting hym when hee ſhould be depoſed for a certayne cryme layd to hys charge by hys Clergye. &c.

Gallyes, and x. great Barkes, to ſhip ouer hys mẽ, ſayled by the Coaſt of Italy, and came to Naples, & ſo partly by horſe and wagon, partly by the ſea paſſing to Falernum, came to Calabria, where after that he had heard, his ſhips were arriued at Meſſana in Sicilia, he made yͤ more ſpeed and ſo the xxiii. of September ſent to Meſſana, with ſuche a noyſe of trumpets and ſhalmes, with ſuche a route and ſhewe, that it was to the great wonderment and terrour both of the French men, and all other that did heare and behold the ſight.

The kyngs ſhips ariue at Meſſana. The comming of ki Richard to Meſſana,

To the ſayd towne of Meſſana the French kyng was come before the xvi. of the ſame month of September, and had taken vp the Pallace of Tancredus K. of Sicilia, for hys lodging. To whom K. Richard after hys arriual eftſoones reſorted, and when the two kings had communed together, immediately the ſame day the Frenche K. tooke ſhypping and entring the ſeas, thinking to ſayle towarde the land of Hieruſalẽ. But after he was out of the hauen, the wynd riſing contrary agaynſt hym returned him back agayne to Meſſana. Then K. Richard (whoſe lodgyng was prepared in the ſuburbes without the City) after he had reſorted agayne, & talked with the French K. and alſo had ſent to Tancredus K. of Sicilia for deliueraunce of Ioane his ſiſter (who had bene ſometymes Queene of Sicilia) and had obtayned her to be ſent vnto hym, the laſt day of September paſſed ouer the floude of Del far, and there getting a ſtrong hold called De la Bagnare, or Le Bamre, and placing therein his ſiſter with a ſufficient gariſon, he returned agayne to Meſſana. The ſecond of October K. Richard wanne an other certayne ſtrong holde called Manaſterium Griffonum, ſituated in the midſt of the Riuer of Del far, betweene Meſſana and Calabria, frõ whence the Monkes beyng expulſed, he repoſed there all hys ſtory and prouiſiõ of victuals which came from England or other places.

The Engliſhmen ſeing that, made to the gates, and by force would haue broken them open, in ſo muche that the King riding among them with his ſtaffe, & breaking diuers of their heads, could not aſſwage their fiercenes. Such was the rage of the Engliſhmen agaynſt the Citizens of Meſſana. The king ſeeing the fury of the people to be ſuche as he could not ſtay them, tooke boate, & went to the Palace of K. Tancred to talk of the matter with the French king. In which meane tyme the matter was ſo taken vp by the wiſe handling of the auncient of the citty, that both partes laying downe their armour went home in peace.

The fourth day of the ſayd month of October came to king Richard the archbiſhop of Meſſana, with two other archbiſhops alſo with the French king, and ſondry other Earles, Barons, and Biſhops, for intreataunce of peace. who as they were together conſulting, & had almoſt concluded vpō the peace, the Cittizens of Meſſana iſſuing out of the towne, ſome went vp vpon the mountaynes, ſome with open force inuaded the manſion or lodging of Hugh Brunne an Engliſh captayn. The noyſe wherof cōming to the eares of the king, he ſodenly breaking of talke with the French king and the reſt, departed from them, & comming to his men, commaunded thē forthwith to arme thē ſelues. who then with certayne of his ſouldiours making vp to the top of a mountayne (which ſeemed to paſſe theyr power to clime) there put the Citizens to flight, chaſing thē down the mountayn, vnto the very gates of yͤ Citie, whom alſo certayne of the kinges ſeruauntes purſued within the City, of whō fiue valiaunt ſouldiours, and xx. of the kings ſeruaunts were ſlayne, the French king looking vpon, and not once willing to reſcue them, contrary to his othe and league before made with the king of England. The French Kyng, a bearer with ſtraungers againſt the Engliſh men

This beyng knowne to the Engliſh hoaſt, how theyr fellowes were ſlayn, and the Frenchmen permitted in the city, & that they were excluded, & the gates barred againſt them, being alſo ſtopped frō buying of vittayle and other things, they vpon great indignation gathered themſelues in armes, braſt opē the gates, and ſcaled the walles, and ſo winning the Citty, ſet vp their flagges with the Engliſhe armes vpon the walles. which when the French king did ſee, he was mightely offended, requiring the king of England, that the armes of Fraūce might alſo be ſet vp & ioyned with his. But king Richard to that would in no caſe agree. Notwithſtanding to ſatiſfie hys minde, he was cōtented to take downe his armes, and commit the cuſtodie of the City to the Hoſpitallaries and Templaries of Hieruſalem, till the time that Tancrede king of Sicilia and he ſhould agree together vpon conditions.

Theſe thinges being done, the v. & vi. day of October, it followed thē vpō the viij. day of the ſame month of October, that peace among yͤ kings was cōcluded. In which peace firſt king Richard and Phillip the French king, renewed agayne their othe and league before made concerning their mutuall ayd and ſociety during the time of that peregrination. Secondly, peace alſo was concluded betweene king Richard, and Tancred king of Cicilia aforeſayd with the cōditions, that the daughter of Tancreda in caſe (King Richard ſhould die without iſſue) ſhould mary to Arthure Duke of Britaine, the kings nephew, and next heyre to his crown. &c. whereof a formal charte was drawn and letters ſent thereof to Pope Clement being dated the the ix. day of Nouember.

Peace cōcluded betwene K. Richard, & Tancrede K. of Sicilia.

In this meane time, as theſe two kinges of Fraunce and England were thus wyntering at Meſſana, Fredericke Emperor firſt of that name (the ſame, on whoſe neck Pope Alexander did treade in the Church of Venice, ſaying the verſe of the Pſalme Super aſpidem & baſiliſcum ambulabis &c. whereof read before pag. 205.) and his ſonne Conradus, with a mighty army of Almanus and others, were comming vp likewiſe toward the land of Hieruſalē, to the ſiege of Achon: where by the way the good Emperour, through a great miſchaunce falling of his horſe into a Riuer called Salef, was therin drowned. After whoſe deceaſe Conradus his ſonne taking the gouerment of hys army, came to the ſiege of Achō, in which ſiege alſo he died. Vpon whoſe comming ſuch a dearth followed in the camp whiche laſted two monthes, that a loafe of bread, whiche before there cōming was ſold for i. peny, was afterwarde ſold for iij. pound, By reaſon whereof many Chriſtiā ſouldiours did there periſh through famine. The ſiege of this towne of Achon endured a long ſeaſon, which as it was mightely oppugned by the Chriſtiās, ſo it was ſtrongly defended by the Saracens, ſpecially by helpe of wild fire, which the Latines do call Ignem Græcū, ſo that great ſlaughter there was on both ſides. During the tyme of which ſiege, many noble perſonages & alſo byſhops died, among whō was Conradus the Emperours ſonne, Rādulph Earle of Fougeres, the Earle of Pericio, Robert Earle of Leiceſter, Baldwine archbiſhop of Canterbury with foure Archbiſhops, and diuers other Byſhops and Abbots and Earles and Barons to the nūber of 34. and not ſo few. Duke of Saxonie, and to others, whatſoeuer his father before had takē from them. That done he ſent to Clement & hys Cardinals, promiſing in al thinges to confirme the lawes and dignities of the Church of Rome, if they would graūt hym their aſſent to be Emperor. wherupon pope Clemēt by aduiſe of the Romaines aſſigned him the terme of Eaſter in the next yeare inſuing for his coronation. But before yͤ Eaſter came. P. Clemēt died, after he had ſit 3. yeres and about 4. monthes. After whome ſucceeded Celeſtinus the 3. Of whom more hereafter, God willing.

Henricus ſonne of Fredericke ſtandeth to be Emperour.

Pope Clement dyeth. Celeſtinus 3. Pope.

Anno. 1191.

The time thus paſſing ouer in the month of February, the next yeare following, which was of the Lord. 1191. king Richard ſent ouer hys Galleyes to Naples, there to meet his mother Alinore, and Berengaria the daughter of Sāctius king of Nauarre, whom he was purpoſed to mary. who by that tyme were come to Brundiſium, vnder the conduct of Phillip Erle of Flanders, & ſo proceeding vnto Naples, there found the kings ſhips, wherin they ſayled to Meſſana. In this meane ſpace king Richard ſhewed hymſelfe exceeding bounteous and liberall to all men. To the French king firſt he gaue diuers ſhips: vpō others likewiſe he beſtowed rich rewardes, and of hys treaſures and goodes he diſtributed largely to hys ſouldiours and ſeruauntes about hym. Of whom it was reported that he diſtributed more in one month, then euer any of hys predeceſſors did in a whole yeare: by reaſon whereof he purchaſed great loue and fauour, which not onely redounded to the aduauncement of his fame, but alſo to his ſingular vſe and profite, as the ſequele afterward proued.

The bountifull liberalitie of king Richard.

To proceede then in the progreſſe of king Richard it followeth. In the firſt day of the month of march, he leauing the citty of Meſſana where the Frenche king was, went to Cathnienſium, a City where Tancredus Kyng of Sicilia then lay, where he was honourable receaued, & there remained wͭ king Tancred 3. dayes & 3. nightes. On the fourth day when he ſhould depart, the forſayd Tancredus offered him many riche preſentes in golde and ſiluer, and precious ſilkes, whereof king Richarde woulde receiue nothing, but one little ryng for a token of his good will. For yͤ which king Richard againe gaue to him a rich ſword. At length when K. Richard ſhould take his leaue, king Tancredus would not ſo let him part, but needes would geue him 4. great ſhips, and 15. Galeys: and furthermore, he himſelfe would needes accompanye him the ſpace of two dayes iourney to a place called Tauernium.

King Richard remoueth from Meſſana, and commeth to Cathneys.

The honorable intertainment of king Richard by king Tancredus.

Then the next morning when they ſhould take their leaue, Tancredus declared vnto him yͤ meſſags which the Philip the frēch king trayterouſly ſeeketh the deſtruction of K. Richard by ſecret letters ſent to the king of Sicilia.

French king a little before, had ſent vnto him by the Duke of Burgundy, the contentes whereof was this: That the king of England was a falſe traytour, aud would neuer keepe the peace that was betweene thē. And if the ſayd Tancredus would warre agaynſt hym, or ſecretly by night woulde inuade him, he with all his power would aſsiſte him, and ioyne with him to the deſtruction of him and all hys army, &c. To whome Richard the king proteſted agayne, that he was no traytour, nor neuer was: and as touching the peace begon betweene them, the ſame ſhoulde neuer be broken thorough hym: neyther could he beleue, that the French king, being hys good Lorde and his ſworne compartiner in that voyage, would vtter any ſuch wordes by him. Which when Tancredus heard, he bringeth forth the letters of the Frenche K. ſent to him by the Duke of Burgundy, affirming moreouer, that if the Duke of Burgundy would deny the bringing of the ſayd letters, he was ready to try with hym by any of hys Dukes. King Richard receiuing the letters & muſing not a little vpō the ſame, returneth again to Meſſana. The ſame day that king Richard departed, ẏ French king cōmeth to Tauernium to ſpeake with Tancredus, & there abode with him that night, and on the morrowe returned to Meſſana againe.

A faithfull part of Tancredus kyng of Sicilia toward kyng Richard.

The firſt occaſion of diſcord betweene the French king and king Richard.

From that tyme king Richard moued in ſtomacke againſt king Phillip, neuer ſhewing any gentle countenāce of peace and amitie, as he before was wont. Whereat the French K. greatly marueiling, and enquiring earneſtly what ſhould be the cauſe therof, word was ſent him again by Phillip Erle of Flaunders, what words he had ſent to the king of Sicilia, & for the teſtimony thereof the letters were ſhewed which he wrote by the Duke of Burgundy, to the king of Sicilia. Which when the Frenche king vnderſtoode, firſt he held hys peace as gilty in his conſcience, not knowing well what to aunſwere. At length turning his tale to an other matter, he began to quarrell with king Richard, pretending as though he ſought cauſes to breake with him, and to maligne him: and therefore he forged theſe lyes (ſayd he) vpon him, and all becauſe he by that meanes would voyde to marry with Alice his ſiſter, according as he had promiſed: Adding moreouer, that if he would ſo do, and would not mary the ſayd Alice his ſiſter, according to his othe, but woulde marry an other, he woulde be an enemy to hym and hys, while he lyued.

K. Richard chargeth the French king with falſehood.

The Frēch king quarelleth with K. Richard about marying his ſiſter.

To this king Richard ſayd agayn, that he could by no meanes mary that woman, for ſo muche as his father had carnall copulation with her, & alſo had by her a ſonne: for proofe wherof he had there preſently to bring forth diuers and ſondry witneſſes to the kings face, to teſtifie with him. In concluſion through counſell and perſwaſion of diuers about the French king, agreement at laſt was made, ſo ẏ king Phillip did acquite king Richard from his bonde of marying hys ſiſter, and king Richard agayne ſhoulde be bound to pay to him euery yeare for the ſpace of v. yeares, two thouſand marks, with certayne other conditions beſides, not greatly materiall in this place to be deciphred. And thus peace beyng betweene them concluded, the 28. day of the ſaid month of March, the Frēch king launching out of the hauen of Meſſana, in the 22. day after in Eaſter weeke came with hys army to the ſiege of Achon.

Cauſes alledged why K. Richard could not marry with the French kinges ſiſter.

Agreement betweene the two kinges, with the conditions touching the ſame.

The French king commeth to Achon.

After the departure of the French king from Meſſana, (king Richard with his army yet remaynyng behynd) arriued Queene Alinor ẏ kings mother, bringing with her Bernegera the king of Nauarres daughter to be eſpouſed to king Richard. Which done, Alinor leauing Bernegera behinde her, departed, taking her iorny toward Rome, to intreate the pope for Gaufrious her other ſonne aboue mētioned, to be conſecrated in the archbiſhoprick of York, beyng before elected by the procurement of king Richard his brother, as ye heard. In which meane time as Queene Alinorie was trauiling toward Rome, Pope Clement aboue mentioned dyed about the 6. day of April, in whoſe roume ſucceeded pope Celeſtinus the 3. Who the next day after hys conſecration, came from Laterane to S. Peters church, wherein the way meeteth him Henricus the Emperor, & Conſtantia his wife, with a great route of armed ſouldiours. But the Romanes making faſt their gates, would not ſuffer them to enter their Citye. Then pope Celeſtine ſtanding vpon the ſtayres before the church dore of ſ. Peter, receiued an othe of the ſayde Henricus king of the Almains (hys army wayting without) that he ſhould defend the church of God, & al the liberties therof, & maintayne Iuſtice, alſo to reſtore agayne the patrimony of S. Peter full and whole, what ſoeuer hath bene diminiſhed therof, & finally ẏ he ſhould ſurrender to ẏ church of Rome agayne, the city of Tuſculanū, &c. Upon theſe conditions and grauntes then the pope took hym to the Church, and there annoynted him for Emperour, & hys wife for Empreſſe, who there ſitting in his chayre pontificall, held the crowne of gold betweene his feete, and ſo the Emperoure bowing downe his head to the popes feete: receaued the crown: and in like maner the Empreſſe alſo. The crowne thus being ſet vpon the Emperours head, the Pope eftſoones wͭ his foot ſtroke it off agayn frō his head vnto the grounde, declaring therby that he had power to depoſe hym againe, in caſe he ſo deſerued. Then the Cardinals taking vp the crowne ſet it vpon his head agayne. Ex veteri Chronico manuſcripto anonimo, De geſtis Richardi regis cui initiū: Anno gratiæ &c. Not long after the departure of king Phillip frō Meſſana, which was in the month of march, king Richard in April following, about the xx. day of the ſayd month, ſayling frō the hauen of Meſſana, with an 150. great ſhips, & 53 great Galeis wel manned and appointed, took his iorny toward Achon. Who being vpō the ſeas, on good Friday about the 9. houre roſe a mighty Southwinde with a tempeſt, which diſſeuered and ſcattered all his nauy, ſome to one place, and ſome to an other. The king with a fewe ſhips was driuen to the Iſle of Creta, and there before the hauen of Rhodes caſt an anker. The ſhip that caryed the kings ſiſter Queene of Sicilia, and Bernegera the king of Nauarres daughter, with 2. other ſhips were driuē to the Iſle of Cyprus. The king making great mone for the ſhyp of his ſiſter, & Bernegera his wife ẏ ſhould be, not knowing where they were become, after the tempeſt was ouerblowen ſent forth his Galleys diligently to ſearch ẏ reſt of his nauy diſperſed, but eſpecially for the ſhip wherein hys ſiſter was, & the maydē whō he ſhould mary, who at lēgth were founde ſafe and mery at the porte of Limizem in the ile of Cyprus. Notwͭſtanding the ij. other ſhips whiche were in their cōpany before in the ſame hauē, were drowned, with diuers of the kings ſeruants & men of worſhip, amongſt whom was M. Roger, called Malus Catulus, the kings Uice chauncellor, who was founde hauing the kings ſeale hanging about his necke. The king of Cyprus was then Iſakius (called alſo the Emperour of the Griffones) who tooke and impriſoned all Engliſhmen which by ſhipwracke were caſt vpon hys land: alſo inuegled into hys hands the goods & priſes of them whiche were found drowned about his coaſtes, neyther would ſuffer the ſhip wherein the two Ladyes were to enter within the porte.

K. Richard remoueth fro Meſſana to Achon.

K. Richard ouertaken with a tempeſt in the Seas, going to Achon.

Iſakius king of Cyprus a cruell enemy to Engliſhe men.

The tidinges of this beyng brought to king Richard, he in hys great wrath gathering hys Galleys & ſhips together, bordeth the land of Cyprus, where he firſt in gentle wiſe ſignifieth to king Iſakius, howe he with his Engliſhmen, comming as ſtraungers to the ſupportation of ẏ holy land, were by diſtreſſe of wether driuen vppon hys bounds, & therfore with all hūble petiō beſought hym in Gods behalfe, and for reuerence of the holy Croſſe: to let goe ſuch priſoners of his which he had in captiuitie, and to reſtore agayne the goodes of them whiche were drowned, as he deteyned in hys handes, to be employed for the behouſe of their ſoules. &c. And thus the king once, twiſe, & thriſe, deſired of the Emperour. But he proudly aunſwering agayne, ſent the king word, that he neyther woulde let the captiues goe, nor render the goodes of them which were drowned &c.

K. Richard maketh ſute to the king of Cyprus for his ſouldiours in captiuitie.

The diſdainfull & proud anſwere of Iſakius to K. Richard.

When king Richard heard this, how little the Emperour Iſakius made of hys ſo humble and honeſt petition, and how nothing there could be gotten without violent force, eftſoones geueth commaundement through all hys hoaſt, to put themſelues in armour and to follow him, to reuenge ſuch iniuries receiued of that proud and cruell K. of Cyprus, willyng them to put their truſt in God, and not to miſdoubt but the Lorde woulde ſtand with them, and geue them the victory. The Emperoure in the meane tyme with hys people ſtoode warding the Sea coaſtes, where the Engliſhmen ſhould ariue, with ſwords, billes, and launces, and ſuch other weapons as they had, ſettyng boardes, ſtooles, and cheſtes before thē in ſtead of a walle. Howbeit but few of them were harneſſed, and for the moſt part all vnexpert, & vnſkilfull in the feates of warre. Thē king Richard wͭ hys ſouldiours iſſuing out of their ſhips, firſt ſet his bowmen before, who with their ſhotte made a way for other to follow. The Engliſhmen thus winning the land vpon them, ſo fiercely preſſed vpō the Griffones, that after long fighting and many blowes, at laſt the Emperour was put to flight, whom king Richard valiauntly purſued, and ſlue many, and diuers he tooke alyue, and had gone neare alſo to haue the Emperoure, had not the night come on & parted the battaile. And thus K. Richard with much ſpoyle & great victory returning to the Porte towne of Lymizem, whiche the townesmen had lefte for feare, found there great aboundaunce of corne, wyne, oyle, and vittayles.

The ſame day after the victory got, Ioane the kinges ſiſter, and Bernegera the mayden, entered the Port and towne of Lymeſzein, with L. great ſhips, and xiiij. Galliots: So that all the whole nauye there meeting together were CCLiiij. talle ſhippes, and aboue 60. Galliots. The Iſakius the Emperour ſeeing no way for him to eſcape by the Sea, the ſame night pitched his tentes v. myles of from the Engliſhe army, ſwearing that the third day after he would ſure geue battayle to king Richard. But he preuenting hym before, ſodenly the ſame morning before the day of battayle ſhould be, ſetteth vppon the tentes of the Griffones early, they being vnwares and a ſleepe, & made of them a great ſlaughter, in ſo much that the Emperour was fayne naked to run away: leauing his tentes and pauilions to the Engliſh men, ful of horſes and rich treaſure, alſo with the Imperiall ſtandard, the lower part wherof with a coſtly ſtremer was couered and wrought al with gold. King Richard then returning with victory and triumph to hys ſiſter, and Bernegera, ſhortly after in the moneth of May next following, and the 12. day of the ſayd moneth, maryed the ſayd Bernegera daughter of Rācon king of Nauarre, in the Iſle of Cyprus, at Lymeſzen.

The king of Cyprus againe put to flight.

K. Richard marrieth Bernegera daughter of the king of Nauarre in the Iſle of Cyprus.

The king of Cyprus ſeeing himſelfe ouermatched, was driuen at length to yeld himſelfe with conditions, to geue king Richard xx. thouſand markes in golde, for amendes of ſuch ſpoyles, as he had gottē of them that were drowned: Alſo to reſtore all hys captiues agayne to the king: And furthermore he in hys owne perſon to attende vpon the kyng to the land of Hieruſalem, in Gods ſeruice and hys, with CCCC. horſemen, and v. hundreth footemen: in pledge whereof he would geue to hys handes his Caſtles, and hys onely daughter, & would hold his kingdome of hym. This done, and the Emperour ſwearing fidelitie to king Richard, before Guido king of Ieruſalem, and the Prince of Antioche (who were come thither to king Richard a little before) peace was taken, and Iſakius committed to the warde of certaine keepers. Notwithſtanding ſhortly after he breaking from his keepers, was agayne at defiance with the king. Whereupon K. Richard beſetting the Iland of Cyprus round about with ſhips and Galleyes, did in ſuch ſort preuayle, that the ſubiectes of the land were conſtrayned to yeld themſelues to the K. and at length the daughter alſo of the Emperour, & at laſt the Emperour hymſelfe, whom king Richard cauſed to be kept in fetters of ſiluer and gold, and to be ſent to the City of Tripolis.

Iſakius king of Cyprus yeldeth him ſelfe to king Richard.

The king of Cyprus breaketh conditions with kyng Richard.

King of Cyprus againe ſubmitteth himſelfe, and was kept in golden fetters.

Theſe thinges thus done, and all ſet in order touching the poſſeſſion of the Iſle of Cyprus: the keeping whereof he committed to Radulfe ſonne of Godfrey Lord Chamberlayne, being then the firſt day of Iune, vpon the v. of ẏ ſayd moneth, king Richard departed from the Iſle of Cyprus with hys ſhips and galleyes toward the ſiege of Achon, & on the next morow came to Tyrus, where by procurement of the French K. he was conſtrained by the citizens to enter. The next day after, which was the vi. day of Iune, croſſing the Seas, he mette with a great Barke, fraught with ſouldiours and men of warre to the number of a thouſand and fiue hundreth, which pretendyng to be Frenchmē, and ſetting forth their flagge with the Frenche armes, were in deede Saracens ſecretly ſent with wilde fire & certayn barrelles of vnknowne ſerpentes, to the defence of the town of Achon. Which K. Richard at lēgth perceauing, eftſoones ſet vpō them, and ſo vanquiſhed them, of whō the moſt were drowned, & ſome taken aliue. Which beyng once knowen in the Citty of Achō, as it was a great diſcomfort to them, ſo it was a great helpe to the chriſtians for winning the citty. The next day after, whiche was the vij. of Iune, Kyng Richard came to Achon, which at that tyme had bene long beſieged of the Chriſtiās. After whoſe cōming it was not long, but the Pagans within the Citty, ſeing their walles to be vndermined and towers ouerthrowne, were driuen by cōpoſition to eſcape with life & lymme, to ſurrender the Citty to the two kings. An other great helpe, to the Chriſtians in winning the Cittye was this. In the ſayd Citty of Achon there was a ſecret Chriſtian amōg the Saracens, who in tyme of the ſiege there, vſed at ſondry tymes to caſt ouer the walles into the camp of the Chriſtians certayn billes writtē in Hebrue, Greek, and Latine, wherin he diſcloſed to the Chriſtians, frō time to tyme, the doynges and counſels of the enemies, aduertiſing them how and what way they ſhould work, & what to beware. And alwayes his letters began thus: In nomine patris, & filij, & ſpiritus ſancti. Amen. By reaſon whereof ẏ Chriſtians were much aduantaged in their proceedings. But this was a great heauines vnto them, that neither he would vtter his name, or when the Cittye was got they could euer vnderſtand who he was. Ex Chronico manuſcripto, De geſtis Richardi.

An honeſt part of a ſecret Chriſtian in the citie of Achō.

To make of a long ſiege a ſhort narration, vpon the 12. day of Iuly the yeare aforeſayd, the Princes and captaines of the Paganes, vpon agreement reſorted to ẏ tent of the Templaries, and to common with the two kinges touching peace, & geuing vp of their city: ẏ forme of which peace was this: That the kings ſhould haue the city of Achon freely, and fully deliuered to thē with all which was therin, and fiue hundreth captiues of the Chriſtiās ſhould be reſtored to them, which were in Achon. Alſo the holye Croſſe ſhould be to thē rendered, and a thouſand Chriſtian captiues, with 2. hundreth horſemen, whoſoeuer they thēſelues would chuſe out of all thē which were in the power of Saladine. Ouer and beſides, they ſhoulde geue to the kings 200. thouſand Byſāts, ſo ẏ they thēſelues would remayne as pledges in the kings hands, for the performāce hereof, that if in xl. dayes theſe foreſayd couenaunces were not accompliſhed, they would abide the kings mercy touching life and limme. Theſe couenaunces being agreed vpon, the kinges ſent their ſouldiours and ſeruauntes into the City, to take a C. of the richeſt and beſt of the City, to cloſe them vp in towers vnder ſtrong keeping, and the reſidue they cōmitted to be kept in houſes and ſtreetes, miniſtring to them according to their neceſſities: to whome notwithſtanding this they permitted, that ſo many of thē as would be baptiſed & receiue the fayth of Chriſt, ſhoulde be free to go whether they would. Whereupon many there were of the Paganes, which for feare of death, pretēded to be baptiſed, but afterward ſo ſoone as they could, reuolted agayne to the Saladine. For the which it was afterward commaunded by the kinges, that none of thē ſhould be baptiſed agaynſt their willes.

The forme of peace concluded betweene the Kings and the Princes of Achon.

Couenaunces made in giuing vp the citie of Achon.

Religion would be taught and not coacted.

The 13. day of the ſayde month of Iuly, King Phillip of Fraunce, and king Richard, after they had obtained the poſſeſſion of Achon, deuided betweene thē, al things therin contayned, as well the people as gold & ſiluer, with all other furniture what ſoeuer was remaynyng in the City: who in deuiding the ſpoile were ſo good caruers to themſelues, ẏ many Knightes and Barons with other ſouldiours, who had there ſuſtayned the whole trauaile 2. yeres together about the ſiege, ſeing the kings to take all to thēſelues and there part to be but little, retracted themſelues without the vttermoſt trench, and there after conſultation had togither, ſent word to the kings that they would leaue and forſake them, vnleſſe they were made partakers alſo of the gaynes, for the whiche they had ſo long trauailed. To whom aunſwere was ſent agayne by the kinges, that their wills ſhould be ſatiſfied. How beit becauſe of lōg differring of their promiſe, many conſtrayned by pouerty departed from them.

The two kinges deuide the citie of Achon, with all the ſpoyle therof betwene themſelues. Cōmonly ſeene, who ſo taketh moſt paynes, their part to be the leaſt.

Many of the Chriſtian ſouldiours for neede were conſtrayned to depart from Achon.

The xx. day of Iuly king Richard ſpeaking with the French king, deſired him that they two with their armies, would binde thēſelues by oth to remayne there ſtill in the lād of Hieruſalē the ſpace of 3. yeares, for the winning and recouering again of thoſe coūtryes. But he would ſweare (he ſayd) no ſuch oth: and ſo the next day after K. Richard with his wife and ſiſter entreth into the citty of Achon, and placed there himſelfe in the kinges Palace: the French K. remaynyng in the houſes of the Templaries, where he cōtinued till the end of ẏ month. So about the beginning of the month of Auguſt, Phillip the Frenche king, after that he and king Richard had made agreemēt betwene Guido and Conradus the Marques, about the kingdome of Hieruſalem, went frō Achon to Tyrus: notwithſtādyng kyng Richard, & al the Princes of the Chriſtiā army with great entreaty deſired him to tarye, ſhewing what a ſhame it were for him to come ſo far, & now to leaue vndone ẏ, for which he came, & on the 3. of Auguſt frō Tyrus departed, leauing his halfe part of the citty of Achon in the handes of the foreſayd Conradus Marques. After whoſe departure the Paganes refuſed to keep their couenaunts made, who neither would reſtore ẏ holy croſſe nor the mony, nor their captiues, ſending worde to king Richard, ẏ if he beheaded the pledges left with him at Achon, they would chop of the heads of ſuch captiues of ẏ chriſtians: which were in their handes. Shortly after this the Saladine ſendyng great gifts to king Richard, requeſted ẏ times limited for beheading of the captiues to bee prorogued: but the king refuſed to take his giftes, and to graunt his requeſt. Wherupō the Saladine cauſed all the chriſtian captiues within his poſſeſſion forthwith to be beheaded: which was the xviij. day of Auguſt. Which albeit K. Richard vnderſtode, yet would not he preuent the time afore limitted for the execution of his priſoners, being the xx. day of Auguſt. Vpō which day he cauſed the priſoners of the Saracens, opēly in the ſight of the Saladines army to loſe their heads: the number of whom came to two thouſand and fiue hundreth, ſaue only that certayne of the principall of thē he reſerued for purpoſes & conſiderations, eſpecially to make exchaunge for the holy croſſe, and certayne other of the Chriſtian captiues.

After this king Richard purpoſed to beſiege the Citty of Ioppe. whereby the way betweene Achon and Ioppe, neare to a Town called Aſſur: Saladine with a great multitude of his Saracens, came fiercely agaynſt the kinges rearewarde, but through Gods mercifull grace, in yͤ ſame battayle the kinges warriours acquited them ſo well, that the Saladine was put to flight (whom the Chriſtiās purſued the ſpace of iij. myles) & loſt the ſame day many of his nobles and captaynes, in ſuch ſort (as it was thought) that the Saladine was not put to ſuch confuſion xl. yeares before: and but one Chriſtian captaine called Iames Auernus in that conflict was ouerthrowne. From thence kyng Richard proceeding further wēt to Ioppe and thē to Aſcalon, where he found firſt the city of Ioppe forſaken of yͤ Saracens, who durſt not abide the kinges comming. Aſcalō the Saladine threw downe to the ground, & likewiſe forſooke the whole land of Syria, through all which land the king had free paſſage without reſiſtaunce: neither durſt the Sarazen prince encounter after that with K. Richard. Of all whiche his acheuaunces the ſayd king Richard ſent his letters of certificate as well into England, as alſo to the Abbot of Clara Valle in Fraunce, well hoping that he (God willing) ſhould be able to make his repayre agayne to them by Eaſter next.

❊ A briefe ſtory of William Byſhop of Ely the Kynges Chauncellour.

The ſtorie of William the proude Byſhop of Ely.

AND nowe to leaue king Richard a whyle in the field, let vs make a ſtep into Englande, and looke a little what is done at home while the king was abroad, and ſo returne to the king agayne. Yee heard before how king Richard at his ſetting forth, committed the gouernement of the realme to Hugo Byſhop of Durham, and to Williā Biſhop of Ely, ſo that to the byſhop of Durham was cōmitted the keeping of the Caſtle of Wyndſore: the other, which was the Biſhop of Ely, had the keeping of yͤ tower of Londō, about which he cauſed a great ditch with a rāpear to be caſt, which is yet remayning. Furthermore to theſe 2. Biſhops, the king alſo aſſigned 4. other chiefe Iuſtices, whiche ioyntly with them ſhould haue the hearyng and ouerſight of all cauſes as well to the clergy as the layty appertaining: to witte, Hugh Bardolfe, William Marſhall, Geffrey Peterſon, and William Bruer. But the byſhop of Ely was the principal, or at leaſt, he that tooke moſt vpon him. Who both was the kinges Chauncellour, and bought with hys money to be the popes Legate through England, Ireland, & Scotlād, as is before ſpecified. Touching the exceſſiue pride and pompe of which Byſhop, hys ruffiings outragious, & fall moſt ſhameful, it would make a long tragedie to diſcourſe the whole circumſtāces at full: Onely to demonſtrate certayne ſpecialties thereof for our preſent purpoſe, it may ſuffice.

Vt iuſtè indicarent clerum & populum, Verba hiſt.

Foure chiefe Iuſtices with two Byſhops appointed ouerſeers of the Realme in the kings abſence.

Firſt, this William called Longchamp being thus aduaunced by the king to be his high Chauncellor, and chiefe Iuſtice of the realme, and alſo the popes Legate, to ſhew abroad the authoritie of his Legatſhyp, began to ſuſpend the Canons, Clerkes, & Vicares of the Church of S. Peter in York, becauſe they receiued him not with proceſſiō: vnder which interdiction he held them, til they were fayne at laſt, both Canons, Clarkes, and Vicares to fall downe at his foote, cauſing al their belles to be let downe out of yͤ ſteple. After this commeth Hugo biſhop of Durham, whō the king ſent home out of Normandy w hys letters, who meeting with the foreſayd William Byſhop of Ely in the towne of Blye, ſhewed hym yͤ kings letters, wherin was graunted to him the keeping of Windſore Caſtle, and to be the kinges Iuſtice from the riuer of Humber, to the borders of Scotland. To the which letters the Chauncellour anſwered, that the kings commaundemēt ſhould be done, and ſo brought him with him to Suwell, where he tooke him and kept him faſt, til he was forced at laſt to ſurrender to him the Caſtle of Wyndſore, & other things whiche the king had committed to his cuſtody, & moreouer was conſtrayned to leaue with the ſayd Chauncellour Henry de Putcaco hys own ſonne, & Gilbert Ley for pledges & hoſtages of his fidelitie, to be true to the king and the realme. And thus the biſhop of Durham being ſet at liberty, went to his town of Houedē. Where after he had made his abode a few dayes, cōmeth thether Oſbert Longchamp yͤ Chauncellours brother, and William Stutiuill, with a great cōpany of armed men ſent by the Chauncellor to apprehend him. But the ſayd Byſhop of Durham putting in ſureties not to depart that towne without the licence of the king & of the Chauncellour, there ſtill remayned, till he got letters to be ſent to the Kyng, ſignifying how he was vſed. Wherupon the king writing his letters from Marſilia to the biſh. of Ely, ſet the ſayd byſhop of Durham free, & confirmed to hym all the poſſeſſions and grauntes that he before had geuen hym.

Hugo Biſhop of Durham vexed by W. Biſhop of Ely.

It is almoſt incredible to think how intemperatly this byſhop and Chauncellor miſuſed himſelfe after the kings departure into Siria in exceſſe of pride, and in cruell exactions and oppreſſions of the kinges ſubiectes. Firſt his felow Iuſtices, whō the king ioyned with him for gouernement of the realme, he vtterly reiected & refuſed to heare their counſaile, reputing none to be equall with him in all the realme. Neither was he contented with the authoritie of a Prelate, but playd both king and prieſt in the realme. All Caſtles, Lordſhips, Abbayes, Churches, and al other appropriations belonging to the right of the king, he claymed to hymſelfe, and by vertue of hys Legatſhip, whē he came to any byſhops houſe, Abbay, Priory, or anye other Religious houſe, he brought with him ſuch a ſuperfluitie of men, horſes, dogges, & hauks, that the houſe was worſe for it 3. yeares after. For commonly he rode neuer vnder a 1500. horſes of Chaplaynes, Prieſtes, and other ſeruing men wayting vpon hym. From the clergy & laytie he tooke away their Churches, their vowſons, their liuinges, and landes, to beſtow vpon hys nephewes, & other wayting Chaplaynes to ſerue hys vayne glory, or els conuerted thē to his own vſe, to mayntaine his pompe & vanitie. In getting and gathering of treaſures he had no meaſure, in miſpending the ſame he kept no order. And that no vyce ſhould be wanting where ſuch auarice taketh roote, the money whiche he wrongfully got, he committed to the banke, to be increaſed by vſury. What wantonnes and laciuiouſnes was vſed in that ſo riotous life, the ſtories do ſhame to declare it. All ruffenly runagates, idle belyes, & light perſons, whereſoeuer he went, hanged vppon hys Court. To increaſe the vaine iolity of this royall Prelate, there was lacking no kynde of Muſicall inſtrumentes & melodious noyſe, to refreſhe belike hys weryed ſenſes ſo much beaten and macerated with continuall labour and ſtudy of hunting, hauking, and gaming: of preaching, and reading I ſhould haue ſayd.

The exceſſiue pride and enormities of W. Biſhop of Ely.

Byſhop of Ely neuer rode vnder a 1500. horſe.

His vanitie.

His vſury.

His riotous and deboiſe life.

Briefly this foreſayd Prelate, bearing the authoritie both of the king and of the pope, kept ſuch a ſtirre in England, that all the whole realme was at hys beck, with cap and knee crouching to him, Neither durſt any man rich or poore diſpleaſe hym. Yea none in all the realme ſo noble or worſhipfull, but was glad to pleaſe him, accounting thēſelues happy if they might ſtand in his fauor. At his table all noble mens children did ſerue and wayte vpon hym, to whome he coupled in mariage his nieces and kinſwomē. And when any that ſtoode wayting before him, durſt once caſt vp hys eyes, or did not demurely looke downward vpon yͤ groūd, he had a ſtaffe in hand with a pricke, wherwith he vſed to prick thē, learning belike by the carter hys father, which vſed at the plough or carte to driue his oxen. Furthermore, as kings vſe to haue their gard about thē, ſo hee becauſe hee woulde not alſo be vngarded, refuſing men of the Engliſh nation, had his wayters and warders moſt of Frenchmen and Fleminges.

The Biſhop of Ely playeth both king & prieſt.

W. Biſh. of Ely garded with Frenchmen & Flemings.

It happened after this, in the yeare 1191. that a great diſcord roſe betwene Iohn Erle of Mortō the kings brother, with other ſtates of the realme, and the ſayd William biſhop of Ely, ſo that vniuerſally they all wrote ouer to yͤ king concerning the miſgouernmēt & enormities of yͤ ſayd Biſhop. Who vnderſtanding of the caſe, ſent from Meſſana into Eng. Walter archb. of Roan, and William Marſhall Earle, vnto the Biſh. of Ely with letters, commandyng him that in all hys doynges he ſhould aſſociate vnto hym the ſayd Archb. of Roan, W. Marcſhall, Geffry Peterſon, W. Bruer, and Hugh Bardolfe aboue mentioned. Who whē they came into England, durſt not deliuer their letters, dreading the diſpleaſure of the Chauncellor: for he deſpiſed all the commaundements of the king, nor would ſuffer any fellow to ioyne with him in hys kingdome.

Anno. 1191.

A generall complaint to the K. of W. Biſh. of Ely.

Of theſe foure aſſociates read the page before.

Hitherto haue you heard of the glorious vanitie of this lordly Legate and Chauncellor of the realme, now ye ſhal heare of his ſhamefull fall, after hys ſhameleſſe exaltation. For ſhortly after this followeth an other breach betweene the ſayd Erle Iohn the kinges brother and hym, about yͤ beſieging of the Caſtle of Lincolne. Concerning yͤ whiche caſtle the ſayde Iohn ſent him word, yͭ vnles he raiſed his ſiege the ſooner frō thēce, he would ſend him away by force of ſword. The biſh. either not able to make his party good, or not daring to reſiſt, thought beſt to fal to ſome compoſition with the Erle, and ſo did. In which compoſition, he was contented againſt his wil, by mediation of diuers biſhops and others, to make ſurrender, not onely of the caſtle of Lincolne, but alſo of Notingham, of Tickhill, Walingford & many moe, which were then committed to the cuſtody of ſondry men of worſhip and honour. And thus was that controuerſie agreed, wherein the biſhop of Ely began a little to be cut ſhorter.

An other broyle betweene the Chauncelor and Geffray Archbiſh. of Yorke the kings brother.

It followed then not long after in the ſame yeare, that an other like buſines began to kindle betwene Geffrey the Archb. of Yorke the Kings brother, and the foreſaid glorious biſhop of Ely, vpō this occaſion. Ye heard before how the king at his ſetting out, left order that Earle John and Geffrey his brethren, ſhould not enter into the realme the ſpace of iij. yeres after his departure (howbeit his brother John was ſhortly after releaſed of that bond:) and alſo after that howe K. Richard being at Meſſana, ſent his mother Alinore to the Pope for his brother Geffrey (elected before to the See of Yorke) to be conſecrated Archbiſhop. Whereupon the ſaid Geffrey being conſecrated through licence of Pope Celeſtine by the Archb. of Turon, the ſayde Geffrey ſtreightwaies after his conſecration differred no time, but would nedes come into England. Wherof the biſhop of Ely hauing intelligence, ſent him worde being at Wiſſand in Flaunders not to preſume to aduenture into the realme, contrary to his othe made to K. Richarde before: commaunding moreouer, that if he came, he ſhould be apprehended. All which notwithſtanding the Archb. letted not for all that, but nedes would repaire to his ſea, & ſo arriued at Douer in the moneth of September, where the Chancelours men ſtode on the ſea ſide to apprehend him. But he by changing his apparel and ſwiftnes of his horſe eſcaped their hands, & came to the mōks houſe of Douer. But the Chancelors men whom he ſent to take him, beſet the church of the Monkes round about, ſo that in no wiſe he could auoid their handes.

The cruell handling of Geffray Archbiſh. of Yorke, by the B. of Ely the Popes Legate and Chauncelor of England.

To make the ſtory ſhort, as the archb. on a day, when he had ſaid maſſe was ſtanding at the altar, with his garmēts yet about him, the rude ſouldiors hauing little good manners, & leſſe deuotion, ſpared not boldly to ruſh into yͤ church, and there laid hands vpon the Archb. as he ſtode: toke him, bound him & dragged him through dirt & mire, (and as we vſe to ſay) through thick and thin, and ſo committed him to Mathew Clerke their conſtable to be kept: wherat the people greatly diſdained, ſeeing him that was a kings ſonne, and the brother of a king ſo to be entreated. The hearing whereof when it came to the eares of Earle John his brother, he being not a little offended therwith, ſent to knowe of the Chancelor whether this was his doing or not. To whome when the Chancellor ſent anſwere againe, & ſtoutly confeſſed the fact to be his, then the Earle ſent commandement that his brother ſhould be deliuered, and ſo he was. Who then comming to London, made hys complaint to the Erle his brother, and to other nobles of the realme, of the iniuries done to him by the Chancelor. Wherupon the Erle ſent for the ſaid Chancelor, & appointed a day peremptorie for him to appeare before the whole body of the Counſell, to make anſwere to ſuch iniuries as he had done, both to the Archb. of York, and alſo to the biſhop of Durham aboue mentioned. But the Chancellour driuing of the time with delayes, would neither come nor ſend. Then the Earle with the Biſhops about him, made their iourney towarde London, to haue the matter there handled in greater audience.

Geffray Archb. of Yorke deliuered out of priſō by cōmandement of Earle John his brother.

A skirmiſh betweene the ſeruants of the B. of Ely and the ſeruants of Earle Iohn.

The Chancelor ſeeing that, withdrewe himſelfe from Windſore to the Citie of London. Where by the way it happened that the ſeruants of the Erle and of the Chancelor, meting, did ſkirmiſh together. In which fray one of the Erles family was ſlaine, but yet his men had the better, and the Chauncelor wͭ his men were put to flight, and ſo fled to the tower, where they did hide themſelues. The next day after (which was about the 12. day of October) Erle John the kings brother, and the Archb. of Roan, wͭ all the biſhops, Erles and Barons, and citizens of London aſſembled together in Paules Churche, where many & great accuſations were laid againſt the ſayd Chancelor, ſo that in fine it was agreed in that aſſembly, that the ſayd Chancelor ſhould be depoſed, and in his place was ſubſtitute the Archb. of Roan, according to the tenor of yͤ kings letters ſent from Meſſana, which was, that certaine other perſons ſhould be aſſociated with yͤ Chancelor for the gouernement of the realme, by whoſe counſaile if he woulde not be directed, the Arch. of Roan ſhuld be ſet in his place, and he to be depoſed. The thirde day after this, the Chancelor firmely promiſed, not to depart out of the realme before he had deliuered out of his handes all ſuch caſtles, the keeping whereof he cōmitted to certaine foreiners and ſtrangers, & for aſſurance therof, he gaue his two brethren and Chamberlain for pledges, and ſo went to Canterbury, where he ſaide he would take the croſſe of a Pilgrime, and leaue the croſſe of his Legateſhip.

The nobles aſſembled in counſell againſt the B. of Ely.

The B. of Ely Chauncelour of the realme and Legate depoſed.

The B. of Ely reſigneth his Caſtels.

Now when he was come to the Caſtle of Douer, and there had remained a fewe daies, contrary to his promiſe made, his purpoſe was to take ſhyp, and to paſſe ouer the Seas. And becauſe he durſt not doe it openly, he deuiſed a new kind of diſguiſing, decking himſelfe in the apparell of a woman, and ſo as gouty as he was, wēt to the ſea ſide in his womans weede, hauing in his hand a met yarde, and on his arme a piece of linnen cloth. And thus as hee was ſitting vpon a rocke waiting for his ſhip to come, and to conuey him ouer, a certaine fiſherman eſpying him, and ſuppoſing the ſame to be a harlot, came to him, & ſo with ſtruggling with him, found him, as he was in deede to be a man in likeneſſe of a woman. Whereat he wondred, and began to make an outcry vpon him. But the biſhops ſeruants being not farre off, came rūning and ſtilled him as well as they could.

The fiſherman then going to the next village, & there belike declaring what he had ſene, to try out yͤ matter further, came out certain women, who ſeing the linnen cloth hanging at his arme, began to queſtion wyth him of the price of his cloth, & what he would take for it. But to this he would anſwer neuer a worde, but ſmiled vppon them. Whereat they muſing with themſelues, & whiſpering one wͭ an other, at laſt with their hands were ſo bold to plucke downe his muffler, and there by his beard newe ſhauen, found him in deede to be a man, & ſo with a loud exclamation raiſed the village vpon him, and woulde haue fallen vpon him with ſtones. Then came running a great multitude both of men and women, who wondering at him, as birds are wont at an Owle, laid hands vpon him, and pluckt him downe to the ground, hailing & drawing him by the ſleeues and collar of his gowne through ſtones and rocks, whereby he was ſhrewdly hurt. His ſeruants once or twice made out to reſcue their olde maiſter, or new miſtres, but could not for the preace of the people, who beating him with their fiſtes, and ſpitting at him, drewe hym through the whole towne, and ſo with ſhame inough at length laide him in a darke cellar in ſteade of a priſon. Of whom al the country about wondred & cried out. In concluſion Earle John hearing therof, within 8. dayes after ſent word, that they ſhould deliuer him, and let him go.

Set at libertie by Iohn Earle of Morton.

The biſhop then ſet at libertie, ſailed ouer as he could, to Flaunders, where he had but cold welcomming. From thence he went to Paris, where he gaue Mauricius their biſhop 60. Markes of ſiluer, to be receiued in, with proceſſion, & ſo he was. Then returned he into Normandy. But the Archbiſhop of Roan there gaue commaundement, that the Church dores ſhould be locked, and no ſeruice ſayde ſo long as he there remained. The biſhop ſeeing that, directeth his letters and meſſengers to Pope Celeſtine, and alſo to king Richard into Syria, ſignifying to them howe John the erle of Morton and his complices had handled him, and expulſed him out of the realme, requiring that he might be reſtored againe to that was taken from him: and alſo offring himſelfe to be tried by the lawe for that he had done, ſo that if the king ſhould diſlike in any thing that he had done, he was ready to ſatiſfie the kings contentation in all things wherein iuſtly he could be charged.

The B. of Ely giueth lx. markes to be receiued with proceſsion.

The Biſh. of Ely complayneth to the King and the Pope.

Upon this pope Celeſtine inflamed with an Apoſtolical zeale in the behalfe of the ſayd Biſhop of Ely his Legate, wrote a ſharpe and thundering letter to the Archb. biſhops, and prelates of England, commanding them by his authority Apoſtolical, that for ſo much as the iniuries done to his Legate, did redounde to the contumelie of the whole mother church of Rome, they ſhould not faile therfore, but with ſeuere cenſures of the Church, that is, wyth booke, bell, and candle, procede as wel againſt the foreſayd John Erle of Morton, as alſo all other, who ſo euer had, or ſhould attempt any violence or iniury againſt the ſayd his legate B. of Ely, with no leſſe ſeuerity, then if the ſayd iniury ſhould be offred to the perſon of the Pope himſelfe, or any other of his brethren the Cardinals. &c.

the which Earle he reſerued a further day of reſpite, before he ſhould be excommunicate, with a number of other moe beſide theſe. Howbeit the ſaide B. of Ely could finde none to execute this commandement of the Pope. Then they wᵗ a generall conſent wrote againe to K. Richard, complaining of the intollerable abuſes of the ſayd B. his Chauncellor. In like ſort the ſayd Chancellor alſo complaining of them, wrote his letters to the king, ſignifying how Earle Iohn his brother, went about to vſurpe his kingdome, & woulde alſo ſhortly ſet the crowne vpon his owne heade, vnles he made the more ſpede homeward. The king then was buſie in repulſing the Saladine, and prepared to lay ſiege againſt Hieruſalem, and got Sclauonia, with diuers other townes from the Saracens, which was in the yere of our Lord 1192. hauing diuers conflicts in yͤ meane ſpace with the Saladine, and euer put him to the worſe. As the king thus was preparing to lay his ſiege againſt Ieruſalem, the Saladine glad to fall to ſome compoſition wᵗ the king, ſent vnto him, that if he would reſtore to him againe Sclauonia, in as good ſtate as it was when he tooke it, hee would graunt to him, and to all Chriſtians in the lande of Ieruſalem truce for 3. yeres, and offred himſelfe thereunto to be ſworn. The king ſeeing the Duke of Burgundy and the frenchmen to ſhrinke from him, and his owne men to decay, and alſo his mony & health to diminiſh, but eſpecially for that he vnderſtode by the B. of Ely his Chancellor, the French king to ſet vp Iohn hys brother to poſſeſſe his kingdome, being counſailed thereto by the Templaries, tooke the truce offred of the Saracens, & ſo began to draw homeward.

In this meane whyle much grudge and ſtrife increaſed more and more betwene the B. of Ely, and the archbiſhop of Roan aboue ſpecified, in ſo much that the Archb. being excommunicate, ſent vp his Clerkes to Pope Celeſtine to complaine of the Biſhop. But the Pope euer ſtode in his purgatiõ. After this, king Richard being taken, and in the cuſtody of Henry the Emperor, the B. of Ely reſorting to him, was ſent by him into England to Alinor his mother, and other nobles. who then returning into England againe, not as Chauncelour, nor as Legate (as he ſayde) but as a ſimple plaine Biſhop, ſo by that meanes was receiued. And not long after, king Richard the next ſpring following returned alſo. who in hys returne driuen by diſtreſſe of weather about the parties of Hiſtria, in a towne called Synaca, was there taken by Limpold duke of the ſame country, and ſo ſold to the Emperor for 60000. markes. who for no ſmall ioy thereof, writeth to Phillip the French king theſe letters here following.

King Richard thus being traiterouſly, taken and ſold to the Emperor by the duke of Auſtrige for 60000. marks, was there kept in cuſtodie a yeare and iij. monethes. In ſome ſtories it is affirmed, that K. Richard returning out of Aſia, came to Italy with proſperous winde, where hee deſired of the pope to be abſolued frõ an othe made againſt his will, and could not obtaine it. And ſo ſetting out from thence toward England, paſſing by the coũtry of Conradus the Marques, whoſe death (he being ſlaine a little before) was falſely imputed by the French king, to the king of England, and there traiterouſly was taken as is before ſaide by Limpoldus Duke of Auſtrige. Albeit in an other ſtory I find the matter more credibly ſet forth, which ſaith thus that king Richard ſlewe the brother of this Limpoldus, playing with him at cheſſe in the french kings court. And Limpoldus taking his vauntage was more cruel againſt him, and deliuered him, as is ſaid, to the Emperor. In whoſe cuſtody he was deteined, during yͤ time aboue mentioned, a yere and 3. months. During the which time of the kings endurance, the French king in the meane ſeaſon ſtirred warre in Normandy. And Erle Iohn yͤ kings brother made ſtir and inuaded England, but the barons and biſhops of the lande mightely wᵗſtode him. And beſieged him in the Caſtell of windſore, where they tooke from him all the caſtels & munitions, which before hee had got. Thus the Erle ſeeing no hope to preuaile in England, & ſuſpecting the deliuerance of the king his brother made in to France, & kept with the French king. At length it was ſo agreed and concluded with the Emperor, that K. Rich. ſhould be releaſed for 14000. pounds. Of the which mony part ſhould remaine to the duke of Auſtrige, the reſt ſhuld be the Emperors. The ſumme of which money was here gathered & made in England, of chalices, croſſes, ſhrines, candleſticks and other church plate, alſo wᵗ publik contribution of friers, abbeis, and other ſubiectes of the realme. whereof parte was preſently paid, & for the reſidue remaining, hoſtages and pledges was taken: which was about the 5. yeare of his raigne. And then it was obtained of the Pope that prieſtes might celebrate wᵗ chalices of latin and tinne. And ſo was granted & continued long after, which mine author (in his Chronicle entituled Eulogium) doeth teſtifie himſelfe to haue ſeene. At what time this foreſayde mony was paid, and the hoſtages geuen for the ranſom of this king. I haue an old ſtorie that ſaith how the foreſaide duke of Auſtrige ſhortly after was plagued by God with v. ſondry plagues: Firſt with burning of his chief towns. Secondly, with the drowning of x. M. of his menne in a floud happening no man could tell how. Thirdly, by turning all the eares of his corne field into wormes. Fourthly, by taking away almoſt all the Nobles of his lande by death. Fiftly, by breaking his own legge, falling from his horſe, which leg he was compelled to cut off with his own hands, & after died vpon the ſame. who then at his death is ſaid to forgeue K. Richard 50000. Markes, & ſent home the hoſtage, that was with him, ex varijs Chron. The booke intituled Eulogium before mentioned, declareth thus, that the ſayde Limpoldus Duke of Auſtrige fell in diſpleaſure with the biſhop of Rome, and died excõmunicate, the next yeare after. At whoſe returne, Erle Iohn hys brother reſorting to him with humble ſubmiſſion: deſired to be pardoned of his tranſgreſſions. To whom king Richard anſwering againe: would God (ſaith he) this your treſpaſſe, as it dieth with mee in obliuion, ſo it may remaine wyth you in remembraunce. And ſo gentlely forgaue him. And after he had againe recouered his holdes and caſtles, cauſed himſelfe to be crowned againe. whych done, he made hys power agaynſt the French king, and draue hym out of Normandy. After that he turned his viage againſt the Welſhmen, and ſubdued them.

The anſw of k. Richar to his brother.

Anno. 1197.

The next yeare following: which was the 1197. yere of the Lord, Philip yͤ french king brake truce made betwene him and king Richarde, whereuppon the king was compelled to ſaile ouer againe to Normandy to withſtand the malice of his enemy. About which time, my ſtory recordeth of one called of ſome Fulco: ſome ſay, he was the Archbyſhop of Roane called Gualter. This Fulco being then in England, and comming to the kings preſence, ſayde vnto him with great courage & boldnes. Thou haſt O mighty King, three daughters very vicious and of euill diſpoſition: take good heede of them, and betimes prouide for them good huſbandes: leaſt by vntimely beſtowing of the ſame, thou ſhalt not onely incurre great hurt and damage, but alſo vtter ruine and deſtruction to thy ſelfe. To whom the king in a rage ſayde: Thou lying and mocking hypocrite, thou knoweſt not where thou art, or what thou ſayeſt: I thinke thou art mad or not well in thy wittes, for I haue neuer a daughter as all the world knoweth, and therefore thou opē lier get thee out of our preſence. To whom Fulco aunſwered: no, and like your grace I lie not, but ſay truth: for you haue iij. daughters, which continually frequēt your court, and wholy poſſeſſe your perſon: and ſuch iij. whores & naughty packes as neuer the like hath bene heard off. I meane miſchieuous pride, gredy couetouſnes and filthy luxurity. And therfore againe I ſay, O king, beware of them, and out of hand prouide mariages for them, leaſt in not ſo doing, thou vtterly vndoe both thy ſelfe and all the whole realme.

3. daughters of the king noted.

The which his wordes, the King tooke in good parte: with correction of himſelf, & confeſſion of the ſame. wherupon incontinently he called his Lordes and Barons before him, vnto whome he declared the cōmoning and monition of Fulco, who had willed hym to beware of his iij. daughters: pride, auarice, and luxurie, with counſel out of hand to marrie them: leaſt further diſcommoditie ſhoulde enſue both to him and the whole realme, whoſe good coūſell (my Lordes) I entende to follow, not doubting of all your conſents therunto. wherefore here before you all, I geue my daughter ſwelling pride to wife, to the proude Templars: my greedie daughter auarice to the couetous order of the Ciſtercian Monkes, and laſt of all, my filthie daughter luxurie, to the riotous prelates of the Churche, whom I thinke to be very meete men for her: and ſo ſeuerally well agreeing to all their natures, that the like matches in this our Realme are not to be found for them. And thus much concerning Fulco.

Not long after this, it befell that a certaine noble perſonage (Lord of Lemonice in litle Britaine, widomarus by name) found a great ſubſtance of treaſure both of golde and ſiluer hid in the ground: wherof a great part he ſent to king Richard, as chiefe Lorde and Prince ouer the whole countrey. which the king refuſed, ſaying, he would either haue all or none, for that he was the principall chiefetaine ouer the land. But the finder woulde not condeſcende to that. wherefore the king laide ſiege to a Caſtell of hys called Galuz, thinking the treaſure to lie there. But the keepers and warders of the Caſtel, ſeeing themſelues not ſufficient to withſtand the king, offered to him the caſtell, deſiring to depart with life and armour. To this the king woulde in no wiſe graunt, but bid them to reenter the caſtell againe, and to defende it in all the forceable wiſe they coulde. It ſo befell, that as the King with the Duke of Brabant went about the caſtel, vewing the places therof: a ſouldiour wythin, named Bertandus Cordoun, ſtroke the king with an arrow in the arme, whereupon the yron remaining and feſtering in the wound, the king within 9. daies after died: who becauſe he was not content with the halfe of the treaſure that an other man founde, loſt all his own treaſure that he had. The king being thus wounded cauſed the man that ſtroke him, to be brought vnto him, and aſked the cauſe of him, why he ſo wounded him. who anſwered againe (as the ſtorie ſayeth) that he thought to kill rather then to be killed. And what puniſhment ſoeuer he ſhould ſuſteine, he was cōtent, ſo that he might kil him, which had before killed his father and brethren. The king hearing his words, freely forgaue him, and cauſed an hundreth ſhillings to be geuē him. Albeit (as the ſtory addeth) after the death of the king, the duke of Brabāce, after great torments cauſed hym to be hāged. Ex hiſtoria Regis Richardi 2. cui initium. De patre iſtius Bruti. &c. The ſtorie of Giſburne ſayeth, that the killer of king Richarde, comming to the French king, thinking to haue a great rewarde, was commanded to be drawen a ſonder wt horſe, and his quarters to be hanged vp.

Vaine feare of purgatory

An other ſtory affirmeth, and Giſburn partly doth teſtifie the ſame, that a litle before the death of K. Richarde: 3. Abbotes of the order Ciſtercian came to him, to whome he was confeſſed. And when he ſawe them ſomewhat ſtay at his abſolution, had theſe wordes: that he did willingly commit his body to the earth, to be eaten of wormes: and his ſoule to the fire of Purgatory there to be tormented til the iudgement, in the hope of God his mercy. Ex Iornalenſ. Giſburn. & alijs.

Ex Iornal. Giſburnenſi. & alijs.

About the raigne of this king, the ſayd Iornalenſis maketh mention of Roger archbiſh. of Yorke, which put out of his Churche the Monkes, and placed for them ſeculare Prieſts: ſaying that he woulde rather wiſh Eccleſiaſticall benefices to be geuen to wanton Prieſts then to abhominable Monkes, & that Thurſtinus did ſinne neuer worſe in al his life, then in building that houſe for monks &c. An other ſtory I haue which ſayth, that this was the Byſhop not of Yorke, but of Couentrie.

Monks put out, and ſecular prieſtes receiued.

The king not long after departed without iſſue: and Iohn his brother reigned after him: in whome, although ſome vices may worthely be reprehēded: eſpecially for his incontinent and too much licentious life, yet was he farre from that deſeruing, for the which he hath bene ſo il reported of diuers wryters: who being led more with affection of Poperie, then with true iudgement and due conſideration, depraued his doings more then the ſincere trueth of the hiſtorie will beare them. Concerning which hiſtorie, after ſo many wryters we thought alſo to beſtowe a little labour: although in this matter we can not be ſo long as I would, and as the matter requireth.

Kyng Iohn.

King Iohn.

After the death of king Richarde called Coeur de Lyon, reigned his brother Iohn Earle of Morton. Afterward the Archbyſhop put the crowne on his head, and ſware him to defend the churche, and to maintaine the ſame in her good lawes, and to deſtroy the euil. And except he thought not in his minde to do this, the Archb. charged him, not to preſume to take on him this dignitie. And on Saint Iohn Baptiſts day next following, king Iohn ſailed into Normandy & came to Roan: where he was royally receiued, and truce concluded betweene him & the French king for a time. And thether came to him the Earle of Flaunders, and all other Lords of Fraunce that were of K. Richards band and frendſhip, and were ſworne vnto him.

Arthur of Britayne.

Not long after this, Philip the French king made Arthur Knight, and tooke his homage for Normandie, Britaine, and al other his poſſeſſions beyond the ſea: and promiſed him helpe againſt K. Iohn. After this King Iohn and the French king talked together wyth theyr Lordes, about one houres ſpace: And the Frenche King aſked ſo much land for himſelf and knight Arthur, that king Iohn would graunt him none, and ſo departed in wrath.

A communication betweene the king of england and the French king.

The ſame yeare, a legate came into Fraunce, and commaunded the King in paine of interdiction, to deliuer one Peter out of priſon, that was elect to a Biſhopricke, and thereupon he was deliuered.

And after that, the Legate came into England, & commaunded K. Iohn vnder paine of interdiction, to deliuer the Archb. which he had kept as priſoner 2. yeares: which the King denied to do, till he had payd him 6000. markes. Becauſe he tooke him in harnes in a field againſt him, and ſware him vpon his deliuerance, yͭ he ſhould neuer weare harneſſe againſt any Chriſten man.

Mariage in the 3. degree forbidden by the pope

Anno. 1200.

This time, diuorce was made betweene K. Iohn and his wife, daughter of the Earle of Gloceſter, becauſe they were in the iij. degree of kinred. And after, by the counſell of the French king, King Iohn wedded Iſabel daughter of the Earle of Anguilla, and then Arthur of Britaine did homage to king Iohn for Britaine and other.

At this time fell ſtrife betwene K. Iohn and Geoffrey the Archbiſhop of Yorke for diuers cauſes: firſt, becauſe he would not ſuffer and permit the Sheriffe of Yorke in ſuch affaires as he had to do for the King within his Dioceſſe. Secondly, becauſe hee did alſo excommunicate the ſayde Sheriffe. Thirdly, becauſe he would not ſaile with him into Normandie, to make the mariage betwene Lewes the French kings ſonne and his niece. &c.

Anno. 1202.

After this, in the yeare of our Lorde 1202. Phillip the French king (in a communication betwene K. Iohn and him) required: that the ſaide K. Iohn ſhould depart with all his landes in Normandy and Pictauia which he had beyond the ſea, vnto Arthur his nephew, and that incontinent, or els he would warre againſt him, and ſo did. For when king Iohn denied that requeſt, the next day folowing, the French king with the ſayde Arthur, ſet vpon certain of his townes and caſtels in Normandy, and put him to much diſquietnes. But he (the Lord ſo prouiding, which is the geuer of all victory) had ſuch repulſe at the Engliſhmens handes: that they purſuing the Frenchmen in their flight, did ſo follow them to their hold, & ſo enforced vpon them: that not onely they tooke the ſayd Arthur priſoner wͭ many other of the Frenchmen: but alſo gaue ſuch an ouerthrow to the reſt, that none was there left to beare tidings home. This Arthur was nephewe to king Iohn, & ſonne to Geffrey, which was the elder ſonne to Iohn. For king Henry the 2. (to make the matter more euident,) had viij. children: one W. which died in his childhoode: the ſeconde Henry, which died alſo his father being yet aliue: the third Geoffrey Erle of Britain, which likewiſe deceaſſed in his fathers daies, leauing behind him two children, Arthur & Brecca. The fourth, Richard coeur de Lyon King: the v. Iohn now reigning: and 3. other daughters beſides. The ſame Arthur being thus taken in warre, was brought before the King at the caſtell of Faleſie in Normandie: who being exhorted wͭ many gentle words to leaue the French king, and to incline to his vncle, anſwered againe ſtoutly & with great indignation: requiring the kingdom of England withal the other dominions therto belōging, to be reſtored to him as to the lawfull heire of the crowne. By reaſon whereof he (prouoking yͤ kings diſpleaſure againſt him) was ſent to yͤ tower of Roan: where at length (whether by leaping into the ditch thinking to make his eſcape, or whether by ſome other priuy hand, or by what chaunce els: it is not yet agreed vpon in ſtories) hee finiſhed his life. By occaſion whereof, the foreſaide K. Iohn was had after in great ſuſpicion: whether iuſtly or vniuſtly, the Lord knoweth.

Anno. 1203.

Normandy loſt and gotten by the French mē.

The yere folowing, Hiſtoriographers write that king Iohn for lacke of reſcue, loſt all his holdes and poſſeſſions in Normandy, through the force of the French king.

After theſe loſſes, came other troubles vpon him: with other as great or more greater enemies (that is wyth the Pope and hys Popelings) by occaſion of chuſing of the Archb. of Cant. as in this hiſtory followeth by Chriſt hys grace, to be declared.

Anno. 1205.

Striuing for the election of the Archb. of Cant.

The yeare of our Lord 1205. about the moneth of Iuly, Hubert the Archbiſhop of Canterbury deceaſed, whoſe deceaſe after it was in Cant. to the Monks knowen: and afore his body was yet committed to the earth: the yonger ſort of the monkes there gathered themſelues together at midnight, and elected their ſuperior Reignold, and without the kings licence or yet knowledge priuely placed him in the Metropolicall ſeate, ſinging Te deum at midnight. And becauſe the king ſhuld not make their electiō of none effect, they charged him by vertue of his othe to kepe al ſecret by the way, and to ſhew nothing what was done before he came to the pope: but he contrary to his oth, ſo ſone as he came in Flanders opened all abroad the matter, and vttered their counſel: whereupon the monkes being not a litle agreued wͭ him, ſent him priuely to the court of Rome out of hand. The next day, the elder monks ſent to yͤ king: deſiring him of his gracious licence Canonically to chooſe their Archb. The king moſt gently & fauorably graunted their petition: requiring them inſtantly and deſiring, that for his ſake they would ſhewe fauour to Iohn Gray then B. of Norwich, as they did in dede: erecting him into that ſeat of their high primacy. Moreouer, becauſe the authority of kings and princes was then but ſmall in their owne dominion without the Popes conſent, & confirmation to the ſame: he ſent alſo to Rome of his own charges, to haue the foreſaid election ratified by the pope. The ſuffraganes of Canterbury then (being not a litle offended at theſe two elections) ſent ſpeedely to Rome to haue them both ſtopped: for that they, had not bene of counſell with them. And hereupon at the laſt grew a moſt prodigious tumult.

Anno. 1206.

Prelates of the Church had thē money inough belike that they could keepe play at Rome againſt their prince. Which thing cauſed the princes after to ſeeke ſuch meanes to cut them ſhort.

The next yeare after, the ſuffraganes of the prouince of Canterbury on the one ſide, and the Monkes of Canterbury on the other ſide: came afore the Pope wͭ their brawling matter. Firſt the Monkes preſenting Reignold their ſuperiour, deſired that their election might be confirmed. The Suffraganes likewiſe complained that the Monkes wold preſume to chuſe the Archbiſhop without their conſent, and therfore deſired by diuers reaſons the firſt election to be of none effect. The Pope deciding the matter betwene both, pronounced with the Monkes, charging the ſuffraganes and Biſhops, to meddle no more wͭ that election, but to let the monkes alone. The monkes of Cant. nowe hauing the whole election in their owne hands, fell alſo at ſquare among themſelues, the yonger ſort with the elder. The yonger ſort which had choſen Reignolde theyr ſuperior, would that election to ſtand. The elder ſort of the Monks replied againe, ſaying: that the firſt election was done by ſtealth and by night and by the yonger part, alſo without the counſell of other monkes: ouer and beſides it was done wythout the kings licēce or appoyntment, and without the due ſolemnitie therunto belonging.

Anno. 1207.

Diſſention among the Monkes of Cant. about the election of the Arch.

And as concerning our election (ſaid they) it was done in the cleare light of the day, by which it had authoritie in preſence of our liege Lord the king and his counſell being willing to the ſame.

This allegation thus proponed: the ſuffraganes proctour or man of law ſtode forth, & proued the former election to be good, and this latter, to be voyde and of no value, after this ſort. Whether the firſt election (ſaith he) were iuſt or vniuſt, ye ought firſt by the law to haue condemned it, afore ye ſhould haue preſumed to the ſecond, but thus yee did not. Therefore is this your latter doing no election at al: and the firſt therfore is rather to be ratified than yours. When they had thus multiplied talke on both ſides, with many friuolous allegations a long time, and coulde not agree vpon one perſon: Pope Innocent condemned both their elections, cōmaunding them to chuſe Stephen Lāgton, then Cardinal of S. Chriſogone for their Archb. The monkes then anſwered, that they durſt not ſo do, without cōſent of their king, and for that it was preiudiciall to their ancient liberties. The Pope by and by (ſayeth the text) as one in a furie, taking the words out of their mouthes, ſaid thus vnto them. We wil ye to know, that we haue ful power and authority ouer the church of Cant. neither are we wont to tary the conſent of princes: therfore we command you in paine of our great curſe yͭ ye choſe him only whom we haue appoynted.

The pride and tyranny of the Pope.

The Monkes at theſe wordes abaſhed and terrified, though they much murmured in their hearts, yet conſented they all in one, and therupon ſang Te Deum. Only doctour Helias Brantfield withdrew himſelfe from that election, whome the king had ſent for the admiſſion of the Biſhop of Norwich.

Stephen Langton made archb. of Canterbury.

Thus was Stephen Langton (in the high Church of Viterby, by the popes hand) made archbiſhop of Canterbury. From thence forth therefore (ſayth Mathew Paris) the pope could do no leſſe but mightily defend him from al vexation and daunger: conſidering that he was his owne deare dearling, and a childe of his owne creation.

Upon this occaſion, king Iohn conceiued an exceding diſpleaſure againſt the Clergie, and Monkes of Canterb. (as he had good cauſe) they doing ſo many euils againſt his Princely prerogatiue. Without his licence they elected their Archb. and put by the Biſhop of Norwich, whome he had apointed. They waſted a great part of his treaſure for the warres: and to bring all to yͤ deuil, they made Stephen Langton their high Metropolitane, whom he tooke for a greuous enemy vnto the whole realm, being alwais ſo familiar wͭ the French king. Wherefore in his anger hee baniſhed them out of the lād, to the number of 64. for this their contumacie and contempt of his regall power.

The king doth expoſtulate with the Pope for conſecrating Stephen Langton Archb. of Cant.

The monkes of Canterburie thus being expulſed, the king forthwith ſendeth meſſengers to the Pope wyth his letters, wherin he doth ſharply and expreſſely expoſtulate with the Pope: Firſt, for that ſo vncourteouſly he repulſed the election of the biſhop of Norwich, and ſet vp one Stephen Langton, a man vnknowne to him, and brought vp amongeſt hys ennemies a long time in the kingdome of Fraunce, conſecrating him Archb. of Cant. and letting the other goe. Alſo (which is more) it redoundeth to the ſubuerſion and derogatiō of the liberties appertaining to his crowne: for notwithſtāding his conſent paſt (being before of the monks not made priuy, which ſhould ſo haue done) yet he raſhly preſumed to promote and preferre an other. Wherfore, he can not maruaile (he ſayth) enough, that neither the ſayd Pope, nor the Court of Rome doth conſider and reuolue with themſelues, how neceſſary his loue and fauour hath bene alwayes hetherto to the ſea of Rome: & that they conſider not what great profite and reuenewes, hath proceeded hetherto to them out of the realme of Enlād: the like wherof hath not ben receiued out of any other countrey beſides, on this ſide the Alpes. He addeth moreouer and ſayth, that for his liberties he wil ſtande (if neede be) vnto death, neither can he be ſo remoued and ſhaken of from the election of the B. of Norwich, which hee ſeeth to be ſo commodious to him and profitable. Finally, hee thus concludeth, ſaying: that in no caſe in this his requeſt he be not heard, hee will ſo prouide by the ſeas, that there ſhalbe no ſuch gadding & courſing any more ouer to rome ſuffring the riches of the lande no more to be tranſported ouer, whereby he ſhoulde be himſelfe the leſſe able to reſiſt his enemies. And ſeing he hath of his own at home, archbiſhops, biſhops, & other prelates of the Churche (both of Engliſh men & of other) ſufficiently prouided & inſtructed in all kinde of knowledge: therfore he ſhal not nede greatly to seeke for iudgement and iustice farther abroad.

When these came to the Popes intelligẽce, he directeth letters to the king againe in this forme.

The Popes letters answering K. John.

INnocentius P. seruant of the seruants of God, to our welbeloued sonne in Christ, the king of England health, & Apostolicall blessing. Where as we haue written to you heretofore, exhorting and entreating you after an humble, diligent, and gẽtle sort (concerning the Church of Cant.) you haue written to vs againe after a threatning sort and vpbraiding manner: both spitefully and also frowardly. And where, as we more and aboue that oure right and duety required, haue borne and geuen to you: you againe for your part haue geuen to vs not so much as by right & duety you are bound to do. And though your deuotion as you say, hath ben to vs very necessary, yet consider againe that ours also is not a litle opportune & expedient for you. And where as we, in such like cases haue not shewed at any time the like honor to any prince as we haue vnto you: you againe haue so much derogated our honor, as no prince els hath presumed to do besides you alone: pretending certaine friuolous causes & occasions I cãnot tel what, why you would not condescend to the election of Steuen Langton Cardinall of S. Chrysogono, chosen by the Monkes of Cant: for that the said Stephẽ as you say hath ben cõuersant & brought vp amongst your enemies, and his person to you vnknowne. But you knowe what is the prouerbe of Salomon: the net is cast, but in vaine in the sight of the flying birdes, &c.

It is pity but this Pope should be honoured of kinges and princes.

With much other matter in the same Epistle, wherein he falleth into the commendation of Steuen Langton his Cardinall, declaring howe learned he was in the liberall artes, and in diuinitie, in so muche he was prebendated at Paris: also come of an honest stocke and an Englishman borne, and not vnknowen to the king, seeing the king had written his letters thrise to him before. Declaring moreouer in the said letter, how the messengers of the King had specified to him an other cause: which was, for ẏ the mõks of Cant. which had to doe in the election, came not to hym before for his cõsent, declaring moreouer in the said letter, how the said messẽgers of the king, intreated in the kings behalfe: that for so much as the popes letters (wherein the king was commaunded to send his proctors to Rome for the same matter) came not to the kings hande, neither did the Monkes direct any such letters or message to the king to haue his consent: therefore the Pope considering the same, woulde graunt so much for the regarde of the kings honor, that the monkes of Cant. should not procede without the kings assent therein. And for as much, as that hath not bene done as yet, therefore they desired some delay therein to be geuen, sufficient for the doing therof. Whereunto he said, that he had graunted, & fulfilled their request, in sending hys letters and messengers once or twise to the king for the same purpose, although he sayd it was not the maner of the sea Apostolique, (who had the fulnesse of power ouer the Church of Cant.) to waite for Princes consents in such elections, who then could not be suffered to do that which they came for. Wherefore in knitting vp his letter, he thus concludeth in these wordes.

A pitifull case that a king cannot constitute an archb. within his owne realme, who him most liketh.

And therfore seeing the matter so standeth, we see no cause why we should require or tary for the kings fauour, or consent any more therein: but intend so to procede in this matter, neither enclining on the right hand nor on the left, according as the canonicall ordinances of the holy fathers shall direct vs: that is (that al impediments & delaies set aside) so to prouide, that the church of Canterburie be no longer destitute of her pastour. Wherefore be it knowne to your discretion or kingly prudence, that for so much as this election of Stephen Langhton hath orderly & concordely thus proceeded without fraud or disceit, vpon a persone meete for the same: therefore, we will not for no mans pleasure, neither may we without daunger of fame and of conscience, deferre or protract any longer the consummation of the sayde election. Wherefore my well beloued sonne, seeing we haue had respect to your honour, aboue that our right and duetie requireth: studie to honour vs so much as your duetie requireth againe, so that you may the more plentifully deserue fauour, both at Gods hands and ours: least that by doing the contrary, you bring your selfe into such a pecke of troubles, as afterwards you shall scarce rid your selfe of againe. For this know for a certaine, in the end it must needes fall out, that hee shall haue the better, vnto whome euery knee (of heauenly, earthly, and infernall creatures) doeth bowe: whose turne I serue in earth, though I be vnworthy. Therfore settle not your self to obey their perswasions, which alwayes desire your vnquietnesse: whereby they may fish the better in the water when it is troubled: but commit your selfe to our pleasure, which vndoubtedly shall turne to your praise, glory, and honor. For it shoulde not be much for your safetie in this cause to resist God and the Church, in whose quarel that blessed Martyr & glorious bishop Thomas hath of late shed his bloud: especially seeing your father and your brother of famous memorie, then kings of Englande, did geue ouer those three wicked customes into the hands of the Legates of the see Apostolique. But if you yeld your selfe humbly into our hands, we will looke that you & yours shall be sufficiently prouided for, that no preiudice may arise hereupon to you warde. Geuen at Laterane the x. yere of our Popedom.

Note the proceedings of this ambitious pope

Tho. Becket he meaneth.

Princes must be subiect to the pope.

Thus hast thou (Gentle Reader) the glorious letter of the proud Pope: I beseeche thee marke it well. Now to the story.

After this letter was sent out, not long after proceedeth a charge and commaundement, sent into England, vnto certayn bishops there: requiring them by authoritie Apostolicall, that if the sayd kyng would not receaue the sayde Prior of Cant. & his mõkes, thẽ they should interdict hym throughout all hys realme. For the executing whereof 4. Byshops were appoynted by the vsurped power of the popes bulles: namely William B. of London. Eustace B. of Ely, Walter B. of Winchester. and Giles B. of Herford. Which sayd foure bishops went vnto the kyng, and shewed theyr commission from the pope as is abouesayd, willing hym to consent thereto. &c.

Foure byshops appointed to interdict the realme.

But the sayd kyng refused the same, and woulde by no meanes graunt to theyr request. Wherupon the departing from hys grace, went the morow after the Annuntiacion of our Lady, and pronounced the sayd generall interdiction throughout all England: so that the church dores were shutte vp with keyes and other fasteninges, and with walles &c.

England interdicted by the pope.

Now when the king heard of this he begon to be moued agaynst them, and tooke all the possessiõs of the 4. byshops into hys hands: appoynting certayne men to keepe the liuings of the clergy throughout the realme, and ẏ they should enioy no part therof. Which being done, ẏ bishops (seeing the same) cursed all them that kept or should meddle with Church goodes, agaynst the will of them ẏ ought them: and vnderstandyng of all that, that the K. nothing regarded their doyngs, they went ouer sea to the Byshop of Canterbury, & informed hym what had happened. Who hearing the same, willed them againe to returne to Caunterbury and he would come thither to them, or els sed certayne persons thither in hys steed, that should do as much as if he were there himselfe. Then when the bishops heard this, they returned agayne to England, to Caunterbury, which tidings came shortly to the K. that they were come agayne thither. And because he might not hymselfe trauaile to thẽ, he sent theyr Byshops, Earles, & Abbots to intreat them that the archb. Stephen whom he had chosen might be admitted, promising the Prior and all the Monkes of Caunterbury in his behalfe, that he should neuer take any thing of the church goodes, agaynst the will of them that owe them, but would make amendes to them of whom he had taken any such goodes: and that the Church shoulde haue all her fraunchises in as ample maner as in S. Edwardes tyme the Confessor it had.

Discipline of the church abused for priuate reuenge.

When the forme of agreement was thus concluded, it was engrossed of payre Indentures, which the foresayd 4. Byshops, to the one part therof set their seales: & the other part the sayd bishops, Erles & abbots, caried to shew the king. When the K. saw the order therof, he liked it wel: saying he would not agree to make restitution of the church goods. So he sent to the 4. byshops agayne, ẏ they should put out that point of restitution. But they answered stoutly ẏ they would not put out one word. Then the king sent word to the Archb. by the 4. bishops, that he should come to Cant. to speake wᵗ him, and for his safe conduit to come and goe againe at his will: he sent his iustices as pledges, Gilbert Peiteuin, William de la Bereuer, and John Letfitz. Which thing thus done, the Archb. Stephen came to Cant. and the K. (hearing therof) came to Chilham: from whence he sent his treasurer the B. of Winchester to him, to haue him put out of the indentures the clause of restitution aforesaid: who denying to alter any word of the same moued ẏ k. in such sort, that immediatly it was proclaimed throughout england at the kinges commaundement, that all those that had any churchliuing and went ouer the sea, should come agayne into England a certaine day, or els lose their liuings for euermore. And further in that proclamation he charged al Shirifs within the realm, to enquire if any Bishops, Abbots, Priors, or any other churchman (from that day forward) receiued any commaũdemẽt that came from the pope, and that they should take his or their body and bring it before him. And also that they shold take into theyr hands for the kings vse, al the churchlands that were geuen to any man through the Archbishop Stephẽ, or by the priors of Cant. from the time of the election of ẏ Archb. And further charged, that all the woods that were the Archb. should be cut downe and solde.

When

Two legates ſent from the Pope.

When tidings came to the Pope that the K. had thus done, being moued thereby with fiery wrath: ſent to ȳ king two Legates (the one called Pandulph, and the other Durant) to warne him in the popes name that he ſhould ceaſe his doinges to holy church, and amend the wrong he had done to the Archb. of Cant. and to the priors & the monks of Cant. and to all the Clergy of England. And further, ȳ he ſhould reſtore the goods agayne that he had taken of the agaynſt their wil, or els they ſhould curſe the K. by name: & to do this, ȳ pope tooke them his letters in Buls patent. Theſe two Legates comming into England, reſorted to ȳ king to Northhampton, where he held his Parliament, & ſaluting him, ſayd: they came from the Pope of Rome, to reforme ȳ peace of holy church. And firſt ſayd they we moniſh you in the popes behalfe, that ye make full reſtitution of the goods & of the land that ye haue rauiſhed holy church of: and that ye receiue Stephen the Archbi. of Cant. into his dignity, and Prior of Cant. and his monkes. And that ye yelde agayne vnto the Archb. all his landes and rentes without any withholding. And ſir, yet moreouer, that ye ſhall make ſuch reſtitution to them, as the Church ſhall thinkk ſufficient, Reſtitution required of the king.

Then aunſwered the K. as touching the Prior and his Monkes of Cant. all that ye haue ſaid I would gladly do, and all thing els that ye would ordaine: but as touching ȳ Archb. I ſhall tell you as it lieth in my hart. Let the Archbiſhop leaue his biſhopricke: and if the pope then ſhal entreat for him, peraduenture I may like to geue him ſome other biſhopricke in England. And vpon this condition I will receiue and admit him.

Then ſayd Pandulph vnto the K. holy Church was wont neuer to diſgrade Archb. without cauſe reaſonable: but euer ſhe was wont to correct princes that were diſobedient to her.

What? how now (quoth the K.) threaten ye me? Nay ſayd Pandolph, but ye haue now opely told vs as it ſtandeth in your hart: and now we will tell you what is the popes will, and thus it ſtandeth. He hath wholy interdicted & curſed you, for the wrongs ye haue done to the holye church and to the Clergy. And forasmuch as ye will dwell ſtill in your malice, and will come to no amendement, ye ſhall vnderſtand: that from this time forward, the ſentences vpon you geuen haue force and ſtrength. And all thoſe that with you haue commoned before this time, whether that they be Earles, Barons or Knightes (or any other whatſoeuer they be) we aſſoyle them ſafely from their ſins vnto this day. And from this time forward (of what condition ſoeuer they be) we accurſe them openly: and ſpecially by this our ſentence, that do with you common. And we aſſoyle moreouer Earles, Barons, knightes and all other maner of men of theyr homages, ſeruice, and fealties, that they ſhould do vnto you. And this thing to confirme, we geue playne power to the B. of Wincheſter, and to the B. of Norwich. And the ſame power we geue agaynſt Scotland to the B. of Rocheſter, & of Saliſbury. And in Wales, we geue the ſame power to the Biſhops of S. Dauid, and of Landaffe, and of S. Aſſe.

Sentence of the popes curſe pronounced againſt the king.

Alſo Sir K. (quoth Pandolph) all the kinges, princes and the great Dukes chriſtened, haue labored to the pope to haue licence to croſſe themſelues, and to warre agaynſt thee, as vpon Gods enemy, and winne thy lande, and to make K. whom it pleaſeth the pope. And we here now aſſoile all thoſe of their ſinnes that will ariſe agaynſt thee here in thine owne land.

The Pope author of rebellion and diſobedience of ſubiectes towardes their prince.

Then the K. hearing this, anſwered: What ſhame may ye do more to me then this.

Pandolph agayne: We ſay to you in verbo Dei: that neither you nor any heir that you haue, after this day ſhall be crowned. So the king ſayd: by him that is almighty God, if I had knowen of this thing before ye came into this lād, and that he had brought me ſuch newes: I ſhould haue made you tary out theſe xij. monthes.

Then aunſwered Pandolph. Full well we thought (at our firſt comming) that ye would haue bene obedient to God, and to holy church: & haue fulfilled the popes commaundement, which we haue ſhewed and pronounced to you, as we were charged therewith. And now ye ſay, that if ye had wiſt the cauſe of our comming, ye would haue made vs tary out a whole yere: which might as well ſay, that ye would haue taken a whole yeares reſpite without the popes leaue: But for to ſuffer what death that ye can ordeine, we ſhall not ſpare to tell you all the popes meſſage and will that he gaue vs in charge.

Like maſter lyke man.

In an other chronicle I finde the wordes betwene the King and Pandolph ſomething otherwiſe deſcribed as though the king ſhould firſt threaten him with hanging if he had foreknowen of his comming in. To whom Pādolph againe ſhould anſwer, that he loked for nothing els at his hand, but to ſuffer for the Churches right. Whereupon the K. being mightely incēſed, departed. The K. the ſame time being at Northhampton willed the ſhirifs and bailifs to bring forth all the priſoners there, ȳ ſuch as had deſerued ſhoulde be put to death: to the entent (as ſome thinke) to make Pandolfus afraide. Among whome was a certaine Clerke, who for counterfaiting the kings coyne, was alſo condemned to be hanged, drawn, & quartered. And moreouer, by the king was commanded (therby to anger Pandolfus, the more as may be thought) to be hanged vp hieſt aboue the reſt. Pādolphus hearing therof, notwithſtanding he ſomwhat began to feare leaſt he ſhould be hanged himſelfe, yet wt ſuch courage as he had, he went to the church to ſet out booke, bel, and candle, charging that no man vnder pain of accurſing, ſhould lay hands vpon the cleark. Upon this the K. and the Cardinall departed in no litle anger. And Pandolfe went to Rome, & reported to the pope and the Cardinals what had bene done.

Then the pope ſummoned al the biſhops, abbots, and clarkes of England to come and repaire to Rome, to conſult what was to be done therein. This councel began the firſt day of October. In the which councel it was decreed by the pope and his aſſembly, that Iohn king of England ſhould be accurſed with all ſuch as helde with him, euery day ſo long as that Councel endured. Albeit this was not yet graunted, that the people ſhoulde be croſſed to fight againſt him, becauſe as yet he had ſhed no bloud. But afterward, the ſayd Pope Innocent ſeeing that K. Iohn by no meanes would ſtoupe vnder his ſubiection, nor vnder the rule of his popiſh ſee, he ſent vnto the French king, vpon remiſſion of all his ſinnes, and of all that went with hym that he ſhould take with him all the power he might, and ſo to inuade the realme of England to deſtroy K. Iohn.

The Popes great curſe.

This occaſion geuen, Pope Innocent yet once againe commanded in paine of his great curſe: that no man ſhuld obey King Iohn, neither yet keepe company with him: he forbad all perſons to eate and drinke with him, to talke with him: to commune or cōſell with him: yea, his owne familiar houſhold to do him any kinde of ſeruice, either at bed or at boord: in church, hall or ſtable. And what folowed therof. The greater parte of them which after ſuch ſort fled from him (by the ordinance of God) of diuers and ſundry diſeaſes the ſame yeare died. And betweene both nations (Engliſh and French) fell that yeare great amitie: but ſecret, ſubtil, and falſe: to the bitter betraying of England. Neither was the pope content onely with this, but moreouer the ſaid Pope Innocent gaue ſentence definitiue (by counſell of his Cardinals) that King Iohn ſhould be put from his ſeat regall and depoſed, and an other put in hys roume. And to the ſpeedie execution thereof, he appoynted the French king Philip, promiſing to geue him full remiſſion of al his ſinnes, & the cleare poſſeſſion of al the realme of England, to him and his heires: if he did either kill him or expell him.

Anno 1212.

The next yeare, the French king began his attempt in hope of the crowne of England: being well manned wyth the Biſhops, Monkes, Prelates, and Prieſtes, and theyr ſeruauntes to maintaine the ſame: bragging of the letters which they had receiued frō the great men there. But behold the worke of God: the Engliſh nauie tooke 300. of the French kings ſhips well loden with wheat, wine, meale, fleſh, armour, and ſuch other like, meete for the warre: and an 100. they brent within the hauen, taking the ſpoyle with them. In the meane time the prieſts wtin Englande, had prouided them a certain falſe counterfait prophet called Peter Wakefield of Poiz: who was an idle gadder about, and a pratling marchant. This Peter, they made to prophecie lies: rumoring his propheſies abroade, to bring the king out of all credite with his people. They noyſed it daily among the commons of the Realme, that Chriſt had twiſe appeared to this prophet of theirs, in ſhape of a child betwene the Prieſts handes, once at Yorke, another time at Pomfret: and that he had breathed vpon him thriſe, ſaying, peace, peace, peace, and teaching many things which he anone after declared to the Byſhops, and bid people amend their naughty liuing. Being rapt alſo in ſpirit (they ſayd) he beheld the ioyes of heauen, and ſorrowes of hell. For ſcant were there three (ſayeth the Chronicle) among a thouſande that liued Chriſtianly. This counterfeit ſoothſayer propheſied of king Iohn: that he ſhoulde raigne no longer then the aſcenſion day, within the yere of our Lord 1213. which was the 14. yere from his coronation, and this (he ſayde) he had by reuelation. Then was it of him demaunded, whether he ſhoulde be ſlaine or be expelled, or ſhould of himſelf geue ouer the crown: He anſwered, that he coulde not tell. But of this he was ſure (he ſayde) that neither he, nor any of his ſtock or linage ſhould raign, that day once finiſhed. The K. hearing of this, laughed muche at it, and made but a ſcoffe thereof. Tuſh (ſayth he) it is but an idiote knaue, and ſuch a one as lacketh his right wyts. But when this fooliſh prophet had ſo eſcaped the daunger of the kings diſpleaſure, & that he made no more of it, he gate him abroade and prated thereof at large (as he was a very idle vagabund) and vſed to rattle and talk more then inough: ſo that they which loued the king, cauſed hym anone after to be apprehended as a malefactor, & to be throwen in priſon, the king not yet knowing therof.

The falſe prophet foūd a lyar.

Anone after, the fame of thys phantaſticall Prophet went all the realme ouer, & his name was knowen euery where (as fooliſhneſſe is much regarded of people, where wiſdom is not in place) ſpecially becauſe he was then impriſoned for the matter, the rumor was the larger: theyr wonderings were the wantonner: their practiſing the fooliſher: their buſy talks & other idle occupying the greater. Continually from thence (as the rude maner of people is) old goſſips tales went abroad, new tales were inuented, fables were added to fables, and lies grew vpon lyes. So that euery day, new ſlanders were raiſed on the king, and not one of them true: rumours aroſe, blaſphemies were ſpred, the enemies reioyſed, & treaſons by the prieſts were maintained, and what likewiſe was ſurmiſed, or other ſubtiltie practiſed, all was then fathered vpon this fooliſhe prophet. As, thus ſayeth Peter Wakefielde: thus hath hee propheſied: and thys ſhall come to paſſe: yea many times when he thought nothing leſſe. When the Aſcenſion day was come which was propheſied of afore: king Iohn cõmanded his regal Tent to be ſpred abroad in ẏ open field, paſſing that day with his noble counſel and men of honor, in the greateſt ſolemnitie that euer hee did afore, ſolacing himſelfe with muſicall inſtruments & ſongs, moſt in ſight amongſt his truſty frends. When that day was paſt in all proſperity and myrth, his enemies being confuſed, turned all to an allegorical vnderſtanding, to make the prophecy good, and ſayd: he is no longer king, for the Pope raigneth & not he, yet raigned he ſtil, & his ſonne after him, to proue that prophet a lier. Then was the king by his cõſel perſwaded, that this falſe prophet had troubled al the realme: peruerted the hearts of the people, and raiſed the cõmons againſt him. For hys wordes went ouer the Sea by the helpe of his Prelates, and came to the French kings eare, & gaue vnto him a great encouragement to inuade ẏ land; he had not els done it ſo ſodenly. But hee was moſt foully deceiued, as all they are & ſhall be, ẏ put their truſt in ſuch darke drowſy dreames of hypocrits. The king therfore cõmanded that he ſhould be drawen & hanged like a traitor.

The falſe prophet proued a lyer of K. Iohn.

The falſe prophet hanged.

After that, the Popiſh Prelates, Monkes, Chanons, Prieſts. &c. ſawe this their crafty iuggling by their famed prophet would not ſpeed, notwithſtanding they had done no little harme thereby, to helpe the matter more forward, they began to trauail and practiſe with pope Innocent of the one ſide, and with the Frẽch king on the other ſide, beſide ſubtile treaſons, which they wrought win the realme, & by their confeſſions in the eare, whereby they both blinded the nobility and commons. The king thus compaſſed about on euery ſide with enemies, and fearing the ſequele thereof, knowing the conſpiracies that were in working againſt him, as wel by the Pope (in al that euer he might) as alſo by Phillip the French king by hys procurement: and moreouer his owne people, eſpecially hys Lords and Barons being rebelliouſly incited againſt him, as by the Popes curſes and interdictions againſt ſuch as tooke hys part, and by his abſolutions & diſpenſations withal thoſe that would rebel againſt him, commaunding them to detaine from him ſuch homage, ſeruice, duties, debts, and al other allegiance that godly ſubiects owe and are bõde to yeld and giue to their liege lord & prince. Al which things conſidered, the King in the 13. yeare of his raigne, for that the French king began to make ſharp inuaſion vpon him within his own Realme, ſent ſpeedy Embaſſadors to the pope (as to the fountaine of al this his miſchief pretenſed) to worke & intreat his peace and reconciliation with him, promiſing to do what ſoeuer the pope ſhould wil him and commaund him in the reformation of himſelf, and reſtitution of all wrongs done to holy Church, and to make due ſatiſfaction therfore vnto all men that could complaine.

K. Iohn ſubmitteth himſelfe to the Pope.

K. Iohn entreateth for peace with the Pope.

Then ſent the Pope againe into England his Legate Pandulphe wyth other Embaſſadours: the king alſo at Canterb. (by letters as it ſhould ſeeme certified from hys owne ambaſſadors) waited their comming. Where the 13. day of May the king receaued them, making vnto them an othe, that of and for al things wherein he ſtode accurſed, he woulde make ample reſtitution and ſatiſfaction. Vnto whom alſo all the Lords & Barons of England (ſo many as there were w the king attending the Legates cõming) ſware in like maner, and that if the king would not accompliſh in euery thing the othe which he had taken, that then they wold cauſe him to hold and confirme ẏ ſame whether ẏ he wold or not (or by ſtrength) to vſe the authors wordes.

Then ſubmitted the king himſelfe vnto the Court of Rome and to the pope: And reſigning gaue vp his dominions and realmes of Englande & Ireland from him and from his heires for euermore ẏ ſhould come of him. Wyth this condition, that the king and his heirs ſhould take againe theſe two dominions of the Pope to ferme, paying yearely therfore to the Court of Rome a 1000. Markes of ſiluer. Then tooke the King the crowne from hys heade, kneeling vpon his knees in the preſence of all his Lordes & Barons of England to Pandulphe the popes chiefe legate, ſaying in this wiſe. Here I reſigne vp the crowne of the realme of England to the Popes hands Innocent the third, & put me wholy in his mercy and ordinance. Then tooke Pandolphe the crowne of king Iohn, and kept it 5. daies as a poſſeſſion & ſeazon taking of theſe two realmes of England and Ireland. Confirming alſo al things promiſed by his charter obligatorie as foloweth.

TO al chriſten people throughout the world dwelling, Iohn by the grace of God K of England, greeting. To your vniuerſitie known be it, that foraſmuch as we haue greeued & offended God & our mother church of Rome: & foraſmuch as we haue neede of the mercy of our Lord Ieſu Chriſt: & we may nothing ſo worthy offer, & cõpetent ſatisfactiõ make to God & to holy church (but if it were our own body) as with our realms of Englãd & of Ireland: Then, by the grace of the holy ghoſt we deſire for to meke vs for the loue of him, that meked him to the death vpon the croſſe. And through counſell of the nobles, earles & Barons we offer & frely graunt to God & to the apoſtles S. Peter & Paul, and to our mother church of Rome, & to our holy father Pope Innocẽt the 3. & to al the popes that come after him, all the realme: patronages of churches of England & of Ireland, with all the appurtenãces, for remiſſion of ſins, & helpe & health of our kings ſoules, & of al chriſtẽ ſoules. So that frõ this time afterward, we wil receiue & hold of our mother church of Rome, as in ferme, doing fealtie to our holy father the Pope Innocent the 3. and to all the Popes that come after him in the maner aboueſayd And in the preſence of the wiſe man Pandolphe the Popes Southdeacon, wee make liege homage, as it were in the popes preſence & we before him were, & that he himſelfe ſhuld haue done al maner things aboueſaid: and therto we bind vs, & all that come after vs & our heires for euermore without any gainſaying to the pope, & eke the ward of the church vacant. And in token of this thing euer for to laſt, we will, confirme, & ordaine, that he be our ſpeciall renter of the foreſaide realmes (ſauing S. Peter pence) in all thing. To the mother church of Rome paying by yere a 1000. markes of ſiluer at 2. times of the yere for al maner cuſtomes that we ſhould do for the ſaide realmes: that is to ſeine, at Michelmas & at Eaſter, that is for England 700. markes and 300. markes for Ireland. Sauing to vs & to our heires, our iuſtices and our other franchiſes. And all theſe things that before ben ſaid, we will that it be firme & ſtable without end: & to that obligation we & all our ſucceſſors, & our heirs in this maner, beth bound: that if we or any of our heirs through any preſumption fal in any point againe theſe things aboue ſayd (and he bene warned and will not right amend him) he ſhall then leſe the foreſaid realmes for euermore: and this charter of obligation and our warrant for euermore be firme and ſtable without gainſaying. We ſhal from this day afterward be true to God & to the mother church of Rome, & to thee Innocent the 3. and to all that commen after thee: and the Realmes of Englande and of Ireland, we ſhall mainteine trewlich in all maner pointes againſt all maner men by our power, through Gods helpe.

The draught of inſtrument obligatory wherein king Iohn reſigneth his kyngdome to the Popes hand. Chriſt was offered a kingdom and would none of it, but the Pope doth not refuſe it.

Upon this obligation, the king was diſcharged the 2. day of Iuly, from that Tirannicall interdiction, vnder which he continued 6. yeares and 3. moneths. But before the releaſement therof, firſt he was miſerably cõpelled (as hath bene declared) to geue ouer both hys crowne & ſcepter to that Antichriſt of Rome, for the ſpace of 5. daies: and his client, vaſſall, feudary, and tenant, to receiue it againe of him, at the handes of an other Cardinall, being bounde obligatorily, both for himſelfe, & for his ſucceſſours to paie yerely (for a knowledge therof) a M. marks, for England & Ireland. Then came they thether, from all partes of the Realme ſo many as had their conſciences wounded for obeying their liege king (as blind Idiotes) and there they were abſolued, euery one of his own biſhop, except ẏ ſpirituall fathers and Eccleſiaſtical ſouldiours, for they were compelled to ſeeke to Rome, as captiues reſerued to the popes owne fatherhode. In this new ruffeling the King eaſily graunted, that abbots, deanes and curates, ſhoulde be elected freely euery where, ſo ẏ the lawes of the realme were truly obſerued. But againſt that, were the biſhops, alledging their Canonical decrees and rules ſynodal, determining the king therein to haue nothing a do: but only to geue his conſent after that they had once elected. But among this ſhauen rable, ſome there were which conſented not to this wicked errour. A ſort alſo there were of the prelates at that time, which were not pleaſed that ẏ lands interdiction ſhoulde ceaſe, til the king had paid al ẏ which their Clergy in all quarters of the realme had demaunded without reaſon: yea, what euery ſaucie ſir Iohn for hys part demãded, euen to the very breaking of their hedges, the ſtealing of theyr appels, and their other occaſional damages, which grew to an incredible ſumme, and impoſſible to be anſwered. Such was the outragious cruel noyſe of that miſchieuous progenie Antichriſt, againſt their naturall king.

Notwithſtanding, that which is vttered afore concerning the bitter malice of the Clergye againſt their Prince: yet did the Popes Legate, and Cardinall Nicolaus Tuſculanus, much fauor his doings, & allow his procedings. wherfore they reported of him, that he was exceding parcial, & regarded not their matters eccleſiaſtical as he ſhuld haue done, for leauing the accompt of their reſtitutiõs. He went with the kings officers (as the kings pleaſure was) to the Cathedral minſters, abbeys, priories, deanries, and great Churches vacant. And there, for the next incumbent alwaies he appointed two: one for ẏ king, an other for the parties. But vpon him only whome the king nominated, he compelled moſt commonly the election to paſſe: whych vexed them wonderfully. Upon this therefore, they raiſed a new cõſpiracy againſt the kings perſon, by helpe of their biſhops, ſeditious prelates, & ſuch noble men as they had drawen to their parties. we beheld (ſayth Houeden) about the ſame time many noble houſes and aſſemblies deuided in many places: the fathers and the aged men ſtode vpon ẏ kings part, but the yonger ſort contrary. And ſome there were, that for loue of their kindred, and in other ſondry reſpects, forſoke the king again: yea, and the ſame went that time (ſayth he) that they were cõfederated with Alexander the Scottiſh king, and Ieoline the Prince of wales, to worke him an vtter miſchiefe. A councell at Oxforde the Archb. called: where at ſome would not tary, conſidering the confuſion therof: the other ſort (hauing very obſtinate hearts) reuiled the king moſt ſpitefully behind his backe, and ſayd: that from thenceforth he ought to be taken for no gouernour of theirs. Their outragious and franticke clamours ſo much preuailed in thoſe daies, that it grewe to a grieuous tumult, and a moſt perillous commotion.

Anno. 1215.

The councell of Lateran holden by pope Innocent.

In the yeare of our Lorde 1215. as wytneſſeth Paulus Æmilius & other hyſtories: Pope Innocent the third helde a general Synode at Rome, called the councell Laterane. The chiefe cauſes of that councell were theſe: In the daies of this Innocent, hereſie (as he calleth the truth of God, or the doctrine that rebuketh ſinne) began to riſe vp very high, and to ſpread forth his braunches abroad. By reaſon wherof, many Princes were excommunicate as Otho the Emperour, Iohn the king of England, Peter king of Aragon, Raimund the Earle of Tholouſe, Aquitania, Sataloni, and ſuch other like, as is ſaid afore. So that it could be no otherwiſe, ſayth Houeden, but with the ſharp axe of the goſpel (ſo called the pope his excommunications) they ought of neceſſitie to haue bene cut off from the Churche. Therfore was this cõucell prouided, proclaimed, and prelates from al nations therunto called. And to colour thoſe miſchiefes which he then went about: hee cauſed it by hys Legates and Cardinals (very craftie marchauntes) to be noiſed abroad, that his entent was therin only to haue the Church vniuerſally reformed: and the holy land from the Turkes handes recouered. But all this was craft & falſehode, as ẏ ſequele therof hath manifeſtly declared. For hys purpoſe thereby was to ſubdue all Princes, and to make himſelfe rich and wealthy, for there he made this antichriſtian act, and eſtabliſhed it by publicke decree, that ẏ pope ſhould haue from thenceforth the correction of all chriſtian Princes, and that no Emperor ſhould be admitted, except he were ſworne before, and were alſo crowned of him. He ordained moreouer, that whatſoeuer he were that ſhould ſpeake euil of the pope, he ſhuld be puniſhed in hel wᵗ eternall damnation. Conradus, Vrſpergenſis, Hieronimus Marius. He prouided confeſſion to helpe theſe matters: he alowed theyr bread a pixe to couer him, and a bell when hee goeth abroad, and made the maſſe equal with Chriſtes Goſpell.

In this Councell was firſt inuented and brought in Tranſubſtantiatiõ: of which Ioannes Scotus, whõ we call Duns, maketh mention in his 4. Booke, wryting in theſe wordes. The words of the ſcripture might be expounded more eaſily, & more plainly without tranſubſtantiatiõ. But the church did chuſe this ſenſe, which is more hard, being mooued thereto, as it ſeemeth chiefly: becauſe that of the Sacraments men ought to holde as the holy Churche of Rome holdeth. &c. And in the ſame place maketh mention of Innocentius the third.

Tranſubſtantiation firſt brought in.

Moreouer, in the ſaid Councel was ſtabliſhed and ratified the wretched and impious act, compelling Prieſtes to abiure lawful Matrimonie. whereupon theſe meeters or verſes were made the ſame time againſt hym, whych here folow vnder wrytten.

Into the higher heauens, good Paul was lifted from below,
And many ſecrete hidden things he learned there to know.
Returnde at length from thence to vs, and teaching rules of life,
He ſaid, let eche man haue his owne and onely wedded wife:
For this and other documents of them that learned be,
Much better and more comely eke it ſeemeth vnto me.
That eche ſhould haue hys own alone, & not his neighbors wife,
Leaſt with his neighbour he do fall in hate and wrathfull ſtrife.
Thy neighbours daughters or their wiues, or nieces to defile,
Vnlawfull is: therefore beware, do not thy ſelfe beguile.
Haue thou thine owne true wedded wife, delite in her alway,
With ſafer minde that thou maieſt looke to ſee the latter day.

Now let vs returne to K. Iohn againe, & marke how the prieſts & their adherents were plagued for their humble handlings of his maieſties wil. In ẏ forſaid councel of Laterane, and the ſame yeare, was Steuen Langton the Archb. of Cant. excommunicated of pope Innocent, wᵗ all thoſe biſhops, prelates, prieſts, barons, & cõmons, which had bene of counſail with him in the former rebellion. And when the ſayde Archb. had made inſtant ſute, of him to be abſolued: anone he made him this anſwer wᵗ great indignation. Brother mine, I ſweare by ſ. Peter, thou ſhalt not ſo ſoone at my hande obteine the benefite of abſolution: for why, thou haſt not only done harme to the K. of Englãd, but alſo thou haſt in a great many of thinges iniured the church of Rome here, & therfore thou ſhalt tary my leyſer. The archb. was alſo at ẏ time ſuſpended out of ẏ Church, and commanded to ſay no maſſe at all, neither yet to exerciſe any other eccleſiaſticall office, becauſe he would not at time cõuenient execute the popes curſe vpon ẏ rebellious Barons. with them the ſaid pope had ben ſo depely offended & angred a litle before, ẏ the great charter of the liberties of England (wᵗ great indignation & countenance moſt terrible) he rent and deſtroyed, by ſentence definitiue condemning it for euer. And by and by therupon curſed all the other rebels, with booke, bel, and candle. The greater captaines of them (with the citizens of London) for that aſſay were pronounced excõmunicate by name, & remained ſtill interdicted. They appealed then to the councel general.

Stephen Langhton ſuſpended out of the Church.

Appeale to the generall councell.

Ann. 1215.

In the ſame yere 1215. were thoſe great men alſo ſummoned to appear at Rome in that general Sinode: which would not conſent to their kings expulſion, nor yet tiranical depoſing. Though they were called (they ſayd) therunto by the Archb. of Cant. and others: and required by othe to ſubſcribe to the ſame, yet coulde they not of conſcience do it, becauſe he had humbled himſelfe, and alſo graunted to keepe peace with all men. Thus was the whole realme miſerably then deuided into two factions through malice of the clergie, ſo ſtrifes encreaſed in the lande euery where. Yet were there of the Lordes & gentlemen a great number at that time, that followed the king and alowed his doings. But they which were on the other ſide (not a little ſuſpecting the ſtate that they were in) fled ſpeedely to the French K. Phillip: deſiring him that he would graunt to them his eldeſt ſonne Ludowike, and they would elect him to be their K. and that without much tariance. They beſought him moreouer, that he would ſende with him a ſtrong and mighty power, as were able to ſubdue him vtterly, that they might (they ſaid) be deliuered of ſuch a wicked tyrant. Such was the reporte, that thoſe moſt wicked papiſts gaue their chriſtian gouernor, appoynted to them of God: whome they ought to haue obeyed, though he had bene euill, euen for very conſcience ſake. Rom. 13. And as certaine of the Lordes and Barons were buſie to chuſe the ſayde Ludowike for their king, the Pope ſent thether one Gualo the Cardinal of S. Martin to thoſe raſh and cruel attempts, charging the French king vpon his allegeance, that he with all power poſſible, ſhould fauour, maintaine, and defend king Iohn of England, his feudary or tenant. The French king therto made anſwer, as one not cõtented with that arrogant precept. The realme of Englande ſayd he, was neuer yet any part of S. Peters patrimony, neither is it now, nor yet any time ſhalbe hereafter. Thys ſpake he, for that he was in hope to obtain it for his ſonne, by treaſon of the Barons.

The diſcord betwene the nobles and the kyng.

Gualo Cardinall ſent into Englãd.

No prince or potentate (ſaid Phillip the French king) may pledge or geue away his kingdome: which is (beſide the realme) the gouernment of his whole cōmon wealth, wᵗout the lawful conſent of his Barons, which are bound to defend the ſame. If yͤ pope ſhal introduce or ſet vp ſuch a preſident in chriſtianitie, he ſhall at his pleaſure bring all chriſtian kings, and their kingdoms to naught. I like not this example, in theſe daies begon. I cānot therfore allow this fact of king Iohn of England: though he be my vtter aduerſarie, yet I much lament that he hath ſo endamaged his realme, & hath brought that noble ground and Quene of prouinces, vnder miſerable tribute. The chiefe Lordes and men of his nobilitie ſtãding by, when he vttred theſe wordes (being as it were in a fury) cried with one voyce: By the blud of God, in whom we truſt to be ſaued, we wil ſticke in this article to the loſing of our heads. Let the K. of England do therein what him liketh: no king may put his land vnder tribute, & ſo make his nobility captiue ſeruants. With yͭ came in Ludowike the kings eldeſt ſonne, and ſo ſayd vnto them all there preſent. I beſeeche you, let not my purpoſed iourney: The Barons of England haue elected me for theyr Lorde and king, and I will not ſurely loſe my right: but I wil fight for it euen to the very death, yea ſo long as hart ſhall ſtir within my breſt: and I doubt not but I ſhall well obtaine it: for I haue frendes among them. Hys father the king ſtoode ſtill as he had bene in a dompe, & anſwered neuer a word, but fared as though he had diſſembled yͤ matter. Belike he miſtruſted ſome thing therein, as he might well inough: for all was procured by the prieſtes, that they might liue licentiouſly in all wealth and fredome from the kings yoke.

The French kyng and his ſonne reaſoning about England.

Prelates and prieſtes conſpiring againſt the kyng.

About the ſame time were ſuch treaſons and conſpiracies wrought by the Biſhops, Prieſtes, and Monkes, throughout all the realme, that the king knew not where to become, or finde truſty frendes: he was then compelled by the vncertaintie of his ſubiectes to trauaile from place to place, but not without a great armie of men: looking euery day when his Barons & their confederates would cruelly ſet vpon him. At laſt he came to Douer, and there looked for aide from other quarters, which loued him better then did hys owne people. And thether to him reſorted from Flaunders, Brabant & Holland, on the one ſide: and from Guiane, Gaſcoine, & Poitiers, on the other ſide: and from other countries more, a wonderfull number of men. The report then went, that the pope had wrytten to thoſe countreis, mightely to aſſiſt him for diuers cõſiderations: one was, for that he had both ſubmitted himſelfe, and hys dominion to his protection. An other was, becauſe he had taken on him (a little before) the liuery of the croſſe, to win againe Hieruſalem. The third was, for that he had gotten by him the dominion of England and Ireland, and feared to loſe both, if he ſhould chance to decay. For the ſpace of 3. moneths he remained in the Iſle of Wight, abroade in the aire, to quiet himſelf for a time from al manar of tumults: and led there a ſolitary life, among riuers and watermen: where as hee rather counted to die then to liue, being ſo traiterouſly handled of his Biſhops and Barons, and not knowing howe to be iuſtly aduenged of them. Vppon the Purification day of our Lady therfore, he tooke vpon him the croſſe or viage againſt the Turks for recouery of Hieruſalem: moued therunto rather for the doubts which he had of his people, then for any other deuotion elſe. And thus he ſaid to his familiar ſeruãts: ſince I ſubmitted my ſelfe and my lands, England and Ireland to the church of Rome (ſorow come to it) neuer thing proſpered with me, but all hath gone againſt me.

{ Anno. 1216. }

Walter Gray Archb. of York.

In the next yeare after 1216. was Symon Langton choſen Archbiſhop of Yorke: but that election anon after was diſſolued: for informatiō was geuen to the pope, that the ſaid Simon was brother to Steuē Langton the archbiſhop of Cant. which had bene the occaſion of all the tumults which were that time in England. And the Pope had the more hate vnto him, for that he had brought hym vp of nought, and did finde him at that time ſo ſtubburne: wherefore he placed in hys brothers place Walter Graie, the biſhop of Wincheſter.

Gualo the popes Legate.

In the ſame yere, Gualo the popes legate renued hys great curſe vppon Lewes the French kings ſonne, for vſurping vpon king Iohn. Likewiſe vpon Simon Langton and Geruais Hobruge, for prouoking him to yͤ ſame, and that wyth a wonderfull ſolemnitie: for in that doing hee made all the belles to be rong, the candles to be lyght, the doores to be opened, and the boke of excommunicatiōs and interdictions publikely to be read, committing them wholy to the deuil, for their contumacie and contempt. He alſo commanded the Biſhops and Curates, to publiſhe it abroad ouer al the whole realm, to the terror of al his ſubiects. The ſaid Simon & Geruais laughed hym to ſcorne, and derided much his doings in that behalfe, ſaying: that for the iuſt title of Ludowick, they had appealed to the generall councell at Rome.

Radul. Niger. cap. 43. 44.

The popes curſe laught to ſcorn.

The magiſtrates of London and citizens of the ſame, did likewiſe vilipende and diſdainouſly mocke all that the Pope had there commanded and done. And in ſpight both of him and hys legate, they kept company with them that were excommunicated, both at table and at church, ſhewing themſelues thereby, as open contemners, both of him and his lawes. Ludowicke at London taking himſelfe for king, conſtituted Simon Langton for hys high Chancellor, & Geruais Hobruge for his chiefe preacher. By whoſe daily preachings, as well the Barons, and the Citizens themſelues, being both excommunicated, cauſed all the church dores to be opened, and the ſeruice to be ſong, & the ſaid Ludowicke was in all poynts fit for their handes. About this time, was Pandulphus (then Cardinal) collecting the Peter pence, an olde pillage of the Pope: taking great paines therin. And for his great labours in thoſe affaires of holy Church, & for other great myracles beſides: he was then made biſhop of Norwich, to the augmenting of his dignitie and expenſes.

Pandulphus the Popes collector made biſhop of Norwich.

Mat. Pariſ. Radul. Niger. cap. 47.

The great prouidence of God for the helpe of Englande.

It chaunced about this time, that the Vicount of Melun (a very noble mā of the realme of France, which came thether wyth the Prince Ludowicke) to fall deadly ſicke at London: and alſo moued of conſcience to cal certaine of the Engliſh Barons vnto hym (ſuch as were there appoynted to the cuſtodie of that citie) ſayd vnto them. I lament your ſorrowful caſe, and pitie with my heart the deſtruction yͭ is comming towards you and your countrey. The daungerous ſnares which are prepared for your vtter cõfuſion, are hidden from you: ye do not behold them, but take ye hede of them in time. Prince Ludowicke hath ſworne a great oth, & 16. of his Earles and noble men are of counſel with him, that if he obtaine the crowne of England, he will baniſh all them from ſeruice, & depriue them of lands and goods, as many as he findeth nowe to goe againſt their liege king, and are traitours to his noble perſon. And becauſe yee ſhall not take thys tale for a fable, I aſſure you on my faith (lying nowe at the mercy of God) that I was one of them, which was ſworn to the ſame. I haue great conſcience therof, and therfore I geue you this warning. I pittie poore England, which hath bene ſo noble a region, that now it is come to ſo extreme miſery. And when he with teares had lamented it a ſpace, hee returned againe vnto them, and ſaid: my frends, I counſel you earneſtly, to looke to your ſelues, and to prouide the remedy in time, leaſt it come vpon you vnwares. Your king for a ſeaſon hath kept you vnder: but if Ludowicke preuaile, he will put you from all. Of two extreeme euilles, choſe the more eaſy, and keepe that ſecret which I haue tolde you of good will, with that he gaue ouer and departed this life.

When this was once noyſed among the Barons, they were in great heauineſſe: for they ſaw themſelues betrapped euery way, and to be in exceeding great daunger. And this daily augmented that feare which then came vpō the Barons. They were extremely hated of the Pope and his Legates, and euery weeke came vpon them newe excommunications. Daily detriments they had beſides: in theyr poſſeſſions and goodes, in their lands & houſes, corne and cattell, wiues and children: ſo that ſome of them were driuen to ſuch neede, that they were enforced to ſeeke prayes and booties for ſuſtaining theyr miſerable liues. For looke whatſoeuer prince Ludowick obtained by his warres, either territories or caſtels: he gaue them all to his French men (in ſpight of their heads) and ſaid that they were but traitours, like as they had warning afore, whych greeued them worſt of all. At the laſt, they perceiuing that they in ſeeking to auoid one miſchief were ready to fall into an other much worſe: they began to lay their heads together, conſenting to ſubmit themſelues wholy with al humility, to the mercy of their late ſoueraigne, & natural liege Lord, king Iohn. And for that they were ſomewhat in doubt of their liues for the treaſon afore committed: many of the friendes of them which were of moſt credite wͭ him, made ſute for them. So were a great number of them pardoned, after inſtant great ſuit made for them. I heere omit his recouery of Rocheſter caſtle and citie, wͭ many other dangerous aduentures againſt the foreſayd Ludowicke, both at London, Yorke, Lincolne, Wincheſter, Norwiche & other places els, as things not pertaining to my purpoſe. And now I returne to my matter againe.

Into Suffolke and Norffolke hee conſequently iourneyed, with a very ſtrong armie of men: and there, wyth great miſchiefe hee afflicted them, becauſe they had geuen place & were ſworne to his enemies. After that, he deſtroied the Abbeis of Peterborough & Crowland, for the great treaſons which they alſo had wrought againſt him, and ſo he departed from thence into Lincolneſhire.

Pope Innocent the third dyeth.

In this yeare, about the 17. day of Iuly, died Pope Innocent the 3. and was buried in a citie called Peruſium in Italie: where as hee had trauailed to make a peace betweene the Genouaies and the Pyſes, for his owne commoditie and aduauntage. After hym anone ſucceeded one Cintius, otherwiſe called Honorius Tertius, a man of very great age: yet liued he in the papacy 10. yeres and an halfe & more. When this was once knowen in England: greatly reioyced all they which were king Iohns enemies, ſpecially the prieſts: yet had they ſmall cauſe, as will appeare hereafter. They noiſed it al the realme ouer, that this new Pope would ſet a new order, and not rule al things as the other Pope did: thinking therby that he would haue done all thyngs to their commoditie: but they founde it otherwiſe. For he made al them which were excommunicate, to pay double and treble, ere they could be reſtored againe to their former liuings.

K.Iohn poyſoned by a Monke.

Ex Chronico cui titulus Eulogium.

And in the ſelfe ſame yeare, as king Ihon was come to Swineſtead Abbey, not farre from Lincolne, hee reſted there two dayes: where (as moſt writers teſtifie) he was moſt traiterouſly poiſoned by a monke of that Abby, of the ſecte of the Ciſtercians or S. Bernardes brethren, called Simon of Swinſted. As concerning the noble perſonage of this Prince, this witnes geueth Roger Houeden therein: Princeps quidem magnus erat ſed minus fœlix: atque vt Marius vtramq; fortunam expertus. Doubtles (ſayth he) king Iohn was a mighty prince, but not ſo fortunate as many were. Not altogether vnlike to Marius the noble Romaine, he taſted of Fortune both wayes: bountifull in mercie: in warres ſometime he wanne, ſometime againe he loſt. Munificus ac liberalis in exteros fuit, ſed proditionis cauſa ſuorum deprædator, plus aduenis quam ſuis confidens Hee was alſo very bounteous & liberal vnto ſtrangers, but of his owne people (for their daily treaſons ſake) hee was a great oppreſſor, ſo that he truſted more to foreiners then to them.

The ſaying of K.Iohn deryding the Maſſe.

Among other diuers and ſundry cōditions belonging to this king, one there was which is not in him to be reprehended but commended rather: for that being far from the ſuperſtition which kings at that time were commonly ſubiect vnto, regarded not the popiſh Maſſe, as in certaine Chronicles wryting of him may be collected: for ſo I finde teſtified of him by Mat. Pariſienſis, that the king vpon a time in his hunting, comming where a very fat ſtag was cut vp and opened (or howe the Hunters terme it I cannot tell) the king beholding the fatneſſe and the lyking of the ſtagge: See ſaith he, how eaſily and happily he hath liued, and yet for all that he neuer heard any Maſſe.

Simō Monke abſolued of his Abbot for poyſoning his k

The m dyeth own p

It is recorded and founde in the Chronicle of William Caxton, called fructus temporum, and in the 7. Booke. The foreſayde monke Simon, being much offended with certaine talke that the king had at his table, concernyng Ludouicke the Frenche kings ſonne (which then had entred and vſurped vpon him) did caſt in hys wicked heart, howe he moſt ſpeedely might bring him to his ende. And firſt of all he counſelled with his Abbot, ſhewing hym the whole matter, and what hee was minded to doe. Hee alledged for himſelfe the Prophecie of Cayphas, Iohn 11. ſaying: It is better that one man die, then all the people ſhould periſh. I am well contented (ſayeth he) to looſe my life, and ſo become a Martyr, that I may vtterly deſtroy this tyraunt. With that the Abbot did weepe for gladnes, and much commended hys feruent zeale, as hee tooke it. The Monke then being abſolued of his Abbot for doyng this acte (aforehand) went ſecretely into a garden vppon the backe ſide, and finding there a moſt venemous Toad, he ſo pricked hym, and preſſed him with his penknife: that he made him vomit all the poyſon that was wythin hym. This done, he conueyed it into a cuppe of wine, and with a ſmiling and flattering countenance, he ſayde thus to the King: If it ſhall like your Princely maieſtie, here is ſuch a cuppe of wine, as yee neuer dronke a better before in all your life time. I truſt this waſſail ſhal make al England glad. And with that he dranke a great draught thereof, the king pledging him. The Monke anone after went to the farmerye, and there died (his guts guſhing out of his belly) and had continually from thenceforth three Monkes to ſing Maſſe for his ſoule, confirmed by theyr generall chapter. What became after that of king Iohn, yee ſhall knowe right well in the proceſſe following. I woulde ye did marke well the wholeſome proceedings of theſe holy votaries, howe vertuouſly they obey their kings, whome God hath appoynted: and howe religiouſly they beſtow their confeſſions, abſolutions and maſſes.

The king within a ſhort ſpace after (feeling great griefe in his body) aſked for Symon the monke: and aunſwere was made, that he was departed this life. Then god haue mercy vpon me (ſayd he) I ſuſpected as much, after he had ſayd, that al England ſhould therof be glad: he ment now I perceiue then of his owne generation. With yͭ he commanded his chariot to be prepared, for he was not able to ride. So went he from thence to Slaford Caſtel, and from thence to Newerke vpon Trent: and there wͭin leſſe then 3. daies he died. Upon his death bed he much repented his former life, and forgaue all them with a pitifull heart, that had done him iniury, deſiring that his elder ſonne Henrie might be admoniſhed by his example, and to learne by his miſfortunes, to be natural, fauourable, gentle, and louing to his natiue people. When his body was enbaumed and ſpiced (as the maner is of kings) his bowels or intrailes were buried at Cropton Abbey, which was of the ſecte of Premonſtratenſes or Chanons of S. Norbert. His hired ſouldiours, both Engliſhmen and ſtraungers were ſtill about him, and folowed his corpes triumphantly in their armour, till they came to the Cathedrall Church of Worceſter: and there honourably was he buried by Silueſter the biſhop, betwixt S. Oſwalde and S. Wolſtane, 2. Byſhoppes of that Church. He died in the yeare of our Lord 1216. the 19. day of October, after he had raigned in ſuche calamitie, by the ſubtile conueyaunce of his Cleargie 18. yeares 6. monethes, and odde dayes. So ſoone as Kyng Iohn was dead and buryed (as is ſaid afore) the Princes, Lordes and Barons, ſo many as were of his part (as wel of ſtraungers as of them that were borne heere) by counſaile of the Legate Gualo: gathered themſelues together, and all with one conſent proclaimed Henrie his ſonne for their king. Of whome more ſhall followe the Lorde willing) hereafter.

The de K.Iohn

Many opinions are among the Chroniclers of the death of king Iohn. Some of them doe wryte that he died of ſorrowe and heauineſſe of heart, as Polydorus: ſome of ſurfetting in the night, as Radulphus Niger: ſome of a bloudy flixe, as Roger Houeden: ſome of a burning agewe, ſome of a cold ſweat, ſome of eating apples, ſome of eating peares, ſome plummes, &c.

Math. Pariſi. in Vita Iohānis Regis.

Thus you ſee what varietie is among yͤ wryters concerning yͤ death of this king Iohn. Of which wryters, although the moſt agree in this that he was poyſoned by the Monke aboue named: yet Math. Pariſienſis, (ſomething differing from the other) wryting thus concerning his death. That he going frō Linne to Lincolnſhire, and there hearing of the loſſe of hys cariage, & of his treaſures vpon the waſhes, fell in great heauines of minde: in ſo much that he fel therby into a feruēt feuer being at the abbey of Swinſted. This ague he alſo encreaſed through euil ſurfetting & noughty diet, by eating peaches and drinking of new Ciſer, or as we cal it Sider. Thus being ſicke, he was caried from thence to the Caſtel of Laford, and from thence to the good euill and euill good.

This king Iohn being deceaſed, which had many enemies, both of Earles, Barons, & eſpecially of the Popiſh Clergie, Henrie hys eldeſt ſonne was then of the age of 9. yeares. At what time the moſt of the Lordes of England did adhere to Ludouike or Lewes ẏ French kings ſonne, whom they had ſent for before, in diſpleaſure of king Iohn to be their king, and had ſworne to him their allegeaunce. Then william Earle Marſhall a noble man, and of great authority, and a graue and a ſound cõſeller, friendly and quietly called vnto him diuers Earles and Barons: and taking this Henry the young prince, ſonne of king Iohn, ſetteth him before them, vſing theſe wordes: Behold (ſaith he) right honourable and well beloued: although we haue*perſecuted the father of this yong Prince for his euil demeanour, & worthely: yet this yong childe, whome here ye ſee before you, as he is in yeres tender, ſo is he pure and innocent from theſe his fathers doings. Wherfore in as much as euery man is charged only with the burthen of his owne workes and tranſgreſsions: neither ſhall the childe (as the Scripture teacheth vs) beare the iniquity of his father: we ought therefore of duetie and conſcience to pardone this young and tender Prince, and take compaſsion of his age, as ye ſee. And now for ſo much as he is the kings natural and eldeſt ſonne, and muſt be our ſoueraigne and king, and ſucceſſor of this kingdom, come and let vs appoynt him our king and gouernour: and let vs remoue from vs this Lewes the French kings ſonne, & ſuppreſſe his people which is a confuſion and a ſhame to our nation, and the yoke of their ſeruitude let vs caſt off from our ſhoulders. To theſe wordes ſpake & anſwered the Earle of Gloceſter. And by what reaſon or right (ſayd he) can we ſo do, ſeeing we haue called him hether, & haue ſworne to him our feaultie.

Math. Pari- ſi. in vita Io- hãnis Regis.

Whereunto the Earle Marſhall inferred againe and ſayd: Good right and reaſon we haue, and ought of duety to do no leſſe, for that he contrary to our minde and calling hath abuſed our affiance and feaulties. Truthe it is, we called him, & ment to prefer him to be our chieftaine and gouernor: but he eftſones ſurpriſed in pride, hath contemned and deſpiſed vs: and if we ſhal ſo ſuffer him, he will ſubuert and ouerthrow both vs and our nation, and ſo ſhall we remaine a ſpectacle of ſhame to all men, and be as outcaſtes of all the world.

Chron. mac. Giſ- nenſ.

At theſe wordes all they, as inſpired from aboue, cried altogether with one voice: be it ſo, he ſhalbe our king. And ſo the day was appoynted for his coronation, which was the day of Simon & Iude. This coronation was kept not at weſtminſter, for as much as weſtminſter ẏ ſame time was holden of the Frenchmen, but at Gloceſter: the ſafeſt place (as was thought) at that time in the realme. an. 1216. by Swallow the Popes Legate through counſel of all the Lordes and Barons that held with his father king Iohn, to witte, the Biſhop of winchester, Biſhop of Bath, Biſhop of Cheſter, and Biſhop of worceſter, the Earle Radulph of Cheſter, william Earle Marſhal, william Earl of Pembroke, william Tren Earle of Ferers, william de Brier, Serle or Samarike de mal Baron. Theſe were at the crowning of the king at Gloceſter. Many other lordes and Barons there were, which as yet helde wyth Lewes the French kings ſonne, to whom they had done their homage before. And immediatly after the crowning of thys king, he held his cõcell at Briſtow at S. Martines feaſt: where were aſſembled 11. Byſhops of England & wales, with diuers Earles & Barons and knightes of England. All which did ſweare fealtie vnto the king. After which homage thus done to the king, the legate Swalo interdicted wales becauſe they held with the foreſaid Lewes: and alſo the Barons & al other as many as gaue help or counſell to Lewes, or any other that moued or ſtirred any war againſt Henry the new king, he accurſed them. All which notwithſtanding, the ſayde Lewes did not ceaſe, but firſt laid ſiege to the Caſtel of Douer xv. daies: when he could not preuaile there, he toke the caſtel of Berkhamſted, and alſo the caſtel of Hartford, doing much harme in the countreis, in ſpoiling & robbing the people where they went: by reaſon wherof, the Lordes and Commons which held wt the king, aſſembled themſelues together, to driue Lewes and his men out of the land. But ſome of the Barõs with the Frenchmen, in the meane ſeaſon went to Lincoln and toke the Citie, and held it to the vſe of Lewes. which being knowen, eftſoones a greate power of the kinges parte made thether, as the Earle Ranolfe of Cheſter, william Earle Marſhal and william de le Brues, Earle of Ferers, wt many other Lords, and gaue battaile vnto Lewes and his party: ſo that in concluſion Lewes loſt the field, and of his ſide were ſlaine the Earle of Perchis, Saer de Quincy Earle of winchester, Henry de la Bohon Erle of Herford, and ſyr Robert le Fizwater, with diuers other moe. Wherupon Lewes for ſuccour fled to London, cauſing the gates there to be ſhut & kept, waiting there for more ſuccour out of France. which aſſone as the king had knowledge off, immediatly ſent to the Maior and Burges of the Citie, willing them to render them and their Citie to him as their chiefe lord and king, promiſing to graunt to them againe all their fraunchiſes and liberties as in times paſt, & to confirme the ſame by his great Charter and ſeale. In this meane time on Bartholmew euen, Euſtace a French Lord, accompanied with many other Lordes and nobles of Fraunce, came with a great power, to the number of a 100. ſhippes, to aide and aſſiſt the ſayd Lewes. who before they arriued, were encountred vppon the ſeas by Richard king Iohns baſtarde ſonne, who hauing no more but 18. ſhippes to kepe the Cinque portes, ſet egerly vpon them, and through Gods grace, ouercame them. where preſently he ſmote of the heade of Euſtace, the reſt of the Frenche Lordes to the number of 10. hee brought with him to the lande, where he impriſoned them in the Caſtell of Douer, and ſlewe almoſt all theyr men that came with them, and ſonke their ſhips in the ſea, onely 15. ſhips (ſayeth ſome of my ſtories) eſcaped away. Ludouike or Lewes hearing this loſſe of his ſhips and men, and miſdoubting his own life for the great miſchief he had done to the realme, ſought meanes by Swalo, and the Archbiſhop of Caunterburie, and by other Lordes, to be at accorde with the king. with whome at length it was ſo concluded and agreed, that for his coſtes and expenſes he to haue a thouſande pounde of ſiluer geuen. Pariſ. ſpeaketh of 15. thouſand markes (which he borowed of the Londiners) that he ſhoulde departe the realme, neuer to returne into England againe, neither he nor none of his.

And thus peace being confirmed at Merton, Lewes toke his leaue, and being brought honorably to the Sea with the Biſhop of Canterbury & other biſhops, Earles, and Barons, returned home into Fraunce.

Lewes the frẽch kings ſonne driuen out of Englande.

And here ſayth Gisburn. it was truly verified, that was before ſpokẽ of the Frẽch king, father of Lewes: At what time ẏ ſaid Lewes was in Englãd, his father the French king demanded of his meſſengers comming into France, where his ſonne was, and they ſaid at Stamforde: And he aſking againe, whether he had got the Caſtell of Douer, and they ſaid no: Then the father ſwearing by the arme of ſ. The anſwere of the French king concerning his ſonne Lewes.

But the chiefeſt help that repelled Lewes & the Frẽch men out of ẏ realme, and that moſt preferred king Iohns ſonne to the crowne, was the ſingular working of Gods hand, whereof mention was made before, pag.250. which was through the confeſſion of a certaine gentleman of the French hoſt (as Florilegus doeth teſtifie.) who lying ſore ſicke at the point of death, & ſeeing no hope to eſcape, was touched in cōſcience for danger of his ſoules health, openly to confeſſe & vtter to the barons of England, what was the purpoſe of ẏ Frenchmen to do: who were conſpired & ſworn together among themſelues, with a priuy compaction, ẏ ſo ſoone as they ſubdued the land, they ſhould thruſt all the chiefe & nobles thereof, into perpetuall exile out of the realme, where out they ſhould neuer returne againe. This, cōming to the eares of the Barons, as is ſaid: gaue them to conſider more with themſelues, whereby many of them were the more willing to leaue Lewes, and apply to their naturall king and prince. Which no leſſe may alſo be an admonition to all times and ages, for Engliſh men to take heede, not to admit or to place foreine rulers into the realme, leaſt perhaps it followe that they be diſplaced themſelues.

It is a bad wind that bloweth no man profit.

After the happy departure of this Lewes & his French men out of the land, whereby the ſtate of this realme long vexed before, was now ſomewhat more quieted: immediatly Swalo the Legate looking to his harueſt, directeth forth inquiſitors through euery ſhire, to ſearch out all ſuch Biſhops, Abbots, Priors, Canons & Secular prieſtes, of what order or degree ſo euer they were, that with any ſuccor or counſail, did either help, or els conſented to Lewes. For all theſe were exempted out of the charter of pardon & abſolution made before, betweene the king & Lewes. By reaſon whereof no ſmall gaine grewe to the Pope and the Cardinall: for all ſuch were either put out of their liuings and ſent vp to the Pope, or els were faine to fine ſweetely for them. Among whome (beſides a great number of other clerkes, both religious and ſeculare) was Hugo biſhop of Lincolne: who for the recouerie of his biſhoprike, diſburſed 1000. markes to the Pope, and 100. markes to the foreſaid Swalo the Legate, who nowe (as Pariſ. recordeth) by this time had gathered in a faire crop of that, which he did neuer ſowe. Pope innocent the third,

About this ſeaſon, or not much before, died Pope Innocent the 3. in the 19. yere of his popedome: to whoſe cuſtodie, Fredericus the nephewe of Fredericke Barbaroſſa being yet yong, was committed by the Empreſſe his mother, of whom more ſhal follow (the Lord willing) hereafter. After this Innocent, next ſucceeded Pope Honorius the 3. who wryting to yong king Henry in a ſpecial letter, exhorteth him to the loue of vertue, & to the feare of God, namely to be circumſpect with what familiars & reſort, he acquainted himſelfe: but principally aboue al other moniſheth him to reuerence the Churche which is the ſpouſe of Chriſt, and to honor the miniſters therof, in whom Chriſt himſelfe (ſaith he) is both honored or deſpiſed. And this ſemeth the chiefeſt article of that his wryting to him.

Pope Honorius the third.

The effect of the letter of Pope Honorius the 3. to king Henry the 3. Ex pariſien.

A ſtraunge tale of pope Honorius if it be true.

Of this Pope Honorius, Abbas Vrſpergenſis, (who liued in the ſame time) reporteth a ſtraunge wonder, more ſtrange peraduenture then credible, which is this: Honorius being prieſt in Rome (whoſe name was then Centius) and procurator to Iacinthus a Cardinal. So it befell, that his maiſter ſent him abroad about Rome, to borowe & procure mony for him againſt his iourny into Spaine: for pope Clement then intēded to ſend the ſaid Iacinthus his Legate vnto Spaine. As this Centius was walking by himſelſe all ſad and ſollicitous to ſpeede hys maiſters meſſage, commeth to him a certain aged and reuerend father, and aſketh him what cauſe he had to walke ſo heauie and carefull. To whom he anſwered againe, and ſignified the occaſion of his buſines, what then he had to doe. Then the old father ſaid to him: Go and returne home again: for thy maiſter ſaith he, ſhall not at this time goe to Spayne. How ſo quoth the other, how is that true? As true (ſayde he) as it is certaine that the pope ſhall die, and the ſayd thy maiſter ſhall be Pope after him. Centius thinking that to be vnlikely, ſayd: he could not beleeue that to be true. To whome the other inferreth againe. So know this, ſaid he, to be as certaine, as it is true that the citie of Ieruſalē this day is taken of the Saracens, and ſhall not be recouered from them, before the time of thy Papacie. And thus ſpeaking, ſayeth Vrſperg. he voided ſodenly away. Ex Abbate Vrſperg. All which ſayth the ſayd author came afterward to paſſe: and were teſtified of the ſame Honorius being pope afterward in his publike ſermons at Rome. All which I graunt may be, and yet notwͭſtanding this fabulous narration may be a piece of the popes old practiſes ſubtilly inuented, to driue men forth to Ieruſalē to fight, &c. Againe, after Honorius (when he had gouerned x. yeres) followed Gregorius the ix. Whiche two popes were in the tyme of this king Henry 3. and of Fredericke the Emperour, of whome we mynde (Chriſt willing) farther to touch, after that we ſhall haue proſecuted more, concerning the hiſtory of kyng Henry and matters of England.

Ex Abbate Vrſperg. in Chronico.

After that it ſo pleaſed the mercifull prouidence of almighty God, to worke this great mercy vpon the ſtock of K. For the which cauſe, by the nobles and the commons was geuen & graūted agayn vnto the K. ij. ſhillinges for euery plow lād through England. And Hubert of Burgh was made chiefe Iuſtice of Englād, of whoſe troubles more is to be ſaid hereafter. And this was the third yeare of K. Henry, and 50. yeare after the death of Tho. Pope Innocentius. The deedes and decrees of pope Innocent.3.

The lyfe and Actes of pope Innocentius the 3. are partly deſcribed before, how he intruded Stephẽ Langhtõ againſt the kings wil into the archbiſhopricke of Canterbury, ſtirring vp alſo 64. Monkes of the ſame Church of Canterbury, priuily to work agaynſt the king. Moreouer how he did excommunicate the ſayd kyng as a publike enemy of the Church, ſo long as the ſayd King withſtoode his tirannicall doyngs: putting hym and his whole kingdome vnder interdiction, for the ſpace of 5. yeares and 3. monthes. And at length depoſed and depriued hym from hys ſcepter, keeping it in his owne handes for v. dayes. How he abſolued hys ſubiectes from their due obedience & ſubiectiõ vnto hym. How he gaue away his kingdões & poſſeſſions vnto Lewes the Frenche kyngs ſonne, commaunding the ſayd Lewes to ſpoyle hym both of landes & lyfe. whereupon, the K. (being forſakẽ of hys nobles, prelates, & commons) was enforced agaynſt hys will to ſubmit himſelf, and ſware obedience vnto the P. paying vnto him a yearely tribute of a M. markes by yeare, for receauing hys kyngdome agayne, wherby both he & his ſucceſceſſors after him, were vaſſals afterward vnto the P. And theſe were the Apoſtolicall actes of this holy Vicar in the realme of England. Moreouer he condemned Almericus a worthy learned man & a byſhop, for an hereticke, for teaching & holding agaynſt images. Alſo he condemned the doctrine of Ioachim Abbas (whõ we ſpake of before) for heritical. This pope brought firſt into the church the paying of priuate tythes. He ordayned the receauing once a yeare at Eaſter. Vnto the papal decretals he added the decree. Omnis vtriuſq; ſexus. &c. Alſo the reſeruation of the ſacrament, and the goyng with the bell, and light before the Sacrament was by hym appoynted. In the ſayd Counſell of Laterane, he alſo ordayned that the Canon of the Maſſe ſhould be receaued wͭ equall authoritie as thoughe it had proceeded from the Apoſtles thẽſelues. He brought in tranſubſtantiation, looke in the decretals. Titulo 1. De ſumma Trinit & fide Catholica. cap. firmiter credimus.

Item, the ſayd Innocentius the 3. ordayned that none ſhould mary in the third degree, but only in the fourth degree, and ſo vnder.

The pope ſetteth kings and Emperours together by the eares. Philip the Emperour depoſed. Otho the Emperour depoſed.

The ſayd Pope ſtyrred vp Otho agaynſt Phillip the Emperor, becauſe the ſayd Phillip was elected Emperor agaynſt his will. Vpon yͤ occaſion wherof followed much warre and ſlaughter in Germany. And afterward againſt the ſayd Otho, whome he had made Emperour, he ſet vp Fredericke K. of Cicile, and cauſed the archb. of Mayence to pronounce hym excommunicate in all hys titles, and to be depoſed of hys Empire. For the which cauſe the Princes of Germany did inuade hys byſhopricke, ſpoyling and burning hys poſſeſſiõs. The cauſe why the pope ſo did accurſe and depoſe hym, was for that the ſayd Otho did take and occupy cittyes, townes, & caſtles, which the pope ſaid appertayned to hym.

Item, the ſayd pope ordayned that if any prince offended one an other, the correction ſhould appertayne vnto yͤ Pope. In thys Councell of Laterane were Archbiſhops and Primates 61. Byſhops, 400. Martyrs of Alſatia, to the number of all. 100. burned in one day. Ex Herm. Mutio.

In the hiſtory of Hermanus mutius, we read how in the yeare of our Lord. 1212. in thys popes tyme diuers noble men, and other in the countrey of Alſatia, contrary to the tradition of the Romiſh Popes dyd holde, that euery day was free for eating of fleſh, ſo it be done ſoberly. Alſo that they did wickedly which reſtrayned Prieſts and miniſters from their lawfull wyues, for the which cauſe (as is in the foreſayd author) by this poore Innocentius the 3. and hys byſhops, an hundreth of them in one day were burned and Martyred.

Some other hiſtoryes (as Nauclerus) recordeth alſo, yͭ at the ſame tyme many were in the Cittye of Millaine of the ſayd doctrine, which vſed to ſend collects, vnto the foreſayd ſainctes of Alſatia. Ex Nauclero.

Collectes ſent from the brethrẽ of Millane, to them of Alſatia. Obſeruant Friers begã.

In the cronicle of Gualter Hemingford otherwiſe called Giſburnenſis, it is recorded that in the dayes of this K. Iohn, and pope Innocent, began yͤ two ſectes & orders of Friers, one called the preachers order, or black Fryers of S. Dominike. The other called yͤ Minorites of S. Fraunces. The preachers or blacke Fryers order began of one Dominike a Spaniard, about the parts of Tholous, who after he had laboured 10. yeares in preaching agaynſt the Albingenſes, and ſuch other as did hold agaynſt yͤ churche of Rome: afterward comming vp to the Councell of Lateran with Fulco B. of Tholouſe, deſired of the foreſayd Innocent the 3. to haue his order of preaching Fryers cõfirmed, which the pope a great while refuſed to graunt: at length he had a dreame, that the Church of Laterane was ready to fall. which when he beheld, fearing & much ſorrowing thereat, commeth in this Dominicke: who with his ſhouldiours vnderpropped the church, and ſo preſerued yͤ building therof frõ falling: &c. And right well this dreame may ſeeme verified, for yͤ Fryers haue bene alwayes the chief pillers & vpholders of yͤ popes church. Vpon this, yͤ pope (waking out of hys dreame) called Dominike to him and graunted his petition. And ſo came vp this woluiſh order of the Dominickes. I call it woluiſh, for that hys mother when ſhe was great with this Dominicke, dreamed that ſhe had in her wombe a wolfe, which had a burning torch in his mouth. The which dreame, the preachers of that order do greatly aduaunce, and expounded to their orders glory, as well as they can. Neuertheleſſe, howſoe they expound it: they can make a wolfe but to be a wolfe, and this a woluiſh order. The rule which they follow ſemeth to be taken out of S. Auguſtine, as who ſhould ſay, that Chriſtes rule were not inough to make a Chriſtian man. Their profeſſion ſtandeth vpon 3. principall pointes as thus deſcribed. Charitatem habentes, humilitatem ſeruantes, & paupertatem voluntariam poſſidentes: That is, hauing charitie, holding humilitie, and poſſeſſing wilfull pouerty. Their habite and clothing is blacke.

Dominicke.

Friers vpholders of the popes Church.

The Minorite Friers diſcended from Sainct Fraunces.

The order of the Minors or Minorite Friers deſcended from one Francis an Italian, of the city Aſſiſiũ. This Aſſiſian Aſſe, whõ I ſuppoſe was ſome ſimple and rude Idiot, hearing vpon a tyme how Chriſt ſent forth his diſciples to preach: thought to imitate the ſame in himſelf and his diſciples, and ſo left of ſhoes, had but one coate, & that of a courſe clothe. In ſteade of a latchet to hys ſhoe, and of a girdle: he tooke about him a hempen corde, and ſo appareled his diſciples, teaching them to fulfil (for ſo he ſpeaketh) the perfection of the goſpell, to apprehend pouerty, & to walke in the way of holy ſimplicitie. He left in writing to hys diſciples and followers, hys rule whiche he called Regulam Euangelicam. i. the rule of the Goſpell, as though the Goſpell of Chriſt were not a ſufficient rule to all Chriſten men, but it muſt take hys perfection of Frantick Frãcis. And yet for all that great preſumtion of this Francis, and notwithſtanding this hys rule, ſounding to the derogation of Chriſtes Goſpell, he was cõfirmed by this pope Innocent. Yea and ſuch fooles this Frauncis found abroad, that not onely he had followers of hys doltiſh religion (both of the nobles, and vnnobles of Rome) but alſo ſome there were, which builded manſions for hym & hys Fryers. This Frauncis, as he was ſuperſtitious in caſting all things from hym as hys girdle, girding a corde about him, ſo in outwarde chaſtiſing of himſelfe, ſo ſtraight he was to hys fleſhe (leauing the ordinary remedye appoynted by God) that in wynter ſeaſon, he couered hys body with Iſe and Snow. He called pouerty hys Lady, he kept nothing ouer night. So deſirous he was of Martyrdome, that he went to Syria, to the Souldane, whiche receaued him honourably: wherby it may be thought, that (ſurely) he told him not the truth, as S. Iohn Baptiſt dyd in Herods houſe. For truth is ſeldome welcome in courts and in the world. But it is hard to make a martyr of hym which is no true confeſſor. I will here paſſe ouer the fable, howe Chriſt and hys ſayntes dyd marke hym with fiue woundes. Theſe Franciſcans or beggyng Fryers, although they were all vnder one rule and clothing of S. Frauncis: yet they be deuided in many ſectes, and orders: ſome go on treen ſhoes or Pattins, ſome barefooted, ſome regulare Franciſcanes or obſeruauntes, ſome Minors or Minorites, other be called Minimi, other of the Goſpell, other de Caputio. They all differ in many things, but accord in ſuperſtitiõ & hipocriſie. And forſomuch as we haue here entered into the matter of theſe 2. orders of Friers: by the occaſion hereof, I thought a little by the waye to digreſſe from our ſtory, in reciting the whole catologue or tablement of Monkes, Fryers, and Nunnes, of al ſectes rules, and orders ſet vp and confirmed by the Pope. Thus haſt thou, if thou pleaſe (gentle reader) to know what orders and what ſectes of religion haue bene ſet vp by the pope, the catalogue and number of them all, ſo far as we could ſearch them out: not onely in bookes printed of late in Germany, namely by the reuerend father Martine Luther: but alſo conferred with an other engliſh book which came to our handes, containing the ſame like notes of auncient antiquitie, the number of whiche rablement of religious perſons came to 101. Now as I haue reckoned vp the names and varieties of theſe prodigious ſectes: it commeth to minde conſequently to inferre the prophecie of Hildegardis, as well agaynſt the whole route of Romiſh prelates, and the fall of that Church, as eſpecially agaynſt the begging Fryers and ſuche other vnprofitable bellyes of the Church. Thus Hildegardis is holden of the papiſtes themſelues to be a great Prophetiſſe, whoſe prophecie proceedeth in this maner, firſt agaynſt the Prieſtes and prelates of the Romiſhe Church, as followeth.

Hildegardis a Nonne, and (as many iudged a prophetiſſe) liued in the yeare 1146. In her prophecies ſhe doth moſt greeuouſly reprehend, not only the wicked and abhominable lyfe of the ſpirituall papiſtes: but alſo the cōtempt of eccleſiaſticall office, & alſo the horrible deſtruction of the church of Rome. In a certayne place ſhee hath theſe wordes. And now is the law neglected among the ſpirituall people, which neglecte to teach and doe good things The mayſter lykewiſe and the prelates do ſleep: deſpiſing iuſtice & laying it aſide. In a certayne viſion: the Churche appeared to her in the ſhape of a woman, complayning ẏ the prieſtes had berayed her face with duſt, & rent her coat &c. and that they did not ſhyne ouer the people, neyther in doctrine, neyther in exāple of lyfe: but rather contrariwiſe, that they haue driuen the innocent lambe from them. She ſayd moreouer, that all eccleſiaſticall order did euery daye become worſe and worſe, and that prieſtes did not teache but deſtroy the law of God. And for theſe horrible crimes and impieties, ſhe threatneth and prophecieth vnto them Gods moſt heauy wrath and diſpleaſure, and dolefull puniſhmentes. There is no cauſe why the ſpirituall papiſts ſhould flatter themſelues vpon this: that ſhe promiſed agayne to the miniſters of the Church thoſe good things to follow, lyke as Ioannes de Rupe ſciſſa doth, and other ſuche like prophetes: for they ſay it will come to paſſe, that they muſt repent before the tymes be amēded. By which thing (vndoubtedly) they meane, the godly miniſters in ẏ reformed Churches, which for the moſt part were of the ſpirituall nūber, and yet did forſake the diſhoneſt lyfe, & thoſe wicked idolatries. Now, where as the prieſtes & monks, that is, the whole rable and ſpiritualtie doe account Hildegard for a true prophetiſſe: howe they ought to conſider that by her they are more ſeuerely accuſed: not as by a woman, but as by God hymſelf. And I pray you, what abhomination, unpiety, and idolatry hath bene committed ſince that tyme by the ſpiritualtie? I wil note heare a certaine prophecy of hers, taken out of the common places of Henry Token. becauſe we ſee it manifeſtly fulfilled in our time. She prophecieth of the reformation of religion, and ſayth that it ſhall be moſt godly.

A prophe for the de of the Romiſh church

Then ſhall the crowne of Apoſtolicall honour be deuided, becauſe there ſhalbe found no religion among the Apoſtolicall order, & for that cauſe ſhall they deſpiſe the dignitie of that name, and ſhal ſet ouer them other men and other Archbiſh. for the dec of the Ro-miſh church

Then ſhall the crowne of Apoſtolicall honour be deuided, becauſe there ſhalbe found no religion among the Apoſtolicall order, & for that cauſe ſhall they deſpiſe the dignitie of that name, and ſhal ſet ouer them other men and other Archbiſh. In ſo much, that the Apoſtolike ſea of that tyme (by the diminution of hys honour) ſhall haue ſcarſe Rome, and a fewe other Countryes thereabout vnder hys crowne. And theſe thinges ſhall partly come to paſſe by incurſion of warres, and partly alſo by a common coũcell, and conſent of the ſpiritual and ſeculer perſons. Then ſhall iuſtice floriſh, ſo that in thoſe dayes men ſhall honeſtly apply themſelues to the ancient cuſtomes and dicipline of auncient men, and ſhall obſerue them as the auncient men did. The gloſe agreeth &c.

Theſe things thus premiſed, now will we come to the prophecie of the foreſaid Hildegard concerning the foreſaid begging Friers aboue mētioned: reciting her wordes: not only as they are printed in a book, printed of late in Germany, but alſo as my ſelfe haue ſeene and read, agreeing to the ſame booke word for worde, and yet haue the ſame to ſhew: written in old partchment leaues, in ſuch ſort as the thing it ſelfe moſt euidently declareth a great iniquitie of tyme. The wordes of her prophecie be theſe.

Hildegardis ophecying Friers and ookes.

In thoſe dayes ſhal riſe a ſenceles people, proud, greedy, without fayth, & ſubtile, the which ſhall eate the ſinnes of the people, holding a certayne order of fooliſh deuotion vnder the fayned cloke of beggery: preferring themſelues aboue all other, by their fayned deuotion: arrogant in vnderſtanding, and pretending holines: walking without ſhamefaſtnes, or the feare of God: in inuenting many new miſchiefes ſtrong and ſtout. But this order ſhall be accurſed of all wyſe men, and faythfull Chriſtians: they ſhall ceaſe from all labour, and geue themſelues ouer vnto idlenes: chuſing rather to liue through flattery, and begging. Moreouer, they ſhall together ſtudy, how they may peruerſly reſiſt the teachers of the truth, & ſtay them together wͭ the noble men. How to ſeduce and deceiue the nobilitie, for the neceſſitie of their liuing, and pleſures of this world, for the deuill will graft in them foure principall vices (that is to ſay) flattery, enuy, hipocriſie, and ſlaunder. Flattery, that they may haue large giftes geuen them. Enuy, when they ſee giftes geuen vnto other, and not vnto them. Hypocriſie, that by falſe diſſimulation, they may pleaſe men. Detraction, that they may extoll and commend themſelues, and bacbite others, for the prayſe of men, and ſeducing of the ſimple. Alſo, they ſhall inſtantly preache, but without deuotion or example of the Martyrs: and ſhall detracte the ſecular Princes, taking awaye the Sacramentes of the Church from the true paſtors, receauing almes of the poore, diſeaſed, and miſerable, and alſo aſſociating themſelues with the common people: hauing familiaritie with women, inſtructing them how they ſhall deceiue their huſbandes and friendes by their flattery and deceitfull wordes, and to robb their huſbandes to geue it vnto them: for they will take all theſe ſtolne and euill gotten goodes, and ſay: geue it vnto vs, and we will pray for you, ſo that they being curious to hide other mens faults, do vtterly forget their owne. And alas, they will receaue all thinges, of rouers, pickers, ſpoylers, theeues and robbers, of ſacrilegions perſons, vſurers, adulterers, heretickes, ſchiſmatickes, apoſtataes, whores and baudes, of noble men, periurers, marchantes, falſe iudges, ſouldiors tyrauntes, Princes, of ſuch as liue contrary to the lawe, & of many peruerſe and wicked men, following the perſwaſion of the deuill, the ſweetenes of ſinne, a delicate & tranſitory life, and fulnes euen vnto eternall damnation.

All theſe thinges ſhall manifeſtly appeare in them vnto all people, and they (day by day) ſhall waxe more wicked & hard harted: and whē as their wickednes & deceits ſhal be found out, then ſhall their giftes ceaſe, & then ſhal they goe about their houſes hungry, & as mad dogges looking down vpō the earth, & drawing in their neckes as doues, that they might be ſatiſfied with bread: then ſhall the people cry out vpon them. Wo be vnto you ye miſerable children of ſorrowe, the world hath ſeduced you, and the deuill hath bridled your mouthes, your fleſhe is frayle, and your hartes without ſauour, your mindes haue bene vnſtedfaſt and your eyes delited in much vanitie & folly, your dainty bellies deſire dellicate meates, your feet are ſwift to runne vnto miſchiefe. Remember when you were apparantly bleſſed, yet enuious: poore in ſight, but rich, ſimple to ſee to, but mighty flatterers: vnfaythfull betrayers: peruerſe detracters: holy hipocrites: ſubuerters of the truth: ouermuch vpright: proud, vnſhamefaſt, vnſtedfaſt teachers, delicate martyrs, confeſſors for gayne: meeke, but ſlaunderers: religious, but couetous: humble, but proud: pitifull, but hard harted lyers: pleaſaunt flatterers, peacemakers, perſecuters, oppreſſors of the poore, bringing in new ſectes newly inuented of your ſelues: mercifull thought but found wicked, louers of the world, ſellers of pardons, ſpoylers of benefices, vnprofitable orators, ſeditious conſpirators, dronkardes, deſirers of honours, maintainers of miſchiefe, robbers of the worlde, vnſatiable preachers, men pleaſers, ſeducers of women, and ſowers of diſcord, of whom Moyſes the glorious prophet, ſpake very wel in his ſong. A people without counſell or vnderſtanding: would to God they did know, and vnderſtand and foreſee the end. You haue builded vp on high, and whē you could aſcend no higher, then did you fall euen as Simon Magus, whome God ouerthrew, and did ſtrike with a cruell plague, ſo you likewiſe through your falſe doctrin, naughtines, lyes, detractions, & wickednes, are come to ruine. And the people ſhall ſay vnto them, goe ye teachers of wickednes, ſubuerters of truth, brethrē of the Sunamite, fathers of hereſies, falſe Apoſtles, which haue fayned your ſelues to follow the lyfe of the Apoſtles, and yet haue not fulfilled it in part: ye ſonnes of iniquity, we wil not folow the knowledge of your wayes, for pride and preſumption hath deceiued you, and inſatiable concupiſcence hath ſubuerted your erroneous hartes. And when as you would aſcend higher then was meete or comely for you (by the iuſt iudgement of God) you are fallen backe into perpetuall opprobry and ſhame.

This Hildegardis whoſe prophecie we haue mentioned, lyued about the yeare of our Lord. 1146. as was read in Chronico Martini.

Croſſebearer Fryers.

About the ſame tyme that theſe Franciſcans, and Dominicke Friars began (which are aboue mentioned) ſprāg vp alſo the croſſebearers, or crouched Friers, taking their originall & occaſion of Innocent yͤ third: which Innocent rayſed vp an army (ſigned with a Croſſe on their breſt) to fight agaynſt the Albingenſes, whom the pope and his ſect accompted for heretickes, about the partes of Tholouſe. What theſe Albingenſes were, it cannot be well gathered by the olde popiſh hiſtoryes: For if there were any that did hold, teach, or mayntayne agaynſt the Pope, or his papal pride: or withſtand & gainſay his beggarly traditiōs, rites and religions. &c. the hiſtoricians of that time (for the moſt part in writing them) do ſo reproue and miſreporte them (ſuppreſſing the truth of their articles) that they make thē and paynt them forth to be worſe then Turkes and Infidels. And that as I ſuppoſe, cauſed Mathew Pariſienſis and other of that ſort, to write ſo of thē as they did: Otherwiſe, it is to be thought (and ſo I finde in ſome recordes) that the opinions of the ſaid Albingenſes were ſound inough: holding and profeſſing nothing els, but only agaynſt the wāton wealth, pride, and tyranny of the Prelates: denying the Popes authoritie to haue ground of the Scriptures: neyther coulde they away with their ceremonies and traditions, as Images, Pardons, Purgatory of the Romiſh church, calling them (as ſome ſay) blaſphemous occupyinges. &c. Of theſe Albingenſes were ſlayne (at times) and burned, a great multitude, by the meanes of the Pope, and Symon Eccleſiaſticus with other moe. It ſeemeth that theſe Albingenſes were chiefly abhorred of the Pope, becauſe they ſet vp a contrary Pope againſt him, about the coaſtes of Bugarorum. For the which cauſe, the Byſhop called Portinenſis beyng the popes Legate in thoſe quarters, writeth to the Archbiſhop of Roan and other Byſhops in this wiſe.

For ſomuch as mention is here made of theſe ſuperſtitious ſectes of Fryers, and ſuch other beggerly religions, it might ſeeme not much impartinent, being moued by the occaſion hereof, as I haue done in Hildegardis before: ſo now to annexe alſo to the ſame, a certayne other auncient treatiſe treatiſe compyled by Geoffray Chawcer by the way of a Dialogue or queſtions moued in the perſon of a certayne vplandiſh and ſimple ploughman of the country. Whiche treatiſe for the ſame, the author intituled Iacke vpland: wherein is to be ſeene and noted to al the world, the blind ignoraunce and variable diſcord, of theſe irreligious religions, how rude and vnſkilfull they are in matters and principles of our Chriſtian inſtitution. As by the contents of this preſent Dialogue appeareth, the wordes wherof in the ſame old Engliſh, wherein firſt it was ſet forth, in this wiſe doe procede. Wherein alſo thou mayſt ſee, that it is no new thing that their blaſphemous doyngs hath by diuers good men in old tyme bene detected, as there are many and diuers other olde bookes to ſhew.

The blind ignorance of fryers deſcribed.

✻ A treatiſe of Geoffrey Chawcer

Intituled Iacke Vpland.

The fruites of Antichriſt.

I Iacke vpland make my mone to very God and to all true in Chriſt, that Antechriſt and his Diſciples (by colour of holines) walking and deceauing Chriſtes Church by many falſe figures: where through (by Antechriſt and hys) many vertues bene tranſpoſed to vices.

Antichriſt his broode.

But the fellieſt folke that euer Antechriſt found, bene laſt brought into the church and in a wonder wiſe: for they bene of diuers ſectes of Antechriſt, ſowne of diuers countreys and kindreds. And all men knowne well, that they be not obedient to Byſhops, ne liege men to kinges: neyther they tyllen, ne ſowne, weden, ne repen, woode, corne, ne graſſe, neither nothing that man ſhould helpe: but onely themſelues their lyues to ſuſtayne. And theſe men han all maner power of God as they ſeyn in heuyn & in yerth, to ſell heuyn and hell to whom that them liketh, and theſe wretches were neuer where to bene themſelfes.

Patience proueth M. Fryer.

And therfore (Frere) if thine order & rules bene grounded on Goddys law, tell thou me Iacke vpland: that I aſke of thee: and if thou be or thinkeſt to be on Chriſtes ſide keepe thy paciens.

The Fryer muſt anſwere according to Gods worde.

Saint Paule teacheth, that all our deedes ſhould be do in charite: and els it is nought worth, but diſpleaſing to God and harme to our owne ſoules. And for that Freres challenge to be greateſt Clerkes of the Churche, and next following Chriſt in liuing: men ſhould for charite aſke thē ſome queſtions, and praye them to grounde their aunſweres in reaſon and in holy write, for els their aunſwere woulde nought bee worth, be it floriſhed neuer ſo fayre and as mehinke men might ſkilfully aſke thus of a Frere.

Friers may better breake Gods law then mans lawe.

1. ¶ Frere, how many orders be in erth: and which is the perfiteſt order? of what order art thou? who made thyne order? what is thy rule? Is there any perfecter rule then Chriſt himſelfe made? If Chriſtes rule be moſt perfite why ruleſt thou thee not therafter? without more why, ſhall a Frere be more puniſhed if he breke the rule that hys patron made, then if he breke the heeſtes that God hymſefe made?

There is but one religion.

2. Approueth Chriſt any more religions then one, that S. Iames ſpeaketh of? If he approueth no more, why haſt thou left his rule and takeſt an other? why is a Frere apoſtata that leuyth his order & taketh an other ſect, ſith there is but one religion of Chriſt.

The Frier more bound to his habite then the man to his wife.

3. Why be ye wedded faſter to your habites then a man is to hys wife? For a man may leaue hys wife for a yeare or two as many men done, and if you leue your abite a quarter of a yeare, ye ſhuld beholden apoſtataſe.

If the habite make the Fryer religious, as his habit weareth ſo doth his religion.

4. Makith your habite you men of Religion or no? If it do, then euer as it wereth, your religion wereth, and after that that your habite is better, your religion is better: and when ye haue liggin it beſide, then lig ye your religion beſide you, and byn apoſtataſe, why bye ye you ſo precious clothes, ſith no man ſeekith ſuch but for vayne glory, as S. Gregory ſayth.

What betokeneth your great hood, your ſcaplery, your knotted girdle, and your wide cope?

5. Why vſe ye all one colour, more then other Chriſten mē do? what betokeneth that ye bene clothed all in one maner clothing?

Holines of all hipocrites conſiſteth in clothing and outward appearāce

If ye ſay, it betokenith loue and charite: certes, then ye be oft hipocrites, whē any of you hateth other, and in that that ye woole be ſayd holy by your clothing.

Why may not a Frere weare cloathing of an other ſect of Freres, ſith holines ſtondeth not in the clothes.

6. Why hold ye ſilence in one houſe more then an other, ſith men ought ouer all to ſpeke the good & leaue the euil?

Why eate you fleſh in one houſe more then in an other? if your rule and your order be perfite, and the patron that made it?

All Fry found

7. Why gete ye your diſpenſatiōs to haue it more eſy: certes, other it ſeemeth that ye be vnperfite, or he that made it ſo hard: that ye may not hold it. And ſeker, if ye holde not the rule of your patrons, ye be not then her Fryers and ſo ye lye vpon your ſelues.

Fryers be dead and qui beggars.

8. Why make ye you as dede men, when ye be profeſſed, and yet ye be not dede, but more quicke beggers then ye were before? and it ſeemeth euill a dede man to goe about and begge.

9. Why will ye not ſuffer your Nouices, heare your coūſels in your chapter houſe ere that they haue bene profeſſed if your counſels byn true and after Gods law?

Graues for dead and not courtly ſes.

10. Why make ye you ſo coſtly houſes to dwell in? ſith Chriſt did not ſo, and dede men ſhould haue but graues, as falleth it to dead men, and yet ye haue more Courtes then many Lordes of England. For ye mowe wenden through the realme, and each night well nigh lyg in your owne courts, and ſo mow but right few Lordes do.

11. Why heyre ye to ferme your limitors, geuing therefore ech yeare a certayne rent, and will not ſuffer one in an others limitation, right as ye were your ſelfes Lordes of countreys.

Friers not the kings liege men. Friers no mēs pra ers.

Why be ye not vnder your Biſhops viſitations, and liege men to our king.

Why aſke ye no letters of brether heds of other mens prayers, as ye deſire that other men ſhoulde aſke letters of you?

If your letters be good, why graunt ye them not generally to all maner of men for the more charitie?

Friers gr ter and be ter thē Go

12. Mow ye make any man more perfite brother for your prayers then God hath by our beleeue? by our baptiſme and hys owne graunt? if ye mow, certes then ye be aboue GOD.

O vnchari table Fri

Why make ye men beleue that your golden trentall ſong of you to take therefore x. s. or at the leaſt. v. s. wole bring ſoules out of hel, or out of purgatory? if this be ſoth, certes ye might bring al ſoules out of payne, and that will ye nought, and then ye be out of charitie.

13. Why make ye men beleue, that he that is buryed in your habite ſhall neuer come in hell, and ye wyte not of your ſelfe whether ye ſhall to hell or no: and if this were ſothe, ye ſhuld ſell your hye houſes to make many habites, for to ſaue many mens ſoules.

Friers ſte lers of me children.

14. Why ſteale ye mens Children for to make hem of your ſect ſith that theft is againſt Gods heſtes, and ſith your ſect is not perfite: ye know not whether the rule that ye bynde hym to, be beſt for him or worſt.

15. Why vnderneme ye not your brethrē for their treſpas after the law of the Goſpell: ſith that vnderneming is the beſt that may be. But ye put them in priſon oft when they do after Gods law, and by Saint Auguſtines rule: if anye did amiſſe and would not amend him, ye ſhould put hym from you.

Shrift and burials we more gai full then ministring of the ſa ments.

16. Why couete ye ſhrifte and burying of other mens pariſhens, and none other Sacrament that falleth to Chriſten folke.

Why buſſy yee not tohere to ſhrift of pore folk as wel as of rich Lords and Ladyes? ſith they mowe haue more plēty of ſhrift fathers then poore folke mow.

Why ſay ye not the goſpell in howſes of bededred men? as ye do in riche mens that mow go to Churche and heare the Goſpell.

Poore m haue no ſoules ſ my fellow Fryer.

Why couete you not to bury poore folke among you? ſith that they bene moſt holy (as ye ſayne that yee beene for your pouerty.)

17. Why will ye not be at her diriges as ye haue bene at rich mens? ſithe God prayſeth him more then he doth other men.

Theſe be they that will not e ter themſelues nor ſuffer other men that would.

What is thy prayer worth? ſithe thou wilt take therefore: for of all chapmen ye nede to be moſt wiſe for dread of ſimonie.

What cauſe haſt thou that thou wilt not preach the goſpell, as God ſayth that thou ſhouldſt? ſith it is the beſt lore and alſo our beleue.

Why be ye euill apayd that ſecular prieſts ſhuld preach the Goſpell? ſith God himſelfe hath bodden hem.

The Frier getteth by In princip & yet hateth the Goſpel. Iudas for 30 pence, but the prieſt & Frier for 4. pence ſelleth Chri

18. Why hate ye the goſpell to be preached, ſithe ye be ſo much hold therto: for ye wyn more by yere with In principio, then with all the rules that euer your patrons made, and in this minſtrels bene better then ye, for they contrarien not to the mirthis that they maken, but ye contrarien the Goſpell both in word and deede.

19. Frere, when thou receiueſt a peny for to ſay a Maſſe: whether ſelleſt thou Gods body for that peny, or thy prayer or els thy trauell? if thou ſayeſt thou wolt not trauell for to ſay the Maſſe, but for the peny, that certes if this be ſoth then thou loueſt to little mede for thy ſoule, and if thou ſelleſt Gods body, other thy prayer: then it is very ſimonie, and art become a chapman worſe then Iudas that ſolde it for thirty pence.

A compariſon betwene Iudas & the Frier.

20. Why writeſt thou her names in thy tables that yeueth the mony? ſith God knoweth all thing: for it ſeemeth by thy writing: that God would not reward him, but thou write in thy tables, God would els forgetten it.

The Frier writeth becauſe God forgetteth.

Why beariſt thou God in honde and ſclaundreſt hym, that he begged for hys mete? ſithe he was Lorde ouer all, for then had he bene vnwyſe to haue begged, and haue no neede thereto?

Frere after what law ruleſt thou thee? where findeſt thou in Gods law that thou ſhouldeſt thus beg?

21. What maner men needeth for to beg?

For whom oweth ſuch men to beg?

Why beggeſt thou ſo for thy brethren?

If thou ſayeſt, for they haue neede, then thou doeſt it for the more perfection, or els for the leſt, or els for the meane. If it be the moſt perfection of all: then ſhould al thy brethren do ſo, and then no man needed to beg but for himſelfe: for ſo ſhould no man beg but him neded. And if it be the leſt perfection, why loueſt thou then other men more then thy ſelfe? For ſo thou art not wel in charitie, ſith thou ſhouldſt ſeeke the more perfection after thy power, liuing thy ſelfe moſt after God: and thus leauing yͤ imperfectiō thou ſhouldeſt not ſo beg for them. And if it is a good meane thus to beg as thou doeſt, then ſhould no man do ſo, but they bene in this good meane, and yet ſuche a meane graunted to you may neuer be grounded on Gods law: for then both lerid and lewd that bene in meane degre of this world, ſhoulde goe about and beg as ye do. And if all ſhoulde doe ſo, certes well nigh all the world ſhould goe about and beg as ye done, and ſo ſhould there be ten beggers againſt one yeuer.

It is better to labour & geue: then to loiter and beg M. Frier.

Why procureſt thou men to yeue thee their almes, and ſayeſt it is ſo needefull, and thou wilt not thy ſelfe wynne thee that mede?

22. Why wilt not thou beg for poore bedred men that bene poorer then any of your ſect: that liggen and mow not goe about to helpe himſelfes, ſith we be all brethren in God, & that bretherhed paſſeth any other that ye or any mā coulde make, and where moſt neede were, there were moſt perfection, either els ye hold them not your pure brethren but worſe: but then ye be vnperfite in your begging?

Why make ye ſo many mayſters among you: ſithe it is agaynſt the teaching of Chriſt and his Apoſtle.

23. Whoſe bene all your rich courtes that ye han and all your rich iuells? ſith ye ſeyne that ye han nought ne in proper ne in common. If ye ſayne they bene the popes? why gether ye then of poore men and Lords ſo much out of the kinges hand to make your pope riche. And ſithe ye ſayne that it is great perfection to haue nought in proper ne in commen? why be ye ſo faſt about to make the Pope that is your father rich, and put on him imperfection? ſithen ye ſayne that your goodes bene all hys, and he ſhould by reaſon be the moſt perfite man, it ſeemeth openlich that ye ben curſed children ſo to ſclaunder your father and make hym inperfect. And if ye ſayne that the goodes be yours, then do ye ayenſt your rule: and if it be not ayenſt your rule, thē might ye haue both plough and cart and labour as other good men done, and not ſo to beg by loſengery, and idle as ye done. If ye ſay, that it is more perfection to beg them to trauell or worch with your hand, why preach ye not openly and teach all men to doe ſo? ſithe it is the beſt & moſt perfite life to the helpe of their ſoules, as ye make children to beg that might haue bene riche heyres.

Friers begge from al men to make the Pope rich.

If it be imperfectiō to be rich, why do the friers deſire to make the Pope vnperfect.

23. Why make ye not your feſtes to poore men and yeueth hem yeftes, as ye done to the rich? ſith poore men han more nede then the rich.

What betokeneth that ye go tweyne and tweyne together? If ye be out of charitie, ye accord not in ſoule.

Why beg ye and take ſalaries thereto more then other prieſtes? ſith he that moſt taketh, moſt charge hath.

24. Why hold ye not S. Frauncis rule and his teſtamēt? ſith Frauncis ſayth, that God ſhewed him this liuing and this rule: and certes if it were Gods will, the Pope might not fordoe it: or els Frauncis was a lyer that ſayd on this wiſe. And but this teſtament that he made, accorde with Gods will: or els erred he is a lyer that were out of charitie, and as the law ſayth, he is curſed that letteth the rightfull laſt will of a dead man. And this teſtament is the laſt will of Frances that is a dead man: it ſeemeth therefore that all his Freres bene curſed.

If Frances order be cōtrary to Chriſt his teſtament, thē is Frances accurſed.

25. Why will ye not touch no coyned mony with the croſſe ne with the kings hed, as ye done other iuels both of gold and ſiluer? Certes if ye deſpiſe the Croſſe or the kinges hed then ye be worthy to be deſpiſed of God and the king: and ſith ye will receiue mony in your harts, and not with your handes, and it ſeemeth that ye holde more holines in your hands than in your hartes, and then be falſe to God.

He that is more holy in hand thē in heart, is falſe to God.

26. Why haue ye exempt you from our kinges lawes, and viſiting of our byſhops more then other Chriſten men that liuen in this realm: if ye be not gilty of traitory to our realme, or treſpaſſors to our Biſhops? But ye will haue the kinges lawes for the treſpaſſe do to you, and ye wyll haue power of other Byſhops more then other prieſtes, and alſo haue leaue to priſon your brethren as Lordes in your courtes more then other folkes han, that bene the kinges liege men.

A ſubiect to exempt him ſelfe from the lawes of his prince ſmelleth of treaſon.

27. Why ſhall ſome ſect of you Freres pay eche a yeare a certayne to her generall prouinciall or miniſter, or els to her ſoueraignes; but if he ſteale a certayne number of children (as ſome men ſayne) and certayne if this bene ſothe, then ye be conſtreined vpon certayne payne to do theft agaynſt Gods commaundement. Non furtum facies.

Friers are forced to be theeues.

28. Why be ye ſo hardy to graunt by letters of fraternitie to men and women, that they ſhall haue part and merite of all your good dedes, and ye witen neuer whether God be apayd with your dedes becauſe of your ſinne? Alſo ye witen neuer whether that man or woman be in ſtate to be ſaued or damned, then ſhall he haue no merite in heuyn for hys owne dedes ne for none other mans. And all were it ſo, that he ſhould haue part of your good dedes: yet ſhuld he haue no more then God woulde geue him after that he were worthy: and ſo mich ſhal ech man haue of Gods yeft without your limitation. But if ye will ſay that ye bene Gods fellowes, and that he may not doe without your aſſent, then be ye blaſphemers to God.

Workes of ſupererogation.

God is the limiter of neede and reward, and not the Frier.

29. What betokeneth that ye haue ordeyned, that whē ſuch one as ye haue made your brother or ſiſter, and hath a letter of your ſeale, that letter mought be brought in your holy chapter, and there be rad, or els ye will not praye for him. And but ye willen pray eſpecially for all other that were not made your brethren or ſiſtren? then were ye not in right charitie: for that ought to be commen, and namely in Ghoſtly thinges.

Friers will not pray, but for them that be of their fraternitie.

30. Frere, what charitie is this to ouercharge the people by mighty begging vnder color of preaching, or praying, or maſſes ſinging: ſith holy writte biddeth not thus, but euen the contrary: for all ſuch ghoſtly dedes ſhuld be done freely, as God yeueth them freely.

31. Frere, what charitie is this to beguile children or they commen to diſcretion, and bynde hym to your orders that byn not grounded in Gods law, againſt her frendes will: ſithen by this folly bene many Apoſtatacs both in will and dede, and many bene Apoſtatacs in her will, during al her lyfe that would gladly be diſcharged if they wiſt how, and ſo many bene Apoſtatacs, that ſhoulden in other ſtates haue byn true men.

Friers doe make Apoſtatacs.

32. Frere, what charitie is this to make ſo many Freres in euery country to the charge of the people: ſith perſons & vicares alone, ye ſecular prieſts alone, ye monkes & Chanons alone, with biſhops aboue them: were inough to the church to doe prieſtes office? And to adde moe then inough is a foule error, and great charge to the people, and this openly agaynſt Gods will that ordayned all thinges to be done in weight, number and meaſure, and Chriſt himſelfe was apayd with 12. Apoſtles and a few diſciples to preach and doe prieſtes office to all the whole worlde, then was it better do then is now at this tyme by a thouſand dele: and right ſo as foure fingers with a thumbe in a mans hand helpeth a man to worch, and double number of fingers in one hand ſhould let hym more: and ſo the more number yͭ there were paſſing the meaſure of Gods ordinaunce, the more were a man letted to worke. Right ſo (as it ſeemeth) it is of theſe new orders that ben added to the church without grounde of holy writte and Gods ordinaunce.

The number of Friers are ſuperfluous & as neceſſary as ten fingers on one hande.

33. Frere, what charitie is this to the people to lye and ſay that ye follow Chriſt in pouerty more then other mē done, and yet in curious and coſtly howſing, and fine and precious clothing, and delicious and liking feeding, & in treaſure and iewels, & rich ornamentes, Freres paſſen Lordes and other rich worldly men: and ſooneſt they ſhold bryng her cauſe about (be it neuer ſo coſtly) though Gods lawe be put abacke.

See ſo faſt the Frier followeth Chriſt in his pouertie.

34. Frere what charitie is this to gather vp the books of holy writte and put hem in treaſory, and ſo empriſon them from ſecular prieſtes and curates, & by this cautell let hem to preach the Goſpell freely to the people without worldly mede, and alſo to defame good prieſtes of hereſie & lyen on hem openly for to let hem to ſhew gods law by the holy goſpell to the Chriſten people?

Friers are the letters of preaching the Goſpell.

35. Frere, what charitie is thys to ſayne ſo much holines

What holynes is in a friers coat in your bodely clothing (that ye clepe your habite) that many blynd fooles deſiren to die therein more then in an other: and alſo that a Frere that leuith his habite late founden of men, may not be aſſoyled till he take agayne, but is Apoſtata as ye ſeyn, and curſed of God and mā both. The Frere beleueth truth, and patience, chaſtitie, meekenes and ſobriety: yet for the more part of his life, he may ſoone be aſſoyled of his Prior, and if he bring home to his houſe mich goad by the yeare (be it neuer ſo falſly begged & pilled of the poore and nedy people in in countries about) he ſhal behold a noble Frere, O Lord whether this be charitie?

The ſtoutter begger the nobler Fryer.

Why fryers ſo much deſire to haue rich men buryed in their frieries.

36. Frere, what charitie is this to preaſe vpon a riche man, and to entice him to be buryed among you from hys pariſh Church, and to ſuch riche men geue letters of fraternitie confirmed by your generall ſeale, and thereby to beare him in hand that he ſhall haue part of all your maſſes, mattens, preachinges, faſtinges, wakinges, and al other good dedes done by your brethren of your order (both whiles he liuith, and after that he is dead) and yet ye wyten neuer whether your deedes be acceptable to God, ne whether that man that hath that letter be able by good liuing to receiue any parte of your deedes: and yet a poore man (that ye wyte well or ſuppoſen in certaine to haue no good of) ye ne geuen to ſuch letters, though he be a better man to God then ſuch a rich man: neuertheleſſe this poore man doth not retche thereof. For as men ſuppoſen ſuche letters and many other that Freres behotten to men, be full falſe deceites of Fryers: out of all reaſō, and gods law and chriſten mens fayth.

Friers beheſtes are falſe deceits.

37. Frere, what charitie is this, to be Confeſſours of Lordes and Ladies and to other mighty men, and not amend hem in her liuing: but rather as it ſeemeth, to be the bolder to pill her poore tenauntes, and to liue in lechery, & there to dwell in your office of confeſſour for wynning of worldly goodes, and to be holde great by colour of ſuche ghoſtly offices: this ſeemith rather pride of Freres than charitie of God.

Friers deſire to be Lordes and Ladies confeſſors.

38. Frere, what charitie is this to ſayne, that who ſo liuith after your order, liuith moſt perfitely, and next followeth the ſtate of Apoſtles in pouertie and penaunce: & yet the wiſeſt and greateſt clerkes of you, wend or ſed or procure to ẏ court of Rome to be made Cardinals, or biſhops or the popes chaplaines, and to be aſſoyled of the vowe of pouertie and obedience to your miniſters in the which (as ye ſayne) ſtandeth moſt perfection and merite of your orders: and thus ye faren as Phariſeis that ſayen one and do an other to the contrary.

Fryers and Pharites ſay one and doe an other.

Why name ye more the Patrone of your order in your Confiteor when ye beginne maſſe: then other Sayntes, Apoſtles or Martyrs, that holy Churche hold more glorious, then hem? and clepe hem your Patrons and your anowries.

Delemma.

Frere, whether was S. Fraunces in making of hys rule, that hee ſet thine order in, a foole & a lyer, or els wyſe and true? If ye ſayne that he was not a foole, but wiſe, ne a lyer, but true: why ſhewe ye contrary by your doyng? whan by your ſuggeſtion to the pope ye ſayde, that your rule that Fraunces made was ſo harde, that ye might not liue to hold it, without declaration and diſpenſation of the pope. And ſo, by your deede: ne lete your Patrone a foole that made a rule ſo harde, that no man may well keepe: and eke your dede proueth him a lyer, where he ſaith in his rule, that he tooke and learned it of the holy Ghoſt. For how might ye for ſhame pray the Pope vndoe that the holy ghoſt bit, as when ye prayed him to diſpenſe with the hardnes of your order.

Which is the beſt order of Friers.

Frere, whiche of the foure orders of Friers is beſt to a man that knoweth not which is the beſt, but would fayne enter into the beſt, and none other? If thou ſayſt that thine is the beſt, then ſayſt thou that none of the other is as good as thine: and in this ech Frere in the 3. other orders wolle ſay that thou lyeſt, for in the ſelfe maner eche other Freere woll ſay that hys order is beſt. And thus to eche of the 4. orders bene the other three contrary in this poynt: in the which if anye ſayth ſooth, that is one alone, for there may but one be the beſt of foure: ſo followeth it that if each of theſe orders aunſwered to this queſtion as thou doeſt, iij. were falſe, and but one true: and yet no man ſhould wyte who that were. And thus it ſeemeth, that the moſt part of Freeres, byn or ſhould be lyers in this poynt, and they ſhould aunſwere thereto. If you ſay that an other order of the Freres is better then thine, or as good: why tooke ye nat rather therto as to the better, when thou mightſt haue choſe at the beginning: And eke why ſhouldeſt thou be an Apoſtata to leaue thine order, and take thee to that is better, and ſo why goeſt thou not from thine order into that?

Friers neuer agree one with an other.

Frere, is there any perfiter rule of religion than Chriſt Gods ſonne gaue in his Goſpell to his brethren? Or then that religion, that Saint Iames in his Epiſtle maketh mention of? If you ſay yes, then putteſt thou on Chriſt (that is the wiſedome of God the father) vnkunning, vnpower, or euill will: for than he could not make his rule ſo good as an other did his. And ſo he had be vnkunning, that he might not ſo make his rule ſo good as an other man might, and ſo were he vnmighty, and not GOD, as he would not make his rule ſo perfite as an other did his, and ſo he had bene euill willed, namely to himſelfe.

The Fryer thinkes his rule perfiter the Chriſtes, beca[...] be leaue the one and followeth the other.

For if he might, and could, and would haue made a rule perfite without default, & did not: he was not Gods ſonne almighty. For if any other rule be perfiter then Chriſtes, then muſt Chriſtes rule lack of that perfection by as much as the other weren more perfiter, and ſo were default, and Chriſt had fayled in making of his rule: but to put any default or failing in god is blaſphemie. If thou ſay ẏ Chriſts rule, and that religion of that S. Iames maketh mention of, is the perfiteſt: why holdeſt thou not thilke, rule withouten more. And why clepeſt thou the rather of S. Fraunces or S. Dominikes rule or religion, or order, then of Chriſtes rule, or Chriſtes order?

Frere, canſt thou any default or aſſigne in Chriſts rule of the Goſpell (with the which he taught al men ſekerly to be ſaued) if they kept it to her ending? If thou ſay it was to hard, then ſayeſt thou Chriſt lyed: for he ſayd of his rule: My yoke is ſoft, and my burthen light. If thou ſay Chriſtes rule was to light, that may be aſſigned for no default, for the better it may be kept. If thou ſayeſt that there is no default in Chriſtes rule of the Goſpell, ſith Chriſt himſelfe ſaith it is light and eaſy: what neede was it to patrons of Freres, to ad more thereto? and ſo to make an hardar religion to ſaue Fryers, then was the religion of Chriſtes Apoſtles and his diſciples helden and were ſaued by. But if they wolden that her Freres ſaten aboue the Apoſtles in heauen for the harder religion that the kepen here: ſo wold they ſitten in heauen aboue Chriſt himſelf, for they mo and ſtraight obſeruations: than ſo ſhould they bee better then Chriſt himſelfe with miſchaunce.

Dilemma.

Fryers wi[...] ſit in heau[...] aboue the Apoſtles.

Goe now forth & frayne your Clerkes, and grounde ye you in Gods law, & gyf Iack an aunſwere: and when ye han aſſoiled me that I haue ſayd ſadly in truth, I ſhal ſoile thee of thine ordes, and ſaue thee to heauen.

If Freres kun not or mow not excuſe hem of theſe queſtiōs aſked of hem: it ſeemeth that they be horrible gilty againſt God, and her euen Chriſten. For which giltes & defaultes, it were worthy that the order that they call theyr order were fordone. And it is wonder that men ſuſtayne hem or ſuffer hem lyue in ſuch maner. For holy writ biddeth that thou doe well to the meke, and geue not to the wicked, but forbed to geue hem bread, leaſt they be made thereby mightier through you.

After theſe digreſſions, now to returne to the courſe of our ſtory agayne. As Henry this king ſucceeded K. Iohn his father, ſo after Innocent the Pope, came Honorius 3. then Gregorius 9. &c. And after Otho the Emperoure (whom the Pope had once ſet vp, & after depriued agayn) ſucceeded Fredericke the ſecond, as is partly before touched. In the dayes of theſe kinges, popes and Emperors: it were to long to recite al that happened in England, but eſpecially in Germany, betwixt Pope Honorius, Gregorius and Fredericke the Emperour: the horrible tragedy wherof, were inough to fill a whole booke by it ſelfe. But yet we meane God willing, ſomewhat to touche concerning theſe Eccleſiaſtical matters, firſt beginning with this realme of England.

Otho the Emperour ſet vp a[...] depoſed a[...] gaine by [...] Pope.

After that the kingdome of England had bene ſubiected by K. Iohn, as hath bene ſayd, and made tributary to the pope and the Romiſh Church: it is incredible how the inſatiable auarice and greedines of the Romaines did oppreſſe and wring the commons and all eſtates & degrees of the realme, eſpecially beneficed men and ſuch as had any thing of the Church. Who, what for theyr domeſticall charges within the realme, what for the pope, what for the Legates, what for contributing to the holy land, what for relaxations, and other ſubtile ſleightes to get away theyr money, were brought into ſuch ſlauery, captiuitie, and penury, that where as the king neyther durſt nor might remedy their exclamations by himſelfe: yet notwithſtanding by his aduiſe, Symon Mountfort, and the Earle of Leiceiſter, and other noble men (not forgetting what great greuances and diſtreſſes the realme was brought into by the Romaines) thought to worke ſome way, how to bridle & reſtrayne the inſatiable rauening of theſe greedy wolues. Wherefore they deuiſed their letter, geuing ſtraight commandement to the religious men, and to ſuch as had their churches to ferme: that hēceforth they ſhould not anſwere the Romaynes of ſuch fermes and rentes anye more, but ſhould pay the ſayd fermes or rents vnto their own procters appoynted for the ſame purpoſe, as by their writings ſent abroad to byſhops or chapters, & other Eccleſiaſticall houſes, may appeare in this forme and effect as followeth.

A complaint of the nobles of England againſt the couetouſnes of Rome.

TO ſuch and ſuch a byſhop, and ſuche a chapter: all the vniuerſitie and company of them, that had rather dye then to be confounded of the Romaines, wiſheth health. How the Romaines and their Legates haue hitherto behaued themſelues toward you, and other Eccleſiaſticall perſons of this realme of England, it is not vnknowne to your diſcretions, in diſpoſing and geuing away the benefices of the Realme after their owne luſt, to the intollerable preiudice and greuaunce both of you and all other Engliſhmen. For where as the collation of benefices ſhoulde and doe properly belong to you and other your fellow byſhops (Eccleſiaſticall perſons) they thundring agaynſt you the ſentence of excommunication, that you ſhould not beſtow them vppon anye perſon of this Realme, vntill in euery Dioceſſe and Cathedrall Churche within the Realme, fiue Romaines (ſuch as the Pope ſhall name) be prouided for, to the value of euerye man an hundred poundes by yeare. Beſides theſe, many other greuaunces the ſayd Romaniſtes doe inflicte and inferre, both to the Laitie and Nobles of the Realme, for the patronages and almoiſe beſtowed by them and their aunceſtours: for the ſuſtentation of the poore of the Realme, and alſo to the Clergy and eccleſiaſticall perſons of the Realme, touching their liuinges and benefices. And yet the ſayd Romaniſtes not contented with the premiſſes, do alſo take from the Clergy of this Realme, the benefices whiche they haue, to beſtow them vpon men of their owne country. &c.

Wherefore, we conſidering the rigorous auſteritie of theſe foreſayd Romaniſtes, which once comming in but as ſtraungers hether, nowe take vpon them not onely to iudge but alſo to cōdemne vs, laying vpon vs vnportable burdens, whereunto they will not put to one of their owne fingers to moue: laying therfore our heades together vppon a generall and full aduiſe had among our ſelues concerning the ſame, haue thought good (although very late) to reſiſt and withſtand them: rather, then to be ſubiect to their intollerable oppreſsions, & greater ſlauery more hereafter to be looked for. For the which cauſe, we ſtraitly charge and commaund you, as your friendes (going about to deliuer you the Church, the king, and the kingdome from that miſerable yoke of ſeruitude) that you doe not intermedle or take any part, concerning ſuch exactions or rentes to be required or geuen to the ſayd Romaynes. Letting you to vnderſtand for trueth, that in caſe you ſhall (which God forbid) be found culpable herein: not onely your goodes and poſſeſsions ſhall be in daunger of burning, but alſo in your perſons ſhall incurre the ſame perill and puniſhmēt, as ſhall the ſayd Romiſh oppreſſors themſelues.

Thus fare ye well.

Example teaching neuer to take part againſt their king with forreine power.

¶ Thus much I thought here to inſert and notifie cōcerning this matter, for that not onely the greedy and auaritious gredines of the Romiſh church might the more euidently vnto al Engliſhmen appeare: but that they may learne by this example: how worthy they be ſo to be ſerued & plagued with their owne rod, which before would take no part with their naturall king, agaynſt forreine power, of whom now they are ſcourged.

Cardinall Otho Legat

To make the ſtory more playne. In the raygne of thys Henry the third (who ſucceding as is ſaid, after king Iohn his father raygned ſixe and fifty yeares) came diuers Legates from Rome to Englande: Firſt Cardinall Otho ſent from the Pope with letters to the king, lyke as other letters alſo were ſent to other places for exactions of money.

The pope requireth two prebēdſhips in euery cathedrall Church.

The king opening the letters and perceiuing the contentes: aunſwered that he alone coulde ſay nothing in the matter, which concerned all the clergye and commons of the whole Realme. Not long after, a Councell was called at weſtminſter, where the letters beyng opened the forme was this. Petimus imprimis ab omnibus Eccleſijs Cathedralibus duas nobis præbendas exhiberi, vnam de portione Epiſcopi, & alteram de capitulo. Et ſimiliter de Cœnobijs vbi diuerſæ ſunt portiones Abbatis & conuentus: a conuentibus quantum pertinet ad vnum Monachum, æquali facta diſtributione honorum ſuorum, & ab Abbate tantundem. That is: we require to be geuen vnto vs firſt, of all Cathedrall Churches two Prebendes, one for the Byſhops part, one other for the Chapter. And likewiſe of Monaſteryes, where be diuers portions, one for the Abbot, an other for the Couent: Of yͤ Couent, ſo much as appertayneth to one Monke, yͤ portion of the goods beyng proportionly deuided: Of the Abbot likewiſe as muche. The cauſe why he required theſe prebendes was this. It hath bene (ſayth he) an old ſlaunder, and a great complaynt agaynſt the Church of Rome, to be noted of inſatiable couetouſnes, which as ye knowe is the roote of all miſchiefe: and al by reaſon that cauſes be wont commonly not to be handeled, nor to proceed in the Church of Rome without great giftes and expenſe of mony. wherof, ſeyng the pouerty of the Churche is the cauſe, and why it is ſo ſlaundered and ill ſpoken of: it is therefore conuenient, that you (as naturall children) ſhould ſuccour your mother. For vnleſſe we ſhould receaue of you and of other good men as you are: we ſhoulde then lacke neceſſaryes for our lyfe, whiche were a great diſhonour to our dignitie. &c.

Note the cauſe why the pope is compelled to craue money of other countries.

When thoſe petitions and cauſes of the Legate were propounded in the foreſayde aſſembly at weſtminſter on the Popes behalfe (the Biſhops & Prelates of the realme beyng preſent) aunſwere was made by the mouth of maiſter Iohn Bedford on this wiſe: that the matter there proponed by the Lord Legate, in eſpeciall concerning the kyng of England, but in generall it touched all the archbiſhops with their Suffraganes, the Byſhops, and al the prelates of yͤ realm. wherfore, ſeing both the king by reaſon of his ſickenes is abſent, and the Archbiſhop of Caunterbury with diuers other Biſhops alſo were not there: therefore in the abſence of them they had nothing to ſay in the matter, neyther could they ſo doe without preiudice of thē which were lacking. And ſo the aſſembly for that tyme brake vp.

A councell at London called.

Not long after, the ſayd Otho Cardinall De carcere Tulliano, comming agayne from Rome cum autentico plenariæ poteſtatis, indicted an other Councell at London: cauſed all Prelates, Archbiſhops, Biſhops, Abbots, Priors, and other of the clergy to be warned vnto the ſame Councell, to be had in the Church of S. Paules at London, about the feaſt of S. Martin: the pretence of whiche Councell was for redreſſe of matters concerning benefices and religion, but the chiefe & principal was to hunt for money. For putting them in feare and in hope, ſome to loſe, ſome to obtein ſpirituall promotiōs at hys hand, he thought gayn would riſe thereby, and ſo it did. For in the meane time (as Pariſienſis in vita Henrici. 3. writeth) diuers pretious rewardes were offered him in Palfreis, in rich plate and iewels, in coſtly and ſumptuous garments richly furred, in coyne, in vitals. &c. In ſo much that onely the biſhop of wincheſter (as the ſtory reporteth) hearing that he woulde winter at London, ſent him L. fat Oxen, an C. come of pure wheat, 8. tunne of choſen wine, toward hys houſe keeping. Likewiſe other byſhops alſo for their part offred vnto the Cardinals boxe, after their habilitie.

Great rewardes giuen to the Cardinall.

The time of the Councell drawing nye: the Cardinall commanded at the weſt end of Paules Churche an high & ſolēne throne to be prepared, riſing vp to a glorious ſcaffold vpon mighty and ſubſtantiall ſtages ſtrongly builded and of a great height. Thus agaynſt yͤ day aſſigned, came the ſayd archbiſhops, Biſhops, Abbotes and other of the prelacy, both farre and neare throughout al England, weried and vexed with the winters iorny, bringing their letters procuratory. Who being together aſſembled, the Cardinall beginneth his ſermon. But before we come to yͤ ſermon, there happened a great diſcord betweene the 2. archbiſhops of Caunterbury and of Yorke, for ſitting at yͤ right hand and left hand of the glorious Cardinal: for the which the one appealed agaynſt the other. The Cardinall to pacifie the ſtrife betwene thē both, ſo that he would not derogate from eyther of them, brought forth a certayne Bull of the Pope: in the middeſt of which Bull was pictured the figure of the croſſe. On the right ſide of the croſſe ſtoode the image of S. Paule, and on the left ſide, S. Peter. Loe ſaith the Cardinall (holding open the Bull with the croſſe) here you ſee S. Peter on the left hand of the croſſe, and S. Paul on the right ſide, and yet is there betwene theſe two no cōtention. For both are of equall glory. And yet S. Peter for the prerogatiue of his keyes, & for the preheminence of his Apoſtleſhip and Cathedral dignitie ſeemeth moſt worthy to be placed on the right ſide. But yet, becauſe S. Paul beleued on Chriſt, when he ſaw him not, therfore hath he the right hand of the Croſſe: for bleſſed be they, ſayth Chriſt, which beleue and ſee not. &c. And from that tyme forth, the Archbiſhop of Canterbury inioyed the right hand, & the archbiſhop of Yorke, the left. Wherein yet, this Cardinall is more to be commended then the other Cardinall Hugo mentioned a little before, pag. 208. whiche in the like contention betwene theſe Archbiſhops, ran his way.

Contention for ſitting on the right hand of the Cardinall.

Why Saint Paul ſtandeth on the right hand of the popes croſſe Why the archb. of Cant. hath the right hand and the archb. of Yorke the left hande.

Thus the controuerſie ceaſed, and compoſed betweene theſe two: Otho the Cardinall ſitting aloft betweene theſe 2. archbiſhops beginneth his ſermon, taking the theame of the Prophet. In medio ſedis, & in circuitu eius quatuor animalia plena oculis ante & retro. &c. That is.

ſeate, were foure beaſtes full of eyes before and behind. &c. Upon this theme, the Cardinall proceeded in hys ſermō, ſitting like a God in the middeſt. He compared thē about him, to yͤ foure beaſtes about the ſeate, declaring how they ought to haue eyes both before & behind (that is) that they muſt be prouident in diſpoſing of ſecular thinges, and circumſpect in ſpirituall matters, continuing & ioyning wiſely things paſt with thinges to come, & this was the greateſt effect of this Clerkly Sermon. That done, he geueth forth certayne ſtatutes for odering of Churches: as for the dedication of temples, for ſeuen ſacramentes, for geuing of orders, for ferming of benefices, collations and reſignations of benefices and vicarages, prieſtes apparell, & ſingle life, for eating of fleſh in religious houſes, for archdeacons biſhops, proctors, and ſuch other lyke matters. But the chiefeſt intent of all his proceeding was this, yͭ they ſhould be vigilant, prouident, and circumſpect, with all their eyes (both before and behynd) to fil the popes pouch: as appeared not onely by this, but all theyr other trauailes beſides. In ſomuch, that the kyng dreading the diſpleaſures of his commons for the doyngs of the Legate, willed hym to repayre home to Rome agayne: but yet could not ſo be rid of him, For he, receiuing now commaundementes from the Pope: applyed hys harueſt, ſtill glening and raking what ſoeuer he might ſcrape, writing and ſending to Byſhops and archdeacons in this forme and tenour.

Fredericke the Emperour maried king Iohns daughter.

The fifth part of euery ſpirituall mans liuing geuen to the Pope

The cauſe why the pope was ſo greedy & needy of mony was this: becauſe he had mortall hatred, & waged continuall battaile the ſame time againſt the good Emperour Fredericke the 2. who had to wife king Iohns daughter, and ſiſter to this king Henry thee 3. whoſe name was Iſabell. And therefore becauſe the popes warre could not be ſuſteined without charges: that made the pope, the more portunate to take vp mony in all places, but eſpecially in Englād. In ſomuch that he ſhamed not to require the fifth part of euery eccleſiaſticall mans liuing, as Pariſienſis writeth. And not onely that but alſo the ſayde Pope Gregory (conſenting with the Citizens of Rome) ſo agreed with them: that if they would ioyne with him in vanquiſhing yͤ foreſayd Fredericke, he would (and ſo did) graūt vnto thē, that all the benefices in England which were or ſhould be vacant (namely pertayning to religious houſes) ſhuold be beſtowed at their owne will & commaundement to their children & kinſfolkes. Whereupon it followeth in the forenamed hiſtory, vnde infra paucos dies miſit D. Papa ſacra præcepta ſua Domino Cant. Archiep. Elienſi. & Lincol. & Saliſb. Epiſcopis vt trecentis Romanis, in primis beneficijs vacantibus prouiderent, ſcientes ſe ſuſpenſos a beneficiorum collatione donec tot competenter prouideretur. That is.

Three hundred Romanes to be placed in the beſt benefices of England.

The Pope ſent in commaundement to the Archbiſhop of Cant. and 4. other Byſhops: that prouiſion ſhoulde be made for 3. hundred Romanes in the chiefeſt & beſt benefices in all Englād, at the next voydance. So that the foreſayd Aarchb. and byſhops ſhould be ſuſpēded in the meane tyme frō all collation or gift of the benefice, vntill theſe foreſayd 3. hundred were prouided for: whereupon the Archb. the ſame tyme ſeeing the vnreaſonable oppreſſion of the Church of Englād, left the realme and went into Fraūce.

Petrus Ru beus the Popes ag

A Romiſ ſleight of pope to g Engliſh ney.

Agayne, marke an other as much or more eaſie ſleight of the pope in procuring mony: he ſēt one Petrus Rubeus the ſame tyme, with a new deuiſe, which was this: not to work any thing openly, but priuily to go betwixt Biſhop and Biſhop, Abbot and Abbot &c. telling in theyr eares ſuch a Byſhop, ſuch an Abbot hath geuen ſo muche and ſo much vnto the Popes holines, truſting that you alſo will not be behinde for your part &c. By the meanes whereof it is incredible to thinke what a maſſe of money was made out of the Realme vnto the pope.

At length the foreſayd biſhops, Abbots, and Archdeacons feeling their owne ſmart, came to the king (whoſe father before, they did reſiſt) with their humble ſuite lamētably complaining of the vnmeaſurable exactions of yͤ pope: and eſpecially agaynſt Petrus Rubeus and hys fellowe Otto the Legate, deſiring the K. that ſeing the matter concheth not themſelues alone, but the whole church, and ſeing the valuation of Churches was knowne better vnto their archdeacōs then to themſelues: therfore they deſired a generall calling and talke to be had in the matter. In the Octaues of S. Iohn the Baptiſt, the day and place was aſſigned where they ſhould talke. At which day, and place the Prelates of England conuenting together, durſt not geue any direct denay of that contribution, but after a modeſt ſort did inſinuate certayne acceptions agaynſt yͤ ſame.

Exception alledged f not contributing to th Pope.

1. Firſt they ſay, that for ſomuch as the contribution is demaunded to warre agaynſt hym, who was ioyned to matrimony with their prince, they were not bound ſo to doe.
2. Secondly, for that the ſayd contribution tended to the ſhedding of Chriſten bloud: for ſo the forme of the bill pretended, to fight agaynſt the Emperour.
3. Thirdly, becauſe it was agaynſt the libertie of the Churche: for ſo it is in the bill: that they that woulde not, ſhould be excommunicate.
4. Fourthly, becauſe that when a late they gaue the tenth part of their goods, it was with this proteſtatiō, that they ſhould contribute to the pope no more hereafter.
5. Item, becauſe they had cōtributed before, if they ſhould now contribute againe, it were to be feared leaſt an action twiſe done ſhould grow into a cuſtome, as is in the lawe. Lege nemo &c.
6. Item for aſmuch as they ſhall haue cauſes continually to ſecke to Rome through the Emperours land: it were to be feared, leaſt the ſayd Emperour by the way woulde worke theyr annoyance.
7. Item, becauſe the king hath many enemies abroad, & for his warres hath need of much mony at home: it is not conuenient that the goods of the realme ſhould be alienated out of the Realme.
8. Item, becauſe that coulde not be done without preiudice to the patrones of their churches, not knowing whether their patrons did or would agree vnto the ſame.
9. Laſtly, becauſe they heare ſay, that the generall ſtate of the Church is in daunger: for the whiche they vnderſtand there ſhall be ſhortly a generall Councell, wherein ſuche matters ſhall be determined: and therefore if they ſhoulde contribute nowe, it ſhould be to the hinderance and dammage of the Church.

The Legate and hys fellow hearing theſe allegations, ſeing their owne confuſion were the leſſe importunate.

Not long after this, followed a general Councel at Lions, called by Pope Innocentius 4. in the which Councell the Engliſhe nation did exhibite certayne articles of their greuāces, not vnworthy to be knowne. Grauatur regnum Angliæ eo quòd D. Papa non eſt contentus ſubſidio illo quòd vocatur denarius be. Petri. &c. In Engliſh thus.

Articles e hibited in the counc of Lugdu for the gr uances ſteined by the pope.

The 1. greuance.

1. The kingdome of England is greued that the pope being not contented with his Peter pence, requireth and extorteth from the Clergy great exactions, and (more is like) without the conſent both of the king, and agaynſt the cuſtomes of the realme.

The ſecond.

2. Item, the church and kingdome of England is greued, that the patrons of the ſame, cannot preſent as they were wont into their Churches, for the popes letters. But the churches are geuen to Romaines, which knowe neyther the realme, nor the toung therof, both to the great perill of ſoules and robbing away the mony out of the realme.

The third.

3. Item, it is greued, for that the Pope promiſing by the tenor of his letters, that in requiring of penſions and prouiſions in the realme of England, he woulde require but onely twelue benefices: now contrary to the tenour thereof, many more benefices and prouiſions are beſtowed away by him.

The fourth.

4. Item, the realme is greeued and complayneth, that in the benefices in Englād, one Italian ſucceedeth an other, the Engliſh men being not onely excluded, but alſo cōpelled (for yͤ determining of their matters) to ſeke to Rome: contrary both to the cuſtomes of the Realme, and alſo to the priuiledges graunted by the popes predeceſſors to the king and kingdome of England.

The fifth. He meaneth percaſe Otho or maiſter Martinus.

5. The fift greuance is, for yͤ oft recourſe of that infamous Legate, by whom both fayth and fidelitie, the auncient cuſtomes of the realme, the authoritie of olde grauntes, ſtatutes, lawes, and priuiledges, are imbeſeled and abrogate: whereby an infinite number in Englande be greeuouſly afflicted and oppreſſed.

The ſixte.

6. The ſayd realme is alſo greued in generall tallages, collections, and aſſiſes, made without the kings conſent, the appellation and contradiction of the kinges Proctors to the contrary notwithſtanding.

The ſeuenth

7. Seuenthly, the foreſayd realme complayneth and is greued: that in the benefices geuen to Italians, neither yͤ old ordinaunces, nor reliefe of the poore, nor hoſpitalitie, nor any preaching of Gods word, nor care of mens ſoules, nor ſeruice in the Church, nor yet the walles of the Churches be kept vp and mayntayned, as the maner & cuſtome of the ſame realme requireth. Ouer and aboue theſe foreſayd greuances, there came moreouer from the pope other freſh letters, charging and commaunding the prelates of England to finde of their proper coſtes and charges, for one whole yeare, ſome ten armed ſouldiours, ſome 5. ſome 15. to be ready at the popes commaundement there, where he ſhould appoynt.

The Babilonicall captiuitie & ſlauery of Englande vnder the Pope.

After theſe and other greuances & enormities of Rome the ſtates of England conſulting together, direct their letters to the pope for reformation therof: firſt the Abbots & Priors, then the byſhops and Suffraganes, after the Nobles and Barons, laſt of all the king himſelfe. But as the prouerbe is, venter non habet aures. ſo the popes purſe had no eares to heare. And as our common ſaying goeth, as good neuer a whit, as neuer the better, ſo went it with the pope. who not long after the ſame, ſent ye for new tallage and exactions to be collected: which thing when it came to the kings eare, he being moued and diſturbed vehemently withall, writeth in this wiſe to the biſhops, ſeuerally to euery one in hys dioceſſe.

K. Henry the 3. commaundeth no taxe nor tallage to be ſent to the pope.

Henry tha third by the grace of GOD, to the reuerend in Chriſt byſhop of N. Whereas we haue heratofore written vnto you once. twice, thrice, as well by our priuy ſeales, as alſo by our letters patentes, that you ſhoulde not exact or collecte for the popes behalfe, any tallage or other helpe of our ſubiectes eyther of the Clergy or of the Laity, for that no ſuche tallage nor help, either can or is vſed to be exacted in our realm without the great preiudice of our princely dignitie, which we neither wil nor can ſuffer or ſuſtayne: yet you contemnyng and and vilepending our commaundement, and contrary to the prouiſion made in our laſt Councell at London (graunted and agreed vpon by our prelates, Earles, and Barons) haue that notwithſtanding, proceeded in collecting the ſayd your taxes and tallages. Whereupō we do greatly maruell and are moued (eſpecially ſeeyng you are not aſhamed to doe contrary vnto your own decrees) whereas you and other prelates in the ſayd Councell in this did all agree and graunt, that no ſuch exactions ſhould be hereafter, vntill the returne of our & your Ambaſſadours from the court of Rome, ſent thither purpoſely of vs, and in the name of the whole realme for the ſame, for to prouide redreſſe agaynſt theſe oppreſsions. Wherefore, we ſtraitly will and command you, that from henceforth you do not proceede any more in collecting and exacting ſuch tallages or helps, as you will enioy our fauour, and ſuche poſſeſsions of yours, as within this our Kingdome you haue and hold. And if you haue already procured or gathered any ſuch thing: yet that you ſuffer not the ſame to be tranſported out of our realme, but cauſe it to be kept in ſafe cuſtody, till the returne of the ſayd Ambaſſadors, vnder the payne of our diſpleaſure in doyng of the contrary: and alſo of prouoking vs to extend our hand vpon your poſeſsions, farther then you will thinke or beleue. Moreouer, willing & charging you, that you participate & make common this our inhibition, with your Archdeacons and Officials, which we here haue ſet forth for the liberties of the clergy and of the people, as knoweth God. &c.

The popes ſaying againſt kyng Henry.

At length, the Ambaſſadours whiche were at Rome, came home about the latter end of December, bringing word, that the pope hearing what was done in the Councell of Wincheſter and of the king, was greatly diſpleaſed with him and the realme, ſaying: Rex Anglorum qui iam recalcitrat et frederiſat ſuum habet conſilium, ego verò & meum habeo, quod & ſequar. &c. Whereupon, when the Ambaſſadours began to ſpeake in the kinges behalfe: frō that time, they were halfe counted for ſchiſmatickes, & could no more be heard in yͤ court of Rome. The king hearing this, was maruelouſly incenſed therwith, commaunding by general proclamation through all this realme: that no mā ſhould hereafter cōſent to any taxe or ſubſidie of mony for yͤ court of Rome. when this came to the popes eare, vpon a cruell rage, he directed hys letters to the Prelates of England, charging that vnder paine of ſuſpence or interdiction, they ſhould prouide the ſame ſumme of mony to be collected agaynſt the feaſt of the Aſſumption, the charge being geuen to the Biſhop of Worceſter to be executor of the ſaid curſſe. The king, that lately entended to ſtand to the liberties of the Church: now for feare of the pope, and partly for perſwaſions of the ſayd Byſhop of Worceſter and other Prelates, durſt not ſtand to it, but gaue ouer. Moreouer, the greedy gulfe of the Romiſh auarice waxt ſo vnmeſurable, that at length the pope ſhamed not vpō the cenſure of hys curſſe, to aſke the third part of the Church goodes, and the yearely fruite of all vacant benefices. The chiefe doers and Legates in England, were Otho, Stephanus Capellanus, Petrus Rubeus nuncius, Mag. Martin. & Mag. Marinus, Ioannes Anglicus Epiſcopus Sabinenſis. Of whom to ſpeake further (for that I haue matter much more to write) for this preſent tyme I thinke beaſt to ſurceaſe: leaſt in opening all the deteſtable doyngs and peſtilent workinges of thoſe men, I might perhaps not onely moleſt good eares: but alſo infect the ayre. Yet one thing concerning the ſayd Otho, I cannot well ouerpaſſe.

K. Henry againe reſtraineth the popes taxes.

The pope taketh againſt the king.

A ſtory of Cardinall Otho at Oxford.

This Otho, as he left no place vnſought, where anye vauntage might be got: ſo amongſt all other he came to Oxford. where lying in the houſe of Oſney, he was receaued wt great honor: the ſchollers preſenting him honourably with ſuche diſhes and rewardes as they had, thinking to gratifie the Cardinall after the beſt maner. This beyng done before dinner, & the dinner ended, they came reuerētly to ſee and welcome him, ſuppoſing yͭ they alſo ſhould wt like curteſy agayn of hym be intertayned. As they came to yͤ gate, the porter (being an Italian) with a loud voyce aſketh what they woulde haue. They ſayd they came to ſee the Lord Legate. But Cerberus the porter holding the dore halfe open, with proud and contumelius language thruſt them out, and would not ſuffer them to enter. The Shollers ſeeyng that, by force thruſt open the gate and came in: whome when the Romaynes which were within would haue repelled with their fiſtes, and ſuche ſtaues as they had in their handes, they fell to alarum and by the eares together, with much houing and ſhouing and many blowes on both ſides. In the meane tyme while ſome of the ſchollers ran home for their weapons, their chaunced a poore ſcholler (an Iriſhman) to ſtand at the gate waytyng for hys almes. whom when the mayſter Cooke ſaw at the gate, he taking whote ſkalding water out of the pan where the meate was ſodden: did caſt it in hys face. One of the ſchollers a Welchman, that came wyth hys Bowe and ſhaftes, ſeing that: letteth driue an arrow, and ſhooteth this Nabuzardan (that mayſter of Cokes) cleane through the body, and ſlayeth hym out of hand. The Cooke falling dead: there was a mighty broyle, & a great clamor, throughout all the houſe. The Cardinall hearing the tumult and great noyſe about him, lyke a valiant Romayn runneth as faſt as as he could into the ſteple & there locketh yͤ dores faſt vnto him, where he remained till midnight. The ſchollers in yͤ meane while not yet all pacified ſought all corners about for the Legate, exclayming & crying out: wher is that vſurer, yͤ ſymoniack, that pilier & poler of our liuinges, yͤ proyler and extortioner of our mony which peruerteth our king: and ſubuerteth hys kingdom, enriching himſelfe with our ſpoyles. &c. all this heard the Cardinall, and held his peace. When the night approching had broken vp the field: the Cardinall comming out of his forte, and taking his horſe (in ſilence of the night) was priuily conueyed ouer the riuer toward the king, conueying himſelfe away as faſt he could. After the king heard thys, he ſendeth to Oxford a garriſon of armed men, to deliuer yͤ Romaines which were there hidden for feare of ſchollers. Then was maiſter Odo a lawer, with 30. other ſchollers apprehended, & caryed to Walingford Caſtle: & frō thence had in Cartes to London, where at length through much entreaty of the byſhops) being brought barefoote to yͤ Legates dore, had their pardon, & the Vniuerſitie releaſed of

Thus partly you haue heard, & do vnderſtand the miſerable thraldome and captiuitie of this realme of England and the clergy of the ſame: who before refuſed to take part with king Iohn their naturall Prince, agaynſt the forreigne power of the pope: and nowe how miſerably they are oppreſſed and ſcourged of the ſame pope. Whoſe inſatiable extortion & rapacity, did ſo exceede in pilling & poling of this realme long after this, that neyther the K. now could help thẽ, neither could the pope with any reaſonable meaſure be contẽt. In ſo much (as writers record) in the dayes of Sudbury Archb. of Canterbury an. 1360. the pope by hys proctors gat from the Clergy in leſſe then one yeare, more then lx. M. florences, of mere contributiõ: beſides hys other auayles & common reuenues out of benefices, prebendaries, firſt fruites, tributes, Peter Pence, collatiõs, reſeruatiõs, relaxations, & ſuch marchandiſe. &c.

Three ſcore thouſand Florens contributed to the pope in one yeare of the clergie.

Mention was made a little before pag. 231. and 239. of Albingenſes keeping about the City of Tholouſe. Theſe Albingauſes becauſe they began to ſmell the pope, and to controle the inordinate proceedinges and diſcipline of the ſea of Rome: the Pope therefore recounting thẽ as a people hereticall, excited and ſtirred vp, about this preſẽt time & yeare an. 1220. Ludouick the yong French king through the inſtance of Phillip his Father: to lay ſiege agaynſt the ſayd City of Tholouſe, to expugne & extinguiſhe theſe Albingenſes hys enemies. Wherupon Ludouicke (according to his fathers commaundement) reared a puiſſant and a mighty army, to compaſſe about and beſet the forenamed city: and ſo did. Here were the men of Tholouſe in great daunger. But ſee how the mighty protection of God fighteth for hys people, agaynſt the might of man. For after that Ludouicke (as Mathew Paris. teſtifieth) had long weryed himſelfe and hys men in waſte, and could do no good with all their ingines and artilery agaynſt the City: there fell moreouer vpon the French hoſte by the hand of God, ſuch famine, and peſtilence both of men and horſes, beſide the other dayly ſlaughter of the ſouldiours: that Ludouick was enforced to retyre, and with ſuche as were left to returne agayne home to Fraunce from whence he came. In the ſlaughters of whiche ſouldiours beſides many other, was Erle Simon de monti forte, generall of yͤ army, to whõ the landes of the Erle of Tholouſe was geuẽ by the pope, who was ſlayne before the gate of the Citty with a ſtone. And ſo was alſo the brother of the ſayd Symon the ſame time in beſieging a caſtell neare to Tholouſe ſlayne with a ſtone in like maner. And ſo was the ſiege of the Frenchmen agaynſt Tholouſe broke vp. Ex Mat. Par.

The ſiege againſt Albingenſes broke vp.

As the ſiege of theſe French men could doe no good againſt the Citty of Tholouſe: ſo it happened the ſame time that the chriſtiãs marching toward the holy land, had better luck by the way in laying their ſiege to a certaine tower or caſtle in Egipt, neare to the city Damieta: which ſeemed by nature, for the ſituation and difficultie of the place, inexpugnable: as which being ſituate in the middeſt of the great floud Nilus (hard by the citty called Damieta) could neither be come to by land, nor be vndermined for the water, nor by famine ſubdued for the neerenes of the citty, yet notwithſtanding, through the helpe of God and policy of man, in erecting ſcaffoldes and Caſtles vppon tops of maſtes, the Chriſtians at laſt conquered it: and after that the Citty alſo Damieta, albeit not without great loſſe of Chriſten people. In the expugnation of this City or forte, among other that there died, was the Lantgraue of Thuring named Ludouicke, the huſband of Elizabeth, whom we vſe to call S. Elizabeth. This Elizabeth (as my ſtory recordeth) was the daughter of the kyng of Hungary, and maryed in Almayne, where ſhe liued with the forenamed Ludouicke Lantgraue of Thuringe. Whom ſhe thorough her perſwaſions prouoked and inceſed to take that vyage to fight for the holy land, where he in yͤ ſame vyage was ſlayne. After whoſe death, Elizabeth (remaynyng a widow) entred the profeſſiõ of cloyſterly religion, & made her ſelfe a Nunne. So growing and increaſing from vertue to vertue, that after her death, all Almayne did ſounde with the fame of her worthy doynges. Mat. Pariſ. addeth this more, that ſhe was the daughter of that Queene, who being accuſed to be naught with a certayne Archbiſhop: was therfore condemned wͭ this ſentence pronounced agaynſt her. Reginam interficere nolite temere bonum eſt: etſi omnes conſenſerint non ego contradico. That is (although it be hard in Engliſh to be tranſlated as it ſtandeth in Latine) To kill the Queene will ye not to feare that is good: And if all men conſent thereunto, not I my ſelfe do ſtand agaynſt it &c. The which ſentence beyng brought to Pope Innocent, thus in poynting the ſentence which otherwiſe ſeemeth to haue a double vnderſtanding, ſo ſaued the Queene: thus interpreting and poynting the ſentence: Reginam interficere nolite, timere bonum eſt: & ſi omnes conſenſerint, non ego. Contradico. That is: To kill the Queene will ye not: to feare, that is good. And if all doe conſent thereto, yet not I: I my ſelfe do ſtand agaynſt it: And ſo eſcaped ſhe the daunger. This Queene was the mother as is ſaid, of Elizabeth the Nunne, who for her holy Nunnyſhenes was canoniſed of the popes church, for a Saincte in Almanie, about the yeare. 1220. Ex Mat. Pariſienſ.

Not long after, began the new building of the minſter of Saliſbury. Thus in ſtriuing for maiſtry, ech part contending agaynſt the other (as the maner is in ſuch paſtime) it happened the Lõdiners to get the victory, and the other ſide was put to foyle, but eſpecially the ſtuard of the Abbot of Weſtminſter. thus beyng receaued, the Citizens egerly ſtroken with ire and impacience, ran to the common bell: and by yͤ ringing thereof, aſſembled their commons together to conſult with themſelues, what was to be done in the caſe ſo contumelious. Wherin, when diuers ſentences were giuen diuerſly Serle the ſame tyme Maior of London (a wiſe & diſcrete man) gaue this counſaile, that the Abbot of Weſtminſter ſhould be talked withal: who if he would rectifie the iniurie done, and ſatiſfie for the harme receiued, it ſhould be to them ſufficient. Which controuerſie at laſt cõming into compromis was cõmitted to the arbitrement of Stephen Archb. of Canterbury, Phillip Biſhop of Wintcheſter, Thomas of Merton, & Richard prior of Dunſtable. The popes wicked malice againſt the Chriſtian Earle of Tholouſe.

Marke reader the right nature of phariſies ſtriuing for the chiefe place.

The Pope geueth the right poſſeſsions away from the owners.

Reimundus wrongfully diſherited by the Pope.

An. 1226. dyed pope Honorius a great aduerſary againſt Fredericke the Emperor, after whom ſucceded Gregory the ix. more greeuous then hys predeceſſor. In the whiche yeare alſo dyed Ludouick the periured French king, at the ſiege of Auinion. Whom the pope now the ſecond or thyrd tyme had ſet vp to fight agaynſt Reimund the good Erle of Tholouſe, and the herettickes Albingenſis of that country. For ſo the pope calleth all them, whiche hold not in all pointes, with his glorious pride, & vſurped power & vngodly proceedings. The origine whereof was this, as in Mat. Pariſienſ. appeareth. In the daes of Philip the Frẽch king, this Reimundus Earle of Tholouſe was diſdayned of the Pope for holding wͭ the Albingenſes: & therfore by the inſtigation of the pope, the landes of the Earle were taken from him & geuen to Simon Montfort. and inſtrumentes made vpõ the ſame. But when the ſayd Erle Reimundus would not be remoued frõ the right of his poſſeſſions by vnrighteous dealing: then the pope ſetteth Phillip the Frẽch king, to make open war againſt him. Wherupõ, Lewes the Frẽch kings ſonne was ſent with a great power (as is aboue declared) to beſiege the City of Tholouſe. But beyng repulſed from thence, by the merueilous hand of God fighting for hys people, could not preuayle, & ſo returned home, after he had loſt the moſt part of hys army by peſtilence, and other calamitie as hath bene before deſcribed. And thus continued the good Earle ſtill in quyet poſſeſſion, till this preſent time. an. 1226. In the whiche yeare, the pope not forgetting his olde malice agaynſt the Earle, and no leſſe enflamed with inſatiable auarice, directeth downe his Legate maſter Romanus to the partes of Fraunce, for 2. ſeueral purpoſes. One to extirpe the Erle, the other to enlarge his reuenewes. Thus the Legate beyng entred into Fraunce, beginneth to ſummone a Councell, willing the French king with the Archbiſhops, Byſhops, & Clergy of Fraunce to appeare before him at Bitures. To whom eftſoones repayred vi. Archbiſhops with the biſhops & Suffragans of ix. prouinces, to the nũber of 100. beſides the Abbates, Priours, & Proctors of al the couentes of Fraunce, to heare the popes wil & commaundement: but becauſe there was a diſcorde feared to ryſe (ſayth Mathæus) about preheminence of ſitting, for that the Archbiſhop of Lyons challenged the ſuperiour place aboue the Archbiſhop of Sene. Alſo the archbiſhop of Roane, aboue the archbiſhop of Britures, and aboue the Archbiſhop of Narbone. &c. Therfore the ſeſſion was holdẽ there, not in maner and forme of a Councell, but of a certayne parlie, or conſultation. Thus the meke and holy Councel being ſet, & the popes maieſties letters read & declared: appeareth before them Reimund Earle of Tholouſe of the one part. And Simon Mountfort on the other part. Which Symon required to be reſtored vnto him the lands and poſſeſſions of the ſayd Reimund, which the pope & Phillip the French king, had geuen to him & to hys father before: hauing good euidences to ſhew for the ſame, confirmed by the donation of the pope, and of the kyng. Adding moreouer, that the Earle Reimund was depriued and diſherited in the generall Councel at Rome for hereſie, which is called the hereſie of Albingenſes. At leaſt if he might not haue the whole yelded vnto him, yet the moſt part of hys Lordſhips he required to be graunted him.

Reimundus the good Earle of Tholouſe anſwereth for him ſelfe.

To this the Earle Reimund aunſwered agayne, offering himſelfe ready to all duetyes & office both toward the French king, and to the church of Rome, whatſoeuer duety to him did appertein. And moreouer touching the hereſie, wherwith he was there charged: he did not onely there offer himſelfe in that Councell before the Legate but moſt humbly did craue of him, that he would take the paynes to come into euery Citty within hys precinct to enquire of Albingenſes falſly ſuſpected for hereſie.

euery perſon there the articles of his beliefe: and if he foũd any perſon or perſõs, holding that which was not Catholike, he would ſee the ſame to be corrected and amẽded, according to the cenſure of holy Church to yͤ vttermoſt. Or if he ſhould finde any citty rebelling agaynſt hym, he to the vttermoſt of his might with the inhabitance therof, would compell them to doe ſatiſfaction therfore. And as touching himſelfe, if he had committed or erred in any thing (which he remembreth not to haue done) he offered their full ſatiſfaction to God & Church, as becommed any faithfull chriſten man to doe, requiring moreouer therfore the Legate to be examined of his fayth. &c. But all this (ſayth Mathæus) yͤ legate deſpiſed: neither could the catholike Erle (ſaith he) there find any grace, vnleſſe he would depart from hys heritage: both from himſelfe and from his heires for euer. In fine, when it was required by the cõtrary part that he ſhould ſtand to the arbitrement of xii. peeres of France: to that Reimundus anſwered, that if the French king would receaue his homage, which he was redy at al times to exhibite, he was cõtented therewith. For els they would not (ſayd he) take him, as one of their ſociety & fellowe ſubiect.

The proud vilanie of the Popes Legate.

After much altercatiõ on both ſides about the matter, the Legate willeth euery archbiſhop to call aſide his Suffraganes, to deliberate with them vpon the cauſe: and to geue vp in writing what was concluded. Whiche being done accordingly, the Legate denounceth excommunication to all ſuch as did reueale any peece of that whiche was there concluded, before the pope and the king had intelligence there of.

These things thus in hudder mutter among thẽſelues concluded, the Legate gaue leaue to al proctors of couents and chapters to returne home, onely reteining with him yͤ Archbiſhops, biſhops, and Abbots, & certayne ſimple prelates, ſuch as he might be more bold withall to opẽ, and of thẽ to obtaine the other part of his commiſſiõ: which was in deed to obtein of euery cathedral church 2. prebendſhips one for the biſh. the other for the chapter. And in monaſteries alſo after yͤ like ſort, where the Abbot and the Couent had diuers and ſeueral portions: to require two churches, one for yͤ Abbot, the other for the couent, keeping this proportion: that how much ſhould ſuffice for the liuing of one Monk, ſo much yͤ whole couent ſhould find for their part, and as much the Abbot likewiſe for his. And for ſo muche as he would not ſeeme to demaũd this without ſome color of cauſe, his reaſon was this: that becauſe the Courte of Rome had long bene blotted wͭ the note of auarice, whiche is mother of all euil, for that no man could come to Rome for any buſines, but he muſt ſolfe for the expedition of the ſame: therfore for the remouing away of the occaſiõ of that ſlaunder: the publike helpe of the Churche therefore muſt neceſſarily be required. &c.

Marke reader the practiſe here of prelates, for thy learning.

The proctors and parties thus ſent home by the Legates, merueiling wͭ themſelues why the Biſhops & Abbots ſhould be ſtayd & they ſent home, & ſuſpecting no les but as the matter was in deed: conferred their counſailes together, & deuiſed wͭ themſelues to ſend certain vnto him in the behalfe of all the cathedrall & conuentuall Churches in Fraunce, & ſent to the ſayd Legate the meſſage, to ſignifie vnto him: That they were credibly informed, that he came wͭ ſpecial letters from the court of Rome, for the obteining of certein prebendaries wͭin euery cathedrall and conuẽtuall church. Which being ſo, they much merueiled yͭ he would not in the publike counſaile, make manifeſt to thẽ thoſe letters which ſpecially cõcerned thẽ as much as the others. Wherfore their requeſt was to him in yͤ Lord, that no ſuch offenſiue matter might riſe by him in yͤ Frẽch church: knowing this that the thing which he enterpriſeth could not be brought to effect, without great offence taken, and ineſtimable damage to the Churche of Fraunce.

The clergie of Fraunce anſwering to the legate.

For graunt ſayde they, that certayne will aſſent vnto you, yet their aſſent ſtandeth in no effect, concerning ſuch matters as touch the whole: eſpecially, ſeeyng both the ſtates of the Realme with all the inferior ſubiectes, yea and the king himſelfe, they are ſure, will withſtand the ſame: to the venture not onely of their honour, but of their lyfe alſo, conſidering the caſe to be ſuche, as vpon the offence whereof, ſtandeth the ſubuerſion both of the realme publike, and of the whole Church in generall. Declaring moreouer the cauſe of this feare to riſe hereof, for that in other realmes ſuch communicatiõ hath bene with byſhops & prelates, for the procuring of ſuch prebendſhips, where as neither the prince nor the ſubiectes, were made anye thing priuy therto.

Inferiors euermore bolde to ſpeake in difficult cauſes of trueth, then the rich.

In concluſion, when the matter came to debating with the Legate, the obiections of the inferior parties, agaynſt the cruell exaction, were theſe in briefe effect, as is in Pariſienſ. noted.

The obiections of the clergie of Fraunce against the Popes exaction.

Firſt they alledged their great damages and expences whiche they were like to ſuſtayne thereby by reaſon of the continuall procurators of the Pope, whiche in euery dioceſſe muſt liue not of their owne, but muſt be ſuſteined vpon the charges of the cathedrall Churges, and other churches alſo: and many times they being but procurators wil be found as Legates.

Item, by that meanes, they ſayd great perturbations might enſue to the couentes and Chapters of Cathedrall churches in their elections: for ſo muche as the Popes agents and factors being in euery cathedrall church & chapter houſe, percaſe the pope woulde commaund hym in hys perſon to be preſent at their elections, and ſo might trouble the ſame: in delaying and deferring till it might fall to the court of Rome to geue. And ſo ſhoulde be placed moe of the Popes clientele in the churches of Fraunce, then of the proper inhabitance of the land.

Item, by this meanes they affirmed, that al they in the court of Rome ſhould be richer and ſhoulde receiue more for their proportion, then the king of the realme: by reaſon of whiche aboundaunce of riches, it was like to come to paſſe, that as the worm of rich men is pride: ſo by the meanes of this their riches, the court of Rome would delay & driue of great ſuites, and ſcarſe would take any paynes wͭ ſmall cauſes: the experiment whereof is euident, for that now alſo they vſe to delay their matters whẽ they come wͭ their giftes, and being in aſſuraunce to receiue. And thus ſhould iuſtice ſtand aſide, and poore ſuters dye at yͤ gates of the court of Rome, thus flowing and triumphing in ful aboundance of all treaſure and riches.

Item, for ſomuch as it is mete and conuenient to haue friendes in the court of Rome, for the better ſpeeding of their cauſes: therefore they thought to keepe them needy, whereby their giftes may be the ſweeter and their cauſes ſooner diſpatched.

Item, when as it is impoſſible the fountaine of greedy deſire to be ſtopped, it was to be feared, that eyther they would do that by other, which they were wont to doe by themſelues: or els they ſhould be enforced to geue greater rewardes then before. For ſmal giftes in the ſight of great rich men are not looked vpon.

Item, where he alledged the remouing awaye of the ſlãder which goeth on the court of Rome: By this means rather the contrary were to be feared: wherein they alleaged the ſentence of the verſe, that great riches ſtop not the taking of much, but a mynde contented with a little.

Quòd virtus reddit, non copia ſufficientem.
Et non paupertas ſed mentis hiatus agentem.

Farther they alledged that great riches woulde make the Romaines mad: and ſo might kindle among thẽ ſides and partes taking: ſo that by great poſſeſſions ſedition might follow, to the ruine and deſtructiõ of the city: wherof ſome experiment they had already.

Item, they added that although they woulde condeſcend and oblige themſelues to that contribution, yet their ſucceſſors would not ſo be bound, nor yet, ratifie the bond of theirs.

Laſtly thus they conclude the matter, deſiring him that the zeale of the vniuerſall Churche, and of the Churche of Rome would moue him. For if this oppreſſion of yͤ church ſhould be vniuerſall: it were to be doubted, leaſt any vniuerſall departing might follow from the Church of Rome (which God forbid ſay they) ſhould happen.

God gra ſay we.

The Legate hearing theſe wordes, being therwith ſomthing moued, as ſeemed, thus excuſed himſelf, that he being in the court, neuer agreed in this exaction. And that yͤ letters hereof came not to hym before he was in Fraunce, whereat he ſayd was greatly ſory. Adding this withall, that the wordes of his precept included this ſecret meaning in them, thus to be vnderſtand and taken: ſo farre forth as the Empire and other realmes would agree vnto yͤ ſame. And as for hym, he would ſtirre no more in the matter, before it were proued, what other countryes would ſay and doe therein.

The Ca nall repulſed, and di feyted of hi purpoſe in Fraunce.

And thus much concerning the ſecond part of the blind commiſſion of this Legate, touching his exaction of prebendſhips in euery Cathedrall and conuentuall Churche, wherin as ye heare, he was repulſed. Ex Mat. Pariſ. pag. 62.

The Pope rayſeth war againſt the Earle & the people of Tholouſe.

Now to returne to the firſt part of his commiſſiõ again which was cõcerning Reimundus yͤ godly Erle of Tholouſe, thus yͤ ſtory proceedeth. That while the legate was in hand with this matter of the popes mony, in the meane ſeaſon certayn preaching Fryers were directed by the ſaid Romannes the Popes Legate, into all France: to incite & ſtirre vp the Frenchmen to take the croſſe vpon them, and to war agaynſt the Erle of Tholouſe, and the people therof whome they accounted then for herettickes. At the preaching wherof, a great number of prelates and lay mē ſigned themſelues to the croſſe, to fight againſt the Tholoſians, being therto induced as the ſtory ſayth, more for feare of the French king, or fauor of the legate, then for any true zeale of iuſtice. For ſo it followeth in the wordes of Pariſ. Videbatur enim multis abuſio, vt hominem fidelem Chriſtianum infeſtarent: præcipuè cum conſtaret cunctis eum in concilio nuper Biturienſi, multis precibus perſuaſiſſe legato, vt veniret ad ſingulas terræ ſuæ ciuitates, inquirens a ſingulis articulos fidei: & ſi quempiam contra fidem iuueniret. &c. i. For to many, ſayeth he, it ſeemeth an abuſe to moue warre againſt a faithful Chriſten man: eſpecially ſeeing in the councell of Bitures (before all men) he intreated the Legate with great inſtance, that he would come into euery Citie within his dominions. And there to require of euery perſon the articles of his faith. Where, if he founde any man to holde any thing contrary to the Catholicke faith, he promiſed a full ſatisfaction to be had thereof according to the cenſure of the Church, to the vttermoſt. &c.

ſtimony the autor the clea- nge Reimun- and of Albin- enſes.

Yet all this notwithſtanding, the proude Legate contemning this ſo honeſt & reaſonable purgation of the earl Reimundus, ceaſes not by all maner meanes, to proſecute the Popes fury againſt him and his ſubiectes, ſtirring vp the king and the French men vnder paine of excommunication, to warre againſt them. Ludouick the French king thus being enforced by the Legate, anſwered againe, that he for his owne ſafety would not atchiue that expeditiō or aduenture againſt the Earle, vnles it were firſt obtained of the Pope, to write to the king of England: commaunding him, that during yͤ time of that expedition, he ſhould inuade and moleſt no peece of his landes and poſſeſſions, which he the ſame preſent time did hold, whether by ryght or by wrōg, or howſoeuer they were holden, while yͤ time of the ſaid warre againſt the heretickes (as they were then termed) did indure: but rather ſhould aide and aſſiſt hym with counſaile and money in that enterpriſe. All which being done and accompliſhed, the French King and the Legate (croſſing themſelues to the field) appoynted a day peremptory, for the French army to meete together at Lions, vnder paine of the popes excōmunication, and wyth horſe and harnes to ſet vpon the Tholoſians, againſt the Aſcenſion day next enſuing.

xcommu- cation a- ed.

When the Aſcenſion day was come, which was yͤ day peremptory appoynted. The French king hauing prepared at Lyons all things neceſſary for his armie, marcheth forward with a great and mighty hoſte: after whome alſo commeth the Legate, with his Biſhops & Prelates. The number of fighting men in his armie beſides the vitlars and wagoners were 50000. men. The Legate by the way openly excommunicated the Earle of Tholouſe, & all that toke his parte, & furthermore interdicted his whole land. Thus the king came marching forwarde, till he came into the prouince of Tholouſe, & the firſt citie which they came vnto there of the Earles, was Auinion. Which Citie they thought firſt to haue beſieged, and ſo in order after, as they went to haue deſtroied and waſted all the whole prouince belonging to the Earle. And firſt the King demaunded of them to haue hys paſſage through their citie, faining himſelfe in peaceable wiſe for the expedition of his iourny, but to paſſe through the ſame. The Citizens conſulting with themſelues what was to be done, at length gaue aunſwer that they miſtruſted their comming, and ſuppoſed that in deceit they required the entrance of their Citie, and for no neceſſity of their iourney.

The king hereat being much offended, ſware an othe that he would not depart thence till he had taken the citie, & immediatly in thoſe places where he thought moſt mete he began to geue ſharpe aſſaults, withall maner of ſaultable engins: The Citizens againe within, manfully defended themſelues, caſting ſtone for ſtone, and ſhooting ſhot for ſhot, and ſlew and wounded many of the French men. Thus, when they had lōg beſieged the citie and could not winne the ſame: at length vittailes in the French campe began to faile, and many of them died for hunger. For the Earl of Tholouſe as a wiſe man of warre, hearing before of their comming, toke into the Towne, all the prouiſion that was abroade, and left nothing without to ſerue for theyr defence and ſuccour, he plowed vp the fieldes, that there ſhould no ſtouer be found to ſerue their horſes, he put out of the towne all the olde people, & yong children, leaſt they ſhould want vittailes that kept the towne, & before theyr comming ſent them farre away. So that within yͤ towne they had plenty, and without they died for famine: and beſides in ſeeking farre for their forage, many fell into the hands of them that kept the citie, who ſecretly lay in wait for them abroad and ſlewe many of them. Beſides a great number of cattell and horſes died for want of forage: and poore ſouldiours that had no great ſtore of money, died for want of vittailes. By which mortalitie and ſtench both of men and cattel, grew great infection & peſtilence amongſt them, inſomuch that the king himſelfe and alſo the Legate were greatly diſmayed, thinking it to be no litle ſhame as well to the realme of Fraunce, as alſo to Rome, that they ſhoulde ſo depart and breake vp their ſiege. Thus againe thought the ſouldiours, that much better it were for them to ende their liues by battel, then ſo to die like dogges and ſterue: wherfore with one conſent they purpoſed to geue a new aſſaut at the bridge that goeth ouer the floude Rodanus into the towne, to which place they came in ſuch nōber, that either by the debilitye of the bridge, or ſubtiltye of the ſouldiours that kept the towne: 3000. of them wyth bridge and all, fell armed into the violent ſtreame & were drowned. What was there then but ioy and gladnes of the Citizens part, and much lamentation & heauineſſe on the other part. Then ſhortly after, the Citizens of Auinion (when they ſaw a conuenient time whileſt their enemyes were in eating meate) came ſodenly vpon them out of the towne, and ſlew of them 2000. and toke the towne againe with ſafety. But the Legate with his company of prelates (like good men of warre) practiſed none other Martiall feats, but all to be curſed the Earle of Tholouſe, hys Cities, and his people. Ludouicus the king, to auoyde the peſtilence that was in the campe, went into an Abbey not far off, where ſhortly after he died, of whoſe death are ſondry opinions, ſome ſaying that hee was poyſoned, ſome that he died of a bloudy flixe.

Whoſe death notwithſtanding, the Legate thought to kepe ſecret & conceale, till that the towne might be rendered and geuen vp: for he thought himſelf ſhamed for euer, if he ſhould depart before the towne were won: wherfore, after he had encouraged the ſouldiours a freſh, and yet after many ſharp aſſaults could not preuaile: He bethought him how by falſhode he might betray them, and ſent vnto them certaine Haroldes, to will them that they ſhould amongſt themſelues conſult vpon articles of peace, & bring the ſame to their camp, whoſe ſafe conduite they faithfully promiſed and warrāted both of comming and going. And when they had geuen their pledges for yͤ ſame, the meſſengers from the Citizens talked with the Legate: who promiſed them if they would deliuer vp their city, they ſhould haue their liues, goodes, & poſſeſſions in as ample maner as now they enioyed the ſame. But the citizens and ſoldiors refuſed to be vnder the ſeruitude of the French kyng, neither wold ſo deliuer vp their citie, to thoſe of whoſe inſolent pride they had ſo good experiment. After much talke on both ſides, & none like to take effect: the Legate requeſted them and frendly deſired, yͭ he and his Prelates which were about him, might come into their Citie to examine what faith & beliefe they were of, and yͭ he neyther ſought nor ment any other thing therby, but their owne ſafeties, as well of body as ſoule, which thing hee faithfully ſware vnto: for (ſayeth he) the brute of your great infidelitie hath come to the lord popes eare, & therefore deſired he to make true certificate therof. Whereupon the citizens not miſtruſting his faithfull othe and promiſe made to them, graunted entrance to him and the reſidue of the clergy, bringing with them no weapon into the towne. The ſouldiours of yͤ campe as it was agreed before, made them ready: ſo that at the entraunce of the prelates in at the gate, nothing regarding their oth & fidelitie: The other ſodenly were ready, and with violence ruſhed in, ſlew the porter and warders, and at length wanne the city and deſtroied the ſame, & ſlue many of them that were within. Thus by falſhode and policie, when they had got this noble citie, they caried the kings corps to Paris where they buried the ſame. Of the whole number of the French ſouldiours which in this ſiege were deſtroyed by famine, peſtilence, & drowning, be recounted no then 22000. Whereby ſayth the ſtory of Mat. After theſe things finiſhed, and after the funerall of the king celebrated at Paris, it followeth more in the ſayd hiſtory of Parienſ. that the ſayde Legate Romanus was vehemently ſuſpected, & greuouſly infamed to abuſe himſelfe with Blanca the kings mother. For the recompenſe wherof, they were conſtrained to yelde to the king the full ſumme of the like money. That done, he remoued to Oxforde, where he aſſembled a great counſail, there denouncing & proteſting before them al, that he was come to ſufficient age, no more to be vnder tutors & gouernours but to be his own man, requiring to be freed from yͤ cuſtody of other. which thing being proteſted, and contraried forthwith: he, by the counſaile of Hubert the chiefe iuſtice (whome hee made then the Earle of Kent) remoued from his company, the biſhop of winchester, and other vnder whome he was moderated. Seditiõ betwene the Romanes and the Pope.

I declared before, howe after the death of Honorius, ſucceded pope Gregory the 10. betwene the which Gregory & the people of Rome, this yere, fel a great ſedition. In ſo much yͭ about the feaſt of Eaſter, they thruſt the Pope out of the Citie, purſuing him vnto his Caſtel at Viterbium. where alſo they inuaded hym ſo valiauntly, that they chaſed him to Peruſium. Then hauing no other remedie wherewith to reuenge his perſecutors, fiercly did excommunicate them. Ex Mat. Pariſ. pag. 69.

Ex Math. Pariſ.

And for as much, I haue entred here into the mention of this ſchiſmatical commotion betwene the pope and his citizens: it followeth moreouer in the hiſtory of Pariſienſis, who maketh relation of a like brawling matter, which befell the ſame yeare & time. An. 1228. betwene the prior and couent of Durham, and this king Henry the 3. vpon this occaſion. After the death of Richard Biſhop of Durham, the Prior and Chapter of the ſaid church, came to the king to obteine licenſe for the electing of their biſhop. The king offered to them one Lucas a Chaplaine of hys, requiring them inſtauntly to elect him for their Biſhop. To this the Monkes anſwered, that they would receaue no man, but by their order of Canonicall election. Meaning belike by their Canonicall election, that is, when as they elect either ſome Monke out of their own company, or els ſome monkiſh prieſt, after their owne liking. Contrary, the king againe ſendeth word vnto them, and bound it with an oth, that they ſhould tary 7. yeares without a Byſhop, vnleſſe they would admit the foreſayd Lucas to that place of that dignitie. All which notwithſtanding, the monkes proceding in their election, refuſed the ſayde Lucas, and preferred an other clerk of theirs, named william archdeacon of worceſter, and him they preſented to the king. But the king bringing in exceptions and cauſes againſt yͤ party, would not admit him. Then the monkes in al haſty ſpede ſent vp to Rome certain of their Couent, to haue their electiõ ratified, by the authoritie Apoſtolicall. On the other ſide the king likewiſe hearing, ſendeth alſo to Rome againſt the Monkes: the Biſhop of Cheſter, and the Prior of Lentonie on his behalfe, to withſtande the purpoſe of yͤ monks. And ſo the matter being trauiſed with great altercation on both ſides, did hang in ſuſpenſe, ſayeth mine author till at length thus it was concluded, betwene both that neither maſter william, nor yet Lucas ſhoulde be taken, but that Richard Byſhop of Sarum ſhould be tranſlated to Durham, and be Byſhop there. After much a doe, the cauſe at length being hoyſted vp to Rome, had this determination: yͭ the monks of Couentry, and the Church of Lichfield ſhoulde chuſe their Biſhop by courſe, eche part keeping his turne the one after the other: prouided notwithſtãdyng, that the Prior of Couentry ſhould alwaies haue the firſt voyce in euery election, where as the old cuſtome was, ſayth mine author, that the Couent wyth the Prior of Couentry was wont to haue the whole election of the biſhop without the Canons. After the death of thys Langthon, inſued an other variance about the election of the Archbiſhop of Canterbury betwene the monkes of Canterbury and the king. The purturbation wherof as it was no leſſe ſeditious, ſo the determination of yͤ ſame was much more coſtly. After the death of Stephen Langthon, the monkes of Canterbury obtaining licence of the king to procede in the election of a new archbiſhop, did chuſe one of their own ſociety named maſter walter Hemeſham. whom when the monks had preſented to the King, he after long deliberation, began to obiect againſt yͤ election, ſaying: firſt, that the monkes had elected ſuch one as neyther was profitable to hym nor to his kingdom. Secondly, he obiected againſt yͤ party elect, that his father was conuict of felony, & hanged for yͤ ſame. Thirdly, that he ſtode in cauſes againſt his father K. Iohn in the time of the interdict. Moreouer the biſhops his ſuffraganes charged the partie elect, that hee had lien wyth a certaine Nunne, and had children by her: adding farther, that the election of the archbiſhop was without their preſence, which ought not to be. &c. But yͤ archbiſhop againe ſtoutly ſtanding to his electiõ, appealed vp to Rome, and eftſoones taking with him certaine monks, preſented him ſelfe to the popes owne proper perſon, there to ſue his appeale: inſtantly intreating, that hys election might ſtande confirmed by his authority pontificall. But the pope, vnderſtanding that the ſaid election was reſiſted by the king & the biſhops, differred the matter, till he did heare farther of the certeinty therof. The king & the biſhops hauing intelligence that the Archb. with hys monkes were gone to Rome, thought good to articulate the foreſayd obiections aboue alledged in wryting: and ſealing the ſame wyth the ſeales both of the king and of the biſhops to exhibite them to the Biſhop of Rome. The meſſengers of theſe letters were the Byſhop of Rocheſter, of Cheſter, and the Archdeacon of Bedforde maiſter Iohn. &c. who comming to Rome, and exhibiting their meſſage & their letters vnto the Pope (conſideration being had vppon the ſame) were commanded to wait attendance againſt the next day after Aſh wedneſday: then to haue a reſolute anſwer cõcerning the cauſe, which was the 2. day of March, the yere next folowing. videlic. But finding them ſomewhat hard & ſtraite in the matter (as is the guiſe of that Court) they began to miſdoubt their ſpeding. Wherfore conſulting together with themſelues vpon the premiſſes, they came to the Pope, promiſing in the kings behalf, to be geuen and granted to him out of the realmes both of England and Scotland, the tith or tenth part of al the goods within the ſayd Realmes moueable, to ſuſteine his warres againſt the Emperor, ſo that he would incline

But the pope (ſayeth the author) which boyled with deſire aboue all meaſure, to haue the Emperour his ennemie caſt downe: being cheated wyth ſo great promiſes, graunted his conſent to them, who ſitting then in his conſiſtorie had theſe wordes, as here followe.

The Popes anſwere to the election of Walter Archb. of Cant.

No, but whẽ your darling Tho. Becket came, hee was heard without ſuch communications.

There hath come a late to our intelligence, the election of a certaine Monke named Walter, to be Archb. of Cant. whereupon after that we hard and aduiſed as wel thoſe things, which the ſaid Monke hath ſaide for himſelfe, and for his election: as alſo on the contrary ſide, the obiections & exceptions of the biſhops of England alleaging againſt him, and againſt his election: Namely of the biſhop of Cheſter, the biſhop of Rocheſter, and Iohn Archdeacon of Bedforde: We vpon the ſame committed the examination touching the perſon of the man, vnto our reuerende brethren Lorde Cardinall Albany, L. Cardinall Thomas de Sabina, and maſter Peter. And when the foreſaid elect comming before them was asked of them, firſt concerning the Lordes deſcending into hel, whether he deſcended in fleſh, or without his fleſh, he aunſwered not well. Item, being asked touching the making of the body of Chriſt on the aultar, he anſwered likewiſe not ſoundly: Being asked moreouer, howe Rachell wept for her children, ſhee being deade before, hee aunſwered not well. Item, being asked concerning the ſentence of excommunication denounced againſt the order of law, he anſwered not well. Againe being required of matrimonie, if one of the maried parties be an infidel, and do depart, he anſwered therto not well. Vpon theſe articles he was (as is ſayd) diligently examined of the Cardinals, to the which (we ſay) he aunſwered not only not well, but alſo very ill. For ſo much therefore, as the Church of Cant. is a noble churche, and requireth a noble prelate, a man diſcrete and modeſt, and ſuch as ought to be taken out of the boſome of the church of Rome: and foraſmuch as this new elect (whom not onely here we pronounce to be vnworthy, but alſo ſhould ſay more of him, if we would proceede with hym by the rigour of the law) is ſo inſufficient, that he ought not to be admitted to ſuch a roume: we do vtterly infringe, annihilate, and euacuate his election alwaies reſeruing to our ſelues the prouiſion of the ſayd church. Hæc ex Math. Pariſ. ad verbum.

The election of Walter Archb. of Cant diſſolued of the Pope for the kings mony.

Richarde chãcelour of Lincolne commended to the Pope to be Archb. of Cant.

Richarde made archb. of Cant. by the Pope without election.

The effect of the Popes letters to the ſuffraganes of Cant. The pope beginneth firſt with a lye. Ex Math. Pariſ.

Thus the election of Walter being fruſtrate and diſſolued, the kings procuratours bringing forth the letters of the king, and of the ſuffraganes of the Church of Cant. preſented the ſame vnto the pope for the ratification of Richarde Chancellor of Lincolne, to be appoynted Archb. of Cant. whome they with great commendation of wordes did ſet forth to be a man of profound learning and knowledge: of an honeſt cõuerſation, & which was greateſt of al, yͭ he was a man much for the profite of the church of Rome, as alſo for the realme of England. And thus the ſaide Richard being commended to the Pope by the letters procuratorie of the king and of the biſhops, had the conſent of the pope and of the Cardinals, and ſo was made Biſhop of Cant. before he was elected. Whereupon the ſaide pope Gregory in his behalfe, directeth downe his letters to all and ſingular ſuffraganes of the church of Cant. declaring thus, and beginning firſt with a lie, that for ſo much as by the fulnes of eccleſiaſtical power, the charge of paſtorall office is committed to him in general vpon al churches: he therefore for the ſollicitude he beareth as wel to all other churches in generall, as in ſpeciall to the Metropolitan church of Cant. repudiating and diſanulling the former election of Walter the Monke vpon iuſt cauſes, hath prouided for that See, a man as in all other good giftes perfect and excellent, by the report of them that know him: ſo for that function very fit and commodious: and willeth and cõmãdeth them, and all other by his authority Apoſtolicall, with all deuout reuerence to receiue him, and humbly to obey him, &c. which was An. 1229. Ex Pariſ.

This was a deare archb. of Cant. bought with the tythes of all England.

These things thus finiſhed at Rome, the pope not forgetting the ſweete promiſes made of the Engliſh ſiluer, which he ſo greedily gaped for, omitting neither time nor diligence in all ſpedy wiſe ſendeth to the king of England M. Stephen his own chaplein & truſty Legate, to require & collect the foreſaide tithes of all the moueable goods both of England, Ireland and Wales, which were promiſed to him before, therewͭ to maintaine his warre againſt Fredericke the Emperor. And to the intent he might inflame all chriſtẽ realmes wyth the like hatred which he bare againſt Frederike the Emperor, ſendeth alſo wͭ the ſayde Stephen ſpecial letters ful of manifold complaints and greuous accuſations againſt the ſaid Emperor, whereof more (Chriſt graunting) ſhall be ſhewed hereafter. Upon the comming of this Stephen the legate, the king aſſembled all his erles and barons, wyth the Archbiſhops, byſhops, abbots, priors, templaries, hoſpitalers, parſons & vicares, and other ſuch as held of him in capite, to appear before him at Weſtminſter, to heare and to common of the matter. In the aſſembly of whome, the Popes patent letters were brought forth and red, wherein he required yͤ tenths of all the moueables in England, Wales and Ireland, as wel of the clergy as of the laitie, to maintaine his expedition againſt the foreſaid Frederike the Emperor. The which expedition as he pretended to atchieue & to take in hande for the cauſe of the vniuerſall Church, and happely had begon the matter already: and for ſo much, as the richeſſe of the Apoſtolicke See did not ſuffice, for the accompliſhing of ſo great an enterpriſe: he therfore enforced by mere neceſſity, did implore the aide and helpe of all the true obedient and natural chickens of the church of Rome, leaſt the members thereof together with the head ſhould be ſubuerted. Theſe letters of the Pope, to this effect, being openly recited and explaned by the Popes chaplaine, which hee with much more allegation and perſwaſion of words did amplifie to his vttermoſt, the king (ſayth mine author) in whõ al men did hope an helpe to their defence, became then as a ſtaffe of reede. For as much as he had obliged himſelfe to the ſame before, for the election of his archb. now could ſay nothing againſt it, but held his peace. The Earles, Barons, & all the laitie vtterly refuſed ſo to bind their Baronies to the Church of Rome: but the Biſhoppes, Abbots, Priors, wyth other Prelates of the Church, firſt requiring ſpace and reſpite to deliberate for 3. or 4. dayes: at length for feare of the popes curſſe (although they durſt not vtterly wythſtande) had brought to paſſe to haue concluded for a ſumme of money much leſſe, had not Stephen Segraue, one of the kings counſailers, craftily conuented wͭ the Legate: and by ſubtile meanes brought it ſo to paſſe, that the whole tenthes was gathered and paide, to the ineſtimable damage (ſayth Parienſ.) both of the Eccleſiaſticall and Temporall ſtate. The meanes whereof (ſayeth the authour) was this. The Legate ſhewing to the prelates his procuratory letters to collect and gather vp all the foreſayde tenthes in the name and authoritie of the Pope, declared moreouer full authoritie to him graunted by the vertue of hys commiſſion, to excommunicate all ſuch, and to interdicte their Churches, who ſoeuer did gainſtand or go contrary to the ſaid collection. Wherupon by the ſaid vertue legantine, he ſendeth to euery ſhire, his Proctors to gather the Popes money, or els to excommunicate them which denied to pay: and for ſo much as the preſent nede of the pope required preſent help without delay, he ſendeth moreouer to the byſhops & prelates of the Realme, in paine of interdiction forthwith to procure and ſend to him either of theyr owne, or by lone, or vſance, or by what meanes ſo euer, ſo much money in all poſt ſpede, for the preſent vſe of the pope. And after to take vp agayne the ſaid money of the tenthes of euery ſingular perſon, by the right taxing of their goodes. Upon this, the Prelates to auoide the daunger (hauing no other remedy) were driuen to ſel their chalices, cruets, copes, iewels, and other church plate: and ſome to lay to morgage ſuch things as they had, ſome alſo to borowe vpon vſance, to make the money which was required. Moreouer, the ſayd Stephen the Popes chaplaine (as reporteth Pariſ.) brought wͭ hym into England for the ſame purpoſe, ſuch bankers and vſurers, who lending out their money vpon great vſurie, did vnreaſonably pinch the Engliſh people, which marchant vſurers were then called Caurſini. Briefly ſuche ſtraight exaction was then vppon the poore Engliſh men, that not onely theyr preſent goodes were valued and taxed, but alſo the corne yet growing in the field, againſt the next harueſt was tithed, &c. Only the Earle of Cheſter named Ranulphus, ſtood ſtoutly againſt the Pope, ſuffring none within his dominion either lay man or clearke to yeld any tenths to the popes proctors. Ex Math. Pariſ. pag. 74. And thys was the end of the ſtrife betwene the Monkes of Caunterbury, & the king for the election of their Archbyſhop which was about the yeare of our Lord 1229. In the which yere was finiſhed the new Church of Couẽtry, by Alexander biſhop of the ſayd Citie, and partly by the helpe of the king: which Church, Richard his predeceſſor biſhop before him of Couentrie had begon.

The popes frẽch army thinking to deſtroy Reimunde is de- by the way.

The French men about thys time againe prepared themſelues towarde Prouince, to warre againſt the foreſayde Reimundus Earle of Tholouſe, and to expulſe him out of his poſſeſſions. And hearing that he was in his Caſtle of Saracene, they made thither all their power, thinking there to encloſe and compaſſe him about: but the erle being priuie of their conſpired purpoſe, ſet for them by the way, appointing certaine buſhments in woodes, not ſo ſecretly as ſtrongly, there to waite and receiue the comming of the Frenchmen, and to geue them their welcome. Thus when the French were entred the woode, the Earle wyth his traine of wel armed and able warriors, ſodenly did flie vppon them vnwares, and gaue them a bitter meeting, ſo that in that conflict 500. of the French ſoldiors were taken, and many ſlaine. Of their ſeruitures to the nũber of 2000. men with their armor were takẽ. Of whom ſome loſt their eyes, ſome their noſes, ſome their eares, ſome their legs, and ſo ſent home. The reſt were caried away priſoners into the caſtel. And to be brief ſaith the hiſtory, thriſe the ſame ſommer, were the Frenchmẽ diſcomfited, put to flight, taken and impriſoned by the foreſayd Reimundus the godly erle. ¶ The ſame yeare the king being at Porteſmouth, had aſſembled together all his Nobility, Earles, Barons, and knightes of England with ſuch an armye of horſemen and footemen, as hath not ben lightly ſene, thinking to recouer againe the Countrey of Normandie, of Gaunt, and other poſſeſſiõs which king Iohn his father before had loſt. But when the captaines and marſhals of the fielde ſhould take ſhipping, there were not halfe ſhips enough to receiue the hoſt. wherupon the king was vehemently inflamed with anger, laying all the fault to Hubert, the Lorde chiefe Iuſtice (who vnder the King had all the gouernement of the Realme) calling him olde traitour, charging him that hee ſhould be the let of his voyage, as he was before, when hee toke of the French Quene 5000. markes, to ſtay the kings iourney into Normandy. In ſo much the rage of the king was ſo kindled againſt him, yͤ drawing his ſword, he made at him to runne him through, had not the Earle of Cheſter Ranulph ſtopt the king. Hubert withdrew himſelfe away till the kings rage was paſt. This was about the time of Michaelmas, at which time arriued Henry Earle of Normandie in the hauen of Porteſmouth in the month of Octob. who ſhuld haue conducted the king vpon his allegeance & othe into Normandie. But he wͭ other of the kings armie counſailed the king not to take that voyage toward winter, but rather to defer it to the Eaſter next following: wherwith the king was ſtaid and well contented, and pacified againe with Hubert the Iuſtice. &c. Paule: the Biſhop then being at hys Maſſe, a ſodaine darkenes wͭ ſuch thickneſſe of clouds fell in the aire, that vnneth one man might ſee an other in the Church. After that followed cracks of thunder & lightning ſo terrible, leauing ſuch a ſent in the Church, that the people loking for domes day, thought no leſſe but that the ſteeple and whole Church woulde haue falne vppon theyr heads. Anno. 1231. Richard Archb. of Cant.

The complaint of Rich. Archb. of Cant. againſt Hubert Lord chiefe iuſtice.

Of the death of Steuen Langton, & of the troubleſome election of the next Archbiſhop: alſo of the coſtly & chargeable bringing in of Richard to ſuccede in the roume, which did coſt the whole realme of England the tenths of al their moueables, ſufficient hath bene declared before. Thys Richard being nowe confirmed in his ſeat, came to the King complaining of Hubert the Lord chief Iuſtice, oft mentioned before, for withholding him from the caſtle and towne of Tunbrydge with the appurtenance to the ſame belonging, and other landes of the Earle of Clare late deceaſed: which landes appertained to the right of his ſeat, & to the church of Cant. for the which the ſaid Earle with his aunceters were bound to do homage to him and to his predeceſſors: and therfore required the keping of the foreſaid caſtle, with the demaines therof to be reſtored vnto him. To this the king anſwered againe, that the ſayd Erle did hold of hym in Capite, and that the Caſtles being vacaunt of Earles and Barons with theyr heyres, did belong to hys crowne, till the lawfull age of the ſayd heires. The Archb. when he could get no other anſwer of the king, did excommunicate all ſuch as inuaded the foreſaid poſſeſſions wyth all other that tooke their parte, the king onely excepted. which done, eftſoones ſpeedeth himſelfe to Rome, there to proſecute his ſute before the pope. The king hearing therof, not long after ſendeth vp maiſter Roger Cantelu wyth certaine other meſſengers to Rome againſt the Archb.

The kinges anſwere to Rich. the Archb.

Excommunication abuſed.

Richard the archb. complaineth to the pope of his king and of other matters

Thus Richard the Archb. comming before the Popes preſence, beginneth firſt to complaine of his king, for that he committed all the affaires of the realme to the diſpoſition and gouernement of Hubert his iuſtice, vſing only his counſaile, all his other nobles deſpiſed.

Againſt the ſayde iuſtice moreouer he complained, laying to his charge: Firſt, that he had maried a wife, being the kinſwomã of her whom he had maried before: alſo that the ſaid Hubert the iuſtice did inuade, hold and wrongfully deteine ſuch poſſeſſions as belonged to the ſee & Church of Canterburie.

¶ As touching the wife of this Hubert, heere is to be noted, that he maried the elder ſiſter of the king of Scottes which ſemeth could be of no great kinne to her whome hee maried before.

Farther, he complained of certaine Biſhops his Suffraganes, who neglecting their paſtorall function, did ſit on Checker matters belonging to the King, and exerciſed ſeſſions and iudgements of bloud.

Pluralitie of benefices complained of by the Archbiſh. of Cant.

Ouer and beſides, he complained of beneficed perſons, and clerks within orders, for hauing many benefices, ioyned with cure of ſoule: And that they alſo taking example of the Biſhops, did intermeddle in ſecular matters, and in iudgements of lay men.

Of theſe and ſuch other defaultes, he required redreſſe to be had. The Pope weying and conſidering the cauſe of the Archb. to ſtand vpon right & reaſon (at leaſt wiſe ſeming ſo to his purpoſe) commaunded incontinent his petitions and requeſts to be diſpatched according to iuſtice.

The kings attournies coulde not ſpeede with the Pope. Reſpect of perſon doth much with the Pope. Richard the Archb. in his iourney fro Rome, Againſt theſe complaints of the Archbiſhop, the kings atturneis alledged and defended, in as much fauour of the king, as they might, but coulde doe no good. Such fauour found the archbiſhop in the popes ſight, being (as the ſtory reporteth) of a comely perſonage, & of an eloquẽt tonge, that he obtained whatſoeuer he aſked. Thus the Archbyſhop with all fauourable ſpeede being diſpatched at Rome after his owne will and deſire, returned homewarde: who in his iourney within 3. daies of his ſetting forth, departed in the houſe of the gray Friers at S. Gemines, and ſo hys cauſe departed with him: who winning his ſute, loſt hys life, for whome it had bene better I ſuppoſe to haue taried at home. And here of him an end, with all his complaintes alſo. Raffe Neuill B. of Chicheſter elected Archb. of Cant. The King inueſteth the Archb. of Cant. Ex Math. Pariſ.

After the death of this Richarde, the monkes of Cant. (according to the manner) addreſſe them ſelues to a newe election: at which was choſen Radulfe Neuill, Byſhop of Chicheſter, who was the kinges Chauncelor, much commended in ſtories, to be a man faithfull, vpright, and conſtant: which from the way of iuſtice declined neither to the right hand nor to the left. But vpright and ſincere both in word and decde. This Rauffe (thus choſen of the monks) was preſented to the king to be their Archbiſhop, wherewith the king was right well contented, and glad alſo of this election: and forthwith inueſted him for Archbyſhop of the Church of Canterb. But this inueſting of the King was not inough, vnles he ſhould alſo be confirmed by the pope. wherefore, the Monkes ready to take their iourney vnto Rome, came to the newe Archb. requiring hys helpe for their expenſes by the way, and to know what ſeruice he would commaunde them to the Court of Rome. But hee fearing in his mind the ſame not to be without ſome ſcruple of ſimonie & ambition, ſaid he would not geue an halfpenie, and holding vp his handes to heauen, thus prayed, ſaying: O Lorde God, if I ſhall be thought worthy to be called (although in deede vnworthy) to the ſeat & office of this church: ſo be it as thou ſhalt diſpoſe it. But if otherwiſe in this troubleſom office of Chancerie, and this my inferior miniſterie, whereunto I haue bene aſsigned, I ſhall ſeme more neceſſary for this thy kingdome and people: I refuſe not my labour: thy will be done.

Simõ Langh tõ Archb. of Yorke, a malicious backbiter of Radolphus Archb. elect.

The monks beholding the conſtancie of the man, notwͭſtanding they had of him no money, yet refuſed not their trauail and iourny to Rome, to haue their election confirmed by the Popes authoritie. The Pope inquiring of Simon Langhton (brother of Stephen Langhton Archb. of Cant. before mentioned) of the perſon of this man: it was reported againe to him by the ſayde Simon (maliciouſly depraning the good man behind his backe) declaring to the Pope, that he was a courtier, vnlearned, haſty and feruent in his doings, and ſuch one: who if he ſhould be promoted to that dignitie, would go about with the help of the king, and of the whole realme, to remoue and bring the realme of England from vnder the yoke of the Pope, and of the Churche of Rome. And ſo to bereue the See of Rome of the tribute, vnder which king Iohn had once ſubiected himſelfe and his realme, at what time he yelded his crown to the handes of Pandolfus the Legate. &c. with theſe and ſuch other words Simon Langhton falſly and maliciouſly depraued the godly biſhop. of Cant. to procede in a new election, and to chuſe them an other Arch. ſuch as were an wholeſome paſtour of ſoules, profitable to the church of England, & deuout to the church of Rome. And thus was the lawfull election of thys good Archb. made fruſtrate, too good peraduenture to ſerue in that place, whereunto he was elected.

After the repulſe of thys Radulphe, the Caunterburie Monkes entring a new election, agreed vpon Iohn their prior, to be their Metropolitane. Who going vp to Rome to haue his election confirmed by the Pope, was 3. dayes together examined of the cardinals. And when they could finde no inſufficiency in him, touching theſe things, wherein they tried him: yet notwithſtanding, the pope finding a fault with his age (he peraduenture being more aged himſelfe) repealed him, for that he ſayd, he was too old and ſimple, to ſuſteine that dignitie. Ex Pariſ.

¶ What was the age of this perſon, I find it not in the authour expreſſed: yet it is to be ſuppoſed, that hee which was able to take that iourney to Rome, and home againe: was not ſo greatly to be cōplained off for hys age, but that he was able ſufficiently to take paines in keping the chaire of Canterburie.

In the former parts of this ſtory proceding, partly before hath bene declared, partly hereafter more ſhal appeare (Chriſt willing) how the Church of England & commons of the ſame was grieued & miſerably afflicted, by the intollerable oppreſſions of the Pope: who through his violent extortion had procured the beſt benefices to be giuen to his Romanes and the chiefe fruites of them to be reſerued to his owne coffers. And what complaints therof haue bene made, ye heard before, pa. 255. But yet no redreſſe could be had. Such was the inſatiable auarice of theſe Romaines rakehels, proiling & polling whereſoeuer they came, wyth their prouiſions & exactions out of meaſure, and neuer ſatiſfied. In ſomuch, that here in England whoſoeuer lackt: their barnes were alwaies full of corne: and what penury ſoeuer pinched the people, they were ſure to haue inough. And theſe inportunate exactions & contributions of theſe Italian harpies: beſide the peterpence, beſide the common tribute, daily more & more increaſed, to the great greuance of the Realme: in ſomuch that the wealth of this land was almoſt cleane ſuckt vp, & tranſlated to the court of Rome. Neither was the king ignorant hereof, but could not help the matter. Wherfore it was deuiſed by ſome of the nobles (as appeareth in the ſtory of Parienſis) this foreſayde yeare, An. 1231. that certaine letters vnder the pretenſed colour of the kings authority, ſhould be ſent abroad: willing & commaunding, that ſuche corne & graine, and other reuenues, as were taken vp for the Pope, ſhould be ſtaied and forth cōming, by a certain day in the ſayd letters appoynted, the which letters are thought to procede chiefly by the means of Hubert Lorde chiefe Iuſtice of England, who then next vnder the king, ruled the moſt affaires of the realme. The wordes and contents of the letters be theſe.

After diuers & ſondry griefs & oppreſsions which this realm, as you know, hath ſuſtained by the Romaniſts and yet doth: as well to the preiudice of the king himſelfe, as alſo of the nobilitie of the ſame, concerning the aduowſons of their Churches, and about their tythes: who alſo go about to take from the clerks and ſpirituall men their benefices, & to beſtow them vpon their owne nation and countreimen, to the ſpoile and confuſion both of vs and our realm: we therfore by our cōmon conſents haue thought good (although very late) now yet rather, then any lōger to ſuffer their intollerable oppreſsions and extortions, to reſiſt and withſtande the ſame. And by the taking from them their benefices through all Englande, in like maner to cut ſhort and bridle them, as they had thought to haue kept vnder & brideled others: wherby, they may deſiſt any lenger to moleſt the Realme. Wherfore, we ſtraitly charge and commaund you, that as touching the ferming of their churches, or els the rents belōging to them, which either you haue preſently in your hands, or els do owe vnto the ſaid Romaniſts: that from henceforth you be no more accoumptable vnto them, or els pay vnto them from henceforth the ſame. But that you haue the ſayde your rents and reuenues ready, by ſuch a day, to pay and deliuer vnto our procurators thereunto by our letters aſsigned. And that all Abbates and Priors haue the ſame in a readineſſe at the time appoynted, in their owne Monaſteries: and all other Prieſtes, Clerkes, and laimen, at the Churches of the Romaniſts there ready to pay. And farther, knowe ye for certaintie that if ye refuſe thus to doe: that all that you haue beſides, ſhalbe by vs brent and ſpoiled. And beſides, looke what daunger we purpoſe ſhall fall vpon them, the ſame ſhall light vpon your neckes, if you refuſe thus to do. Farewell.

When this was done, they ſent their letters abroad by certaine ſouldiours thereunto appoynted: to the which letters they had deuiſed a new ſeale with two ſwords ingraued, & betwene the ſwords was writtē, Ecce gladij duo, &c. { Anno. 1232. }

A Romayne prieſt, Chanon of Paules taken and robbed by ſouldiours.

At that time the 16. day before the Kalends of Ianuary, about the beginning of the yere 1232. there was kept at S. Albons a great conſiſtory of Abbots, Priors, Archdeacons, with diuers both of the nobilitye and clergye by the popes commandement, for the celebration of a diuorce betwene the Countes of Eſſex and her huſband. At the breaking vp of which conſiſtorie, when euery man was about to depart thence. There was a certain clerke whoſe name was Cincius a Romane, and alſo a Chanon of Paules in London: taken by ſome of the ſayde Uniuerſitie not farre off from S. Albons, and was caried away from his company by the ſouldiours. But maiſter Iohn Archdeacon of Norwich a Florentine, hardly eſcaping from that company, gate to London where he hid himſelfe, and durſt not be ſeene. Cintius after 5. weekes, when they had well emptied hys bagges, was ſafely ſent againe without any more hurt to London.

The barnes of a Romane parſon broke vp and the corne diſtributed to the poore.

Not long after this, about the beginning of Ianuarie, the barnes of a certaine beneficed man, a Romane, & perſon of Wingham, being ful of corn, were broke vp by a like company of armed ſouldiours. And the corne brought out to be ſold and geuen away to the poore people. The farmer ſeeing this and not able to reſiſt, complaineth to the ſhirife of the ſhire, of this iniurie done to his maſter, and of breaking the kings peace: whereupon, the ſhirife ſent certaine of his mē to ſee what was done. Who cōming to the emptie barnes, & there finding the foreſaid ſouldiours to them vnknowen, who had ſold away the moſt part of the corne vpon eaſie price, and ſome for charity had geuen to the pouertie of the countrey about: required of them whot they were, that ſo durſt preſume to breake the Kings peace. Whom the other then called ſecretly a part, & ſhewed them the kings letters Patentes (pretending at leaſt the kings name and ſeale) wherin was forbidden that no man ſhuld preſume to ſtoppe or let them in that purpoſe. Whereof the Sheriffes ſeruaunts being certified, quietly returned from whence they came.

The Romanes and Italian parſons in England robbed of their rents and corne.

This comming to the knowledge of Roger byſhop of London, he (wyth the aſſiſtance of other Biſhops) proceedeth in ſolemne excommunication, firſt againſt them that robbed Cintius the Romane: then of them which ſpoyled the barnes of the parſon of Wingham, an other Romaine: thirdly he excommunicated them that forged ẏ letters and ſeale of the king aboue ſpecified.

A general ſpoile of the Romayne parſons in England.

Neither yet for all that, that did ſo ceaſe, but the ſame yeare, about Eaſter next folowing, al the barnes in England, which were in the hands of any Roman or Italian, were likewiſe waſted, and the corne ſolde to the beſt commodity of the poore commons. Of the which, great almoſe was diſtributed: and many times, money alſo wyth corne together was ſparſed for the needy people to gather vppe. Neither was there any, that would or durſt ſtand againſt them. As for the Romaines & Italians themſelues, were ſtricken in ſuche feare, that they hid themſelues in Monaſteries and celles, not daring to complaine of their iniuries receiued: but helde it better, to loſe rather their goods, then to looſe their liues. The authors and workers of thys feate were to the nomber of 80. armed ſoldiours, of whom the principall captaine, was one naming himſelfe W. Wytherſe, ſurnamed Twing.

The popes cholar ſtirred vp againſt England.

A fumiſh vicare of milde Chriſt.

This comming to the Popes knowledge, he was not a little ſtirred therewith, & ſendeth his letters immediatly to the king vppon the ſame: with ſharpe threatnings, and imperious commaundements, charging him for ſuffering of ſuch villany within his realme: ſtraitly enioyning hym vnder paine of excommunication, to ſearche out the doers hereof with all diligence, & ſo to puniſh them that all other by them may take example. Likewiſe, hee ſendeth the ſame charge to Peter biſhop of Wincheſter, and to the Abbot of S. Edmunde, to inquire in the South partes. Alſo to the Archb. of Yorke, and to the biſhop of Durham, and to maſter Iohn Chanon of Yorke a Romaine, to inquire in the North partes for the ſayde malefactors: and after diligent inquiſition made, to ſend vp ẏ ſame to Rome, there needes to appeare before him. &c.

Inquiſitiō made for the ſpoyling of the popes corne.

Thus after earneſtly inquiſition made of all parties, & witneſſes ſworne and examined: many were foūd culpable in the matter, ſome ẏ were factours, ſome that were conſenters, of whom ſome were Biſhops, and Chaplaines to the King: ſome Archdeacons, & Deanes, with other ſouldiours and lay men. Among whom certaine ſheriffes and vnderſheriffs with their ſeruitures vnder them, were apprehended and caſt into priſon by the king. founde: but the principall of this number (as is aforeſaid) was ſuppoſed to be Hubertus Lord chief iuſtice: who both with the kings letters & his own, fortified the doers thereof, that no man durſt interrupt them. Moreouer in ẏ ſame ſociety of them, which were noted in theſe doings, was the ſame Robert Twing, aboue mentioned, a comely young man and a talle ſouldiour: who of his own voluntary accorde, with 5. other ſeruitures, whome hee tooke wyth him abroad to worke that feat, came to the king: openly proteſting himſelfe to be the author of that deede doing, and ſaid, he did it for hatred of the pope and the Romaines: becauſe that by the ſentence of the biſhop of Rome, and fraudulent circumuention of the Italians, he was bereeued of the patronage of his benefice, hauing no more to geue but that one. Wherefore to be reuenged of that iniurie, he enterpriſed that which was done: preferring rather vniuſtly to be excommunicate for a ſeaſon, then to be ſpoiled of his benefice for euer. Then the King, and other executours of the Popes commandement gaue him counſaile, that ſeeing he had ſo incurred the danger of the Popes ſentence, ſhoulde offer himſelfe to the pope to be abſolued of him againe, and there to make his declaration vnto him, that he iuſtly and canonically was poſſeſſed in that church. The king moreouer with him ſent his letters teſtimoniall vnto the pope, witneſſing with the ſaide ſouldiour, and inſtantly deſiring the Pope in his behalf, that he might with fauor be heard. At the requeſt wherof, Pope Gregory afterward, both releaſed him of the ſentence, and reſtored him to his patronage: wryting to the Archb. of York, that he might againe inioy the right of his benefice in as ample maner, as he did before it was taken from him.

The Byſhops go about to bring Hubert out of the kings fauor.

Hubert de Burgo Lorde chiefe Iuſtice, being one of them which helde againſt the Romiſh Prieſtes, as is afore ſignified: was therfore not a litle noted of ẏ biſhops, who to requite him with like deſpite againe (after their accuſtomed maner of practiſe) went about by ſubtile working, to ſhake him out of the kings fauour. And firſt commeth Peter Biſhop of Wincheſter, to the king greuouſly complaining of certaine about the King, but eſpecially of the foreſaide Hubert the kings iuſtice: in ſo much, that he cauſed him to be remoued from his office, notwythſtãding he had the kings ſeale and wryting for the perpetuity of the ſame, & procured Steuen Segraue to be placed in his function. And after a few daies, the king more and more incenſed againſt hym, called him to a counte of all the treaſure which he was countable for by his exchekers office: alſo of all ſuche debts by him due frõ the time of his father, vnto hys time. Alſo of all the Lordſhips, whych were in the poſſeſſion of William Earle of Pẽbroke, chief iuſtice before him. Item, of the liberties which he did holde at that time, in foreſtes, warrens, ſhires, and other places, how they were kept, or howe they were made away. Of Prices likewiſe: Alſo of loſſes committed through hys negligence: And of waſtes made contrary to the kings profite: of his liberties, howe he did vſe them. Item, of iniuries and damages wrought againſt the clearkes of Rome, and other Italians, and the Popes Legates: for the redreſſe whereof, he woulde neuer adioyne his cõſail, according as appertained to his office, being then chief iuſtice of England. Alſo of ſcutagies, gifts preſents, ſcapes of priſonners. Item, of maritagies which king Iohn cõmitted to his keeping at the day of his death, and which were alſo in his time committed vnto him. To theſe Hubert anſwered, ẏ he had king Iohns owne hand to ſhewe for his diſcharge: who ſo approued his fidelitie, that he neuer called him to any, but clerely diſcharged him from all ſuch counts. Wherunto anſwered againe the Biſhop of Wincheſter, ſaying: the Charter of king Iohn hath no force after the death of him, but that ye may now be called to a reckoning of this king for the ſame.

Obiections laid againſt Hubert, by the kyng.

Note, that with Wint. the kyngs charter is no lõger in force then whileſt he liueth.

Ouer and beſides theſe, other greater obiections were laid to his charge by the King: as for ſending and wryting to the duke of Auſtria, that he might marry hys daughter, to the preiudice of the King and of the Realme, diſſuading that ſhe myght not be geuen to him. Item, for counſailing the king not to enter into Normandie wt his armie which he had prepared for the recouerie of lands there belonging to his right, wherby great treaſure was there conſumed in vaine. Item, for corrupting the daughter of the King of Scottes, whome king Iohn his father committed to his cuſtody, for him to mary. Item, for ſtealing frõ him a pretious ſtone, which had a vertue to make him victorious in warre, & for ſending the ſame to Leoline Prince of Wales. And that by his letters ſent to the ſayde Leoline William Bruces a noble man was cauſed there traitrouſly to be hãged. &c. Theſe wyth other crimes (whether true or falſe) were ſuggeſted to the king againſt the ſayd Hubert by his aduerſaries, wherunto he was required to anſwere by order of law. Hubert then ſeing himſelfe in ſuch a ſtrait, refuſed to anſwer preſently, but required reſpite thereunto, for that the matters were weighty which the king obiected to him, which was graunted to hym till the 14. day of September: but in the meane time, Hubert being in fear of the king, fled from London to the priory of Merton. And thus Hubert, who before for the loue of the king, and defence of the realme (ſayth mine author) had got the hatred of all the nobles of England, now being out of the kings fauor was deſtitute of comforte on euery ſide: ſaue onely that Lucas Archbiſhop of Dubline, wyth inſtant prayers and teares, laboured to the king for him. By this example & many like is to be ſene, howe vnſtable and variable a thing the fauor of mortall & mutable princes is: To teach all ſuch as haue to doe about princes, howe to repoſe and plant their truſt not in man, but in their Lord God: by him to finde help in Chriſt the true Prince of all Princes, which neuer faileth. By like example was Clito ſerued of king Alexander, Ioab of king Dauid, Belliſarius of Iuſtiniane, Harpagus of Aſtiages, Cromwell of king Henry, wt innumerable moe, which in hiſtories are to be found.

Other crimes obiected to Hubert by the king.

When the day was come, that this Hubert ſhould anſwer, keeping among the monks of Merton, he durſt not appeare.

Then was it ſignified to him from the King, that hee ſhould come vp and appeare in the court, there to anſwer to his charge. Wherunto he anſwered againe, that he miſdouted the kings anger, & therfore he did flie to the church as the vttermoſt refuge to all ſuch as ſuffer wrong. From whence he would not ſtirre, till he heard the kings wrath to be mitigated towards him. With this, the king moued & ſore diſpleaſed, directed his letters in all haſt, to the maior of London, commanding him at the ſight therof to muſter and take vp all the citizens that could beare harneis in the Citie, and to bring to him by force of armes the foreſaid Hubert either quicke or dead, out of Merton. Wherupon, the Maior immediately cauſing the great bell to be ronge: aſſembled together the people of Lõdon, and opening before them the kings letters, commaunded them to prepare and arme themſelues in al readines to the executing of the kings will and meſſage.

The Citizens hearing this, were therewith right glad and ready, for they were all in great hatred wyth Hubert: becauſe of the execution of Conſtantine their citizen aboue mentioned, pag. 269. Notwithſtanding, certaine of ẏ citizens, namely Andrew Bukerel, Iohn Trauers & other mo, men of more graue & ſage diſcretiõ (wiſely pondering with themſelues, what inconuenience might riſe heerof) went in haſte to the Byſhop of Wintcheſter, lying then in Southwarke: and waking him out of hys ſleepe, deſired him of his counſaile in that ſo ſodeine and daungerous diſtreſſe: Declaring to him, what perill might thereby enſue as well to the church of Merton, as alſo to the citie, by the fury of the vnordinate & fierce multitude, which wil hardly be brideled from robbing and ſpoiling, neither wil ſpare ſheding of bloud. &c. Vnto whõ againe the bloudy byſhop gaue this bloudy counſaile (ſayth Pariensis.) Daungerous it is (quod he) both heere and there, but yet ſee ẏ you obey and execute the precept of the king, I counſaile you plainely. At the which counſail of the biſhop they being amaſed, went with an euill will about the buſineſſe enioyned. But the people inflamed wt hatred, gladly coueted to be reuenged and to ſhed the bloud of the ſayd Hubert.

¶ The cauſe why Peter Byſhop of Wint. was ſo cruelly ſet againſt the Iuſtice, was partly for the damages hee had done to the Romane Prieſtes, as is before touched: Partly alſo for the olde grudge, becauſe the king comming to his lawful age before (through the counſail of this Hubert) loſed himſelfe frõ the gouernment of the ſayd B. who had him then in cuſtodie. And thus roſe vp the grudge and diſpleaſure of this biſhop him.

In the meane ſeaſon, while the Citizens were in their iourney, raging againſt the poore erle of Kent: it was ſuggeſted to the king by Radulfe B. of Chicheſter, and Lorde Chauncelor, that it was daungerous to excite vp the vulgare and vnruly multitude, for feare of ſedition: leſt peraduenture, the rude and heady people being ſtirred vp, will not ſo ſoone be brought downe againe, when the K. would haue them. keth to deuour his old nurſe vnder whoſe wings he had ben brought vp and nouriſhed in his youth. And thus the king by the perſwaſion hereof, chaūging his councell, ſet in all haſty wiſe after the army againe, willing them to retract theyr iourney, and to retire, And thus the Londiners (although much agaynſt their wils) returned home, miſſing of theyr purpoſe. wherein is to be obſerued another notable example of Gods working prouidence. For when ẏ king (ſayth the hiſtory) had ſent by 2. meſſēgers or purſeuants to reuoke and call back again the army of the Londiners, going with gredy mindes to ſhed the bloud of the innocent Iuſtice: One of the meſſengers poſting with all ſpeed poſſible, with the kinges letters, ouertook the army: and comming to the foreward, where the Captains were by vertue of the kings letters ſtaied their courſe and bloudy purpoſe, wherby they could proceed no farther. But the other meſſēger crafty and malicious, who bearing hatred to the ſayd Hubert, rather wiſhing him to be ſlayne, then to be deliuered: lingred by the way of purpoſe (although being commaunded to make haſte) & when he came, went onely but to the middle ſort. More like a meſſēger meet to ſerue a dead mans arrant, then to ſerue the turne of them which be aliue. And ſo in like maner by the iuſt hand of God it fell vpon him. For the ſame meſſenger ſtombling with his horſe, riding but a ſoft or a foote pace, and rather walking then riding: fell down backward from his horſe backe, and there brake his necke and dyed. This mercifull meſſage of the king was, as is ſaid, ſent by the inſtigation of Radulph B. of Chicheſter Lord Chaunceller (a vertuous and a faythfull man) and one that coulde ſkill to haue compaſſion on the miſeries of men. Of whom was declared before, that he being elected Archbiſhop of Canterbury, would not get one halfe peny to theyr expenſes by the way, to geue his election cōfirmed by the Pope: and afterward by the ſayd Pope was defeited and fruſtrated of his election, as relation was made before pag. 274. And thus through Gods prouidēce by the meanes of the kings letters the army returned: and Huberts life (contrary to hys expectation) was preſerued.

After this, the Archbiſhop of Dubline with much labour and great ſute intreated and obteined of the king to graunt vnto the ſayd Hubert reſpite till the twelfe day of Ianuary, to prouide himſelf of his anſwere to ſuch things as were commenſed agaynſt him. Then Hubert truſting to enioy ſome ſafety by the kings permiſſion to him graūted, to breath himſelfe a litle and to walke abroad, took his iourny towardes S. Edmūdeſbury, where his wife was. And paſſing through the countrey of Eſſex, was Inned there in a certaine towne belonging to the biſhop of Norwich. whereof when the king was certified, fearing leſt he would raiſe vp ſome commotion in the Realme: ſēdeth in haſty anger after him Syr Godfred Crancombe knight, with 300. men: commaunding vnder payne of hanging, that they ſhould apprehend him, & bring him to the tower of London. which commaundement to accompliſh, there lacked no haſte. Hubert hauing intelligence of their comming (riſing out of his bed naked as he was) ranne to the chappel ſtanding nere to the Inne, where he holdeth with the one hand the croſſe, with the other hand the Sacramēt of the Lordes body. Then Godfride with his foreſayd armed ſouldiours entring into the Chappell, willed him to come out. which when he would not: with violent hands he drew him out of the Chappell, and taking the Croſſe & Sacrament out of his hands, faſt bound him with fetters and giues vnder the horſe belly, and brought him as they were commaunded, to the Tower. And ſo certifying the king what they had done (who then taried vp waking for them) he reioyced not a little thereat, and went mery to his bed.

The Archb. of Dubline againe maketh interceſsion for Hubert.

Hubert flyeth to the Church for his refuge.

Hubert violētly drawen out of the Church.

Hubert caſt into the tower of Londō

The next morrow following after, Roger Byſhop of London had knowledge, how and in what order he was taken violently out of the Chappell, he commeth to the king blaming him boldely for violating the peace of holy church, and proteſted that vnleſſe the partye were looſed agayne, & ſent to the Chappel from whence he was drawn, he would enter ſentente of excommunication agaynſt all the deed doers,

The kyng blamed for breaking the peace of holy Church.

The king as he did not deny his tranſgreſſion herein, ſo ſendeth him, (albeit agaynſt his will) out of the Tower to the ſaid Chappell agayn & by the ſame ſouldiors which brought him out before. which done, he geueth in ſtraight charge and commaundement vnder payne of hanging to the Shiriffes of Herforde and of Eſſex, that they in theyr owne perſons with the ſtrength of both Shyres ſhoulde watch and compaſſe about the Chappell, and ſee that the ſayd Hubert no wayes might eſcape. which commaundement of the king was accōpliſhed with all diligence. But Hubert took all this patiently, and continued in the chappell praying both night and day, & commending his cauſe vnto the Lord, whom he deſired ſo to deliuer him from that inſtant daunger, as he alwayes ſought the kings honor by his faythfull and truſty ſeruice. And as he continued in his prayer, ſo the king continuing in his rage, commaunded that no man ſhould intreat for him, or make any mention of him in his preſence. Notwithſtanding, yet Lucas Archbiſhop of Dubline, his true and almoſt onely friend, ceaſed not to pray and weepe to the king for hym, deſiring the king at leaſt to intimate to him, what he purpoſed ſhould be done with Hubert. whereunto the King anſwering, ſayd: that of three things one he ſhould chooſe: whether he woulde abiure the Realme of England for euer, or be condemned to perpetuall priſon, or els confeſſe himſelfe openly to be a Traytour. But Hubert hereunto ſayde, that he woulde chooſe none of theſe Articles, as who knew himſelfe neither giltye, nor worthye of anye ſuche confuſion: but to ſatiſfye ſomewhat the minde of the Kyng, he woulde be content to departe the Realme for a ſeaſon; but to abiure the Realme, he woulde not ſo doe.

The Kyng compelled to ſend Hubert againe to his ſanctuary.

Example of a conſtant friend in the time of need.

Three things put to Hubert to chuſe.

In this meane time it befel, that Rannulphus Earle of Cheſter and of Lincoln, one of his soreſt enemies died. Hubertus all this while, remayned in the Chappell incloſed & garded about with the power, as is ſayd, of two ſhires, & ſo continued til at length by the cōmaūdement of the king his two ſeruitours whiche miniſtred to him within the Chappell, were taken from him. Then Hubert ſeeing no other remedy but there to ſterue for famine, offered hymſelfe of his owne accorde to the Shiriffes, ſaying that he would put himſelfe rather in the kinges mercy, then there deſperately to periſh for hunger. And ſo was he takē, and being faſt bound in fetters, was brought agayne & clapped by the Kinges commaundement, in the Tower of London.

Hubert yeldeth himſelfe to the Sheriffes.

Hubert reduced againe to the Tower.

Not long after this, word was brought to the king by certaine, that the ſaid Hubert had muche treaſure lying in the houſe of the new Templaries in London. whereupon the king to try out the trueth thereof ſendeth for the Prior or maiſter of ẏ houſe, who not daring to deny, confeſſed ẏ there was in deed treaſure brought into the houſe, but the quantity and number thereof he could not tell. The King deſirous to ſeaſon vpō the treaſure, required and charged the maiſter with his brethren, with threatning wordes, to bring forth the treaſure to him, ſaying, that it was taken and ſtolne out of his treaſury. But they anſwered againe that the treaſure was committed with truſt and fayth vnto theyr hands: and therfore they would nor ought to let it go out of theyr hands, being truſted withall, without the aſſent of him which committed the ſame vnto them. when the king could get no other anſwere at their hands, neither durſt ſhew any further violēce againſt thē, he ſendeth to Hubert in ẏ Tower, requiring of him the foreſaid treaſures. To whom he aunſwering agayne mildely, yelded both himſelfe, his treaſures & all that euer he had vnto the kings will & pleaſure, & ſo ſending word to the maiſter & brethren of the Temple, willeth them to take al the keyes, and deliuer the goods, with all that there was to the king, who receiuing the ſame, and taking an Inuentory of that which was receiued, cauſed it to be brought to his treaſure, whereof the number both of the plate, of coyne, and of the iewels was of price vnknowen. The enemies of Hub. ſuppoſing thereby to take aduauntage againſt him to bring him to his end came with open complaynt to the king, crying out againſt Hubert, that he was a thief, a traitor, and a robber of the kings treaſure, and therefore by right was worthy to be hanged, and thus cried his accuſers dayly in the kinges eare. But the hartes of kinges (ſayth the wiſe man) are in the handes of the Lord, to be ruled not after mans will, but as it pleaſeth God to direct them. And ſo this king hauing now his will & fill vpon poore Hubert & ſomwhat cōming more vnto himſelfe, anſwered againe in this wiſe: that there was no ſuch need to deale ſo ſtraitly with him, who from the time of his youth firſt ſerued mine vncle King Richard, then my father king Iohn, in whoſe ſeruice, (as I heard ſay) beyond the Seas he was driuen to eat his horſe, Pariſienſ. pag. 81. and in my time hath ſtand ſo conſtantly in defence of the Realme agaynſt forreine nations, who kept the caſtle of Douer agaynſt king Lewes, and vanquiſhed the Frenchmen vpon the Seas, alſo at Bedford, and at Lincolne hath done ſuche ſeruice. And though agaynſt me he hath dealt any thing vntruely, which yet is not euidentlye proued, yet he ſhall neuer be put by me to ſo villanous death. I had rather be counted a king fooliſh and ſimple, then to be iudged a tyraunt or a ſeeker of bloude, eſpeciallye of ſuche as haue ſerued me

Hubert againe taken out of the church, and brought backe to the Caſtle.

Thus Hubert after long trouble, a little cheered wyth ſome peece of comfort, ſet Laurence his truſtye friend that neuer left him, one that belonged to S. Albons, to be hys Stuard and ouerſeer of thoſe poſſeſſions graunted to him by the king. And ſhortly vpon the ſame, after the kinges minde was ſeene thus ſomething to relent, the enuy alſo of the nobles being now partly ſatiſfied: began to turne to mercy. In ſo much that 4. Earles, to witt Earle Richard the kinges brother, william Earle of warrine, Richard Earle Marſhall, and william Earle of Ferrys, became ſureties to the king for him. Vpon whoſe ſurety he was transferred to the Caſtle of Deuizis: where he was vnder the keeping of 4. ſouldiours by them appoynted, hauing the liberty of the Caſtle. But the Byſhopp of wincheſter, who alwayes hunted after the life of Hubert, craftely cōmeth to the king, and deſireth the cuſtodye of that Caſtle, making no mention of Hubert, to the intent that by the keeping thereof, he might the ſooner diſpatch him. Hubert hauing therof ſome inkling, breaketh the matter to two of his ſeruants, who with compaſſion tendering his miſery, watched their time (the kepers being a ſleep) and conueied by night vpon theyr backes, fettered as he was, into the pariſh Church of the Towne, and there remayned wyth him. The keepers when they miſt theyr priſoner, were in great perplexity, and after diligent ſearche finding hym at length where he was in the Churche, with violent force drew him from thence to the Caſtle againe. For the which iniury to the Church, the Biſhop of Sarum, vnderſtanding the order of the matter, commeth to the Caſtle where the keepers were, and required that Hubert ſhoulde be brought againe into the Church, from whence he was taken. which whē the keepers denied to do, ſaying that they would rather he ſhould hang then they: then the Byſhop gaue ſentence agaynſt them of excommunication. which done, he with the Biſhop of London and other Byſhops, goeth immediatly to the king, complaynyng of the iniury done to Hubert, and eſpecially of the contumely agaynſt holye Churche: neither woulde they leaue the King before they had obtayned that hee ſhoulde bee reduced agayne into the Churche, and ſo he was. It was not long after, but the king in great diſpleaſure ſendeth to the Sheriffe of the ſhyre to keepe him well watched in the Churche, till either he came forth, or there periſhed wyth famine.

Hubert deliuered out of priſon and caried into Wales.

It befel in the meane ſeaſon that great diſſention roſe betwene the king and the nobles of the Realme, by reaſon whereof Hubert was taken and caried away by Richard Earle Marſhall into wales, and there remayned till the king at length was reconciled with his nobles, and ſo receiued with the reſt the ſayd Hubert agayne into hys fauour. Vſurers excommunicated and expelled by the Byſhop of London.

Excommunication well vſed againſt vſurers.

As the beginning of this trouble of Hubert firſt ſprang of vexing the Popes barnes: ſo likewiſe Roger biſhop of London ſuſpected for the ſame cauſe, was enforced to trauell vp to Rome, there to purge himſelfe before the Pope. where after much money conſumed, & robbed alſo by the way, he gat nothing els, but loſt his labour, and ſo came home agayne. who then doing the part of a good Biſhop, after his returne from Rome, attempted to expell and exclude out of his Dioces all theſe Italian vſurers called, as is before ſayd Caurſini. Theſe Caurſinites comming with the Popes Legats into England, and lending their money to Religious houſes, to Colleges and Churches, had their debters to them boūd in ſuch ſort, as was much vntageable to them, & much iniurious vnto the other, as in the forme of theyr obligations in the ſtoryes of Mathew Pariſienſ. is largely expreſſed fol. 65. Againſt theſe Caurſinites the Biſhoppe of London being worthely inflamed with zeale of iuſtice, firſt with louing admonition, went about to reclayme them, for the wealth of theyr ſoules, afterward with ſharpe wordes began to charge them. But they neither regarding Chriſtian councell, and deſpiſing the Biſhops threatnings, would not leaue the ſweetneſſe of their occupation. wherfore the Biſhop proceding to the ſentence of excommunication, preciſely and diſtrictly charged them to depart his Dioces. But they agayne being confident & emboldned vpon the popes defence, not onely ſet at light his excommunication, but alſo wrought ſuch wayes with the Pope, that they cauſed the ſayd B. of Lōdon, being both aged and ſickely, to be cited peremptorily to appeare beyond the Seas, there to anſwere to ſuch obiections as they ſhould inferre agaynſt him. And thus the Byſhop minding rather to couer, then to open the faults of the Church, and partly being let with infirmitye & age, was compelled to let the cauſe fall.

The ge viſitation the Pope, through al religiou houſes.

Ex Parien

The gre diuerſitie among all religious orders noted.

And thus much of the popes marchants here in England, which were not ſo buſye here for theyr part, but the Pope the great maiſter of theſe marchaunt vſurers, was as buſy for hys. And although his barnes here in England were deſtroyed, and his banke ſomething decayed, yet he thought to winne it vp an other way: for he proclaimed the ſame yere a generall viſitation through all the religious houſes exempt or not exempt vniuerſally perteyning to his iuriſdiction, where by the cruell dealing of the viſitours, many were compelled to appeale and to trauell vp to Rome, to the great expenſes of their mony, and filling the Popes coffers. But as touching this viſitation, to make ſhort (ſayth the ſtory) it tended not to any reformation ſo much, as to the deformatiō of the vniuerſal order, Dum omnes qui in diuerſis orbis partibus vnicam Benedicti ſecuti fuerant regulam, per nouas conſtitutiones ita inueniantur vbiq; diſcordes, quòd ex omnibus cœnobijs, vel alijs religioſorum Eccleſijs vix duo habeantur in norma viuendi cōcordes. i. while all they, which before through all partes of the world followed onely the rule of Benedict, now through new deuiſed conſtitutions are found in all places ſo deuided & diuers, that of all monaſteryes, and other churches of religion, ſcarſe may two be foūd, which do agree in one rule and inſtitution of life.

Olde ſer tures of the kyng pu and diſca god.

All this while that Hubert aboue mentioned was ſecluded from the king, Peter B. of wincheſter bare all the rule, and aboue al other alone was accepted. This biſhop being in ſuch principall fauor with the king, as by whoſe councell all thinges were adminiſtred, remoued the naturall ſeruitours that were Engliſhmen, out of their offices, and placed other ſtraungers, namely of Pictauia, and of other countryes in theyr roome. Amōg whom was thruſt out william the Vndermarſhall, which ſupplyed yͤ roome of Richard Lord great Marſhall of England: for yͤ which cauſe, the ſayd Lord Richard was mightely offended. Alſo walter Treaſurer of the kinges houſe, was not onely expelled, but alſo merſed at an hundreth pound, & put frō all his holdes and munitions, which he had by the kinges patent graunted to him.

The King forſake nobles a ſticketh to ſtraunger

Moreouer by the counſell of the ſayd Biſhop of wincheſter, all the olde councellers as well Biſhops, as other Earles and Barons, and all the nobles were reiected frō the king in ſuch ſort, that he would heare & folow no mās councell, but onely the ſayd Peter Biſhop of wincheſter, and his coſin Peter de Riuallis. whereby it came to paſſe that all the greateſt holdes and munitions in the Realme were taken from the old kepers and committed to the cuſtodye of the ſayd Peter. Then the Biſhop of wincheſter, to plant and pitch himſelfe more ſtrongly in the kings fauor, adioyned to his felowſhip Stephen Segraue ſucceding in the place of Hubert the iuſtice: alſo Robert Paſſelew, who had the keeping of the treaſure vnder the foreſayd Peter Riuall. So by theſe three all the affayres of the realme were ordred. Moreouer to make theyr party more ſure, by them was prouided, that ſouldiours and ſeruitors from beyond the Sea, as Pictauians and Britans were ſent for, to the number of two thouſand, which were placed partly about the king, partly were ſet in Caſtles & holdes within the Realme, and had the ouerſight and gouernment of Shyres and Baronies, who then oppreſſed the nobles of the land, accuſing them to the king for traytours: whom the ſimple king did lightly beleue, committing to them the cuſtodye of his Treaſures, the ſitting in iudgements, and the doing in all thinges: And when the nobles thus oppreſſed, came to complayn of their iniuries to the king, by the meanes of the Byſhop of wincheſter, theyr cauſe was nothing regarded. In ſo muche that the ſayd wincheſter moreouer accuſed certayne Biſhops alſo to the king, ſo that he did flee and ſhunne them as open traytors and rebels.

Richard E Marſchall admoniſheth the kyng.

Theſe things ſtanding thus out of order, Richard the noble Marſhal of England, with other of the nobles ioyning with him, ſeing theſe oppreſſions and iniuries dayly growing contrary to the lawes and wealth of yͤ realm, came to the king, and blamed him for retayning ſuch peruerſe counſell about him of the Pictauians and other forreners, to the great preiudice of his naturall ſubiects, and of the liberties of the Realme, humbly deſiring and beſeching him, that he with as much ſpeed as might be, would reforme & redreſſe ſuch exceſſes, wherby the whole realme ſeemed to lie in daunger of ſubuerſion. Otherwiſe, if he refuſed to ſee correction therof, he with other peeres and nobles, would withdraw themſelues from his counſell, ſo long as he maintayned the ſocietie of thoſe forreners and ſtrangers about him.

The diſdaynfull anſwere of the B. of Wint. to the nobles.

To this Peter wincheſter aunſwering agayne, ſayde: that the king right wel might cal vnto him what forreners and ſtraungers him liſted, for the defence both of his kingdome and of his crowne: and what number of them he would, as by whom he might be able to bridle his proude and rebellious ſubiectes, and ſo to keepe them in awe and good order. whē the Earle and the nobles could get no other aunſwere of him, in great perturbatiō they departed, promiſing among themſelues, in this cauſe which ſo touched the ſtate of the whole Realme, the would conſtantly ioyne together to the parting of their life.

Wicked counſaile about a kyng.

Petrus de Rupibus B. of Wint. perter of the kyng.

After this, the foreſayd Petrus Biſhoppe of wincheſter with his cōplices, ceaſed not by all meanes to inflame the kinges hart to hatred and contempt of his naturall people, whom they ſo vehemently peruerted, that he coūting them no other then his enemies, ſought by all diligence ye vtter deſtruction of thē: ſending dayly for moe gariſons of the Pictauians, that in ſhort ſpace they repleniſhed welneare the whole land, whoſe defence the king onely truſted vnto: neither was any thing diſpoſed in the Realme, but through the guiding of this Peter, and of the Pictauians.

The king thus garded and ſtrengthened with theſe forreine aliens and ſtraungers, proclaimed a parliamēt to be holden at Oxford, where the nobles were warned to be preſent. They conſidering the indignation of the king conceiued, would not appeare. Agayn they were required the firſt, ſecond, and third time to preſent themſelues. The aſſembly proceeded, but they came not for whom the king looked. In this aſſembly or Parliament, it was playnely told the king by a Dominick Fryer preaching before him, that vnleſſe he remoued from him the Biſhop of wincheſter and Peter Riuall his kinſmā, he ſhould, neither could long enioy peace in his kingdome. This although it was bluntly ſpoken of the Frier againſt the Biſhop: yet this remedy he had: the frier had nothing to loſe. Yet was ther an other Chaplein of the Court, who perceiuing the king ſomewhat mitigated by the former preaching, and after a courtlike dexterity handling his matter, being a pleaſaunt conceited man, thus merely came to the king aſking a queſtion, what was the thing moſt pernitious & daungerous of all other thinges to them that trauaile by ye ſeas? That, ſayd the king, is beſt knowne to ſuche as trauayle in that kinde of trafficke. Nay, ſayth he, this is eaſy to be tolde. The king demaunding what it was: forſooth (quoth he) ſtones and rockes, alluding merely, but yet truely to the Biſhop of wincheſter, whoſe name and ſurname was Petrus de Rupibus. For ſo Petræ in Latine ſignifieth ſtones, & Rupes rockes. Notwithſtanding the king either not perceiuing the meaning, or not amending the fault, again ſignifieth to his nobles to ſpeake with him at weſtminſter. But they fearing ſome trayne to be layd for them, refuſed to appeare: ſending playne word to the king by ſolemne meſſage, that his grace without all delay ſhould ſeclude frō him Peter B. of wincheſter and other aliens of Pictauia, or if he would not, they with the common aſſent of the realme, would diſplace him with his wicked councellours from his kingdome, and haue within themſelues tractation for chooſing a new king.

A mery Apothegma of the kinges Chaplain.

The meſſage of the nobles to the kyng.

The king at the hearing of this meſſage being mightely moued, partly to feare, partly to indignation, eſpecially hauing ye late example of king Iohn his father before his eyes, was caſt in great perplexity, doubting what was beſt to be done. But wincheſter with his wicked councell ſo wrought with the king, that he proceeded with all ſeuerity agaynſt them: In ſo much that in ſhort time the ſparkles of poiſoned coūcell kindling more and more, grew to a ſharpe battayle betweene the king, and Richard Earle Marſhall, with other nobles, to the great diſquietneſſe of the whole Realme. The which warre before was preſignified by terrible thundering and lightning heard al england ouer in the moneth of march, with ſuch aboundaūce of raine and floudes growing vpon the ſame, as caſt down milnes, ouercouered the fields, threw downe houſes, and did much harme through the whole Realme.

Warre raiſed by the kyng againſt his nobles.

Great thunders & flouds in England.

To proſecute here at large the whole diſcourſe of thys warre betwene the king and Earle Marſhall, which continued neare the ſpace of two yeares, to declare all ye partes and circumſtances thereof, what trouble it brought, what damage it wrought to ye whole realm, what traines were layd, what ſlaughter of men, what waſte of whole countryes enſued from wales vnto Shrewſbery, how ye Marſhall ioyned himſelfe with Leolme Prince of walles, how the Pictauians were almoſt all ſlayne & deſtroyd, how the king was diſtreſſed, what forgery wily wint. wrought by the kings letters to entrap the Marſhall & to betray him to the Iriſhmen, among whom he was at length ſlayne, all this I referre to other authors. who at large do entreat of the ſame, as Math. Pariſienſ. Florilegus & ſuch other. This is to be noted and obſerued (whiche rather perteineth to our Eccleſiaſticall hiſtory) to ſee what ſedition and continuall diſquietnes was in thoſe dayes among all Chriſten people almoſt, being vnder the popes Catholick obediēce. But eſpecially to marke the corrupt doctrine then reigning, it is to be marueiled, or rather lamented, to ſee the king and the people then ſo blinded in the principall point and article of their ſaluation, as we finde in ſtoryes, which making mention of a houſe or Monaſtery of Conuertes builded the ſame yeare by the king at London, do expres in playne wordes, that he then did it Pro redemptione animæ ſuæ, & Regis Ioannis patris ſui, & omnium anteceſſorum ſuorum. i. For the redemptiō of his ſoule, of the ſoule of king Iohn his father, & for the ſoules of all his aunciters. &c. Wherby may be vnderſtand in what palpable darknes of blind ignoraunce the ſely ſoules redeemed by Chriſt, were then inwrapped, which did not know nor yet were taught the right doctrine and firſt principles of their redemption. Ex Math. Pariſienſ. pag. 86.

Monaſteries builded pro redemptione animæ.

Mention was made a litle before pag. 275. of diſſolning the election of Iohn Prior of Cāterbury, which was choſen by the Monkes to be Archbiſhop of ye ſayd churche of Canterbury, but by the pope was defeited. After whom one Iohn Blūd was elected, who trauelling vp to Rome this yeare an. 1233. to be confirmed of the Pope, was alſo repealed and vnelected agayne, for that it was thought in England, & ſo complayned of to the Pope, that he had receiued of Peter Biſhop of wincheſter a thouſand markes and had another thouſand promiſed him of the ſayd wincheſter. who by his mony thought to make him of his ſide and alſo wrote to the Emperor to helpe forward his promotion in the court of Rome. Notwithſtanding, both he with his geuing, and the other with his taking of bribes were both detected and diſapoynted of theyr purpoſe. For the Pope hating then the Emperour, for the ſame cauſe admitted not the election, pretending the cauſe, for that he was proued to holde to benefices without his diſpenſation. After whom by the commaundement of the Pope one Edmund Chanon of Saliſbury was ordeyned Archbyſhop, and had his Palle ſent to him from the Pope. which Edmunde after for his vertues was Canoniſed of the Popiſhe Monkes there for a Saynte, and called S. Edmund. About which time alſo Robert Groſted was made B. of Lincolne.

Iohn Archb. of Cant. elected by the Chapter, againe vnelected by the Pope.

Corruption of bribes.

Edmund archb. of Canterbury.

Saint Edmund Canonyſed.

Robert Groſted made Byſhop of Lincolne.

This Edmund accompanied with other Byſhoppes, during this trouble betwene the king and his nobles, being in councell at weſtminſter, in the yeare next enſuing, which was 1234. came vttering their minde boldely in the name of the Lord, & declaring vnto the king as became his faythfull ſeruauntes, that his councell which then he folowed, was not ſound, nor ſafe, but cruell and daungerous both to him and to the ſtate of the Realme, meaning the councell of Peter wincheſter and of Peter Riuall, with other adherentes.

Anno. 1231.

Faithfull counſaile of the Byſhops geuen to the kyng.

1. First and in primis, for that they hate and contemne the Engliſh nation, calling them traitours and rebels: and turning the kings heart from the loue of hys naturall ſubiectes, and the hartes of them from hym, as appeareth by the Earle Marſchal and other, ſowing diſcorde among them.

2. Item, by the ſayd Counſaile, to wit, by the foreſaid biſhop and his fellowes, king Iohn the kings father loſt firſt the heartes of his Barons, after that loſt Normandy, and afterward other landes alſo, and in the end waſted all hys treaſure, ſo that ſince that tyme the regiment of England had neuer no quiet after.

3. By the ſayd Counſayle alſo, in their time and memorye, the kingdome of England had bene troubled and ſuſpended, and in concluſion, became tributary, ſhe that was before the Prince of Prouincies: and ſo warre inſuing vpon the ſame, the ſayd Kyng Iohn his father incurred great daunger of death and at laſt was extinguiſhed, lacking both peace of hys kingdome and of his own heart.

4. Item, by the ſayd counſayle the Caſtle of Bedford was kept long tyme agaynſt the king, to the great loſſe both of men & treaſure, beſide the loſſe of Rupella, to the ſhame of the Realme of England.

5. Moreouer, through their wicked counſayle, at this preſent, great perturbation ſeemed to hang ouer the whole realme, for els if it had not bene for their counſayle, and that true iuſtice and iudgement might haue bene miniſtred vnto the kinges ſubiectſ,

The counſaile of Wincheſt. and ſuch other Byſhops about the kyng diſproued for certayne cauſes.

theſe tumultes had neuer bene ſtirred, and the king might haue had his land vnwaſted, and his treaſure vnconſumed.

6. Item, in that fayth and alleageance wherwith they were obliged vnto him, they proteſted vnto him that the ſayd his councell was not a councell of peace, but of deuiſion and diſquietneſſe, to the end that they which otherwiſe by peace could not aſpire, by diſturbing and diſheriting other might be exalted.

7. Item, for that all the caſtles, fortes, munitions, alſo all the offices of the Eſchequer, with all other the greateſt exchetes of the realme were in their handes, of the which, if the king would demaund a count, he ſhould proue how true they were.

8. Item for that neither by the kinges ſeale, nor commaundement, except it bare withall the ſeale of Peter Riuall, almoſt no buſines of any weight could be diſpatched in the realm, as thogh their counted the king for no king.

9. Furthermore, by the foreſayd councell, the naturall ſubiectes and nobles of the realme were baniſhed the Court, which was to be feared would grow to ſome inconuenience both to the kyng and to the Realme, for ſo muche as the king ſeemed more to be on their ſide then they of his, as by many euident coniectures may appeare.

10. Item, it was not well to be taken and liked, the ſayd councell ſtanding of ſtraungers and aliens, to haue in theyr power both the kinges ſiſter, and many other noble mens daughters and other women mariageable, with the kinges wardes and mariages, which they beſtowed and deuided among themſelues, and men of their affinity.

11. Alſo, the ſayd councell regarding neither the lawes, nor liberties of the Realme confirmed and corroborated by excommunication, did confound and peruert all iuſtice. Wherfore it was to be feared they would runne vnder excommunication, and the king alſo in communicating with them.

12. Item, becauſe they kept neither promiſe nor fayth, nor oath with any perſon, neither did obſerue an inſtrument made neuer ſo formall by law, nor yet did feare any excommunication. Wherfore they were to be left for people deſperate, as which were departed from all truth and honeſty.

Excōmunicatiō denounced by the Biſhops againſt the kyng.

These thinges (ſayd the Biſhops) we as your faythfull ſubiects before God, & men, do tell and aduertiſe your grace, deſiring and beſeching you, that you will remoue & ſeclude from you ſuch councell, and as the cuſtome is of all other kingdoms to do, that you will ſo gouern in like maner your kingdome by your owne natural liege people, & ſuch as be ſworne vnto you of your own realm. For thus (ſaid they) in verity we denounce vnto you, that vnles in ſhort time you will ſee theſe thinges reformed, we according to our duety, will proceed by ẏ cenſure of the church agaynſt you, and all other that gaynſtand the ſame: tarying no other thing, but onely the conſecration of this our reuerend Archbyſhop.

The kyngs anſwere to the byſhops.

These wordes of the Biſhops thus ſayd and finiſhed, the king required a little time of reſpite, wherein to aduiſe with himſelfe aboue the matter, ſaying, that he could not in ſuch a ſodeine remoue from him his counſell, before he had entred with them a coūt of his treaſure committed to them, and ſo that aſſemble brake vp.

The pitie of the kyng toward the wife of Hubert.

It followed then after this communication ſo broken vp, that the king reſorted to the parts of Northfolk, where cōming by S. Edmunds bury, where the wife of Hubert ẏ Iuſtice was, he being moued with zeale of pity toward the woman, who very humbly behaued her ſelf to ẏ king, did graunt vnto her 8. manor places, which her huſband before with his mony had purchaſed, being then in the cuſtody and poſſeſſion of Robert Paſſelew, one of the kings new counſellors aboue ſpecified.

Edmund conſecrated Archb. of Cant. which was afterward canoniſed by Pope Innocent the fourth for a Sainct.

It was not long after this, but Edmund the Archbiſhop was inueſted and conſecrated in the church of Caunterbury, who ſhortly after his conſecratiō, about the moneth of April, comming with his Suffraganes to the place of counſell, where the kyng with his Earles and Barons was aſſembled, opened to him the cauſe and purpoſe of his comming & of the other Prelates, which was to put him in remembrance of their former talke had with him at Weſtminſter: denouncing moreouer to him expreſly, that vnles with ſpeed he would take a better way, & fall to a peaceable and godly agremēt wt the true & faithfull nobles of his realme, he incontinent with the other Prelates there preſent, would paſſe with the ſentence of excommunication againſt him, and againſt all them that ſhould be enemies to the ſame peace, & maintainers of diſcord.

Example of excommunication rightly practiſed.

The kyngs promiſe to the Byſhops.

The king after he heard the meaning of the Biſhops, with humble and gentle language anſwered them again, promiſing to condeſcend to them in all things. Wherupon within few dayes after, the king comming to ſome better remembraunce of himſelfe, cōmaunded the forenamed byſhop of Winchester to leaue the court, and return home to his Biſhopricke, there to attend vnto the ſpirituall charge and care of his flocke committed to him. Moreouer he cōmanded Peter Riual the Biſhops coſin (ſome ſtoryes ſay his ſonne) who had then the diſpoſing of all the aſſayzes of the Realme, to render vnto him his caſtles, and to geue a count of all his treaſures, wherof he had the keeping, and ſo to voyd the Realme, ſwearing moreouer vnto him, but for that he was beneficed, and was within orders of the Churche, els he woulde haue cauſed both his eyes to be pluckt out of his head.

Peter Biſh, of Winc. charged the Court.

Peter Riuall called to a count of the kings treaſures.

Pictauians & ſtraungers ſent home by the king into their countrey.

Reconciliation ſought betwene the king and the nobles.

He expelled likewiſe the Pictauians out of the court, and from the cuſtody of his munitions, ſending thē home into theyr coūtry and bidding they ſhould no more ſee his face. And thus the king wiſely diſpatching himſelfe of his wicked counſellers, firſt did ſend Edmund the Archbyſhop, with the biſhops of Cheſter and of Rocheſter, into Wales to Leoline, and to Richard Earle Marſhal and other, to intreat with them of peace. Alſo he receiued to hys ſeruice agayne men of his naturall countrey, to attend about him, offering himſelf willing to be ruled by the counſell of the Archbiſhop and the Biſhops, by whoſe prudēce he truſted his Realme ſhould be reduced agayne to a better quietnes.

Richarde Earle Marſhall fraudulently circumuented and ſlaine in Ireland.

But in the meane time, while theſe thinges were doing in England, the foreſayd Richard Earle Marſhall by the falſhood of the biſhop of Wincheſter and Peter Riuall, forging the kinges letters to the Iriſhmen againſt him, & partly by the conſpiracy of Gilbert de Mariſco, was circumuented by the Iriſhmen in war, and there taken and wounded, was by them through the meanes of his Surgean ſlayne.

Catini ſlaine about Almaine, iudged of the Papiſtes for heretickes.

Great ſlaughter the ſame time was of thē which were called Catini, about the partes of Almaine. Theſe Catini were eſteemed of pope Gregory and the Papiſtes to be heretickes. But what their opinions were I finde it not expreſſed. In Pariſienſ.

Albingenſes ſlaine in Spaine by the Popes ſetting on.

In like ſort the Albigenſes afore mentioned, recounted alſo of the popes flocke to be heretickes, with theyr biſhops, & a great number and company of thē were ſlaine by the commaundemēt of pope Gregory at the ſame time in a certayne playne in Spayne. Ex Ma. Prienſ. fol. 87.

How the Archbiſhop of Canterbury with other two Byſhops, were ſent into Wales for intreatye of peace, ye heard before. At whoſe returne agayne after the time of Eaſter, the king going toward Gloceſter to meet them by the way, as he was in his iourney at Woodſtocke, came meſſengers from Ireland, declaring to ẏ king the death of Richard Earle Marſhall, and the order therof, through ẏ forged letters of Wincheſter and other, whereat the king made great lamētation and mourning, to the great admiratiō of all them that were by, ſaying & complayning, that he left not his like in all the realme agayne.

The K. lamenteth the death of Richard Earle Marſhall.

After this the king proceeding in his iourney came to Gloceſter. Where the Archbiſh. with the other Biſhops comming to the king, declared to him the forme and conditiō of peace which they had cōcluded with Leoline, which was this: If the king would be reconciled before with the other nobles with whom he was confederate, ſuch as the king had baniſhed out of his realm: to the end that the cōcord might be the more firme betweene them. Thus (ſayd they) was Leoline contented, although with much a do & great difficulty, to receiue ẏ league of peace, ſaying & proteſting thus vnto them, that he feared more the kings almoſe, then all the puiſaunce both of him and of all his clergy within England.

The ſaying of Leoline kyng of Wales.

The almoſe of K. Henry more feared thē his puiſaunce.

This done the king there remaining wt the Biſhops, directed his letters to all the exiles and baniſhed Lords & to all his nobles, that they ſhould repayre to him about ẏ beginning of Iune, at Gloceſter, promiſing to thē his full fauour & reconcilement to them and to their heyres, & that they ſhould ſuſpect no fraud therin, they ſhould haue their ſafeconduct by the Archbiſhop and Biſhops.

Peace concluded betwene the king and the nobles.

Hubert Erle of Kent reſtored agayne to the kings fauour.

Wherupon through the mediation of the ſayd Archbiſhop and the Biſhops, firſt commeth to the king Hubert Earle of Kent, offering himſelf to the kings good will and fauor. Whom the king with chearefull countenance receiued and embraced, reſtoring him not onely to his fauour, but alſo to his houſehold & councell, with his liuings and poſſeſſions frō which he had bene diſeiſed before. Thē Hubert lifting vp his eies to heauen, gaue prayſe and glory to God, by whoſe gracious prouidēce he ſo merueilouſly being preſerued frō ſo great diſtreſſes & tribulatiōs, was agayne ſo happely reconciled to the king, and his faythfull frends. After him in like ſort came in Gilbert Baſſet a noble mā, Richard Suard: alſo Gilbert the brother of Rich. Marſhall that was ſlain. Which Gilbert recouered agayn his whole inheritance as wel in England as in Ireland, doing his homage to the king and his ſeruice due for the ſame. To whom alſo was graunted the office of the high Marſhall court, belonging before to his brother Richard.

Hubert geueth thankes to God.

In the ſame councell or communication continuing then at Gloceſter, the ſayd Edmund Archbiſhop of caunterbury, bringing the forged letters, wherin was betraied the life of Richard Earle Marſhall, ſealed with the kings ſeale, and ſent to the great mē of Ireland, read the ſame openly in the preſence of the king and all the nobles. At the hearing wherof, the king greatly ſorrowing and weeping confeſſed there in truth that being forced by the Biſhop of wincheſter and Peter de Riuallis, he cōmanded his ſeale to be ſet to certayne letters preſented vnto him, but the tenor therof he ſaid & ſware he neuer heard. Whereunto the Archbiſhop aunſwering agayn, deſired the king to ſearch well his conſcience, & ſaid, that all they which were procurers of knowledge of thoſe letters, were gilty of the death of the Earle Marſhall, no leſſe then if they had murdered him with theyr owne handes.

Falſhood & murder commeth out. Kings many times abuſed by wicked counſaile.

Then the king calling a councell, ſent his letters for the biſhop of wincheſter, for Peter Riuall, Stephen Segraue, and Robert Paſſelew to appere and yeld accoūt for his treaſures to them committed and for his ſeale by them abuſed. But the Byſhop and Riuall keeping themſelues in the ſanctuary of the minſter Church of wincheſter, neither durſt nor would appeare. Stephē Segraue who ſuceded after Hubert the Iuſtice and was of the Clergy before, after became a layman, and now hiding himſelf in S. Maryes Church in the Abbey of Leceſter, was turned to a Clerke agayne, Robert Paſſelew couertly hid himſelf in a certain celler of the new tēple, ſo ſecretly that none could tell where he was, but thought he was gone to Rome. At length through the foreſaid Edmund Archbiſhop of Canterbury, meanes was made, ẏ a dilatory day was graunted by the king, for them to aunſwere. At which day firſt appeared Peter de Riuallis, then Stephen Segraue, after him Robert Paſſelew, ech of them ſeuerally one after another ſhewed themſelues, but not able to aunſwere for themſelues like traitors were reproued, and like villanes were ſent away. Ex Mat. Pariſienſ. fol. 91.

The Biſh. of Wincheſter called to his aunſwere.

❧ Variance betwene Pope Gregory the 9. and the Romanes.

Variance betweene the Pope & Citizens of Rome. The allegation of the Romanes.

WHile peace thus betweene the king and the nobles was reconciled in England, diſſenſion, and variance the ſame time and yere began in Rome, betwene the pope and the Citizens of Rome. The cauſe was, for that the citizens claymed by old cuſtome and law, that the Byſhop of Rome might not excommunicate any Citizen of the citie, nor ſuſpend the ſaid City with any interdiction for any maner exceſſe.

The Popes anſwere.

To this the Pope anſwered agayne, Quòd minor Deo eſt, ſed quolibet homine maior (to vſe the very wordes of mine author) Ergo, Maior quolibet ciue, næ etiam rege, vel Imperatore. &c. that is, that he is leſſe then God, but greater then any man. Ergo, greater then any Citizen, yea alſo greater then king, or Emperor. And for ſo much as he is theyr ſpirituall father, he both ought and lawfully may chaſtiſe his children when they offēd, as being ſubiected to him in the fayth of Chriſt, and reduce them into the way agayn, whē they ſtray out of courſe.

The 2. allegation of the Romanes. The Pope bound to pay to Rome yearely tribute.

Moreouer, the citizens alledge againe for themſelues, that the Poteſtates of the City and Senators do receiue of the Church of Rome yearely tribute, which the biſhops of Rome were bound to pay vnto them, both by new and alſo auncient law. Of the which yerely tribute, they haue bene euer in poſſeſſiō before this preſent time of this pope Gregory 9.

The Pope replyeth.

Hereunto the pope anſwered and ſayd, that although the Church of Rome in time of perſecution, for their defence and cauſe of peace was wont to reſpect the head rulers of the Citty with gentle rewardes, yet that ought not now to be taken for a cuſtom: For that cuſtom only ought to ſtand, which conſiſteth not vpon examples, but vpon right and reaſon.

The 3. cauſe & allegation of the Romanes.

Further and beſides, the Citizens ſayd, that they at ẏ commandemēt of the Senatour would appropriate their countrey with new and larger limits, and infranches the ſame being enlarged with fines and borders.

The Popes anſwere.

To this the pope agayne made anſwere, that certayne Lordſhyps and cities and caſtles be conteined within the compaſſe of the ſayd limites, as the City Viterbium, and Montcaſter, which they preſume to appropriate within their precinct: but to aſcribe to them and vſurp that which perteineth to other, is agaynſt right and iuſtice.

For theſe and ſuch other controuerſies riſing betwene the Pope and the Romaines, ſuch diſſention kindled, that the Pope with his Cardinals leauing the City of Rome, remoued to Peruſiū (as partly before is recited) thinking there to remayne and to plant thēſelues: but the Romans preuailing agaynſt him, ouerthrew diuers of his houſes in the city. For the which, he did excommunicate thē. The Romanes then flying to the Emperour, deſired his ayd & ſuccour: but he, belike to pleaſure the Pope, gathering an army, went rather agaynſt the Romanes. Thē the popes army, whoſe Captaynes were the Earle of Tholonſe (to purchaſe the Popes fauour) and Peter the foreſayd Byſhop of wincheſter (whom the Pope for the ſame had ſent for frō england, partly for his treaſure, partly for his practiſe and ſkill in feates of warre) and the Emperours hoſt ioyned together, and bordering about the Citty of Rome, caſt downe the caſtelles or manſions belonging to the citizens round about the Suburbes, to the number of 18. and deſtroyed all theyr vines and vineyardes about the City. Wherat the Romanes being not a litle offended, braſt out of the Cittye with more heat then order, to the number of 100000. (as the ſtorye reporteth) to deſtroy Viterbium the Popes City, with ſword and fire. But the multitude being vnordered and out of battaile ray, and vnprouided for ieoperdies which by the way might happen, fell into the handes of theyr enemies, who were in wayt for them, and of them deſtroid a great nūber, ſo that on both parts were ſlayne to the vew of 30000. but the moſt part was of the Citizens. And this diſſention thus begun was not ſoone ended, but continued long after.

Excommunication abuſed.

The Pope warreth againſt the Romanes.

A great ſlaughter of the Romanes by the Pope. Ex Parienſ. Pag. 92.

By theſe and ſuch other ſtoryes, who ſeeth not, how farre the church of Rome hath degenerated from the true Image of the right Church of Chriſt, which by the rule & example of the Goſpell ought to be a daughter of peace, not a mother of debate, not a reuenger of her ſelfe, nor ſeeker of warres, but a forgeuer of iniuries, humbly and patiently referring all reuenge to the Lord, not a raker for riches, but a winner of ſoules, not contending for worldly maiſterſhip, but humbling themſelues as ſeruantes, and not Vicars of the Lorde, but ioyntly like brethren ſeruing together, Biſhops with Biſhops, Miniſters with Miniſters, Deacons with Deacons, and not as Maſters ſeparating themſelues by ſuperiority one from an other, and briefly communicating together in doctrine and coūſell, one particular church with an other, not as a mother one ouer an other, but rather as a ſiſter Church one with an other, ſeking together the glory of Chriſt, and not their owne. And ſuch was the Church of Rome firſt in the olde aunciēt beginning of her primitiue ſtate, eſpecially while the croſſe of perſecution yet kept the Biſhops and Miniſters vnder in humility of hart and feruent calling vpon the Lord for helpe: ſo that happy was that Chriſtian then, which with liberty of conſcience onely, might holde hys life, how barely ſoeuer he liued. And as for the pride and pompe of the world, ſtriuing for patrimonyes, buying of Biſhopprickes, gaping for benefices, ſo far was this off frō them, that then they had litle leiſure and leſſe liſt yea once to thinke vpon them. Neither did the Biſhoppes then of Rome fight to be Conſuls of the City, but ſought how to bring the Conſuls vnto Chriſt, being glad if the Conſuls would permit them to dwell by them in the city. Neither did they thē preſume ſo hye, to bring the Emperors neckes vnder theyr gyrdles, but were glad to ſaue theyr neckes in any corner from the ſword of Emperors. Thē lacked they outward peace, but abounded with inward conſolation, Gods holy ſpirit mightely working in their harts. Then was one catholicke vnity of truth and doctrine amongeſt all churches, agaynſt errors and ſectes. Neither did ẏ eaſt and weſt, nor diſtance of place deuide the church, but both the eaſtchurch and weſtchurch, the Greekes and Latynes made all one church. And albeit there were then 5. Patriarchall Seas appoynted for order ſake, differing, in regions, & peraduenture alſo in ſome rites one from another, yet all theſe conſenting together in one vnity of catholicke doctrine, hauing one God, one Chriſt, one fayth, one baptiſme, one ſpirit, one head, and lincked together in one bōd of charity, and in one equality of honor, they made altogether, one body, one church, one communion, called one catholicke, vniuerſall, and Apoſtolicall church. And ſo long as this knot of charity and equality did ioyne them in one vnity together, ſo long the church of Chriſt floriſhed and encreaſed, one redy to helpe and harbour another, in time of diſtreſſe, as Agapitus and Vigilius flying to Conſtantinople, were there ayded by the Patriarch. &c. ſo that all this while neither forrein enemye, neither Saracen nor Souldane, nor Sultane, nor Calipha, nor Coraſmine, nor Turke had any power greatly to harme it.

The Church of Rome degenerated from the image of the true Church.

vnity did not lõg continue,and all by reaſon of the biſhop of Rome,who not contented to be like his brethren, begã to extend himſelfe & to claime ſuperiority aboue the other 4.Patriarchall Seas, & all other Churches in the world. And thus as equality amongſt chriſtian byſhops was by pride and ſingularity oppreſſed: ſo vnity began by little & litle to be diſſolued,and the Lordes coat which the ſouldiors left whole,to be deuided. which coat of chriſtian vnity,albeit of long time it had bene now ſeamcript before by the occaſion aforeſayd:yet notwithſtanding in ſome peece it held together in ſome meane agreement,vnder ſubiectiõ to the ſea of Rome, till the time of this pope Gregory the 9.an.1230. at which tyme thys rupture and ſchiſme of the church brake out into a playn deuiſiõ, vtterly diſſeuering the Eaſtchurch from the weſtchurch vpon this occaſion.

The cauſe & occaſion why the Gre.ke Church vtterly brake frõ the Romanes.

There was a certayn archbyſhop elected to an Archbiſhoprick among the Grecians,who comming to Rome to be cõfirmed,could not be admitted vnles he promiſed a very great ſumme of mony. which when he refuſed to do, and deteſted the execrable ſimony of the court of Rome,he made his repayre home agayn to his country vncõfirmed declaring there to the whole nobility of that land, the caſe how it ſtood. For ỹ more confirmation wherof,there were other alſo,which comming lately from Rome,& there had proued the ſame or worſe, came in and gaue teſtimony to his ſaying. wherupon all the church of the Grecians the ſame time hearing this, departed vtterly away from the Church of Rome, which was in the dayes of this Pope Gregory the 9. In ſo much that the Archbiſhop of Conſtantinople comming afterward to the generall Councell at Lyons,there opẽly declared,that where as before time he had vnder him aboue thirty Biſhopricks and Suffraganes,now he had not three, adding moreouer that all ỹ Grecians & certayne other, with Antioche and the whole Empyre of Romania,euẽ to the gates almoſt of Conſtantinople; were gone from the obedience of the Church of Rome. &c. Germanus Patriarch of Conſtantinople writeth to pope Gregory.9.

By the occaſion of which ſeperation aforeſayd, of the Grecians from pope Gregory, it happened ſhortly after, being the yeare of our Lord.1237. that Germanus Archb. and Patriarch of Conſtantinople,wrote to the ſayd Pope Gregory 9.humbly deſiring him to ſtudy, and ſeeke ſome meanes of vnity, how the ſeameleſſe coat of the Lord Ieſus thus lamentably rent, not with handes of ſoldiours, but by diſcord of Prelates may be healed agayne, offering this moreouer,that if he will take the paines to ſtirre out, he for his part,notwithſtanding his old age & feeble body would not refuſe to meet him in the mid way, to ỹ intent that the truth on both ſides being debated by ỹ ſcriptures the wrong part may be reduced,the ſlaunder ſtopped,and vnity reſourned betwene them.

This requeſt of the Patriarke,as it was both godly & reaſonable ſo it had bene the biſhops part again with like humility to haue condeſcended to the ſame, and glad with all his might to helpe forward the reformation of chriſtian vnity in the church of Chriſt, and ſo to haue ſhewed himſelfe the ſonne of peace But the proud Byſhop of Rome more like the ſonne of diſcord and diſſention,ſtanding ſtill vpon his maieſty,refuſed thus to do, but writing agayne anſwere to his letters with great diſdayn,ſeking nothing els but only how to aduance his ſea aboue all other churches:and not onely that,but alſo ſhortly after ſet forth his preaching Friers to moue all Chriſtians to take the ſigne of the croſſe & to fight agaynſt the Grecians no otherwiſe then agaynſt the Turkes & Saracens:In ſo much that in the Iſle of Cyprus many good men and Martyrs were ſlayne for the ſame,as by the letters of the ſaid Germanus Patriarke of Conſtantinople is to be ſeene.

The pope ſetteth the Weſt church to fight againſt the Eaſt church. Ex Mat.Pariſi. fol.112.

The tenour of the which letter to the Pope, with the popes anſwere agayne to him, being long and tedious to read,are extant in the hiſtory of Math.Pariſ.there to be ſene and found fol.111. The ſummary effect whereof notwithſtanding,I thought here briefly to notifye for the ſimple & vnlearned multitude, which vnderſtanding not the Latine, may hereby perceiue the fault of this ſchiſme not ſo much to reſt in the greek church,as in the church of Rome as by the contents of his letter may appeare.

Ex libro Math. Pariſ.manu ſcripto.fol.3. & 111.

The effect of the Patriarch of Conſtantinople his letter to Pope Gregory.9.

The letter of Germanus Patriarch of Conſtantinople to Pope Gregory.9 anno.1237.

IN the which letter the ſayd Germanus Patriarch of Conſtantinople,writing to Pope Gregory,firſt after his reuerend ſalutation and preamble following vpon the ſame, entring thẽ toward the matter,ſheweth the occaſion of his writing, which was by 5. obſeruaunt Friers repayring that wayes, whom he gently receiuing into his houſe,had conference with them touching this diſcord betwene the two Churches,how it might be reduced again to vnity:and afterward perceiuing the ſayd Friers to make theyr iourney towardes to Rome,he thought therefore by thẽ to write his letters. Wherein he firſt lamenting this diuiſion in the houſe of God,and reciting the inconueniences which come therof, by the example of Iuda and Iſrael: Ieruſalem and Samaria:Cain and Abel:Eſau and Iacob:alſo of other ſuch like,both priuate & publicke ſocieties,where brother fighteth agaynſt brother, like as among fiſhes the greater deuoureth the leſſer, he procedeth then further gently to exhort Pope Gregory to the ſtudy of vnity.

He ſhewe[d] the inconuenience of diſcord,

And for ſo much as the Pope had accurſed (belike) thoſe Churches of the Greekes before, he therefore taking his groũd vpon the wordes of S.Paule,Gal.1.where he accurſeth euery ſuch perſon and perſons, whatſoeuer they be either man or Angell of heauen,that ſhall preach any other Goſpell then hath bene preached.&c. willeth the Pope to ſtand with him vpon the ſame ground of the Apoſtles accurſe, ſo that if the ſtroke of that curſe haue light vpon him or his churches, he deſireth him to ſhew the wound, and to helpe to wipe away the bloud, to miniſter ſome ſpirituall emplaiſter to binde vp the ſore, and to ſaue his brethrẽ from periſhing which lay in daunger, according to the ſaying of the wiſe man: A brotherly frend is tried in aduerſity.&c.

Galat.1. Salomon.

But if we (ſayth he) of the Greeke Church be free from the ſtripe of this accurſe of the Apoſtle,and that you Italians & of the Latine Church be ſtricken therewith,and lye thereby in daunger of deſtruction, I truſt that you through ignoraunce and wilfull obſtinacy will not ſo ſuffer your ſelues to be ſeparated from the Lord, but rather will ſuffer a thouſand deathes before, if it were poſſible for a man ſo often to dye.

Whether the Church of the greeks or the popes Church lyeth more vnder the daunger of Gods curſe.

And as touching this great diſcord betwene vs, if either cõtrarietie of doctrine or ſweruing frõ the ancient Canons, or diuerſity of rites receiued of our forefathers be any cauſe thereof, we here take heauen and earth to witneſſe, that we for our partes are ready,and deſire alſo vpon due triall of profound trueth by Gods word and inuocation of the holy Ghoſt to ioyne hands with you, or you to ioyne with vs. But to ſay the very trueth and to tell you playne,this we ſuppoſe, that many mighty and noble potentates would ſooner encline to your obedience, were it not that they feared your vniuſt oppreſſions,your inſatiable exactions,and inordinate oppreſſions wherewith you wring your ſubiectes. By reaſon wherof haue riſen amongſt vs cruell warres, one fighting agaynſt an other,deſolation of Cittyes, Bulles and Interdictions ſet vpon Church dores,diuiſion of brethren,and Churches of the Grecians left without ſeruice,where God ſhould be prayſed. So that now onely one thing lacketh, which I beleue to be predefined and appoynted from aboue long before to vs Grecians, the time,I meane,of martirdome,which alſo now haſteneth faſt vpon vs,that the tribunall of tyrauntes ſhould be opened and the ſeats of torments be ſet,that the bloud of Martyrs ſhould be ſpilled, & we brought to the ſtage of Martyrdome, to fight for the crowne of glory.

The Greekes afrayd of the popes oppreſſions.

The Patriarch of Conſtantinople prophecieth of the martyrdome and ſlaughter of the Grecians.

This that I doe ſpeake, and wherefore I ſpeake it,the noble Iland of Cyprus doth already know and feele, which hath made many new Martyrs, and hath ſeene valiaunt ſouldiours of Chriſt, which of long time before paſſing by water and teares of ſorow, now at laſt haue alſo paſſed through fire, and ſo entred into the heauenly reſt. How ſay you,be theſe good and ſeemely, O holye Pope, the ſucceſſor of S.Peter the Apoſtle? Is this the bidding of that good Peter,the meeke and humble diſciple of Chriſt? Doth he thus inſtruct the Seniors and Elders in his Epiſtle, where he writeth in this wiſe:The Elders which are amõgſt you, I beſeech which am alſo a fellow Elder with them, and witneſſe of the ſufferings of Chriſt, and alſo a partaker of the glory that ſhalbe opened:feed the flocke of God which is amongeſt you,hauing care & ſight ouer it,not of a coaction as compelled agaynſt your willes, but willingly of your owne accord, nor for filthy lukere ſake,but freely and hartily, neither as bearing dominion and Lordſhip ouer the Church, but ſhewing your ſelues as an example to the flocke,and when the chiefe Paſtor ſhall appeare,you ſhall receiue an incorruptible crowne of eternall glory.&c. And this is the doctrine of Peter,as they ſhal ſe, which do not obey it. As for vs the other part of the ſayd Epiſtle is ſufficient. Wherein he willeth thẽ to reioice which are in heauines through manifolde temptations, that the triall of theyr fayth being much more precious thẽ gold that periſheth,and is tryed in fire,may be theyr laud,honour, and glory,at the appearing of the Lord Ieſu.&c. But beare with me I pray you (O holy Father, and of all your Predeceſſors moſt meekeſt)and ſuffer my wordes though the ſeme ſomething ſharpe: for they be ſighings of a ſorrowfull hart.

The popes perſecution in the Ile of Cyprus.

The tyranny and auarice of the pope chaſtened by the word of Saint Peter. 1.Peter.5. 1.Peter.1.

He exhorteth the pope to come and meete with him, that they might conferre togetherabout the vnitie of fayth.

Wherefore gird about your loynes with fortitude,and light vp the candle of your deſcretion, and ſeeke the groat that is loſt, of the vnity,I meane of fayth. And we will alſo with like compaſſion ioyne with your holyneſſe, and will not ſpare this weake body of mine,in pretending any excuſe either of age or lẽgth of the way. For the more laborous the trauell is, the moe crownes it bringeth. And S.Paule ſayth: Euery man ſhall receiue reward according to his trauell.&c.

Neither

The Greeke church ſoūd and ſincere in doctrine.

Neither are we ignoraunt (if it pleaſe your holineſſe) that like as we Grecians for our partes do labour in all reſpectes to keepe and obſerue the ſincerity of true fayth and doctrine, not to erre ne ſwerue in any part or poynt from the ſtatutes of the bleſſed Apoſtles and auncient fathers: ſo the Church likewiſe of old Rome, doth for her part labour alſo (we know well) to follow the ſincere verity of Chriſtian doctrine, and thinketh her ſelfe to erre in nothing, nor to neede any remedye or reformation. And this we know, is the iudgement and ſaying of both the Churches, aſwell of the Greekes, as of the Latines. For no man can ſee any ſpot in his owne face, without he ſtoope downe to the glaſſe, or els be admoniſhed by ſome other, whether his face be blotted or no. Euen ſo haue we many great & fayre glaſſes ſet before vs, firſt the cleare Goſpell of Chriſt, the Epiſtles of the Apoſtles, and diuinitie bookes of auncient writers. Let vs therefore looke in them well. They will ſhew euery mans minde and iudgement, whether he go right or wrong. The God of peace tread downe Sathan ſpeedely vnder our feet. The author of peace confound the ſower of diſcord. He that is the cauſe of all goodnes deſtroy the hater of that which is good, and which geueth cauſe of offence and ſlaunder. And he which is God of all ioy and peace, ſend to vs, whiche are the ſhepheardes of his ſheepe reaſonable, the aungell of peace and meſſenger of great glad tidings, as he did in the Natiuitye of Chriſt, to the ſhepheardes of brute ſheepe and vnreaſonable, and make vs worthy to ſing that ioyfull ſong of Gods prayſe: Gloria in excelſis Deo, & in terra pax, hominibus bona voluntas, and to receiue one an other with an holy kiſſe. The grace of our Lord Ieſus Chriſt, and the peace of God the Father, and the communion of the holy ſpirit be with you alwayes. Amen.

He exhorteth the church of Rome to looke her face in Gods glaſſe, that is, to trye their doctrin by gods word.

¶ An other Epiſtle of the ſayd Germanus Patriarch of Conſtantinople, and Primate of the Greek Church, to the Cardinals of Rome.

An other letter of Germanus Patriarch of Conſtantinople to the Cardinalles.

AN other letter the ſayd Germanus Patriarch of Conſtantinople, wrote alſo the ſame time, to the Popes Cardinals, wherin he firſt commending them for theyr wiſedome and counſell, and ſhewing what vtility commeth by good counſell geuing: for ſo much as God (ſayth he) many times that he hydeth from one, inſpireth to an other, ſo that that good thing which by the almighty God is ſonderly diſpenſed to diuers, through common counſell and conference, ſpreadeth to the publicke vtility of many. &c. After this, eftſoones he beginneth to exhort them, that they like charitable miniſters and diſcrete counſellors, will take in hand the ſpirituall armour of God, to caſt downe the ſtoppe & partition walle of the olde diſcord betwene the Greekes and Latine Church, & that they will be a meanes to the Biſhop of Rome, that they which ſo long haue bene diſſeuered by diſſention, may now be conioyned in vnity of peace, in brotherly charity and communion of fayth.

Concerning which matter, I haue (ſayth he) already written to his holyneſſe. And now I beſeech the king of heauen, whiche tooke the ſhape of a ſeruaunt, to helpe his miſerable ſeruauntes: and was exalted vpon the croſſe, to raiſe them vp which were fallen into the profundity of deſolation, that he will vouchſafe to put from your hartes all elation of minde, extolling it ſelfe ouer and aboue the vnity of your brethren and fellow ſeruauntes, and to lighten your conſciences with the true light of vnderſtanding that we may altogether agree in one, & that there be no ſchiſme amongſt vs. Let vs therefore as we are inſtructed, ſo abide in one minde, that it be not ſayd of vs, as it was of the Corinthians before vs: I hold of Paule, I of Apollo, I of Cœphas, and I of Chriſt? but that all we, as we holde the name of Chriſt, and are all called Chriſtians, ſo may alſo abide in that wherein we are inſtructed in one minde, that is, to follow loue and charity in Chriſt Ieſus, hauing alwayes in our hartes the wordes of the Apoſtle, ſaying: One Lord, one Fayth, one Baptiſme.

1. Cor. 1.

And now to be playne with you in that I haue to ſay, I ſhal deſire you not to be offended with me in vttering the trueth as a frend vnto you. The wordes (ſayth Salomon) of a wiſe man telling trueth, be like to nayles which be driuen in deepe. And truth for the moſte parte, breedeth enemies: And therefore though I am partly afrayd, yet will I ſimply confeſſe the trueth vnto you. Certes this diuiſion of Chriſtian vnity amongſt vs, proceedeth of no other cauſe but onely of the tiranny, oppreſſion, and exactiōs of the Church of Rome: which of a mother is become a ſtepdame, and hath put her children from her whome long time ſhe nouriſhed (after the maner of a rauening bird) which driueth her yong from her:) which children how much the more humble and obedient they are to her, the leſſe ſhe eſteemeth them, and treadeth them vnder foot, not regarding the ſaying of the Goſpel: Who ſo humbleth himſelfe ſhalbe exalted.

The tyranny & oppreſsiō of the church of Rome, is the onely cauſe of breaking vnitie betwene the Greeke church and the Latins. Luc. 18.

Let modeſty therefore ſomething temper you, and let the auarice of the Court of Rome, although it can not well out of the fleſh which is bred in the bone, yet ſurceaſe a while, and let vs together condeſcend to the triall of the trueth: which trueth being found out on both ſides, let vs conſtantly embrace the ſame.

The old amitie and concord betweene the Eaſt church and the Weſt.

For why, we haue bene altogether ſome times both Italians and Grecians in one fayth, and vnder the ſame Canons: hauing peace each with other, and defending one an other, and confounding the enemies of the Church. At what tyme many flying out of the weſt partes (whileſt that the tyranny of the heretickes indured) made their concourſe to vs, and were receiued, and part fled vnto you, that is, olde Rome, as to a ſtrong tower of refuge: and ſo receiued they cōfort in both places, and one brother was thus receiued into the boſome of an other, by mutuall loue for their defence.

Agapitus & Vigilius, fled to Conſtantinople for ſuccour.

Then after, when Rome had bene often diſtreſſed by the barbarous and heathen nations, the Grecians were euer ready to reſcue and deliuer them. Did not Agapitus and Vigilius flye vnto Conſtantinople by reaſon of the diſſentions then at Rome, and being honourablye receiued, were here defended vnder our protection? although the like kindenes was neuer yet ſhewed of your part to vs agayne in our like neceſſities. Notwithſtanding wee ought to do good to them alſo that be vngrateful: for ſo doth the Sea participate her ſmoth and calme tides euen vnto the Pirats. And ſo God cauſeth the ſunne to ſhine vpon the iuſt and vniuſt. But (alas for ſorow) what bitter diuiſion is this that hath thus ſequeſtred vs a ſonder? One of vs detracteth an other, ſhonning the company one of an other, as the damnation of his ſoule. What a mortall hatred is this come amongeſt vs? if you thinke we are fallen, then do you help to lift vs vp: and be not to vs as a ſtombling blocke to our bodely ruine, but helpers vnto the ſpirituall reſurrection of our ſoules. So ſhall we acknowledge our ſelues boūd vnto you to geue you condigne thankes accordingly.

Paule rebuketh Peter. Galat. 2.

But if the blame and firſt origine of all this offence proceedeth from Rome, and the ſucceſſours of Peter the Apoſtle: then read you the wordes of S. Paule to the Galathians: ſaying. When Peter came vnto Antioche, I withſtood him in the face, becauſe he was to be rebuked. &c. Howbeit this reſiſtaunce was no cauſe of any diſcord or breach betweene them: but the cauſe rather of further ſearch and profounder diſputations, prouoking temporall agrement. For they were faſt ioyned together in the bond of charity in Chriſt, agreeing in faith and conformity of doctrine ſeparated by no ambition or auarice. In which poyntes would God we alſo were like vnto them. This to vs in our mindes gendreth a great offence, that your gaping ſo greedyly after terrene poſſeſſions, ſcrape together all that you can ſcratch and rake. You heap vp gold and ſiluer, and yet pretend that you be the Diſciples of him which ſayd: gold and ſiluer I haue none. &c. You make whole kingdomes tributary to you, and kings and princes your vaſſals. You augment your mony by vſury, & by feates of marchaundiſe. You vnteache by your deedes, that whiche you teach in wordes.

Actes. 3. He meaneth of the kingdome of England and other mo which were made tributary to the ſea of Rome.

The immoderate auarice of the court of Rome.

Moderate your ſelues therefore with more temperaunce, that you may be an example to vs and to all the world. You ſee how good a thing it is one brother to helpe an other. Onely God alone needeth no helpe or counſell, but men neede one to be holpen one of another. And were it not that I doe reuerence the bleſſed Apoſtle Peter, the chiefe of Chriſtes Apoſtles, the rocke of our fayth, I would here put you in remembraunce how greatly this rocke was ſhaken and remooued from the foundation, at the ſight of a ſeely woman: and Chriſt of his ſecret purpoſe permitted the ſame, which by the crowing of the cock brought him agayne to remembraunce of that which was foretolde him, and rayſed him from the ſlumber of deſperation. Then he being thus waked, waſhed his face with teares, confeſſing himſelfe before God and all the world, to be a true paterne of repentance, which before bare the keyes of the kyngdome, as ſaying thus vnto vs: May not he which falleth, riſe agayne? Oh you whiche are fallen, riſe vp & beholde me, & harken vnto me, trauelling toward Paradiſe. The gates wherof to open I haue receiued power.

Peters faith ſhaken.

Peter an enſample of repentāce.

And thus do I write vnto you, not for any inſtruction, but onely to put you in remēbraunce: for I know how God hath endued you with all wiſedome and knowledge. As Salomon ſayth: Geue onely occaſion to the wiſe, and he will learne wiſedome: Teach the iuſt man, and he will be glad to take inſtruction.

This one thing more I will ſay and ſo make an end. There be great and mighty nations that are of like mind and opinion with vs. Firſt the Ethiopians that inhabite the chiefeſt part of the Eaſt. After that the Sirians: and other moe of greater number the they: and more diſpoſed to vertue, as the Hyberi, Alani, Gothi, Chazari with innumerable people of Ruſsia, and the kingdome of great victory of the Vulgarians. And all theſe are obedient vnto vs as their mother Church, perſiſting hetherto conſtantly in the auncient and true orthodoxaſticall fayth immouable.

Chriſtian countries & nations in the Eaſt parts which are not vnder the Byſhop of Rome.

The God of all holynes which for our ſakes became man, and which onely is the head of his Church and congregation, vouchſafe to gather vs agayne together in vnity, and graunt, that the Grecian church together with her ſiſter church of old Rome may glorify the ſame Chriſt, the prince of peace, by the vnitye of faith, to the reſtitutiō of ſoūd & wholſom doctrine, wherin many yeres agone they haue agreed and were vnited. God graunt vnto you brotherlike charity, and the hand of the moſt mighty God gouern you all (holy Cardinals) till that ioyfully ye arriue in the heauen of

The Pope proclaymeth war againſt the Greek Church.
The Archb. of Antioch & Cōſtantinople excommunicate the Pope.

Shortly after the ſending of theſe letters, Pope Gregory prepared to ſend men of warre ſigned with the croſſe to fight agaynſt the Grecians. wherupon the Archbiſhop of Antioch, with the ſaid Germanus ſolemnly excommunicated the Pope, after he firſt had excommunicated them, Par. fol. 118. In the meane time by the tenour of theſe letters of the Patriarch ſent to the Pope and to the Cardinals, it is euident to all men that haue eies in their heads, to ſee: firſt how the whole vniuerſall church of Chriſt, frō the eaſt partes to the weſt, in auncient times were altogether vnited in one cōſent of doctrine, & lincked together in brotherly charity, one Church brotherly to helpe an other, both with temporall ayd & ſpirituall councell, as caſe required. Neither was then any one mother Church aboue other Churches, but the whole vniuerſall Churche was the mother Church and ſpouſe of the Lord, to euery faythfull beleuer. Under which vniuerſall Church in generall, were comprehended all other particuler Churches in ſpeciall, as ſiſter churches together, not one greater thē an other, but all in like equality, as God gaue his giftes ſo ſeruing one another, euer holding together the vnity of fayth and Siſterly loue. And ſo long was it and rightlye might ſo be called the catholicke church, hauing in it true vnity, vniuerſality, and free conſent. Unity in doctrine, vniuerſality in cōmunicating and ioyning together of voyces, cōſent in ſpirit and iudgement. For what ſoeuer was taught at Rome touching fayth and ſaluation, it was no other then was taught at Antioch, Siria. &c.

5. Notes to be conſidered.
The firſt Note.

The true Catholike church, where it was, and when.

1. Vnitie.
2. Vniuerſalitie.
3. Conſent.

The ſecond note

Secondly, how in proceſſe of time, through occaſion of the Biſhop of Romes tyranny and violent oppreſſiō, this ring of equality being broken all flew in pieces, the Eaſt church from the weſt, the Greekes from the Latines, and that which was one before, now was made two: vnitye turned to diuiſion, vniuerſality to ſingularity, and free cōſent to diſſention.

The third note.

Thirdly, here is alſo to be noted, after this pitiful breach of equality, how many & what great natiōs departed frō the communion of the Church of Rome, and eſpecialy about this time aboue ſpecified of pope Gregory 9. an. 1230 ſo that both before and after that time many coūcels were holden, and many thinges concluded in the weſtchurche, wherunto the one halfe of Chriſtendome lying in the eaſt partes, did neuer agree: and contrary, many councelles holden with them, which in the Latine church were not receiued. So that the church now as ſhe loſt the benefit of vniuerſall conſent, ſo alſo ſhe loſt the name Catholicke. wherupon this queſtion is to be aſked, that when the coūcell of Lateran vnder Pope Innocent 3. ordeined the doctrine of tranſubſtantiation and auricular confeſſion here in the weſtchurch, without ẏ free conſent of the eaſtchurch whether the ſame doctrine is to be counted Catholicke or not?

The church hath her name of Catholicke, wherby & whē.
whether the doctrine of trāſubſtantiation, made without the free conſent of the Eaſtchurches, be Catholicke or no.
The fourth note

Fourthly, in the departing of theſe churches from the Biſhop of Rome, here alſo is to be noted, that the ſame churches of the Greeks, notwithſtanding they ſequeſtred themſelues and fel out with the church of Rome, and that iuſtly: yet they kept theyr vnity ſtill with theyr God, and retained ſtil the true ὀρθοδοξίαν That is, the true and ſincere doctrine of fayth. ready to debate and try the trueth of their religion by the ſcriptures, as they here in theyr own writings deſire to haue the truth examined, according as ye haue heard. wherefore the church of Rome hath done them open wrong, which being offred ſo gently to try and to be tryed by the trueth of Gods word, not onely would ſtand to no triall, nor abide conference, but alſo hath excōmunicated them as herretickes, whiche appeare here to be more orthodoxaſticall chriſtians, then they themſelues.

The fifth note.
The Church of Rome proued not to be Catholicke.
The procedings of Rome ſtand vpon no free conſent, but are coacted.

Fiftly, theſe things thus ſtanding, then haue we to cōclude that the church of Rome falſely pretendeth it ſelfe to be catholicke. For if the name of Catholicke muſt needes import an vniuerſall conſēt of the whole, how can that be catholick where the conſent of ſo many famous and true chriſtian churches hath bene lacking, & furthermore wher the conſent that hath bene amongeſt themſelues, hath rather bene coacted, then any true or free conſent? which is eaſy to be proued. For let theſe fires and fagottes ceaſe, let kinges and princes leaue to preſſe theyr ſubiects with the popes obedience, but let the ſcripture, and the biſhops alone euery one his own Dioces to gouerne their flock after the rule of Gods word, and how few be there in this weſt end of ẏ world (trow you) ẏ would not doe the ſame that theſe Greciās, Ethiopians, and Syrians haue done before vs? And thus much by the occaſion of this Patriarches letters ſēt to pope Gregory, cōcerning the Grecians.

whoſe doings when I conſider, as I can not but cōmend their wiſedome & iudge their ſtate happy and bleſſed, in ſhaking off from their neckes the miſerable yoke of the popes tyranny: ſo on the other ſide conſidering with my ſelfe the wretched thraldome of theſe our churches here in the weſt part of the world, vnder the biſhop of Rome, I can not tell, whether more to maruell or to lament their pitiful ſtate, who were brought into ſuch oppreſſion & ſlauery vnder him, that neither they could abide him, nor yet durſt caſt him of. So vntollerable were his exactions, ſo terrible was his tyranny, his ſuſpenſions & excommunications much like to a mad mans dagger, drawen at euery trifle, that no chriſten patience could ſuffer it, nor natiō abide it. Again, ſo deep did he ſit in their conſciences, falſly beleuing him to haue the authority of S. Peter, that for cōſcience ſake neither king nor Cæſar durſt withſtand him, much leſſe poore ſubiects once mute agaynſt him. And although his takings and ſpoylings, namely in this realm of england were ſuch, that neither the laity nor ſpiritualty could beare them: yet was there no remedy, beare thē they muſt, or els the Popes ſentence was vpon them, to curſe them as blacke as pitch.

AND firſt to begin with the elections of the Byſhops, Abbots, Deanes and Priors within this realme it can not be told what mas of mony grew to the popes coffers thereby, eſpecially in this kinges dayes: for ſo much as in his time lightly no election hapned either of Archbiſhopp Biſhop, Abbot, or any roume of dignity, but when the Couent or Chapter had choſen one to their minde, the king who had maried a ſtranger, and ſought therfore to prefer ſtrangers, would ſet vp an other. By reaſon wherof, whē the other part was fayne to appeale to Rome and there to plead the caſe, no ſmall riuers of engliſh mony beſides expences and trauel by the way, went flowing to the popes ſea. And though the election went neuer ſo cleare, yet the new elect muſt needes reſpect the holy father with ſome gentle reward, and further by his othe was bound euery 3. yeares, either in his owne perſon or by another to viſit Limina Apoſtolorum.

An other ſuch like contention happened betweene the king and monkes of wincheſter about the election of W. Rale: whom the Monkes had choſen, but the king refuſed, willing to place a ſtranger, and therfore ſent to Rome his meſſengers, Theobald a Monke of weſtminſter, and M. Alexāder a Lawyer with no ſmall ſomme of mony: to euacuate the election of the foreſayd W. Rale: Commaunding moreouer, that ẏ gates of wincheſter ſhould be ſhut againſt him, and no man ſo hardy there to receiue him in his houſe. wherupon the ſayd W. being excluded, after he had ſayd his curſe vpon the whole city of wincheſter, made his repayre to Rome, wherefor 8000. After the death of Stephen Langhton Archb. of Caunterbury, ye heard before how the monks had elected walter a Monke of Caunterbury. But the king to ſtop that election, ſent vp his Proctors, M. Alexander ſtanes, and M. Henry Sandford biſhop of Rocheſter to the Pope, to euacuate that election, and to place Richard Chauncellor of Lincolne. which Proctors perceiuing at firſt the Pope and Cardinals, how hard & vnwillingly they were therunto, & conſidering how all thinges might be bought for mony, rather then the king ſhoulde fayle of his purpoſe, they promiſed on the kinges behalfe to the pope for mainteining his warres agaynſt Fredericke the Emperour a diſme, or tenth part of all the moueables in the Realme of England and of Ireland. mony the Pope eftſoones thinking to paſſe with the king, began to pick quarrels with the forſayd Gualter, for not anſwering rightly to his queſtions about Chriſtes deſcēding to hell: making of Chriſtes body on the aulter: the weeping of Rachell for her children, ſhe being dead before: about the ſentence of excommunication, and certaine cauſes of Matrimony. His aunſweres wherunto when they were not to the Popes mind, he was therefore put backe, and the kings man preferred, which coſt the whole realm of England and Ireland, the tenth part of their moueable goods. And yet for all this the ſayd Richard the coſtly Archbiſhop of Caunterbury, within leſſe then two yeres after, falling out with the king about the caſtle and Lordſhippe of Tunbridge, went and complayned of him to the Pope. Of the like diſſentiō ye heard before betwene the king and the couent of Durham, for not chooſing M. Lucas the kinges Chaplaine, whom the king offered to be their Biſhop. About the ſute wherof, when much money was beſtowed on both ſides welfauoredly, the pope defeiting thē both, admitted neither M. william nor M. what buſines fell likewiſe betweene Edmund Archb. of Caunterbury, and the Monkes of Rocheſter, about the electiō of Richard wedoure, to be theyr biſhop? And what was the end? firſt the Archbiſhop was fayne to trauell himſelfe to the Pope: and ſo did the Couent alſo ſend their Proctors. who belike being better moued, weyed downe the cauſe, ſo that the good Archbiſhoppe in that cauſe agaynſt the Monkes: and partly in an other cauſe agaynſt the Earle of Arundell, was condemned of the Pope in a thouſand Markes. whereof the greateſt part (no doubt) redounded to the Popes coffers. an. 1238. After the returning of the ſayd Edmund Archbiſhop of Canterbury agayne from Rome, it chaunced, that the Monkes of Canterbury had elected theyr Prior without his aſſent: for the which he did excommunicate the monks, and euacuate theyr election. Not long after this the popes exactours went about to extort from the churchmen the fiſt part of theyr goods to the Popes vſe fighting then agaynſt the Emperour. This cruell exaction being a great while reſiſted by the Prelates and Clergy, at length the forſayd Archb. thinking therby to get the victory agaynſt the monks, was contented to graunt to the ſayd exaction, adding moreouer of his own for an ouerplus 800. marks whereupon the reſt of the Clergy was fayne to folow after, and contribute to the popes exactors. an. 1240. In the church of Lincolne (whoſe ſea before the conqueſt was in Dorkeſter, and afterward by williā Rufus tranſlated from thence to Lincolne) roſe a greuous contētiō beweene Rob. Groſted then biſhop, and the canons of the cathedrall church, about theyr viſitation, whether the biſhop ſhould viſite them, or the Deane: which matter being put to arbiters, could not ſo be compoſed; before the B. and the chapter after theyr appeale made to the Pope, went both to Rome, and there after they had well waſted theyr purſes, they receiued at length their aunſwere, but payd full ſweetly for it. an. 1239. Pariſ. fol. 119.

Great expence of money in the court of Rome betweene the B.of Lincoln and the Cathedrall Church.

At what time the Canons of Chicheſter had elected Robert Paſſelew to their biſhop at the kings requeſt, the Archb. with certein other biſhops taking part againſt the kings chaplaine, repelled him and ſet vp Richard witch. Upon this what ſending and going there was to Rome, and what mony beſtowed about the matter, as wel of the kings part, as biſhops, read the ſtory thereof in Mat. Pariſ. fol. 182. 184. 186.

Money waſtfully beſtowed.

Robert Groſted Biſhop of Lincolne (of whom relation was made before) hauing a great care howe to bring the priuiledged orders of religious houſes within his precinct, vnder his ſubiectiō and diſcipline, went to Rome, & there with great labor & much effuſion of mony as the ſtory ſayth, procured of the pope a mandate, wereby all ſuch religious orders were commaunded to be vnder his power and obedience. Not long after, the Monkes not abyding that, (who could ſoone wey downe the Biſhop with mony) ſent theyr factors to the Pope, who with their golden eloquence ſo perſwaded him and ſtirred affections in ſuch ſort, that ſoone they purchaſed themſelues freedome from their ordinary Biſhop. wherof Robert Groſted hauing intelligence, made vp to Rome, and there complayning to the pope, declared how he was diſappoynted and confounded in his purpoſe, contrary to promiſes and aſſurance made to him before. Unto whom Pope Innocent looking with a ſterne countenaunce, made this aunſwere agayne: Brother (ſayd he) what is that to thee? Thou haſt deliuered and diſcharged thine owne ſoule. It hath pleaſed vs to ſhew fauor vnto them. Is thine eie euill, that I am good? And thus was the Biſhop ſent away with a flea in his eare, murmuring with himſelf, yet not ſo ſoftly, but that the Pope heard him ſay theſe wordes: O mony, mony what canſt not thou do in ẏ court of Rome? wherwith the Pope being ſomewhat pinched, gaue this aunſwere agayne: O ye Engliſhmen, Engliſhmen, of all men moſt wretched. For all your ſeeking is how ye may conſume & deuour one an other. &c. anno. 1250. Ex Math. Pariſienſi. fol. 230.

Mony comming to the Pope, betweene the b.of Lincoln & the monks within his Dioces.

Money may doe much at Rome.

The popes anſwere to Rob. Groſted.

It happened moreouer the ſame yeare, that the ſayd Robert Groſted excommunicated and depriued one Ranulphus a beneficed perſon in his Dioces, being accuſed of incontinency. who after the terme of xl. dayes, refuſing to ſubmit himſelfe, the Biſhoppe wrote to the Shiriffe of Rutland to apprehend him as contumax. which Shiriffe becauſe he deferred, or refuſed ſo to doe (bearing fauour to the party) and being therfore ſolemnly excommunicate by the biſhop, vttered his complaynt to the king. whereat the king taking great diſpleaſure with the Biſhoppe for excommunicating his Shiriffe, and would not firſt make hys complaynt to hym, ſendeth forthwith a ſubſtantiall meſſenger (M. Moneta) ſuch as he was ſure would ſpeed vnto Pope Innocent, by vertue of whoſe wordes the Pope eaſie to be entreated, ſendeth downe a prouiſo to the Abbot of weſtminſter, charging that no Prelate nor Byſhop in the Realme of England ſhoulde moleſt or enter action agaynſt any of the Kinges Bayliffes or Officers, in ſuch matters as to the kinges iuriſdiction appertained. And thus was the ſtrife ended, not without ſome helpe and heape of Engliſh mony, ſo that no winde of any controuerſy here ſtirred in England, were it neuer ſo ſmall, but it blew ſome profite for the Popes aduantage, an. 1250 Ex Pariſ. fol. 231.

Iuſtice peruerted by the popes authoritie for money.

In like maner no litle treaſure grew to the Popes coffers by the election of Boniface the Queenes Uncle a Frenchman to be Archb. of Caut. an. 1243. and of Ethelmare the Queenes brother, to be Biſhop of wincheſter, agaynſt the wils of the Prior and Couent there, an. 1250. beſides many ſuch other excheres, which made England poore, and the Pope rich.

Money cōmyng to the Pope by the election of Boniface archb. of Cant.and of Ethelmare B. of Wint.both ſtrāgers and French men.

I come now ſomething likewiſe to touch briefly of the popes diſpenſations, prouiſions, exactions, contributions and extortions in Englande in this kinges dayes: for to diſcourſe all it is not one booke will holde it.

Symon Montfort Earle of Leceſter had maried Alinore the kinges ſiſter and daughter of king Iohn, who by report of Nonnes, had taken the mantell & ring. wherefore the king and his brother Richard Earle of Exceter, were greatly offended with the Mariage, which ſeing the Earle Simon made a hand of money, and poſting ouer to Rome, after he had talked a fewe wordes in Pope Innocentes eare, the mariage was good enough; and letters ſent to Otho the Popes Legate here, to geue ſentence ſolemnly with the Earle. Notwithſtanding the Dominick Friers and other of the like religious fraternitye, withſtood that ſentence of the Pope ſtoutly ſaying, that the Popes holines was therin deceaued, and ſoules in daunger, that chriſt was ielous ouer his wife, and that it could not be any wiſe poſſible, that a woman which had vowed her mariage with Chriſt could afterward mary with any other, &c. an. 1238. Ex Pariſ. fol. 114.

Mariage with Alinore the kings ſiſter a Nunne, diſpenſed by the Pope for money.

As there was nothing ſo hard in ẏ wide world wherwith the Pope would not diſpenſe for mony; ſo by the ſaid diſpenſations much miſchiefe was wrought abroad. For by reaſon therof, the people truſting vpon the Popes diſpenſation, litle regarded what they did, what they promiſed, or what they ſware. As well appeared by this king Henry. 3. who being a great exactor of the poore cōmons, as euer was any king before him or ſince, and thinking thereby to winne the people ſooner to hys deuotion, moſt faythfully promiſed thẽ once or twiſe, and therunto bound himſelfe with a ſolemne othe, both before the clergy and layty, to graunt vnto them the old liberties and cuſtomes as well of Magna charta, as Charta de Foreſta perpetually to be obſerued. wherupon a Quindecim was graunted to the king. But after the payment was ſure, the king truſting by the Popes diſpenſation for a litle mony to be diſcharged of his oth and couenaunt, went from that he had promiſed and ſworne before.

What inconuenience commeth by the Popes diſpenſations.

Wilfull periurie mainteined by the Popes diſpenſations.

In like maner the ſayd king an other time, being in need of money, ſigned himſelfe with the croſſe, pretending and ſwearing deepely in the face of the whole parliament, that he would himſelfe perſonally fight in the holy land agaynſt the Saracens. But as ſoone as the mony was taken, ſmall care was taken for performance of his othe, being ſo put in the head by certain about him, that he needed not paſſe of that periurye, for ſo much as the Pope for an hundred pounds or two wold quickly diſcharge him therof, Ex Math.Pariſ.fol.273.

Out of the ſame corrupt ſpring of theſe popiſh diſpenſations, haue proceded alſo many other foule abſurdities. For where many young men were in thoſe dayes; which enioyed benefices, and were no prieſtes: and when by the procurement of Robert Groſted Biſhop of Lincolne the ſayd young men ſhould be forced, whether they would or not, to enter orders, they laying theyr purſes together, ſent to Rome, and obtayned of the Pope a diſpenſation to remayne ſtill as they were, that is, to haue the fruites of benefices to finde them at ſchole or vniuerſity, and yet themſelues neither miniſters to take charge, nor yeelding any ſeruiſe for theyr profites taken. Ex Math.Pariſ.fol.256. Beſides innumerable heapes of enormities moe, proceeding of the Popes diſpenſatiõs, as diſpenſing one man to haue ſundry biſhopricks, to encroch pluralities of benefices to make children Parſons, to legitimate baſtards, with ſuch other like, the particulars whereof, for breuities ſake I do omit to further oportunity.

Enormities which ſpring out of the popes diſpenſations.

The intollerable oppreſſion of the Realme of England, by the Popes exactions and contributions and other ſleightes here vſed in the time of K.Henry.3.

The miſerable impoueriſhing of the Realme by the popes prouiſions and contributions.

ALthough theſe emolumentes thus riſing dayly to the Popes purſe by Symony and brybery, by elections & diſpenſations, might ſeeme ſufficient to ſatiſfy his greedy appetite, yet ſo vnſatiable was the auarice of that ſee, that he not yet contented here with, ouer and beſides all this, ſẽt euery yere almoſt ſome Legat or other into this realm to rake for his aduantage. In ſo much that during al this kinges time, the Realme was neuer lightly without ſome of the Popes liegers with all violence exacting and extorting continual prouiſions, contributions, and ſummes of mony to be leaued out of Celles, Abbayes, priors, fruites of benefices, and Biſhopricks, and alſo lay mens purſes, to the miſerable empoueriſhing both of the clergy and temporalty, as hereunder foloweth.

Cardinall Otho Legate in England. The receiuing of Otho the popes Legate into the Realm.

Firſt after Pandulphus, was ſent into this Realme Cardinall Otho, procured by the king without the aſſent of his nobles, to the intent to aſſiſt him in certaine affairs, he had to do. At receiuing of which Legate, great preparaunce was made, many rich and precious giftes in ſcarlet, in plate, in iewels, in mony and palfreyes were geuen him. whom the king alſo himſelfe went as far as the Sea ſide to receiue, bowing downe his head in low courſye to the cardinalles knees. To whom alſo the biſhop of wincheſter for his part gaue toward keeping of his houſe, fifty fat Oxen, a hundred ſemes of wheat, and 8. great veſſels of pure wine. This Legate at his firſt comming beginneth firſt to beſtow ſuch benefices as he foũd vacant, vpon thẽ whom he brought with him without reſpect, whether they were meet, or vnmeet. Ex Pariſ.fol.103.

Anno. 1237.

After this the Pope hearing how the nobles and commons of the Realme began to ſtomacke the Cardinall for his exceſſiue procurations & exactions, ſent for him home: but the king, by reaſon he ſtood in feare of his nobles, and thought to haue a ſtay by the Cardinall agaynſt all occurrentes, entreated him to ſtay while he wrote to the Pope, to obtein further licence for him to tary: & ſo did, notwithout ſome Engliſh mony, ye may be ſure.

Otho the Legate ſeeketh to come into Scotlande. The king of Scottes his anſwere to Cardinall Otho.

In this mean time of vacation, Otho thinking to loſe no time, but to gather alſo ſome crõmes in Scotlãd, made as though he would ſet things there in order, which were in the church of Scotland to be reformed, and ſo commeth to the king of Scots, being then in Yorke with king Henry, to haue leaue to enter. Vnto whom yͤ king thus made anſwere, that he neuer ſaw, to his remẽbrance, any popes Legate in his land, neither was there any ſuch need (God be prayſed) for any ſuch to be ſent for. Matters there were well enough, and needed no helpe of his. And as he could neuer learne either in yͤ daies of his father, or any his predeceſſors, that any ſuch entrance to any Legate was grãted, ſo he for his part would not now begin. But yet notwithſtãding, for ſo much as I heare (ſayd he) that you are a good man, this I tell you before, that if ye will needs aduenture in, do it warely, and take heed to your ſelfe, leſt it happen to you otherwiſe, then I would wiſh: for they be a ſauage and vnruly people, geuen much to murder, & ſhedding bloud, whõ neither I my ſelf am ſcarſe able to bridle, ſo that if they fall vpon you, I ſhal not be able to help you. And how they alſo inuaded me, and ſought to expel me frõ my kingdome, ye heard alate. And therfore I warne you before, take heed by time, what ye thinke beſt to doe. After the Cardinal heard the king ſpeak theſe wordes he pluckt in his hornes, & durſt proceed no further but kept him ſtill by the ſide of king Hẽry. Wherupon the Earles and Barons and nobles of the realme addreſſed letters vnto pope Gregory, by Syr Robert Twing knight, for redreſſe of ſuch wrong & iniuries, who otherwiſe ſhould be forced (they ſayd) to inuocate the ſuccour of their king, who both was able and no leſſe was willing according to his duetye (they truſted) to reforme ſuch enormities, and to defend the liberties of his Realm. Not long after the ſame, in the yere of our Lord. 1240 came a new precept from Pope Gregory, by Petrus Rubeus the popes nuncio, to the foreſayd Otho, that all beneficed men in the Clergy as well in England as Fraunce, ſhoulde pay to the Pope the fift part of theyr reuenewes. Wherupon whẽ the Clergy men made their complaint to the king, ſeeking to be relieued by him, the king anſwered them agayne that he neither would, ne durſt ſtãd agaynſt the pope in any caſe, and ſo without al hope of ſuccour ſent them away Pariſienſ.fol.132. Then were the Archbiſhops, Byſhops, Abbats, and Prelates of the Churche cõmaunded to aſſẽble to gether at Reding, there to heare yͤ Popes pleaſure and commaundement, concerning the payment of this fift part. Wherein the end thus the matter, concluded, yͭ the prelates deſired a further time to be geuen them to aduiſe vpon the matter, and for that ſeaſon the aſſembly brake vp. Pariſenſ.122.b. Notwithſtãding at laſt after many excuſes and exceptions layd in by the Clergy, firſt that becauſe the mony was gathered to fight agaynſt the Emperour, they ought not to contribute their mony contrary to the libertyes of the church. Item forſomuch as they had payd a tenth not long before vnto the pope, vpon conditiõ that no mo ſuch paiments ſhould be required of thẽ, much leſſe now the fift part ſhould be exacted of them, becauſe an action twiſe done maketh a cuſtome. Item, ſeing they had oftentimes to repayre to the Court of Rome, if they ſhold giue this mony agaynſt the Emperour, it would turne to their danger comming through his land. Item ſeing their king had many enemies, agaynſt whom they muſt needes relieue the king with theyr mony, they could not ſo do, if yͤ realme were thus impoueriſhed &c. All which excuſes & diuers other moe notwithſtanding, they were cõpelled at lẽgth to conforme themſelues to the popes good pleaſure, through the example geuen of Edmund Archb. of Caun-

This done, then went Petrus Rubeus the popes nūcio, and Ruffinus into ſcotland, frō whence they brought with them 3000. poundes, to the Popes vſe about allhalowtide the ſame yeare. At which time moreouer cōmeth an other harpax from the Pope to England named Mumclius, bringing with him 23. Romaines here into the Realme to be beneficed. An other prety practiſe of the pope to prolle for mony, was this. The foreſayd Petrus Rubeus cōming into religious houſes and into their Chapters, cauſed thē to contribute to the Popes holynes, by the example of this Byſhop and that Abbot, pretending that he & he of their own voluntary deuotiō had geuē ſo much & ſo much, & ſo ſeduced them. The king being agreeued with the vnreaſonable rauening of theſe Romaniſtes, vtterly forbad any ſuch example to be geuen. Ex Pariſiēſ.fol.143. But what happened? The Abbot being therfore accuſed to the Pope by one of the Legates, and comming vp about foure yeares after in the time of Pope Innocent, to the Councell of Lyons, was ſo rated and reuiled, & ſo ſhamefully thruſt out of the popes court, that for ſorrow he fell ſicke vpon the ſame, and there died. Of whom the one bearing himſelfe for the Popes kinſman, brought out his Billes and Bulles vnder the Popes authority, to ſuch an Abbot or to ſuch a Prior, or to ſuch and ſuch a Biſhop, and ſo extorted from them a great quantity of gold and ſiluer. All prebendes that were voyd he ſought out & reſerued them for the Popes behoofe. Among which was the golden prebend of Sarum, belonging to the Chauncellor of the Queere, whom he preferred to the Byſhopricke of Bathe, and ſo ſeiſed vpon the prebend being voyd, againſt the willes both of the Byſhop and the Chapter. While the inſatiable auarice of the pope thus made no end in gathering riches and goods together in England, the nobles & Barons, with the community as well of the Clergy as the laity, weying the miſerable ſtate of the Realme, and namely of the church, which now neither had liberty left thē to chooſe their owne miniſters, nor yet could enioy their owne liuings, layd theyr heades together, and ſo exhibited an earneſt intimatiō to yͤ king, beſeching him to conſider the pitifull affliction and oppreſſion of his ſubiectes vnder the popes extortion, liuing in more thraldōe, thē euer did the people of Iſrael, vnder Pharao. K. Henries letter to the Pope.

The kyng offereth to kiſſe the Popes feete.

To the moſt holy father in Chriſt & Lord, Innocēt by the grace of God chiefe Biſhop, Henry by the ſame grace, king of England. &c. greeting and kiſſinges of his bleſſed feet. The more deuout & obſequious the ſonne ſheweth himſelfe in obeying the fathers will, the more fauor and ſupportation doth he deſerue to finde at his fathers handes agayn. This therefore I write, for that where as both we and our realme haue euer and in all things bene hetherto at the deuotion and commaundement of your fatherhood, and that although in ſome certayne affayres of ours and of our kingdome, we haue found your fatherly fauour and grace ſometimes propice vnto vs: yet in ſome thinges agayne, as in prouiſions geuen & graunted to your clerkes of forreine nations, both we and our kingdome haue felt no ſmall detriment. By reaſon of which prouiſions the Church of England is ſo ſore charged and burdened, that not onely the Patrones of Churches, to whome the donations thereof do appertayne, are defrauded of their right: but alſo many other good workes of Charity thereby doe decay, for that ſuch benefices which haue bene mercifully beſtowed vpon religious houſes to their ſuſtentation, are now waſted and conſumed by your prouiſions.

Damage receiued by the pope in the realme of England.

The popes prouiſions.

Wherefore for ſo much as your ſea Apoſtolicke ought to be fauourable to all that be petitioners to the ſame, ſo that no perſō be wronged in that which is his right, we thought therfore to be ſuters to your fatherhood, moſt humbly beſeeching your holines that you will deſiſt and ſurceaſe for a time, from ſuche prouiſions to be exacted. In the meane ſeaſō, it may pleaſe your fatherhood we beſeech you, that our lawes and liberties, (which you may rightly repute none other but your owne) you will receiue to your tuition, to be cõſerued whole and ſound, nor to ſuffer the ſame by any ſiniſter ſuggeſtion in your Court to be violated and infringed. Neither let your holyneſſe be any whit mooued therefore with vs, if in ſome ſuch caſes as theſe be, we do or ſhall hereafter reſiſt the tenour of your commaundementes forasmuch as the complayntes of ſuch which dayly call vpon vs, do neceſſarily enforce vs thereunto, which ought by the charge of this our office and kingly dignity committed to vs of almighty God, to foreſe that no man in that which is theyr right be iniuried, but truely to miniſter iuſtice to euery one, in that which duely to him appertayneth. The kinges too much in ſubiection to the pope

A man would thinke that this ſo gentle and obedient letter of the king to the Pope, would haue wrought ſome good effect in his Apoſtolicall breſt, to withdraw his prouiſions, and to haue tendered the kings ſo reaſonable and honeſt requeſt: but how litle all this preuayled to ſtop hys inſatiable gredines, and vntollerable extortions & oppreſſions, the ſequele well declareth. For beſides that ſhortlye after the Pope ſent M. Martine with blanks being bulled for contribution of 10000. marks in all haſte to be payd alſo euen immediatly vpon the receiuing of this letter, it followeth in mine author, that the ſayd pope Innocẽt the 4. after all this great ſubmiſſion of the king and ſo manifold benefites and payments yerely out of this Realme receiued, was not aſhamed to take of Dauid prince of north wales, 500. markes by yeare, to ſet him agaynſt the king of England, and exempted him from his fealty and obedience due to his owne liege Lord and king, to whom both he and all other welchmen had ſworn theyr ſubiection before, as by the ſeales and obligations, as wel of that Dauid himſelfe, as other welch Lordes in this behalfe, doth appeare. In Mat. Pariſ. fol. 172.

Ex Mat. Pariſ. fol. 172.

The pope ſetteth Welch men againſt the king of England.

Neither did M. Martinus in the meane while ſleepe his buſines in making vp his market for the popes mony of 10000. markes, but ſtill was calling vpon the prelates and clergy. who firſt excuſing themſelues by the abſẽce of the king and the Archb. of Cant. afterward being called agayne by new letters, made theyr aunſwere by the Deane of Paules their Prolocutor.

Firſt that the pouerty of the Realme would not ſuffer them to conſent therto.

Item, where as they had geuen before a contribution to Cardinal Otho, for paying of the Popes debts & knew the ſaid mony to be employed to no ſuch end as it was demaunded for, more cauſe they had now to miſdoubt, leaſt this contribution, in his hands which was a much more inferiour meſſenger thẽ the Cardinall, would come to the ſame or a worſe effect.

Contribution required of the clergie of England for the pope with their excuſes and reaſons againſt the ſame.

Item, if they ſhould now agree to a new contributiõ, they feared leaſt it would grow to a cuſtom, ſeing that one action twiſe done maketh a cuſtome.

Item, for ſo much as a generall councell is ſhortly loked for, where euery Prelate of the Realme muſt needes beſtow both his trauell and expenſes, and alſo his preſẽce to the Pope, if the Prelates now ſhould be bound to thys taxe, they were not able to abide this burthen.

Item, ſeing it is alleadged, that the mother Church of Rome is ſo farre in debt, reaſon and right it were, that the mother ſo oppreſſed ſhould be ſuſtayned of all her deuout children meeting together in the generall councel, wheras by helpes of many more reliefe might come, thẽ by one nation alone.

Item, laſt of al they alledged, that for feare of the Emperour and his threatnings, they durſt not conſent to the ſayd contribution.

While theſe thinges were thus in talke betweene the Popes prieſt and the clergy of England, cõmeth in Iohn Marſcall and other meſſengers from the king, commaũding in the kings name, that no Biſhop that held his Baronage of the king, ſhould infeſt his leſcode to the court of Rome, which they ought onely to him. &c. Ex Pariſienſ. fol. 139. anno. 1243.

At which meſſage the Legate being ſore agaſt, went ſtraight to the king, to know whether his conſẽt was to the ſame or not. As ſoone as Pope Innocent had hereof intelligence by the cõplaynt of his Legate, he was in a mighty rage: And furthermore remembring how yͤ french king & the king of Arragon, not long before had denied him entraunce into theyr land, and being therfore in diſpleaſure with the likewiſe, began in great anger to knit his browes, and ſaid: it is beſt that we fall in agreement with our prince, wherby we may the ſooner bring vnder * theſe little petty kinges, and ſo the great Dragon being pacified, theſe litle ſerpents we ſhall handle at our owne pleaſure as we liſt.

After this immediatly thẽ folowed the generall councell of Lions, to the which councell the ſtates and Lordes of the Realme, with the conſent of the communaltye, ſent two Bulles: One conteining a generall ſuplication to the Pope and the councell: the other with the Articles of ſuch greuaunces which they deſired to be redreſſed, whereof relation is made ſufficiently before, pag. 267. The other bill of the Supplication becauſe it is not before expreſſed, I thought here to exhibite for two cauſes: Firſt, that men now in theſe dayes may ſee the pitifull blindneſſe of thoſe ignoraunt dayes, wherein our Engliſh nation here did ſo blindely humble themſelues, and ſtand to the Popes curteſy. whom rather they ſhould haue ſhaken of, as the Grecians did. Secondly, that the pride of the Pope might the better appeare in his coulours, who ſo diſdaynefully, reiected the humble ſute of our Lordes and Nobles, when they had much more cauſe to diſdayne rather, & to ſtampe him vnder their feet. The tenour of the Supplicatiõ was this.

¶ The copy of the Supplication written in the names of all the nobles and commons of England to Pope Innocent the 4. in the generall Councell at Lyons. anno. 1245.

Anno. 1245.

¶ To the reuerend Father in Chriſt Pope Innocent, chiefe Byſhop, the nobles with the whole comminaltye of the Realme of England ſendeth commendation with kiſſing of his bleſſed feet.

OVr mother the Church of Rome we loue with all our hartes as our duety is, and couet the encreaſe of her honour with ſo much affection as we may, as to whome we ought alwayes to flye for refuge, whereby the griefe lying vpon the childe maye finde comfort at the mothers hand. Which ſuccour the mother is bound ſo much the rather to imparte to her childe, how muche more kinde and beneficial ſhe findeth him in relieuing her neceſſitiee. Neither is it to the ſayd our mother vnknowne, how beneficiall and bountifull a geuer the Realme of England hath bene now of long tyme for the more amplifiyng of her exaltation, as appeared by our yerely ſubſidie, whiche we terme by the name of Peterpence. Now the ſayd Church not contented with this yearly ſubſidie, hath ſent diuers Legates for other contributions, at diuers and ſondry times to be taxed and leuyed out of the ſame Realme, al which contributions and taxes notwithſtanding, haue bene louingly and liberally graunted.

The ſupp cation o Lords a commons England t the Pope.

Furthermore, neither is it vnknowne to your fatherhood, how our forefathers like good Catholickes, both louing and fearing their maker, for the ſoules health as well of themſelues as of their progenitours, and ſucceſſors alſo, haue founded Monaſteryes, and largely haue endued the ſame both with their owne proper landes, and alſo patronages of benefices, whereby ſuche religious perſons profeſſing the firſt and chiefeſt perfection of holy Religion in theyr Monaſteries, might with more peace and tranquillitie occupy themſelues deuoutly in Gods ſeruice,

The ſuperſtitious founding of monaſteries in England.

as to the order appertained: And alſo their Clearkes preſented by them into their benefices, might ſuſtaine the other exteriour labours for them in that ſeconde order of religion, and ſo diſcharge and defend them from all haſardes: ſo that the ſaide religious monaſteries cannot be defrauded of thoſe their patronages and collations of benefices, but the ſame muſt touche vs alſo very neare, and worke intollerable griefe vnto our hearts.

And now ſee we beſeche you, which is lamentable to behold, what iniuries we ſuſtaine by you and your predeceſſors, who not conſidering thoſe our ſubſidies and cōtributions aboue remembred, doe ſuffer alſo your Italians and forreiners (whych be out of number) to be poſſeſſed in our Churches and benefices in Englande, pertaining to the right and patronage of thoſe monaſteries aforeſayde: which forreiners neither defending the ſayd religious perſones, whome they onght to ſee to, nor yet hauing the language, whereby they may inſtructe the flocke, take no regarde of their ſoules, but vtterly leaue them of wilde wolues to be deuoured. Wherefore it may truely be ſaid of them, that they are no good ſhepheards, where as neither they know their ſhepe, nor the ſhepe do know the voyce of their ſhepherds, neither do they kepe any hoſpitalitie, but only take vp the rents of thoſe benefices, carying them out of the Realme, wherewith our brethren, our nephewes, and our kinsfolkes might be ſuſteined, who coulde and woulde dwell uppon them, and employ ſuch exerciſes of mercie & hoſpitalitie as their dutie required. Wherof a great nūber now for mere neceſsitie are lay men, and faine to flie out of the realme.

Iniuries receiued in England by the Pope.

Benefices in Englande wickedly giuen a way to Italians.

And now to the entēt more fully to certify you of the truth, ye ſhall vnderſtand that the ſayd Italians and ſtrangers receiuing of yerely rentes out of Englande not ſo little as 60000. Markes by yeare, beſides other auailes and exiſes deducted, doe reape in the ſaid our kingdome of England more emoluments of meere rents, then doth the king himſelfe, being both the tutour of the Church and gouernour of the land.

Three ſcore thouſande markes yerely giuen to Italians out of the church of England.

Italians receiued more in this land of meer rēts then did the kings crown.

Furthermore, where as at the firſt creation of your Papacie, we were in good hope and yet are, that by meanes of your fatherly goodneſſe we ſhoulde enioy our franchiſes, and free collation of our benefices and donatiues, to be reduced againe to the former ſtate: nowe commeth an other greeuance, which we cannot but ſignifie vnto you, preſsing vs aboue meaſure, which we receiue by M. Martinus, who entring late into our lande without leaue of our king, with greater power then euer was ſene before in any Legate, although he beareth not the ſtate and ſhewe of a Legate, yet hee hath doubled the doings of a Legate, charging vs euery day with newe Mandates, and ſo moſt extreemely hath oppreſſed vs: Firſt in beſtowing and geuing away our benefices if any were aboue 30. Markes, as ſoone as they were vacant, to Italian perſons.

Deteſtable dealings of the popes legate in England.

Secondly, after the deceaſe of the ſayd Italians, vnknowing to the patrons, he hath intruded other Italians therein, whereby the true patrons haue bene ſpoiled and defrauded of their right.

Thirdly, the ſaide M. Martinus yet alſo ceaſeth not to aſsigne and conferre ſuch benefices ſtill to the like perſones: And ſome he reſerueth to the donation of the Apoſtolike ſee: And extorteth moreouer from religious houſes immoderate penſions, excommunicating and interdicting who ſo euer dare gainſtand him.

Wherefore, foraſmuch as the ſayde M. Martin hath ſo farre extended his iuriſdiction, to the great perturbation of the whole Realme, & no leſſe derogation to our kings priuiledge, to whome it hath bene fully graunted by the ſee Apoſtolike, that no Legate ſhould haue to do in his land, but ſuch as he by ſpeciall letters did ſend for: we with moſt hūble deuotiō beſeech you, that as a good father will alwaies be ready to ſupport his childe, ſo your fatherhode wil reach forth your hand of compaſsion to releaue vs your humble children from theſe greuous oppreſsions.

Complaint of M. Martin the Popes Legate.

And although our Lord and king, being a Catholicke Prince, and wholy giuen to his deuotions and ſeruice of Chriſt Ieſu our Lorde, ſo that he reſpecteth not the health of his owne body, will feare and reuerence the ſee Apoſtolicke, and as a deuout ſonne of the Church of Rome, deſireth nothing more then to aduance the eſtate and honor of the ſame: yet we which trauaile in his affaires bearing the heate and burden of the day, and whoſe duetie together with him, is to tender the preſeruation of the publike wealth, neither can paciently ſuffer ſuch oppreſsiōs ſo deteſtable to God and man, and greuances intollerable, neither by Gods grace, will ſuffer them, through the meanes of your godly remedies, which we well hope and truſt of you ſpeedily to obteine. And thus may it pleaſe your fatherhode, we beſeche you to accept this our ſupplication, who in ſo doing ſhall worthely deſerue of all the Lords and Nobles, with the whole comminaltie of the Realme of England, condigne and ſpeciall thankes accordingly. Anno 1245. Ex Mat. Pariſienſ. fol. 188.

The ſtout wordes of the Lordes to the Pope.

This ſupplication being ſent by the handes of Sir W. Bygot Knight, and W. de Powike Squier, Henrie de la Marre, with other Knightes and Gentlemen, after it was there opened and red, pope Innocent firſt keping ſilence, deferred to make anſwer thereunto, making haſt to procede in hys deteſtable excommunication and curſe againſt the good Emperour Fredericke. The which curſe being done, and the Engliſh ambaſſadours waiting ſtill for their aunſwer, the Pope then told them flatte, they ſhould not haue their requeſt fulfilled. Wherat the Engliſh men departing in great anger away, ſware with terrible othes, that they would neuer more ſuffer any tribute, or fruites of any benefices, namely whereof the noble men were patrones, to be paid to that inſatiable and greedy court of Rome worthy to be deteſted in all worlds. Ex Math. Pariſ. fol. 193.

The ſupplication of the Engliſh nation tooke no place with the Pope.

The Engliſhe Ambaſſadours agreeued with the Pope.

The Pope hearing theſe wordes, all be it making then no aunſwere, thought to watch his time and did. Firſt, incontinent vpon the ſame, during the ſaid Counſel, he cauſed euery Biſhop of England to put his hande and ſeale to the obligation made by king Iohn for the Popes tribute, as is aboue ſpecified. Threatning moreouer, & ſaying, that if he had once brought downe the Emperor Fredericke, he would bridle the inſolent pride of England wel enough.

The Pope in an anger with England.

The Biſhops of England ſet their ſeales to the popes tribute.

After this Councell ended, in the beginning of the next yere following. An. 1246. Pope Innocent came to Cluniake, where was then appoynted a ſecret meeting or colloquie betwene the Pope and Lewes the French king (who was then preparing his voyage to Ieruſalom) in which colloquie the pope ſought al meanes to perſwade ẏ French king, in reuengement of his iniurie, to warre contra Regulum (as he termed him) that is, againſt the weake and ſeule king of England, either to driue him vtterly frō his kingdom, or els ſo dammifie him, wherby he ſhould be conſtrained, whether he would or no, to ſtoupe to the Popes will and obedience: wherin he alſo would aſſiſt him with al the authoritie he could doe. Neuertheleſſe, the French king to this would not agree, firſt for the conſanguinitie that was betwene them (for there 2. Queenes were ſiſters) And alſo for the truce that they had taken. Thirdly, for feare of the Emperour, leaſt he ſhoulde take his part. Item, for that it could not be without the ſpilling of much Chriſten bloud. And laſtly, becauſe he was preparing his voyage to ẏ holy land, where his comming was already looked for. And thus the French king denying the Popes bloudy requeſt, refuſed not onely to enter warre againſt the King and the realme of England, but alſo ſhortly after concluded wyth him longer truce. An. 1246. Ex Math. Pariſ. fol. 196.b.

{ Anno. 1246. }

The pope ſtirreth Lewes the French king to warre againſt the K. of Englande.

Lewes the frēch kyng refuſeth to warre againſt Englande.

Straight vpon the necke of this, followed then the exaction of Boniface Archbiſhop of Canterbury, that he had bought of the Pope: which was, to haue the firſt yeares fruites of all benefices and ſpirituall liuings in Englande for the ſpace of 7. yeares together, vntill the ſumme ſhould come of ten thouſand Markes. Whereat the king firſt was greatly agreeued. But in concluſion, hee was faine at laſt to agree with the Archbyſhop, and ſo the money was gathered. Pariſ. fol. 197.

The firſt yeares fruites for ſeuen yeares gathered of all benefices for the Archb. of Cant.

Ouer and beſides all other exactions, wherewyth the pope miſerably oppreſſed the church of England, this alſo is not to be ſilenced, how the Pope ſending down his letters from the ſee Apoſtolike, charged and commaunded the prelates to find him, ſome 10. ſome 5. and ſome 15. able men wel furniſhed with horſe and harneis, for one whole yere, to fight in the popes warres. And leſt the king ſhuld haue knowledge thereof, it was enioyned them vnder paine of excommunication that they ſhoulde reueale it to none, but to kepe it ſecrete only to themſelues. Pariſ. fol. 200.

The prelates of England charged to find horſe and harnes for Popes warres.

A ſubtile practiſe of the pope.

The pope yet notwithſtanding, partly beyng laboured by ſuters, partly of hys owne mynde thinking good ſomewhat to geue to the king & people of England, as fathers are wont to geue ſomething to theyr babes to play withall to kepe them ſtill, ſent downe this releaſment to the king, ẏ hereafter whenſoeuer any of the popes nephewes or of hys Cardinals were to be beneficed in any church of England, eyther he, or the Cardinals ſhuld firſt make the king priuy therof, and inſtantly craue hys good will in obteining the procuration, or els the ſame to ſtand in no effect. &c. Pariſienſis fol. 202. Howbeit al this ſeemed to be don but of a policy, to get the kings fauour, wherby he might be ſuffered more freely to paſſe with greater exactions, as afterward appeared.

The popes baite layde for more money.

For whē the foreſayd pope Innocent 4. had knowlege the ſame tyme of certayne rich Clerkes leauing great ſubſtaunce of mony, which died inteſtate as of one Rob. The king beginneth to withſtand the Pope, but durſt not holde out.

Furthermore, the Pope yet not ſatiſfied with all thys, addreſſeth newe letters to the biſhop of Wincheſter, and to W. biſhop of Norwich, for gathering vp amongſt the clergie, and religious houſes in Englande 6000. Markes to the behouſe of holy mother the Church, without any excuſe or delay, by vertue of obediẽce. Which tallage being greatly grudged of the Clergie, when it came to the kings eare, hee eftſoones directeth contrary letters to all the Prelates and euery one of them, commaunding them vpõ forfeyting their temporalties to the king, that no ſuch ſubſidie of mony ſhoulde be gathered or tranſported out of the Realme. But the Pope againe hearing therof, in great anger wryteth to the prelates of England, that this collection of mony, vpon paine of excommunication and ſuſpenſion ſhuld be prouided, and brought to the new Temple in London, by the feaſt of the Aſſumption next enſuing.

And furthermore, foraſmuch as he perceiued the Kyng to goe about to gaineſtand his proceedings, taking therat great diſdaine, he was about the ſame time to interdict the whole land. To whome then one of his Cardinals, called Ioannes Anglicus, an Engliſhman borne, ſpeaking for the realme of England, deſired hys fatherhood for Gods cauſe to mitigate his modie ire, & with the bridle of temperance to aſſuage the paſſion of his minde: which (ſayde he) to tell you plaine, is here ſtirred vp to much without cauſe. For all theſe woordes of Ioan. So that in concluſion the king for all hys ſtoute enterpriſe was faine to relent at laſt, and the Pope had his money. Anno 1246. Ex Parienſ.fol.204.

The Grecians vſed to waſhe their altar, if any latin maſſe had bene ſaide vpon them. Ex Actis concilij Lateranenſis, cap.4.

Ye heard before of the Greke churches vnder the Empire of Conſtantinople, howe they ſequeſtred themſelues from the companie of the Romiſh church. In ſo much that Germanus the Patriarche of Conſtantinople, and the Archbyſhop of Antioch did excommunicate the Byſhop of Rome. And after the ſaid Germanus an other Archbiſhop of Conſtantinople at the Councell of Lyons proteſted, that where as before were 30. Suffraganes belonging to that prouince, nowe there were not 3. that helde wyth the Churche of Rome. And thys breache, albeit it chiefly braſt out in the time of Pope Gregory the 9. Anno 1230. to open warre and bloudſhed, yet the ſame had begon, and ſo continued long before, in ſuch ſorte as in the time of the Pope Innocent the thirde, if any Prieſt had ſayd Maſſe in theyr Churches, they woulde waſh the aultare afterwarde: as appeareth by the actes of the Laterane Councell. Capit.4. Wherfore Pope Innocent now (as his other predeceſſors had done before) bearing an old grudge againſt thoſe churches of the Greekes, and neither willing by conference to trie with them, nor able by learning to matche with them, thought by force of armes to ſubdue them, ſent the prouinciall of the gray Friers, with other aſſociates of the ſame order into England with his precept authenticall, containing in it theſe Articles.

Goods gotten by vſury attached for the Pope. Excommunication abuſed.

Vſurariæ prauitas.

1. Firſt, that the ſayd prouinciall, or his Friers ſhould inquire vppon all vſurers beyng aliue, and of all ſuch euill gotten goodes gayned per vſurariam prauitatem, ſhould make attachement for the vſe and preparation of this warre agaynſt the Greekes, excommunicatyng all them by diſtrict cenſures of the Church that repugned agaynſt it.

2. That all they, which tooke the badge of the Croſſe, for the recouery of the ſayd Empire of the Greekes, or with goodes and cattell would helpe ſufficiently vnto the ſame, ſhould be abſolued of all their ſinnes.
3. Item, that all the goodes left in the Teſtamentes of them that were departed, beyng gotten by vſurie, ſhould be taken vp to the ſubſidie of the Empire aforeſayd, and whoſoeuer repugned agaynſt the ſame, ſhould be excommunicated.

Goods left in dead wils for reſtitution uerted to the Pope. Goods vn bequethed in dead willes conuerted to war agai the Gre Goods yll gotten conuerted to the Pope.

4. Item, that ſuch goodes as in the Teſtamentes of the dead, left or which ſhould be left three next yeares to come, for reſtitution of ſuch goodes as the dead had euill gotten, they ſhould take vp for the ſubſidie of the Empire aforeſayd, excommunicatyng. &c.
5. Item, ſuch goodes as were left to be diſtributed in godly vſes, after the arbitrement of executours, by the willes of the dead, or were not in their willes deputed to any certaine places or perſons named, nor yet were beſtowed by the ſayd executors to the foreſaid vſes, they ſhould collect to the vſe and ſubſidie aforeſaid, and geue certificate to the ſea Apoſtolicke of the quãtitie therof, excõmunicating all repugners and rebellers agaynſt the ſame.
6. Item, that they ſhould diligently enquire of ſuch mens goodes euill gottẽ or euill come by, as were alyue, and them they ſhould attache for the ſubſidie aforeſaid, in caſe the parties which ought to be ſatiſfied for thoſe goodes euill gotten, could not be found, geuyng certificate thereof, aud excommunicatyng. &c.

Abſolution for mon

7. Item, that the ſayd prouinciall or his Friers, ſhould haue full power to abſolue thoſe that were excommunicated, which wittyngly had done any fraude touchyng the collection aforeſayd, ſo that the ſayd perſons did make due ſatiſfaction to the deputies aforeſayd. Ex Math. Parienſ. fol.205.

What man hauing eyes is ſo blinde, which ſeeth not theſe execrable dealings of the Pope to be ſuch, as woulde cauſe any nation in the world, to do as the wiſe Grecians did, and perpetually to abrenounce the Pope, and well to conſider the vſurped authority of that ſea not to be of God. But ſuch was yͤ rude dulneſſe then of miſerable England, for lacke of learning & godly knowledge, that they feeling what burdens were laide vpon them, yet would play ſtill the aſſe of Balaam, or els the horſe of Eſope, whych receiuing the bridle once in his mouth, could afterward neither abide his owne miſerie, nor yet recouer libertie. And ſo it fared with England vnder the popes thraldome: as partly by theſe ſtories aboue hath ben declared, partly by other in like caſe following is to be ſeene.

An vnreaſo nable exacti on of the Pope.

Three ſco thouſande poundes e acted of clergie to paydc to Pope.

For ſo it followeth in the hiſtory of the ſayd Matth. Pariſ. howe the Pope taking more courage by hys former abuſed boldneſſe, & perceiuing, what a tame aſſe he had to ride vpon, ceaſed not thus, but directed a new precept the ſame yeare 1246. to the Prelates of England, commaunding by the authoritie Apoſtolike, yͭ all beneficed men in the realme of England, which were Reſident vppon their benefices, ſhould yeld to the Pope the third part of their goodes, and they which were not reſident, ſhould geue the one halfe of their goods, and that for the ſpace of 3. yeres together: with terrible comminations to all them that did reſiſt: and euer with this clauſe wyth all, Non obſtante, whych was like a key that opened all locks. Which ſumme caſt together was found to amount to lx. M. pounds: which ſumme of mony could ſcarce be found in all England to paie for King Richardes raunſome. Pariſ.fol.207. The execution of this precept was committed to the biſhop of London: who cõferring about the matter with hys brethren in the Church of Paules, as they were buſily conſulting together, and bewailing yͤ inportable burthen of this contribution, which was impoſſible for them to ſuſtaine, ſodainely commeth in certaine Meſſengers from the Kyng: Sir Iohn Lexintune Knight, and M. Laurence Martine the kings chaplain, ſtraightly in the kings name, forbidding them in any caſe to conſent to this contribution, which ſhuld be greatly to the preiudice and deſolation of the whole Realme. Pariſienſ.fol.207.

SAnctiſ. Patri in Chriſto ac Do.Innocent.Dei prouidentia ſummo pontifici vniuerſitas cleri & populi per prouinciam Cant. conſtituti deuota pedum oſcula beatorum. Cum Anglicana Eccleſia.&c. To the moſt holy father in Chriſt,and Lord Innocent, by Gods prouidence chiefe biſhop: The whole comminaltie both of the Clergie and laitie within the prouince of Canterbury, ſendeth deuout kiſsings of his bleſſed feete. Like as the Churche of Englande ſince it firſt receiued the Catholicke faith, hath alwayes ſhewed her ſelfe faithfull and deuout in adhering to God and to our holy mother the Church of Rome, ſtudying with all kinde of ſeruice to pleaſe and ſerue the ſame,and thinketh neuer otherwiſe to do,but rather to continue and increaſe as ſhe hath begon:euen ſo nowe the ſame Church moſt humbly proſtrate before the feete of your holineſſe, intirely beſeecheth your clemencie to accept her petition,in ſparing this impoſition of money,which ſo manifold waies for the ſubuention of other nations,by the commaundement of your holines is laid vpon vs:conſidering that not only it is importable, but alſo impoſsible which is enioyed vs. For although our countrey ſometimes yeldeth foorth fruite for the neceſſary ſuſtentation of the inhabitants, yet it bringeth foorth neither gold nor ſiluer,neither were able to bring forth of long time, ſo muche as nowe a daies is required. Which alſo being burdened and ouercharged of late daies with an other ſuch like impoſition, but not ſo great as this, is not able any whit to aunſwere to that which is exacted.

Furthermore, beſides this commaundement of your holines, there is required of the Clergie a ſubſidie for our temporall king, whoſe neceſsities neither poſsibly we can, nor honeſtly ought to forſake,whereby he may both withſtande the inuaſion of the enemie,and mainteine the right of his patrimonie, and alſo recouer againe that hath bene loſt. In conſideration whereof,we haue directed the bearers heereof to the preſence of your holineſſe with our humble ſupplication, to explane to you the dangers and inconueniences which are like to enſue vpon the premiſſes. The like letters were ſent alſo vnto the Cardinals to the ſame effect. The Pope vnderſtanding theſe things,and perceiuing that there was no ſtriuing againſt ſuch a generall conſent,and yet loth to forgoe his ſweete harueſt,which he was wont to reape in Englande,craftely deuiſed to ſende this aunſwere againe to the King, much like to the ſame which hee ſent before: which was, that although the Pope in time paſt vpon his owne will and pleaſure to the importable greeuance of the Realme of Englande,hath euery where aud without reſpecte, through the whole lande made his prouiſions,in geuing their benefices vnto his Italians: yet nowe the Lorde be praiſed, that tempeſt (ſayd he) is ouerblowen: ſo that heereafter if the Pope ſhall graunt his prouiſion for any of hys nephewes or of his Cardinals, they ſhall come firſt and make their inſtant ſute vnto the king,without all inforcement, ſo that it ſhall ſtand wholy in the kings free arbitrement to doe herein what hee thinketh good.&c. This aunſwere of the Pope, all be it it was but a ſubtile ſhift for the time:yet neither did hee long ſtande to that hee had thus promiſed to the King. For ſhortly after, and within fewe dayes vppon the ſame, and in the time alſo of the ſayde Parliament holden at wincheſter, the Pope ſent two Engliſh Friers into the realme, whoſe names were Iohn and Alexander, with full authoritie after the largeſt ſorte, for newe contributions. who firſt pretending lowly ſubmiſſion to the King, while they had leaue graunted to range about the Realme, afterwarde comming to the Biſhops and rich Abbots, ſhewed themſelues forth in theyr full authoritie, in ſuch ſort, as they became rather tyrants then extortioners.

Amongeſt other, comming to Robert byſhop of Lyncolne, who of all other bare a ſpeciall minde to the order of Obſeruauntes, theſe two Friers as proude as Luciſer, bringing forth the terrible Mandate, wyth the Popes Bulles, required, and eke commaunded vnder the Popes mightie curſe, to haue the gathering in his Dioceſſe of vj. thouſand markes. Likewiſe of the Abbot of ſ. Albons they required iiij. hundred Markes, vnder great penaltie, and that in ſhort time to be paide.

The Biſhop although well liking before that order of thoſe Friers, yet ſeeing the impudent behauiour, and more impudent requeſt of thoſe Marchauntes, thus aunſwered to them againe: that thys exaction (ſauing ſayde hee, the Popes authoritie) was neuer heard of before, and neyther was honeſt, nor yet poſſible to be performed: and moreouer was ſuch as did not only concerne him, but the whole publicke ſtate of the Clergie, and of the whole Realme in general, and therfore it ſhould be abſurdly and raſhly done of him to geue them aunſwere heerein, before the king and the reſt of the Counſell, wyth other, to whome the matter generally did appertaine, were made priuie thereunto, &c. and ſo for that time he ſhoke them of. Pariſ.fol.210.

The Abbot of S. Albons maketh great ſute to the Pope for the 400.markes that he ſhould pay. This Iohannes Anglicus was the more fierce againſt the Abbot, becauſe hee receiued him not with ſuch reuerence as hee thought meete for the popes legate.

Furthermore, as touching the Abbot of S. Albones, when he alſo alleged the ſame cauſes, he pretended moreouer that he would appeale, and ſo did, to the Pope and his Cardinals. wherupon immediatly was ſent downe from Pope Innocent, an other Legate called Ioannes Anglicus, an Engliſh Frier and Cardinall, who bringing downe a newe ſpeciall precept to the foreſayde Abbot, cited him eyther to appere at London the morow after S. Giles day, or to diſbourſe to the vſe of the Pope the foreſayde 4. hundreth markes. By reaſon wherof the Abbot was driuen to ſend his Proctors againe, with a newe ſupplication to the Pope at Lyons, who in the ende through great inſtaunce of monyed friendes, agreed with the Abbot for two hundreth markes, beſides hys other charges borne, & ſo was that matter compounded, little to the Abbots profite. Pariſienſ. fol.213.

To recite all damages and greuaunces receiued by the B. of Rome in this realme of England, neither is any hiſtory ſufficiently able to comprehend, nor if it were, vnneth is there any that would beleeue it. Notwſtanding to thoſe aboue declared, thys one I thought to commit likewiſe to memorie, to the intẽt, that they which liue in this age now may behold and wonder in themſelues to ſee in what miſerable ſlauery, paſſing all meaſure, not onely the ſubiects, but kings alſo of this Realme were brought vnto, vnder the intollerable yoke of the popes tyrannie, which in thoſe daies neither durſt any man caſt of, nor yet was able to abide. As by this example enſuing, w infinite other like to the ſame, may appeare.

Example howe this Realme of England was oppreſſed miſerably by the Pope.

In the yeare of our Lorde 1248. after that Pope Innocent the 4. had taken ſuch order in the Realme, that all Prelates of the Churche were ſuſpended from collation of any benefice, before the Popes kinſfolkes and Clearkes of Italy had ben firſt prouided for: It happened vpõ ẏ ſame, that the Abbot of Abingdon had a commaundement from the pope, to beſtow ſome benefice of his Church in all haſt, to a certaine Prieſt of Rome, which the Abbot as an obedient childe to his father the Pope, was preſt and ready to accompliſh accordingly. But the Romane prieſt not contented with ſuch as fell next hand, would tarye his time, to haue ſuch as were principall and for hys owne appetite, hauing a ſpeciall eye to the benefice of the church of S. Helene in Abingdon, which was then eſtemed worth an C. marks by yere, beſides other vailes and commodities belonging to the ſame: the collation wherof the prieſt required by the authoritie Apoſtolicall to be graunted to him.

As thys paſt on, it chaunced at laſt, the incumbent to die, and the benefice to be emptie. which eftſoones being knowen, the ſame day commeth a commaundement, with great charge from the King to the Abbot, to giue the benefice to one Æthelmare the kings brother by the motherſide, who at the ſame time was poſſeſſed wyth ſo many benefices, as the number and value therof was vnknowen. The Abbot heere being in great perplexitie, and not knowing what to doe, whether to gratifie his king, or to obey the Pope, tooke counſell with his friendes. who well adniſing the matter, gaue him counſell rather to preferre the brother of his Prince and patrone, ſo that the king would vndertake to ſtande in his defence againſt the Pope, rather then the Romiſh prieſt, whom alwaies he ſhuld haue lying there as a ſpie and watcher of him, and like a thorne euer in his eye: and ſo the king aſſuring the Abbot of hys vndoubted protection, and indemnitie againſt al harmes, the benefice was conferred forthwyth to the kings brother.

The Romane prieſt not a litle agreued therat, ſpeedeth himſelfe in all haſt to the Byſhop of Rome, certifying him what was done, and partly alſo (as the maner is of men) making it worſe then it was. Uppon whoſe compleint the Pope eftſoones in great anger cited vp the Abbot perſonally to appeare before him, to anſwer to the crime of diſobedience. The abbot truſting vpon the kings promiſe and protection, which neither could helpe him in that caſe, neither durſt oppoſe himſelfe againſt the Pope, being both aged and ſickely, was driuen to trauaile vp to the Court of Rome, in great heauines and bitterneſſe of minde. where in concluſion after much vexation and bitter rebukes, beſides great expenſes, he was faine to ſatiſfie the Pope after his owne will, compounding to giue hym yearely 50. markes in part of making amends for his treſpaſſe of diſobedience. Ex Mat.Pariſienſ.fol 222.

The Abbot of Abbingdõ cited to appeare before the Pope.

as outragious as thys, againſt the houſe of Binham. For when the benefice of Weſtle in the Dioceſſe of Eley was voide by the death of the incumbent, who was an Italian & one of the popes chamber, the donatiō of which benefice belōged to the priorie of Binham, an other Italian which was a baſtard and vnlearned, borne in the City of Ianua, called Herrigetto de Malachana de volta, brought downe the popes letters to M. Berardo de Nympha the Popes agent here in England, with ſtrait charge and full authority, commanding him to ſee the ſayd benefice to be conferred in any caſe to Herrigetto. Yea and though the benefice had bene geuen already, yet notwythſtanding the poſſeſſor therof ſhould be diſplaced, and the ſaid Herrigetto perferred: Yea alſo, non obſtante that the ſayd Pope himſelfe had before giuen his graunt to the king & realme of England, yͤ one Italian ſhould not ſucceede an other in any benefice there, yet for all that the ſaid Herrigetto vpon paine of excommunication, to be placed therin. The Grecians excuſed & purged in parting frō the Church of Rome.

The miſeries that haue riſen in Englande through ſubiection vnder the church of Rome

And thus much hetherto of theſe matters, through the occaſion of the Eaſt churches and the Grecians, to the entent all men that read theſe ſtories, & ſee the doings of this weſterne Biſhop, may conſider what iuſt cauſe theſe Grecians had to ſeclude themſelues from hys ſubiection, and communion. For what chriſtian communion is to be ioyned wͭ him, which ſo contrary to Chriſt and his goſpel, ſeeketh for worldly dominion, ſo cruelly perſecuteth hys brethren, ſo giuē to auarice, ſo greedy in getting, ſo iniurious in oppreſſing, ſo inſatiable in hys exactions, ſo malitious in reuenging, ſtirring vp warres, depriuing kings, depoſing Emperours, playing Rex in the Church of Chriſt, ſo erronious in doctrine, ſo abominably abuſing excommunication, ſo falſe of promiſe, ſo corrupt in life, ſo voyde of Gods feare: and briefly, ſo farre from all the parts of a true Euangelicall Biſhop. For what ſeemeth he to care for the ſoules of men, which ſetteth in benefices, boyes and outlādiſh Italians: and further, one Italian to ſuccede an other which neither did know the language of yͤ flocke, nor once would abide to ſee their faces. And who can blame yͤ Grecians then for diſſeuering themſelues from ſuch an oppreſſour and gyant againſt Chriſt.

Englād plagued by the Pope when it needed not.

The Pope and court of Rome the principall cauſe of all the publique calamities through chriſtendome.

Whoſe wiſe example if this Realme had then folowed, as they might, certes our predeceſſours had bene rid of an infinite number of troubles, iniuries, oppreſſiōs, warres, commotions, great trauails, & charges, beſides the ſauing of innumerable thouſand of poūds, which the ſayd biſhop full falſely hath raked and tranſported out of thys Realme of ours. But not to excede yͤ bounds of my hiſtory, becauſe my purpoſe is not to ſtande vpon declamations, nor to dilate common places, I will paſſe ouer, leauing the iudgement therof to the further examination of the reader. For els if I liſted to proſecute this argument ſo far as matter would lead me, & truth peraduenture wold require me to ſay, I durſt not only ſay, but could well proue, the Pope & court of Rome to be the only fountain & principal cauſe, I ſay not of muche miſery heere in England, but of all the publicke calamities and notorious miſchiefes which haue happened theſe many yeres through all theſe weſt parts of chriſtendome, & eſpecially of all the lamentable ruine of the church, which not only we, but the Grecians alſo this day do ſuffer by the Turks and Saracens. As whoſoeuer wel conſidereth by reading of hiſtories the courſe of times, and vieweth with all the doings and acts paſſed by the ſaid biſhops of Rome, together with yͤ blinde leading of his doctrine, ſhal ſee good cauſe not only to thinke, but alſo to witnes the ſame. Only one narratiō touching this argument, and yet not tranſgreſſing the office of my hiſtorie, I minde (the Lorde willing) to ſet before the Readers eyes, which happened euen about this preſent time of thys king Henries reigne, in the yere of our Lord. 1244.

The ſicknes of Lewes the frēch Kyng.

The ſuperſtition of the kynges mother.

In the which yeare it chanced, that Lewes the French king ſonne to Quene Blanch, fel very ſore ſicke, lying in a ſwounde or in a traunce for certaine dayes, in ſuch ſorte as few thought he would haue liued, & ſome ſaid he was gon already. Amongſt other, there was with him hys mother, who ſorowing bitterly for her ſonne, and giuen ſomewhat (as cōmonly the maner of women is) to ſuperſtitiō, went & brought forth a peece of the holy croſſe, wyth the crowne and the ſpeare, which peece of the holy croſſe Baldwynus Emperour of Conſtantinople (whome the Grecians had depoſed a litle before for holding with the biſhop of Rome) had ſold to the French king for a great ſumme of mony, and bleſſed him wyth the ſame, alſo laid the crowne, & the ſpear to his body, making a vow wal in the perſon of her ſonne, that if the Lorde would viſite him with health, and releaſe him of that infirmitie, he ſhould be croyſed or marked with the croſſe, to viſit his ſepulchre, and there ſolemnly to render thankes in the lande which he had ſanctified wyth his bloud. Thus as ſhe, with the B. of Parys, and other there preſent were praying, beholde the king which was ſuppoſed of ſome to be dead, began wͭ a ſigh to pluck to his arms and legges, and ſo ſtretching himſelfe, began to ſpeake, geuing thankes to God, who from an high had viſited him & called him from the danger of death. Which as the kings mother, wͭ others there toke to be a great miracle wrought by the vertue of the holy croſſe: ſo the king amending more and more, as ſoone as he was well recouered, receaued ſolemnely the badge of the croſſe, vowing for a freewil ſacrifice vnto God, that he, if the counſaile of his realme would ſuffer him, would in hys owne perſon viſite the holy land: forgettyng belyke the rule of true Chriſtianitie, where Chriſt teacheth vs otherwiſe in the goſpel, ſaying: That neither in this mount, nor in Samaria, nor at Ieruſalem the Lord will be worſhipped, but ſeeketh true worſhippers, which ſhall worſhip him in truth and veritie. &c. After thys was great preparaunce and muche a do in Fraunce toward the ſetting forth to the holy land. For after the K. firſt began to be croyſed, the moſt part of the nobles of Fraunce, with diuers Archbiſhops and Byſhops, wͭ Earles, and Barons, and gentlemen to a mighty number, receaued alſo the croſſe vppon their ſleeues. Amongſt whom was the Earle Atrebacenſis the kings brother, the Duke of Burgundy, the Duke of Brabant, the Counteſſe of Flaunders wyth her two ſonnes, the Earle of Britaine with his ſonne, the Earle of Barrēſis, Earle of Sweſſon, Earle of S. Paul, Earle of Druiſ. Earle Retel. with many noble perſons mo. Neither lacked here whatſoeuer the Pope could do, to ſet forward this holy buſines, in ſending his Legates and Friers into Fraunce, to ſtirre the people to folow the king, & to contribute to his iourny. Wherupon was graunted to the King, to gather of the vniuerſall church of France by the popes authoritie, the tenth part of all their goods for 3. yeares ſpace together, vpon thys condition, that the king likewiſe wold graunt to the Pope the 20. part, for ſo many yeares after, to be gathered of the ſayd Church of Fraunce. Which was agreed. An. 1246. Ex Mat: Pariſienſ. fol. 204. b.

Shortly after thys, in the yeare of our Lorde 1247. folowed a Parliament in Fraunce, where the king with his nobles being preſent, there was declared, how the king of Tartarians or Turkes hearing of the viage of the French king, writeth a letter to him, requiring that he wil become hys ſubiect. In the which Parliament, time was prefixed for taking their iourney, which ſhoulde be after the feaſt of S. Iohn Baptiſt, the next yeare inſuing. Alſo they that were croyſed, were ſworne to perſiſt in their purpoſe and ſentence of the popes great curſe denoūced to all them that went from the ſame. Pariſienſ. fol. 211. Furthermore, for the better ſpeede in his iourny, the king through al his realme cauſed it to be proclaimed, that if any marchāt or other had bene iniured at any time by the kings exactours, either by oppreſſion, or borowing of money, let him bring forth his bil ſhewing how or wherein, and he ſhould be recompenſed. At which time William Longſpatha a worthy warriour, with the Biſhop of Worceſter and certain other great men in the Realme of England, moued with the example of the Frenchmen, prepared themſelues likewiſe to the ſame iourney.

The next yere after thys enſuing, which was 1248. the French king yet ſtill remaining in hys purpoſed iourney, Lady Blanche hys mother, alſo the Byſhop of Paris hys brother, with the Lordes of his counſaile, & other nobles, and his ſpeciall frends aduertiſed him with great perſwaſions, to alter hys minde touching that ſo aduenturous and ſo daungerous a iourney, for that his vow (ſayd they) was vnaduiſedly made, and in time of his ſickneſſe, when hys minde was not perfectly ſtabliſhed: and what ieoperdies might happen at home it was vncertaine, the king of England being on the one ſide, the Emperor on the other ſide, and the Pictauians in the middeſt ſo fugitiue, and vnſtable: and as concerning his vow, the pope ſhuld frendly diſpenſe with him, conſidering the neceſſitie of his realme, and weakeneſſe of his body. Beſides all thys, his mother vppon her bleſſing required him, hys brethren of all loues deſired him to ſtay at home, and not in his perſon to aduēture, other might be ſent in his roume, with no leſſe furniture to atchieue that enterpriſe, and to diſcharge him of his vow, eſpecially ſeeing at yͤ making thereof his ſenſes were feeble, hys body weake, and reaſon through ſickneſſe, and very death almoſt, decaied.

The kings anſwere to his Lordes laying down & takyng vp his croſſe againe.

To whome the K. againe: forſomuch (ſayde he) as you ſay, that for feeblenes of my ſenſes I toke this vow vpon me, loe therfore as you here wil me, I lay downe the croſſe that I toke, and putting his hand to his ſhoulder, tare of the badge of the croſſe, ſaying to the Byſhop, here ſyr I reſigne to you the croſſe wherewͭ I was ſigned. At the ſight whereof there was no ſmal reioyſing to all that were there preſent. To whome the king then both altering his countenance and hys ſpeach thus ſpake: My frendes (ſayde he) whatſoeuer I was then in my ſicknes, now I thāke god, I am of perfect ſenſe, and reaſon ſoūd, and now I require my croſſe again to be reſtored vnto me: Saying moreouer that no bread ſhuld come in his head, before he were recogniſed again with the ſame croſſe, as he was before. At the hearing whereof al there preſent were aſtonied, ſuppoſing that God had ſome great matter to worke, and ſo moued no moe queſtions vnto him.

Ann. 1248.

The French king ſetteth forth in his iourney.

The fifth K. deſireth to reconcile the Pope & the Emperour.

Vpon this drewe nie the feaſt of Iohn Baptiſt, which was the time ſet for the ſetting forth. And nowe being in a readines, the king in few dayes after was entring his iorney. But yet one thing lacked. For the King perceiuing the mortal variance betwene the pope, and good Frederick the Emperour, thought beſt firſt before his going to haue that matter appeaſed, wherby his way both might be ſafer through the Emperours countries, and alſo leſſe ieoperdy at home after hys departure, and therefore vpon the ſame, toke firſt his way to Lyons, where the Pope was, partly to take his leaue, but moſt eſpecially to make recōcilement betwene the Emperour and the Pope.

The Emperour Fredericke purgeth himſelfe to the pope & councell.

The ſubmiſſion of the Emperour.

Where is to be noted by the way, that as touching the good Emperour there was no lette nor ſtaie. Who rather ſought all meanes how to compaſſe the popes fauor, & neuer could obteine it. In ſomuch that before he ſhuld be excommunicated in the Councel of Lyons, he not onely anſwered ſufficiently by Thadeus his atturney, diſcharging himſelfe againſt whatſoeuer crimes or obiections could be brought againſt him, but ſo farre humbled himſelfe to the Pope and the Councell, that for all detriments, damages, loſſes, or wrongs done of hys part, what amendes ſoeuer the Pope could or would require, he would recompence it to the vttermoſt. This would not be taken.

The worthy offer of the noble Emperour.

Furthermore, if the Pope (hee ſayde) coulde not abide his tarying in his owne dominions and Empire, he wold goe fight againſt the Saracens and Turkes, neuer to returne into Europe againe, offering there to recouer lands & kingdomes whatſoeuer did at any time belong to Chriſtendome, ſo that the Pope onely would be contented that Henry his ſonne (which was then nephew to king Henry here in England) ſhould be Emperour after him. Neither could this be admitted.

The Emperour offreth to put in the French king and king of England to be his ſuerties.

Then he offered for trueth of hys promiſe to put in the French king and the king of England to be his Suerties, or els for triall of his cauſe to ſtand to their award and arbitrement. Neither would that be graunted.

The Emperour deſireth to anſwere for himſelfe in the councell.

At leaſt he deſired, that he might come himſelfe and anſwere before the councell. But the proude Pope in no caſe would abide that, ſaying: that he did not yet finde himſelfe ſo ready and meete for Martyrdome, to haue hym to come thether to the Councell: for if he did, he would depart himſelfe. &c. Ex Math.Pariſ.fol.187.An.1245.

The peſtilēt rancour of pope Innocēt 4. againſt Frederike 2. is the cauſe of all this miſchiefe, that to this day we ſuffer by the Turkes.

The beginning of the Turkes victories ouer Chriſtēdom.

This obſtinate rancor and deuiliſh malice of pope Innocent, and hys predeceſſour againſt that valiant Emperor, and againſt the Grecians, what diſturbance and miſchiefe it wrought to the whole Churche, what ſtrength it gaue to the Saracens and Tartarians, howe it empaired Chriſtian concorde, and weakened all Chriſten lands, not only the hoſt of the French king did finde ſhortly after, but chriſtendome euen to this day may and doth feele and rue. Neither can in ſtories be founde any greater cauſe which firſt made the Turks ſo ſtrong, to get ſo much groūd ouer chriſtendom as they haue, then the peſtilēt working of this pope in depoſing & excommunicating this worthy Emperour. For as there was neuer no Emperour of long time, which more victoriouſly preuailed in bridling and keping vnder theſe enemies of Chriſt, or would haue done more againſt them, then the ſaid Fred. if he might haue ben ſuffered: ſo after the depoſing & excommunicating of him, when the French king neither woulde abide at home, as he was counſelled, neither was yet able, wͭout the help of other, to withſtand the force and multitude of the ſayd Saracēs and Tartarians being now ioyned together, neither yet could the Emperour be ſuffered by the pope to reſcue the king, it followed thereof, that the good king being taken priſoner, & all his army deſtroied, the Turkes thereupon got ſuch a hand, and ſuch a courage againſt the Chriſtians, that euer ſince they haue braſt in farther vppon vs, and nowe haue preuailed ſo farre as neither the power of the Pope, nor of all Chriſtendome is able to driue them out, as hereafter by ſequele of ſtory, is further to be declared.

Pope Innocēt 4. would not be recōciled with the Emperour.

In the meane time, to retourne where before we left, when the french king comming thus to the pope at Lions, to entreat for the Emperor, could finde no fauour, he toke his leaue, and with great heauineſſe departed ſetting forwarde on his iourney to Marſilia, and ſo ſailed to the Iſle of Cyprus, where he remained all that winter, ſo that falling into penury and lacke of victuall, he was faine to ſend to the Venetians and other Iſlands by, for helpe of prouiſion. The Venetians gently ſent vnto him 6. great ſhips laden with corne, wine & other victuals requiſite, beſides the reliefe of other Iſlands mo. But eſpecially Fredericke the Emperor vnderſtanding of their want, ſo furniſhed the French campe with all plentie of neceſſaries, that it had aboundance. Whereupon the French king moued with the kindnes of the Emperour, wrote his ſpeciall letters to the Pope in the Emperours behalfe, but the hard heart of the Pope would not relent. Blanchia the Kinges mother in France, hearing what the emperor had done to her ſonne, ſent him moſt hearty thanks, with preſents and rewardes manifold. Math.Pariſ.fol.226.

The French army relieued by the Emperour Fredericke.

The french king again entreateth the pope for the Emperour.

In this meane time about the beginning of October, the French men got Damiata, being the principall forte or holde of the Saracens in all Egypt. An.1249.fol.228. After the winning of Damiata, the Prince and people of the Saracens being aſtonied at the loſſe thereof, offered to the Chriſtians great grounde and poſſeſſions more then euer belonged to Chriſtendome before, ſo that they might haue Damiata to them reſtored again. But the pride of the erle of Artoys the kings brother woulde in no caſe accept the offers of the Saracens, but required both Damiata and Alexandria the chiefe Metropolitane Citie of all Egypt to be deliuered vnto them. The Saracens ſeeing the pride & gredines of yͤ French men, in no caſe could abide it: which turned after to the great detriment of our Chriſtians, as in the ende it proued. Ex Mat.Pariſ.fol.229.

The pride of the Erle of Artoys.

Firſt, in the Iſle of Cyprus and in the iourney before died the Erle of Palatine, & one of the 12. peeres of Fraunce, alſo the Earle of S. Paul and Bleſſe, who had vnder him 50. enſignes. Which were all after hys death ſcattered abroade and diſperſed. Alſo died Ioannes de Denis a valiant Captaine, wyth many other noble perſonages both men and women, which by altering the aire and diet, there deceaſed. fol.229.

Death of certain of the French captaines in the way.

Anno. 1250.

The next yeare enſuing, which was 1250. about Aſhewedneſday, the French men iſſuing out of their tentes by the City of Damiata, flew vpon the Saracens, which beſieged them, and ſo after a great number of the enemies ſlaine, with victorie and great ſpoyles, returned to theyr tentes againe. Nowe within the Citie of Damiata, was the Queene wyth her Ladies, the Popes Legate, and biſhops, wyth a garriſon of horſemen and footemen for the defence of the Citie ſtrongly appoynted. The next day, the Frenchmen ſuppoſing to haue the like hande of the Saracens, as they had the day before, gaue a freſh aſſault vppon them: but in that cōflict, the Saracens had ſo ſtrongly appoynted themſelues, that the French men loſt tenne times more then they got the day before, & ſo after a great ſlaughter of their men, retired to their tents againe: whereupon the Saracens began to take great harts & courage againſt our men, ſtopping alſo the paſſages round about the Citie of Damiata, that no vitaile could paſſe vnto them. In like maner the Soldan alſo gathering all the galeys about Alexandria and all the lande of Egypt, ſo incloſed the Seas, that no intercourſe ſhould be to them by water. fol.231.

Victory of the Frenchmen ouer the Saracens.

Frenchmen diſcomfited by the Saracens.

At length after long talke and conſultation betweene them on both ſides, the Soldan aduiſed them betime to reſigne to hym the Citie of Damiata, wyth the furniture which they found therein, & they ſhould haue all the countrey about Ieruſalem, with all the captiues of the Chriſtians frendly reſtored vnto them. Wherwith the Chriſtians (ſayde hee) ought to be contented, and to ſeeke no farther, but onely to haue the lande of Ieruſalem, which beyng graunted to them, they ſhuld not encroch into other lands and kingdomes, whereto they had no right. Thys forme of peace, as it liked well the meaner ſorte of the poore ſouldiours and diuers other of the ſage counſaile and nobilitie: ſo the proude Earle of Artoys the kings brother, in no cauſe woulde aſſent thereto, but ſtill required the Citie of Alexandria to be yelded to them. Whych the Egyptians by no meanes would agree vnto.

The Frenchmen again well offered by the Soldā.

The Erle of Artoys & the popes Legate againe refuſe the forme of peace offered.

From that time the French army being compaſſed by ſea and by lande, began euery day more and more to be diſtreſſed for lacke of victual and famine, being driuē to that miſerie, that they were faine to eate their owne horſſes in the Lent time, which ſhould haue ſerued them to other vſes. Neither could any Chriſtian, nor Frederick being depoſed by the Pope, be able to ſend them any ſuccour. Furthermore the more miſeryes yͤ chriſtians were in, the more fiercely did the Saracens preſſe vpon them on euery ſide, deteſting their forward wilfulnes. In ſo much that diuers of the Chriſtian ſouldiours not able to abide the affliction, priuely conueyed themſelues, as they coulde, out of the campe, to the Saracens, who were gladly receaued and relieued, and ſome ſuffered ſtill to keepe their faith: Some marrying wiues amongſt them, and for hope of honor did Apoſtatate to their law, and ſo wrought no little harme to the Chriſtians.

The Soldans meſſage, derying the French men.

The Soldan dyeth, a worſe followeth.

The Frenchmen deſire again the peace offered before, & coulde not haue it.

The Soldane being perfectly inſtructed by theſe fugitiues of all things belonging to the kings armie, ſent hym word in deriſion, aſking, where were all hys mattockes, forckes, & rakes, hys ſithes, plowes, and harowes, whych he brought ouer wt him? or why he did not occupie them, but let them lie by hym to ruſt and canker? All thys and much more, the King with his Frenche men were faine to take well in worth. It happened ſhortly after, that thys Soldan died, being poiſoned of his own ſeruants. Which was to the Chriſtians a more heaping of theyr miſeries. For albeit the ſaide Soldan had bene a cruell tyrant to the Chriſtians, yet was he hated of his owne people, whereby his ſtrength was the leſſe: After whom ſucceeded an other much more cruell. Who as he was better loued, ſo hee became muche ſtronger by a generall confederacie of all the Saracens which were in the Eaſt parts, ioyning now together. So that when the Chriſtians deſired nowe to haue the forme of peace before profered, he preciſely denied them. And ſo the Frenche hoſte which at firſt began to be feared, by their pride and ouermuch gredines grew more & more in contempt amongſt their enemies, and now was vtterly deſpiſed.

Victories ouer the Templaries and keepers of Ieruſalem.

Cauſes debated why the Lord did not proſper the Chriſtians fighting againſt the Saracens.

The Popes wars neuer went wel forward againſt the Infidels. Frederike the Emperour curſed of the pope, bleſſed of God. Templaries ſet on by the pope to betray the Emperour.

The Chriſtians thus ſeeing all thinges to goe backeward with them, and how the infidell Saracens daily did preuaile, began to murmure againſt God, and ſome alſo which were wel ſetled before, to ſlacker in their Religion, caſting out theſe wordes of infidelitie: howe is this (ſayde they) that the Lorde hath left vs in whoſe cauſe we fight? how often wythin the time of remembrance, haue we bene confoũded by theſe Saracens and infidels, who with ſheding of our bloud, haue enioyed great ſpoyles & victories? firſt this Citie of Damiata, which we Chriſtians had gotten dearely with effuſion of ſomuch Chriſtian bloud, afterward we were cõſtrained for nought to reſigne vp againe. After that the armie of the templaries, fighting for the holy Temple againſt the Saracens, neare to Antioche, was vanquiſhed, and the ſtandard bearer ſlaine in the fielde. Againe within theſe fewe yeres, our Frenchmen fighting in lyke maner againſt the Saracens at the Citie of Gazara, were put to the worſe, and many afterwarde out of captiuity ranſomed, by Richard duke of Exceter, brother to the K. of England, Henry 3. Then came in the Choſmorins, ſent by the Soldan of Babylon, which by a wile inuaded the chriſtians in yͤ Citie of Ieruſalem, where almoſt all the chriſtian army being in the holy land, were deſtroyed. And now here our moſt chriſtian king together with the whole nobility, is like to be in danger, vtterly to be ouerthrown. And how is it, that the Lord thus ſtandeth againſt vs, and fighteth with them? hath he more regarde of them, then of vs? &c. Mat. Pariſienſ. fol. 231. Such murmuring wordes of an vnſtable faith, many there began to caſt out, as taking diſpleaſure for their ſufferings, but not conſidering on the other ſide what Idolaters they were, what pride and diſcorde was amongſt them, what crueltie and murther they had ſhewed at home in perſecuting the poore Albingenſes, what ſuperſtition they firſt brought out wyth them, with what idolatry they proceded, putting their truſt in maſſes, in the popes indulgences, in worſhipping of images, and praying to ſaintes. And what helpe then coulde they looke for at Gods hand, which had Images in their temples, to fight againſt them which had none? Or what maruell, if the Lord of hoſtes went not with their armie, committing ſuch idolatrie euery day in their pauilions to their Sacramentall bread and wine as they did, and fighting with the ſtrength of their owne merits, and not only by the power of their faith in Chriſt, which is only the victory that ouercommeth the worlde? Iohn 1. and finally hauing in their campe the Legate of him whom the Lord taketh to be his enemie? As by example of Fredericke the Emperour may be wel perceiued who after he was accurſed by pope Gregorie a little before, comming the ſame time in war againſt the Saracens in Paleſtina, Goddes bleſſing wrought ſo mightely with him, yͭ without any bloudſhed he recouered Ieruſalem, and ſet all the countrey about it in great quietnes, till at laſt the popiſh Templaries, which at the popes ſetting on, went about to betray him, to yͤ Soldan of Babylon, & ſo loſt al againe by their owne malicious miſchief that the Emperour before had gotten. But let vs procede further in this holy progreſſe. The French king with his army, ſeeing himſelfe diſtreſſed, and no good there to be done againſt the Soldan of Egypt, after he had ſufficiently fortified the Citie of Damiata, wyth an able garriſon left with the Duke of Burgundie, hee remoued his tents from thence, to go Eaſtward. William Longſpath inriched by Saracens goods.

The originall cauſe of this grudge betweene them, began thus. There was not far from Alexandria in Egypt, a ſtrong fort or Caſtle, repleniſhed with great Ladies, and rich treaſure of the Saracens. The which hold it chaunced the ſaid William Longſpath, with his company of engliſh ſouldiours to get more by good lucke and politicke dexteritie, then by opẽ force of armes, wherby he with his retinue were greatly enriched. When the Frenchmen had knowledge hereof, they being not made priuie thereto, began to conceiue an hartburning againſt the Engliſh ſouldiours, & could not ſpeake well of them after that. It happed againe not long after, that the ſayde William had intelligence of a cõpany of rich Marchants among the Saracens going to a certaine faire about yͤ partes of Alexandria, hauing theyr Camels, Aſſes, and Mules, richly loden with ſilks, precious iewels, ſpices, gold and ſiluer, with cart lodes of other wares, beſides vitaile and other furniture, wherof the ſouldiours then ſtoode in great nede. He hauing ſecret knowledge hereof, gathered all the power of Engliſhmen vnto him that he coulde, and ſo by night falling vpon the Marchants, ſome he ſlew with their guides and conductours, ſome he tooke, ſome he put to flight. The Cartes wyth the driuers, and with the Oxen, and the Camels, Aſſes, and Mules, with the whole cariage and vitailes he tooke and brought with him, loſing in al the ſkirmiſh but one ſouldiour, and 8. of his ſeruitures. Of whome notwithſtanding ſome he brought home wounded, to be cured.

This being knowen in the campe, forth came yͤ French men, which al this while loytred in their pauilions, & meting their cariage by the way, tooke all the foreſaide pray whole to themſelues, rating the ſayd W. and the Engliſhmen, for ſo aduenturing and iſſuing out of the camp wtout leaue or knowledge of their generall, contrary to the diſcipline of warre. William ſaid againe, he had done nothing, but he would anſwer to it, whoſe purpoſe was to haue the ſpoile deuided to the behooſe of the whole army. When this would not ſerue, he being ſore greued in his mind ſo cowardly to be ſpoyled of that, for which hee ſo aduenturouſly had trauailed for, went to the king to complaine. But whẽ no reaſon nor cõplaint would ſerue, by reaſon of the proud Earle of Artoys the kings brother, which vpon deſpite & diſdaine ſtoode againſt hym, he bidding the king farewell, ſaid he wold ſerue him no lõger. And ſo William de Longſpath, wt the reſt of his company, breaking frõ the Frenche hoſt, went to Achon. The keeper or tribune of Damiata wrongfully put to death by the Sold

Before the ariuing of the French armie in the lande of Egypt, the Soldan of Babylon hauing before intelligence of their comming committed the cuſtodie of Damiata to a certaine prince of his, whom he ſpecially truſted, committing alſo to his brother the keping of Kaira & Babylonia. It folowed now after the taking of Diamata, that the Soldan of Babylon accuſed the Prince which had the cuſtodie thereof, before his nobles, of prodition, as giuing the Citie vnto the Chriſtians. Who notwithſtanding in iudgement did ſufficiently cleare himſelfe, declaring how he was certified that the king would land at Alexandria, and therfore bent all power to preuent the kings ariuall there. But by diſtreſſe of weather, he miſſing of his purpoſe, and the king landing about Damiata, by reaſon therof yͤ city was taken vnprouided, he notwithſtanding wt his company reſiſting as well as they might, till they could no longer, and ſo departed out, curſing, ſaid he, Mahomet & his law. At which wordes the Soldan being offended, commanded him to be had away as a traytor and blaſphemer, and to be hanged, albeit he had ſufficiently purged himſelfe by the iudgement of yͤ court. His brother which was the keper of Kayra and Babylonia, being therewith not a litle agrieued, and bearing a good minde to the Chriſtian religion, deuiſed in himſelfe, how to giue the ſaid city of Kayra with Babylonia to the French king, & ſo in moſt ſecrete wiſe ſent to the king, ſhewing his ful purpoſe and what had happened, and furthermore thermore inſtructing the king in all things how and what he ſhould do, & moreouer requiring the Sacramẽt of baptiſme, meaning in deede good fayth, and ſending alſo away all the Chriſtian captiues, which he had with hym in priſon, The king being glad hereof, ſent in al haſt for william Longſpath, promiſing a full redreſſe of all iniuries paſt, who vpon hope of ſome good lucke towardes, came at the kings requeſt, and ſo ioyned with the French power agayne.

The ſtorie howe the French army was ouerthrowen fighting againſt the Saracens.

The fayre offers of the Soldan to the Frenchmen, if they had had grace to take it.

The pope & his legate cauſe of all this miſchief

TO make the ſtory ſhort, the king ſetting forward from Damiata, directed his iourny toward Kayra, ſlaying by the way ſuch Saracens as there were ſet to ſtop the vitailes from Damiata. The Soldane in the meane tyme hearing of the couragious comming of the French hoſt, as beyng in great hope to conquere all: ſent vnto the king by certayne thet were next about him, offering to the Chriſtians the quyet and full poſſeſſion of the holy land, with al the kingdome of Jeruſalem, and more: beſides other infinite treaſure of gold and ſiluer, or what els might pleaſure them, onely vpon this condition they would reſtore again Damiata, with the captiues there, and ſo would ioyne together in mutuall peace and amitie. Alſo they ſhould haue all their Chriſtian captiues deliuered home, and ſo both coũtries ſhould freely paſſe one to an other wͭ their wares and traficke, ſuch as they liſted to occupy. Furthermore it was alſo firmly affirmed & ſpokẽ, that the Soldan, with moſt of hys nobles were minded no leſſe then to leaue the filthy law of Mahomet, and receaue the fayth of Chriſt ſo that they might quietly enioy their landes and poſſeſſions. The ſame day great quietnes had entred (no doubt) in all Chriſtendome, with the end of much bloudſhed and miſery, had not bene for the pope and hys Legate, who (hauing commaundement from the Pope, that if any ſuch offers ſhould come, he ſhoulde not take them) ſtoutly & frontoſè (as the wordes be of yͤ ſtory) cõtradicẽs, in no wyſe would receaue the conditions offered. Pariſienſ. fol. 233.

The Chriſtians refuſing good offers could not haue them when they would.

A cruell proclamation of the Saracens againſt the Chriſtians.

Thus while the Chriſtians vnprofitably lingered the tyme in debating this matter, the Soldan in the meane tyme got intelligẽce of the compact betwene the Tribune of Kayra, and the French king: whereupon he ſent in all haſt to the Citty of Kayra, to apprehend the Tribune till yͤ truth were fully tryed. which ſeemed to him more aparẽt, for that the Chriſtian priſoners were already deliuered. Hereupon the Soldan being in ſome better hope, and leſſe feare, refuſed that which before he had offered to the Chriſtians, albeit they with great inſtaunce afterward ſued to the Soldan, and could not obteine it. Then the Soldan beyng wholy bent to try the matter by the ſword, ſent to the Eaſt partes for an infinite multitude of ſouldiours, geuing out by Proclamation, that whoſoeuer could bring in any Chriſten mans head, ſhould haue x. talentes, beſides his ſtanding wages. And whoſoeuer brought his right hand, ſhould haue fiue. He that brought his foote, ſhoulde haue 2. talentes for his reward.

Victory of the Chriſtians againſt the Saracens

Good counſell giuen but not followed.

After theſe thinges thus prepared on both ſides to the neceſſitie of warre, the king commeth to the great Riuer Nilus, hauing gotten together many boats, thinking by them to paſſe ouer, as vpõ a ſure bridge. On the other ſide the Soldan pitcheth himſelfe to withſtand his comming ouer. In the meane tyme happened a certayne feaſt amongſt the Saracens, in which the Soldan was abſent, leauing hys tentes by the water ſide. whiche beyng foreſeene by a certayn Saracen lately conuerted to Chriſt, ſeruing with the Earle Robert the kings brother, and ſhewing them withall a certayne ſhalow foorde in the Riuer of Nilus, where they might more eaſily paſſe ouer, the ſayd Earle Robert & the Mayſter of the Temple with a great power, eſteemed to the third part of the armey, iſſued ouer the Riuer, after whome alſo followed william Longſpath with hys band of Engliſh ſouldiours. Theſe beyng together ioyned on the other ſide of the water, encountered the ſame day with yͤ Saracens remayning in the tents and put them to the worſe. After this victorye gotten, the Frẽch Earle ſurpriſed with pride and triumph, as though he had conquered the whole earth, would needes forward deuiding hymſelfe from the mayne hoſt, thinking to winn the ſpurres alone. To whome certayne ſage men of the Temple, geuing contrary counſell aduiſed him not ſo to do, but rather to returne and take their whole company with them, and ſo ſhould they be more ſure agaynſt all deceites and daungers, which there might be layd priuely for thẽ. The maner of yͤ people (they ſayd) they better knewe, and had more experience therof then he: Alledging moreouer their weryed bodyes, their tyred horſes, their famiſhed ſouldiours, & the inſufficiency alſo of their number, which was not able to withſtand the multitude of the enemies, eſpeciall at this preſent brunt, in whiche the aduerſaries did well ſee the whole ſtate of their dominion now to conſiſt eyther in winning all, or loſing all: with other ſuch like wordes of perſwaſion. which when the proud Earle dyd heare, being inflated with no leſſe arrogance then ignorãce with opprobrious tauntes reuiled them, calling them cowardly daſtardes, and betrayers of the whole countrey, obiecting vnto them the common report of many, whiche ſayd, that the land of the holy Croſſe might be wonne to Chriſtendome were it not for the rebellious Templaries, with the Hoſpitalaries and their fellowes &c.

The deſpiteful rebukes of Earle Robert to them that gaue him good counſell.

The anſwere of the Templaries to Earle Robert

To theſe contumelious rebukes when the Maiſter of the Tẽple anſwered againe for him and his felowes, bidding him diſplay his enſigne when he would, & where he durſt, they were as ready to folow him, as he to go before thẽ: then began william de Longſpath the worthy knight to ſpeake, deſiring the Earle to geue eare to thoſe men of experience, who had better knowledge of thoſe coũtryes & people, then he had, commending alſo their councell to be diſcrete & wholeſom: & ſo turning to yͤ maiſter of the temple began wͭ gentle words to mitigate him likewiſe. The knight had not halfe ended his talke, when the Earle taking his words out of his mouth began to fume & ſweare, crying out of theſe cowardly engliſhmẽ with tailes. what a pure army (ſayd he) ſhould we haue here, if theſe tailes, & tayled people were purged from it: wͭ other like wordes of great vilany and much diſdayne. whereunto the engliſh Knight aunſwering agayne: well Earle Robert (ſayd he) where ſoeuer you dare ſet your foot, my ſtep ſhall goe as farre as yours: and as I beleue, we go this day where you ſhall not dare to come neare the taile of my horſe, as in the euent it proued true. The worthy anſwere of an engliſh knight to Earle Rob. the kinges brother.

A number of French ſouldiours ſent to Damiata, drowned & ſlaine by the way.

In this meane time, the French king intending to aduaunce forward his army, thought beſt to ſend away ſuch as were feeble and lacked armor, to Damiata by boates. The Soldan hearing therof, prepared a great number of boates to be caryed by wayne and carte to the water ſide, which meeting them by the way, drowned and deſtroyed by wildefire euery one, ſo that of all that company of our chriſtians, of whom ſome were burned, ſome ſlayne, ſome drowned, not one eſcaped aliue, ſaue one onely Engliſhe man named Alexãder Giffard, who although he was ſore woũded in the chaſe in fiue places in his body, yet eſcaped to the French cãpe, bringing word to the king what was done. And this was vpon the water.

The manly courage of William Longſpath.

Now vpõ the land, ſeing Earle Robert would needs ſet forward, weening to get all the glory to himſelf before the comming of the hoſte: firſt they inuaded a little village or caſtle, which was not farre of, called Manſor. The coũtrey Bores and paganes in the villages by, ſeing the chriſtians come, ranne out with ſuch a mayne cry and ſhout, that it came to the Soldans hearing, which was nearer then our men did thinke. In the meane while the Chriſtians inuading and entring into the munition incircumſpectly, were pelted and paſhed with ſtones by thẽ which ſtood aboue, whereby a great number of our men were loſt, and the armye ſore maimed and almoſt in deſpayre. Then immediately vpon the ſame cõmeth the Soldan wͭ all hys mayne power, who ſeeing the Chriſtens army to be deuided, and the brother ſeperated frõ the brother, had that which he long wiſhed for, and ſo incloſing them roũd about, that none ſhould eſcape, had wͭ them a cruell fight. Then the Earle began to repent him of hys heady raſhenes, but it was to late, who then ſeing william the Engliſh knight dowtely fighting in the chiefe brunt of the enemyes, cryed vnto hym moſt cowardly to flye, ſeeyng God (ſayd he) doth fight agaynſt vs. To whom the knight anſwering agayne, God forbid (ſayth he) that my fathers ſonne ſhould runne away from the face of a Saracen. The Earle then turning his horſe fled away, thinking to auoid by the ſwiftnes of hys horſe, & ſo taking the riuer of Thaſnis, oppreſſed with harnes, was there ſokẽ and drowned. Thus the Earle beyng gone, the French men began to diſpayre and ſcatter. Then william de Longaſpatha, bearing all the force of the enemies, ſtood agaynſt thẽ as long as he could, wounding and ſlaying many a Saracen, til at length hys horſe being killed, and hys legges maymed, he could no longer ſtand: who yet notwithſtanding as he was downe, mangled their feete and legges, and did the Saracens much ſorow, till at laſt after many blowes & woũds, beyng ſtoned of the Saracens, he yelded hys life. noured and deſtroyed them all, in ſo much that ſcarſe one man eſcaped aliue, ſauing two Templaries, one Hoſpitular, and one poore raſcall ſouldiour, whiche brought tydinges hereof to the king.

The ſorowes in the frēch campe for loſſe of their brethren.

These thinges being knowne in the French campe to the king and his ſouldiours, firſt of their drowning which were ſent to Damiata, then of the ruine and ſlaughter of the army, with the kinges brother, by the towne of Manſor, there was no little ſorrow and heauines on euery ſide, with great feare, and doubt in themſelues, what was beſt to doe. At laſt when they ſawe no remedye, but they muſt ſtand manfully to reuenge the bloud of their brethren, thē the kyng with hys hoſt paſt ouer the floud of Nilus, and comming to the place where the battayle had bene, there they beheld theyr fellowes and brethren pitifully lying wͭ theyr heads and hands cut of. For the Saracens for the reward before promiſed by the Soldan or Sultan, to them that could bring the head & hand of any Chriſtian, had ſo mangled the Chriſtians, leauing theyr bodyes to yͤ wilde beaſtes. Thus as they were ſorowing and lamenting the rufull caſe of their Chriſten fellowes, ſodenly appeareth yͤ comming of the Sultan, with a multitude of innumerable thouſandes. Agaynſt whom the French men eftſoones prepare themſelues to encounter, and ſo the battaile being ſtrocken vp, the armyes began to ioyne. But alacke for pitie, what could the Frenchmen here do, their number firſt ſo maymed, their hartes wounded already with feare and ſorow, their bodyes conſumed wͭ penury and famine, their horſes for feeblenes not able to ſerue them? In concluſion, the Frenchmen were ouerthrowne, ſlaine, and diſpatched, & ſeing there was no flying, happy was he that firſt coulde yeld hymſelfe. In which miſerable conflict, the king with his two brethren, and a few that claue vnto him, were taken captiues, to the confuſion of all Chriſten realmes, and preſented to the Soldan. All the reſidue were put to the ſword, or els ſtoode in the mercy of the Saracens whether to be ſlayne, or to remayne in wofull captiuitie.

The battaile betwene the frēch kyng and the Soldan.

The French army ouerthrowē The pitifull ſlaughter of the Frenchmen. The Frēch king with his two brethren taken captiue by the Soldan.

And this was the end of that ſorrowful battaile, wherin almoſt all the nobilitie of Fraunce was ſlayne, neyther was there one man welneare in all the multitude whiche eſcaped free, but eyther was ſlayne, or taken priſoner. Furthermore, they that were ſlayne or left halfe aliue, had euery one hys head and hand cut off, vppon the Soldans proclamation aboue mentioned.

The Sultan or Soldan, after the taking of the French king, fraudulently ſuborning an army of Saracens, to yͤ number of the French army, with the armes and enſignes of them that were ſlayne, made toward Damiata, where the Duke of Burgundy, with the French Queene, & Odo the Popes Legate, and other byſhops and their garriſons were remaining, ſuppoſing vnder the ſhew of Frēch men to be let in, but the captaynes miſtruſting theyr haſty commyng, and miſdoubting their viſages not like to the French men, ſhut the gates agaynſt them, and ſo returned they fruſtrate of their intent.

The purpoſe of the Soldan was, if he might haue gotten Damiata, to ſend the French king hyer vp in the Eaſt countries to Calipha the chiefe Pope of Damaſcus, to encreaſe the tytles of Mahomet, and to be a ſpectacle or gaſing ſtocke to all thoſe quarters of the worlde. The maner of which Calipha was neuer left to any Chriſten priſoner come out, whoſoeuer came once in his handes. But for ſomuch as the Soldan miſſed hys purpoſe, he thought by aduiſe of counſell, to vſe the kinges lyfe for hys owne aduauntage in recouering the city of Damiata, as in the end it came to paſſe. For although the king at the firſt was greatly vnwilling, and had rather die then ſurrender Damiata againe to the Saracens, yet the concluſion ſo fel out that the king was put to hys raunſome, and the Citty of Damiata was alſo reſigned, which citty being twiſe won, and twiſe loſt by the Chriſtians, the Soldan or Saladine afterward cauſed vtterly to be raſed downe to the ground. The raunſome of the king, vppon condition that the Soldan ſhould ſee himſelfe conducted to Achon (which I take to be Ceſaria) came to 60000. markes. The number of Frenchmen, and others which miſcaryed in that warre by water and by land came to 80000. perſons. Hæc Mat. Pariſi. fol. 237. 238.

The number of the French men ſlaine.

And thus haue ye the briefe narration of this lamentable peregrination of Lewes the French kyng. In whiche when the French men beyng once or twiſe well offered by the Soldan, to haue all the kingdome of Ieruſalem, and much more in free poſſeſſion, they not contented with that which was reaſonable and ſufficient, for greedines to haue all, loſt all, hauing at length no more then ther naked bodies could couer, lying dead vpō the ground: & al through the originall cauſe of the Pope and Odo hys Legate. By whoſe ſiniſter meanes and peſtilent pride, not only yͤ liues of ſo many Chriſtians were thē loſt, but alſo to the ſayd Pope is to be imputed all the loſſe of other citties & Chriſtian regions bordering in the ſame quarters: for aſmuche as by the occaſion hereof, the hartes of the Saracens on yͤ one ſide were ſo encouraged, & the courage of the chriſtiās on the other ſide ſo much diſcomfited, that in ſhort ſpace after, both the dominion of Antioch and of Achon, with all other poſſeſſions belonging to the Chriſtians, were loſt, to the great diminiſhing of Chriſtes Church.

The two Soldans at variance about the Frēch kyng.

During the tyme of this good king lying at Achon or Ceſaria, almighty God ſent ſuch diſcorde betwene yͤ Soldan of Halapia, and the Soldā of Babilon, for letting the king ſo eſcape, that the ſayd Soldan or Salidin of Babilon, to winne the king vnto hys ſyde, entred league with him (whome both hys brethren, and all his nobles almoſt at home had forſaken) and remitted hys raunſome, and alſo reſtored vnto hym ſuch priſoners as were, in the ſayde battayle foūd to be aliue. Thus the Lord worketh, where man commonly forſaketh. Math Pariſ. fol. 261.

What miſchiefe hath come to Chriſtēdom & by what meanes.

An other cauſe moreouer, why the ruine of this French army may worthely be imputed to the Pope, is this: for that whē Lewes the French king perceauing what a neceſſary frend and helper Fredericke the Emperour might be to hym in theſe his affayres agaynſt the Saracens, and therfore was an earneſt ſuter for him to the Pope to haue hym releaſed, yet neyther he, nor the king of Englande by any meanes could obtayne it. And although the Emperor himſelfe offred to pope Innocent with all humble ſubmiſſion to make ſatiſfaction in the Councell of Lyons, promiſing alſo to expugne all the dominions of the Saracens and neuer to returne into Europe agayn, and there to recouer whatſoeuer the Chriſtians had loſt, ſo that the pope would onely graūt his ſonne Henry to be Emperoure after him: yet the proud pope woulde not be mollified, but would needes procede agaynſt hym with both ſwordes, that is, firſt with the ſpirituall ſword to accurſe hym, and then with the temporall ſword to depoſe him frō his Emperial throne. Through the occaſion wherof, not onely the French kinges power went to wracke, but alſo ſuch a fire of miſchiefe was kindled agaynſt all Chriſtendome, as yet to this day cannot be quenched. For after this ouerthrowe of the French king and his army, the Chriſtians of Antioch and of other Chriſten regions theraboutes, being vtterly diſcouraged, gaue ouer there holdes and Citties, whereby the Saracens, and after them the Turkes, got ſuch an hand ouer Chriſtēdome, as to this day we al haue great cauſe to rue and lament. Beſides this, where diuers Chriſtians were croſſed to go ouer and helpe the Frenche king, the pope for mony diſpenſed with them to tary ſtill at home.

How Fredericke the Emperor might haue ſerued in good ſtead against the Saracens, but the pope would not ſuffer him.

The tyranny and deuiliſh miſchiefe of the pope againſt the Emperour.

But as I ſayd, the greateſt cauſe was, that the Emperour, whiche coulde haue done moſt, was depoſed by the Popes tyranny, whereby all thoſe Churches in Aſia were left deſolate. As touching the whiche Emperour Fredericke, becauſe we haue diuers and ſundry tymes made mētion of him before, and for that his ſtory is ſtraunge, hys actes wonderous, and his conflictes tragicall, whiche he ſuſtayned agaynſt iiij. or v. Popes one after an other, I thought not out of ſtory in a whole narration to ſet forth the ſame, for the reader to conſider, what is to be iudged of this Cathedrall Sea of Rome, which had wrought ſuch abhominable miſchiefe in the world, as in the ſequele of the ſtory following faythfully tranſlated out of Latine into Engliſh is to be ſeene.

FRedericke the ſecond, came out of the auncient houſe of the Beblines or Gibillines: which Gibillines came of the moſt famous ſtocke of the Frenche king and Emperours.

What fathe and mothe

He had Fredericke Barbaroſſa to hys Graundfather, whoſe ſonne Henricus the 6. was Emperoure after hym: who of Conſtātia, the daughter (or as ſome write yͤ neece) of Roger the firſt, king of Sicile: begate this Fredericke the ſecond.

The time & maner of hi byrth.

This Conſtantia was 50. yeares of age before ſhe was conceaued with him: whom the Emperour Henry 6. to auoyde all doubt and ſurmiſe that of her conception & childing might be thought, and to the peril of the Empeir enſue: cauſed hys regall tent to be pitched abroade in place where euery man might reſort. And when the tyme of his Queenes trauaile approched, Conſtantia (in preſence of diuers Ladyes, and Matrons, and other Gentlewomen of the Empire, a great number was brought a bed and deliuered of this Fredericke: the vii. day before the Calendes of January, in the yeare of Chriſtes incarnation. 1193. who by inheritaunce was king of Naples, Apulia, Calabria, and Sicilia.

Henricus his father ſhortly after he was borne, obtayned of the princes electors, that by their oth to him geuen: they would chuſe his ſonne Fredericke for their Emperor after his diſceaſe, and ſo did, and immediatly called hym Ceſar, being yet but in his cradle.

What patrones hee had.

This Henry when he dyed (which was ſhortly after yͤ birth of Fredericke) committed the protection of him to Conſtantia his wife, to Phillip his brother chiefe gouernour of Hetruria, and to the Byſhop of Rome, then Innocentius the third.

Conſtantia, not long after the death of Henry her husband being ſickely and growing into age, and thereby not ſo well able to gouerne the troubles and vnquiete ſtate of the Empire, reſigned, and willed by her teſtamēt, the ſafety both of her ſonne Fredericke and alſo of his dominions to the protectiō and gouernment of Innocent 3. thinking thereby ſafely to haue prouided. &c.

The conſpiracies of pope Innocent againſt Fredericke during his minoritie. The firſt cōſpiracy.

This pope Innocent. aſſone as he had the protection of the young Emperor & his Segniories: became in ſtead of a patron and protector, to him & to hys dominions both an enemy and cōſpiratour. The examples are many: One is, he perſwaded Sibill the late wife of Tancredus (whō Henry put from the kingdome of Sicile) to recouer yͤ ſame agayne, and that ſhe ſhould thereunto require Phillip the French kinges ayde: whereupō one Waltherus being of noble houſe of the Earles of Brenno, which in yͤ prouince of Barrenceeis had great liuing, and marying with Ateria the eldeſt daughter of Tācredus once king of Sicile (as is said) now by the inſtigation, counſell, & ayd of the french king with the pope (well hoping to recouer the kingdom) entred and inuaded with great power Campania, & Apulia. At which tyme alſo, the ſame worthy protectour Innocentius the third, ſent his legates with letters of excōmunication agaynſt all thoſe that woulde not admit and take the ſayd Waltherus for their king.

The 2. conſpiracy.

An other was, that where the princes Electors and other nobles as before is ſayd had promiſed by their othe to Henricus, that they woulde make Fredericke hys ſonne Emperor after his diſceaſe (whō the Pope ſaw to put their indeuour therunto to bring it to paſſe) abſolued thē all frō the othe which they had taken and geuen for the election of Fredericke the Emperour, as one not content he ſhoulde obtain the ſame. And further, he rayſed ſlaunders and defamations agaynſt Phillip, whom the electors had choſen to gouerne the Empire during the minoritie of Frederick hys nephew.

The 3. conſpiracy.

He wrote hys Epiſtle (which is yet extant) to the Duke Barthold of Zaringia to be Emperor: who, for that he gaue place to Phillip, he went about to procure, yͤ Otho the ſonne of Hēry Leo ſhould be made Emperor, & yͤ the Princes & Lords electors of Germany, wold crown him forthw̄ after the maner of Aquiſgrane.

The 4. conſpiracy.

He depriued al ſuch Biſhops as he knew to fauour Phillip as Emperor, in the defence of hys nephewes right. But Phillip, whoſe cauſe was better, his ſkill in martial affayres greater, & in power & ſtrength mightier: after diuers and great cōflicts the marueilous diſturbaunce and vaſtation of the whole Empire, by Gods helpe put the other to the worſe. All which calamities and miſchiefes Conradus Lichtenanus at that tyme liuing, in his Annales moſt pitifully complayneth of: and accuſeth the Biſhop of Rome and his adherentes to be the chiefe authors and deuiſors of this great and lamentable miſchiefe: as ſuche that for to make themſelues rich by the ſpoyle thereof, ſought by all meanes and deſired the ſame.

The 5. conſpiracy.

Philip ſlain.

Not long after a peace was concluded betwene Phillip & Otho, and Phillip reconciled again to the pope: who within a while after betwene Otho and him was murdered in his chamber and ſlayne. And then was Otho agayn brought to the Imperiall ſeate, and newe elected for Emperour, with the counſell and conſent of this Innocent the thyrd: and ſo continued till that a great variaunce and diſcorde chaunced to ryſe betweene the ſayd Otho & the pope.

Variance betwene Otho & the pope.

Wherupon Innocentius ſoughe by all meanes, howe agaynſt him likewiſe hee might worke miſchiefe and bring him to hys end. The occaſion of this ſodayne chaunge and alteratiō my author maketh no mentiō of, but that Otho (now being of great power) inuaded and deſtroyed theſe dominions of Frederick: as Flamminia, Picenum, Umbria, Hetruria, but chiefly Campania, and Apulia, for that thoſe properly appertayned to the inheritaunce of Fredericke.

Thus you ſee, how firſt by the counſell and conſent of Pope Innocentius and by his inſtigation, beſides his ſecret conſpiracies: this good Fredericke and hys dominions were hurt and indamaged. Then agayne, through his default what damage he ſuſtayned by Otho, who by him and hys meanes was made ſo ſtrong as he was: notwithſtanding the great truſt he was put in for the protection both of Fredericke and his dominions.

What learning and knowledge he was of.

At this tyme. Fredericke was come to the age of xx. yeares: who in hys youth by the prouiſion of Conſtantia his mother, was ſo well inſtructed in letters, and in other artes and vertues ſo imbued: that at theſe yeares there appeared and did ſhyne in hym, excellent giftes both of wiſedome and knowledge.

What vertues he was indued with.

He was excellently well ſeene in the Latine & Greeke tongues, although at that time learning began to decay, & barbarouſnes to encreaſe. He had alſo the Germayn tong the Italian tongue, and the Saracen tongue. He day exerciſed and put in practiſe thoſe vertues which nature had planted in him, as pietie, wiſedome, iuſtice, and fortitude: in ſo much, that well he might be compared and accompted amongeſt the worthieſt and moſt renowmed Emperours hys predeceſſours.

Fred. ſuſpected for his graundfathers ſake.

Fazellus (the hiſtorician of Sicilia in this tyme) writeth, that Fredericus was agayne after this had in great honor and eſtimation with Innocētius: but yet notwithſtanding, he had no ſure confidence in him, for that he had the ſuſpected name of Fredericke hys graundfather often in remembrance, and for that occaſion was much deſirous to haue him farre from Italy.

The coronation of Fredericke.

When Fredericke had gathered his power, he purpoſet to ſet vpon Otho his enemy: of which thing Otho hearing (as he was painfull in trauell) came out of Italy with his army into Germany, thinking to haue met Frederick at the riuer of Rhene, and to haue ſtopped his paſſage: but he was deceiued of his expectation, and Fredericus was crowned as the maner of Aquiſgrane is, before he came.

The death of Otho.

And after that Fredericke in the winter tyme tooke hys iorny to Francofert, and after many meetinges in Norico had, and that Otho was dead, he ſet the Empire in a ſtay and the whole coūtry of Germany he in a maner appeaſed And then with all hys nobles and princes he returned to Rome, and of Honorius the third was with great ſolemnitie conſecrated and called Auguſtus. Whiche Honorius ſucceded Innocentius 3. in the Papall Sea: and was a great helpe to Fredericke (although he loued hym not) in this behalfe, to reuenge hym ſelfe vpon Otho.

The conſecratiō of Fred. the Emperour.

The liberal munificence of Fre. to the pope and church of Rome

After the conſecration of Fredericke the ſecond, he gaue many great and liberall giftes, as well to the Byſhop of Rome hymſelfe, as alſo to the court of Rome beſides. Alſo he gaue & aſſured, by his Charter to the Church of Rome, the Dukedome of Fundanum. For by the vnſatiable couetouſnes of the Romiſh Biſhops, this wicked vſe and cuſtome grew: that vnleſſe the Emperours elect & crowned would geue vnto thē ſuch like great and large giftes: they could not obtayne of them their conſecration or confirmation which for that intent they deuiſed.

Fred. gaue thorough his liberalitie a ſword to cut his owne throte.

Furthermore, Fredericke the Emperour, willing to ſhew himſelfe more bountifull and liberall to the Church: neyther yet to reſtraine any priuiledge that might benefite the ſame, gaue & admitted thoſe cōſtitutiōs which the pope hymſelfe woulde deſire, and are yet extant in theyr ciuill Law: By which hys doyngs he deliuered to their hands a ſworde as it were, to cut his owne throte. For yͤ biſhops of Rome, now hauing euen what they liſted, & all in theyr owne handes: might by the payne of proſcription, bryng what Emperour or king vnder coram nobis that them liſted, and keepe them by their owne lawes, as if it were bound in a certain bands, out of the which they might not ſtart. For whatſoeuer he were, whiche for the diminution of the liberties of the Church were excommunicate, and ſo continued a yeares ſpace: then he ſhould be within the dāger of this proſcript, and ſhoulde not be releaſed before he had made ſatiſfaction, and were admitted by the Pope to the Church and congregation of good men agayn.

The canon of proſcription graunted & confirmed by Fred.

Wherby it came to paſſe, that whatſoeuer Emperour in the gouernement of hys dominions, ſhoulde in any poynt diſpleaſed or doe contrary to the luſt of the Biſhop of Rome: he then as enemy to the church, was excommunicate. And vnleſſe within a yere he were reconciled to them again (by this their principal law) he was in the proſcript. And often it chaunced, that Princes to auoyde the payne of this proſcript, were ready to do what ſoeuer the pope would haue them, and commaund them to doe.

Fred. after his conſecration directeth his prouinces and dominions.

After the conſecration of Fredericke was with great ſolemnitie finiſhed, and that the pope & Churche of Rome in all ample maner (as is partly deſcribed) were gratified, and yet larger conſtitutions to them confirmed: he departed ted from Rome and went into Italy, there to ſet in order and ſtay the Citties and great townes, for the better tranquillitie of himſelfe and ſafety of his ſubiectes, and from thence into hys owne prouinces and dominions: where he heard of certayne, that began to rayſe and make newe factions agaynſt him. Amongſt whom, were found Thomas and Richard, the brethren of Innocentius the thyrd, Earle of Anaquinos, that held certayn caſtles in the kingdome of Neopolitanes from him by force: whiche caſtles, he beſieged and beate downe, and tooke from them al that he in them found. Richard he tooke, and ſent as a priſoner into Sicilia: but Thomas eſcaped and came ſpeedely to Rome, whither alſo repayred certayn biſhops and others that were conſpiratours againſt Frederick, as alſo ſuch other as the feare of the Emperours lawes, and their own gilty conſciences cauſed to flye: and were (that notwithſtãding) of this Biſhop of Rome Honorius the 3. (to gratifie agayne the liberalitie of the Emperour beſtowed vpon him) vnder hys noſe ſuccored, mayntayned and defended. Which thing when Fredericke vnderſtode, he began to expoſtulate with the Byſhoppe, conſidering the vnſeemlineſſe of that his fact. Agaynſt whom, the Pope on the other ſide was ſo chafed & vexed, that he immediatly without farther delay thundereth out agaynſt him like a tyrant his curſes and excommunications.

The liberalitie of Fred. well recompenſed of Honorius. 3.

Fred. expoſtulateth, the Pope curſeth.

Thomas Fazellus declareth, the deteſtation or defiance to happen betweene thẽ ſomewhat otherwiſe. There were ſayth he, amongſt thoſe which were found traytours to the Emperour certayne Byſhops, whiche fleyng to the pope, requeſted his ayd: wherupon, the pope ſent his Legates to the Emperour, and requeſted him that he would admit and receaue to fauour thoſe Byſhops, which he had baniſhed and put frõ their offices, and that he woulde not intermedle with any Eccleſiaſticall charge wherewith he had not to doe: And ſayd further, that the correction and puniſhment of ſuch matters pertayned to the Byſhop of Rome, and not to him: and moreouer, that the ouerſight of thoſe Churches in that kingdome, from the whiche he had expelled the Byſhoppes, pertayned and belonged to hym.

Wherunto Frederick thus replyeth: That for as much as now 400. yeares and more (from the tyme of Carolus Magnus) all Emperours and kinges in their dominions might lawfully commit to apt and fit mẽ for the ſame, ſuch Eccleſiaſticall functions and charges as within their territoryes and kingdomes fell: That he looked to haue the like priuiliege & authoritie alſo, that other his predeceſſors before hym had. And farther ſayd, that he had the ſame and like authoritie in yͤ Empire that his father Henry, & Fredericke his graundfather, and other his predeceſſours bebefore them had: neyther had he ſo deſerued at the handes of the Church of Rome: eyther of Honorius himſelfe, to be depriued of thoſe priueledges whiche his aunceſters before him had had, and kept. And further, Friderick being chafed and moued with theſe demaundes of the Pope, breaketh forth and ſayth: how long will the Biſhop of Rome abuſe my patience? when will his couetous hart be ſatiſfied? whereunto wil this ambitious deſire grow? with ſuch like wordes more, repeating certayn iniuries and conſpiracies, both agaynſt him and his dominions, as well by Honorius as Innocentius 3. his predeceſſour, as alſo other like iniuries of Pope to hys auncetours practiſed. What man ſayth he, is able to ſuffer and beare this ſo incredible boldnes and intollerable inſolency of ſo proud a Byſhop. Goe ſayth he (vnto the Legates) and tell Honorius, that I will hazarde both the ſeignory of my Empire, and crowne of my kingdome, rather then I will ſuffer him thus to diminiſh the authoritie of our maieſty. Thomas Fazellus Lib. 8.

The Emperour replyeth to the popes demaund.

The Emperour ſpeaketh but reaſon howſoeuer it pleaſeth the pope to take it.

The ſtrife betwene the pope and the Emperour for the election and depriuation of Byſhops.

Nowe, becauſe much diſquietnes and controuerſie hath ariſen (for the moſt part through all Chriſtendome in euery kingdome and realme ſeuerally) for and about the authoritie of chuſing and depriuing of Byſhops (as may be ſeene by the example of this Fridericke) which the pope onely and arrogantly challengeth to himſelfe, and not to appertayne to an other: I thought good not with ſilence to ouerpaſſe but ſomewhat to ſay: and to proue the authoritie of Chriſten kings & princes in this behalfe, to be both ſufficient & good: which thing, not onely by the holy ſcriptures is right eaſie to be done, but alſo by Synodall decrees & councels (diuers and ſondry) to be eſtabliſhed and confirmed may eaſly be proued: as alſo by the auncient cuſtome and maner of the primitiue Church, may further be corroborated and made good.

Autorities, for the election of Byſhops to be in the Princes and their ſubiectes.

Whereunto appertayne certayne places collected and gathered out of the decrees by Gratianus, & ſpecially in theſe canons, 12, 13, 14, 26, 27, 32, and 63. diſtinction. Farthermore, when Chriſten kings and princes began to embrace Chriſt his religion, both for honor and orders ſake it was graunted: that when yͤ people deſired ſuch miniſters as were cõuenient & by them thought meet: yͭ they whiche were then in the eccleſiaſticall function and chiefeſt in authoritie, ſhuld either confirme ſuch as were preſẽted, or els themſelues to place fit men in their churches as neede required. So did the Emperours of Conſtantinople (receiuing the order and maner from Conſtantine the great) vſe and geue the right of Eccleſiaſticall function, with the conſent both of the people, and eccleſiaſtical perſons, & long ſo retayned they the ſame. As Honorious the Emperor vnto Boniface. canon. 8. diſt. 79. & canon. 2. diſt. 97. Alſo of Pelagius and Gregorius Magnus: of the whiche one in the raigne of Iuſtinian the Emperour and Totila gouerning Italy) the other in the tyme of Mauritius the Emperour (when the Lombardes poſſeſſed Italy) were appoynted Byſhops to the Church of Rome. can. 15, 21, 24.

Autorities of election of the Biſh. of Rome to be in the Emperour.

And where, as Gratianus in the beginning of the 96. and 97. diſtinction doth declare, that the reſcript of Honorius the Emperour is voyde and of none effect, for that he determined the election of the biſhop of Rome, cõtrary to the authoritie of the holy canons: when as yet, neither to yͤ ciuill magiſtrate, nor to any of the eccleſiaſticall order cã be read of any licence geuen them for to diſpence withal: each man may playnly ſee and diſcerne his great foly and want of vnderſtanding. As though at yͭ tyme any decrees were made, which ſhoulde debarre Emperours for the conſtituting of yͤ eccleſiaſticall miniſters. Or that it were doubtfull, whether the Emperours at that time had paſt any cõſtitutions touching the cauſes of Eccleſiaſticall diſcipline, and the ſame lawes then put in vre: when yͤ contrary moſt manifeſtly (both by the lawes & hiſtories of that age and time as well of the church as of the Empire) may appeare. And that we need not ſeek farre for the matter: this thing is ſufficiently proued by theſe titles: De ſacroſanctis Eccleſijs Epiſcopis, Clericis, beſides other eccleſiaſticall chapters, & matters touching religion. All which are to be ſeene in the bookes of the principall and chiefeſt conſtitutions, collected and ſet forth by Iuſtinian. Amongſt the whiche, many of the chapiters are ſaid to be accepted and allowed of Honorius & Theodoſius. So in like caſe, the 21. can. in the 63. diſtinction doth declare, that yͤ Grecian Emperours that next inſued after Iuſtinian, did obſerue that maner of ordeining and election of the Biſhop of Rome: although thẽ at that tyme interpellatum erat it was ſomewhat ſporned at. Amongſt whom mention is made of Conſtantinus the fourth which was ſurnamed Pogonatus.

Gratianus in his diſtinction, reproued for the election of biſhops to be in the Pope.

The titles of Iuſtinian for the election.

The Grecian Emperours, electours of Byſhops.

Carolus Magnus in like maner followed theyr ſteps and maner in the ſame, as in the 22. canon, and the ſame diſtinctiõ is declared. And farther it was at a Synodal coũcell in Laterane (Adrian beyng hygh Biſhop where were conuented and aſſembled 153. other Biſhops) decreed: that the power and authoritie of creating the biſhop of Rome, and ordayning of all other prelates & eccleſiaſticall orders, ſhould be in the power and will of Carolus Magnus, as well in Italy as other his dominions and prouinces: and yͭ whoſoeuer was not promoted & allowed by him, ſhould not be conſecrated of any: And that thoſe, which repugned and diſobeyed this decree, ſhould incurre the moſt ſharpe paine of proſcription and publication of law. The worthy example hereof is extãt in the 18. can. and 18. title. Yet notwithſtanding, Stephanus the 4. author of this reſcript agaynſt the ſayd decree and wᵗout the Emperours conſent was made Biſhop of Rome. Who to yͤ intent he might delude yͤ decreed & ſolemniſed penalty, therby to excuſe himſelfe: went into Fraunce to Ludouicus Pius the ſonne of Carolus Magnus, & at Rheimis crowned he him wᵗ the Imperiall diademe. Neither could this Byſhop here ſtay himſelfe, but ſpying the great lenitie of the Emperour, aſſayed to make fruſtrate the foreſayd conſtitution. For hys purpoſe was, & ſo brought it to paſſe, as in the 27. canon and the ſame diſtinction appeareth) that it might be lawful for the Eccleſiaſticall order, with the people and ſenate of Rome (without the authoritie of the Emperour) to chuſe the Byſhop of Rome: reſeruing, that he ſhoulde not be conſecrated without the will and conſent of the Emperour. Thus is it manifeſt, that the Byſhops of Rome themſelues, not regarding but deſpiſing the ſtraite penalty and ſanction of the foreſayd decree of the Laterane Councell: were not onely the firſt that brake the ſame, but alſo by contrary reſcriptes and conſtitutions laboured & endeuoured to extoll & ſet vp themſelues aboue al other.

The election decreed by 153. byſhops in the councell of Laterane to be in the Emperour.

Stephanus the 4. firſt alterer of this election.

The Biſh. of Rome the firſt breaker of the decrees of the councell.

Wherupon, Lotharius afterward being Emperor and nephew to Carolus Magnus, comming into Italy there to diſſolue the cõſpiracy and confederacy of Leo the fourth about the tranſlation of the Empire: renewed & ſtabliſhed Lotharius renueth the Lateran decree for election of Byſhops.

agayne the Synodal decree of Laterane, touching the iuriſdiction of the Emperour for the election of the Byſhop of Rome and other eccleſiaſticall perſons. And hereof it came, that thoſe Epiſtles were written of Leo in the 16. & 17. canon, and the ſame diſtinction, which alſo as in the 9. canon and x. diſtinction, made a profeſſion, that the ſame Imperiall preceptes ſhould be kept in all ages. This Leo when he was reproued of treaſon and other euils, pleaded his cauſe before Ludouicus the 2. Emperoure of Rome, and ſonne of Lotharius aboue recited 2. q. 7. canon. 40.

tho depo- h Iohn e 14. and tifieth a w decree f election. eo the 5. as inſtitu- d by Otho e Emper. The election nce againe tified to be the Em- perours iu- diction.

But after this as tyme grew on, the biſhops of Rome nothing relinquiſhing their ambitious deſires: Otho the firſt Emperour of that name, depriued and put from the ſea of Rome that moſt filthy and wicked Biſhop Iohn the xiij. both for diuers and ſundry wicked and haynous acts by him committed, as alſo for his great treaſons & conſpiracies agaynſt his royall perſon: and did ſubſtitute in hys place Leo. the 5. who calling a Synode at Laterane in the ſame temple and place where the other before was kept did promulgate a new conſtitution wͭ conſent of the Senate & people of Rome, concerning the Emperours iuriſdiction in the foreſayd election: whiche in the 23. canon is contained and 63. diſtinction. Whereby the old right and power of the Emperour in the election of the Byſhop of Rome and other eccleſiaſticall prelates, was agayne with more ſharper and ſtraighter ſanctiõ confirmed & ratified. Agayn Iohn the 18, whõ Creſſentius the Romayn (vſurping ẏ Imperiall crowne) had made biſhop by the conſet of the people of Rome & the Eccleſiaſticall order: hauing his noſe cut off, & hys eyes put out, & ſo thruſt out of the capitoll: was agayn of Otho 3. eſtabliſhed and made Byſhop. But when as yet notwithſtanding, the Byſhops of Rome would not alter their olde accuſtomed diſpoſition, but wͭ all their induſtry indeuoured to abrogate that iuriſdiction of the Emperor ouer the biſhop of Rome (as people loth to be vnder ſubiection) Henry the 3. (then Leo ẏ 9 beyng conſtituted byſhop) did once agayne ratifie ẏ ſame, and cauſed the byſhop which extolled himſelf before al his fellow biſhops) to ſtoup and geue place to Moguntinus.

Henry the and Leo the 9.

Henry the and Nicholas the 2.

So, after the death of Henry the 3. Emperor, Nicholas the 2. althoughin hys decree (whiche in the firſt canon and 32. diſtinction is recited) gaue the primacie for the electiõ of the biſhop of Rome by the means of the prieſts and people of Rome, vnto the Cardinals: yet he woulde after that, that the prerogatiue therein ſhoulde be reſerued to Henry 4. the young Emperor, from whome the Empire afterward was for a tyme wreſted and taken.

The election hitherto in the Empe- rours and now begin- neth to faile, by Hilde- brand,

But now after this, whẽ Hildebrand which was called Gregory the 7. was Pope: This prerogatiue of the Emperours in their Election, which before in the creatiõ of Alexander the biſh. was neglected and broken: The biſhops of Rome, not onely did ſeeke to diminiſh ẏ authority thereof, but alſo to euacuate, and quite vndoe the ſame. For he, not onely aſpired to that dignitie, without the cõſent and appoyntment of the Emperor: but alſo made reſtraint that no Emperor, king, Duke, marques, Earle, or any ciuile Magiſtrate: ſhould aſſigne and appoynt to any any eccleſiaſticall function and charge, neyther that any of his Prelates ſo hardy, ſhoulde take them at anye of their handes, as q. 16. canon. 7. 9. and 10. may be ſeene.

Henry 4. a- gaine cha- lengeth the election,

Yet notwithſtanding, after that this horrible monſter Hildebrãd was proſcript and thruſt out of the papall ſeat, and Clement 3. put in hys ſtede: Henry agayn challenged hys Imperial prerogatiue of Election. But yet, when the Byſhops which ſucceeded after this Hildebrand & led by hys example, began to derogate from the Imperiall prerogatiue of electiõ: & Hen. on the other ſide by al meanes poſſible, ſought to defend and maintayne the ſame. By the ſubtile fraud & miſchieuous pollicie of the biſhops which ſet the ſonne agaynſt the father, and foũd meanes to ſteale from him the hartes of his nobles and ſubiectes and to ſet them al agaynſt hym, and eſpecially the Princes of Germany: was depoſed and diſappoynted of his purpoſe.

Henry the 5. alſo ſtriueth for the elec- tion & fay- leth,

And although Henry the 5. (cõming to Rome) brought Paſchalis the ſecõd to that poynt, that he both in publique concion, and in writing ſealed, and alſo by othe confirmed, reſtored agayn to the Emperours of Rome ẏ prerogatiue of election, and of geuing of eccleſiaſtical dignities: yet notwithſtanding, after that Henry the Emperour was gone from Rome: Paſchalis the Pope, greatly repenting and ſorrowing that he had done (in allowing and confirming the priuiledges of Emperors through feare) touching the geuing and diſpoſing of eccleſiaſtical functiõs, excommunicated the Emperour: And in a Sinodal councell at Laterane ordayned & decreed, that he ſhould be had & accoũted a wicked enemy, that woulde take any Eccleſiaſticall function or preferment at the handes of a ciuile Magiſtrate, whereupon were made theſe decrees qu. 16. chap. 7. 13. 14. 15. and 16.

Prieſtes ac- curſed that take any be- nefice at the handes of a lay man.

Henry 5. compaſſed by ciuile diſſention for the prerogatiue of election as his father was;

Therfore, when theſe decrees touching the deſignatiõ of biſhops, in ſpight and contempt of the Emperour were practiſed and put in vre: and when that now (eſpecially by the meanes and procurement of the biſhops) inteſtine and ciuile warres begã to ryſe in the Empire: the Emperiall iuriſdiction in this matter was not onely weakened and much debilitate, but alſo in maner vtterly brokẽ and loſt. For when Henry the v. Emperour was ſharpely of Lotharius and his vaſſals the Biſhops, beſet & layd vnto by the prouocation of the pope, and was mightely by the byſhops that tooke his part on ẏ other ſide requeſted & intreated (in hope of publique peace & tranquilitie) that he woulde condeſcend and ſomewhat yeld to the Popes demaundes: He at length (the more was the pity) ẏ he might be reconciled and haue peace with pope Calixtus the 2. In the city of Vangio departed from and with that his prerogatiue or iuriſdictiõ of geuing eccleſiaſtical preferments to the pope and hys prelates, now more then 300. yeares (frõ the time of Carolus Magnus) in the hands of them Emperours of Rome, and vntill this tyme with great fortitude & princely courage, conſerued and kept: which reſignation turned to no ſmall detriment both of the Church of Chriſt, and Chriſtian common wealth.

Henry the 5. re- ſigneth his pre- rogatiue of e- lection.

The electiõ got- ten to the By- ſhops of Rome.

Then firſt and neuer before, obteined the Byſhop of Rome, and quietly enioyed that prerogatiue of election, & beſtowing of benefices: which he ſo long before with ſuche great pollices (now ſecretly now openly, and nowe wyth force) had ſought for. And with what ſufficient and good authoritie Gratianus will proue, that before this tyme the ſame authoritie was geuen to the City of Rome for the election of the pope without the conſent of the Emperor he ſheweth: as in the 29. and 30. Canon, and what good ſtuffe he putteth in the latter, and howe ſubtilly that Papiſticall flatterer or pontifical Paraſite hath forged the ſame: Both Carolus Molineus ſufficiently in diuers places hath noted, and by the obſeruatiõ of tymes may of a meane Hiſtoriographer that hath red the French and Germaine hiſtories, ſoone be eſpied & diſcerned. For firſt, fiue biſhops one after an other ſucceeded this Gregory 4. vpon whome the 29. canon is entituled or fathered: that is, Sergius 2. Iohn 8. Adrian. 2. Iohn. 9. and Adrian the 3. whiche Adrian by force wreſting the authoritie of the electiõ from the people was made pope: When, as the Gregory (ſpecially to be noted) would not take on him the Papacie, before that the Emperour had conſented to his election. After this, Molineus compareth Raphell Volateranus wͭ the 30. canon which agayne is ſuſpected: For why, whẽ Eugenius was biſhop which was the Succeſſor of this Paſchalis, wyth whom Ludouicus Pius is ſayd to haue made a league or paction: The ſame Ludouicus Pius with his ſonne Lotharius together with the helpe of the king of Romaines, at Rome made lawes both to all his ſubiectes in the Empire, as alſo to the Romaines themſelues: ſpeaking nothing of ẏ renuing of the decree made by Lotharius. Then agayn, how could Leo the fourth write to Lotharius and Ludouicus Emperours, that counterfeit or forged decree, beginning with Conſtitutio. &c. when in the ſame mentiõ is made of Henricus Aucupes, & Otho the 1. whiche raigned more then 80. yeares after them, and Leo the 4. biſhop of Rome.

Gracianus foũd a forger of the Canons.

Sergius. 2. Iohn 6. and Adrian 3.

The ſecõd fault founde with Gratianus;

The third fault founde with Gratianus,

Howe ſhameles and impudent Gratianus is in forging the decrees.

Now with what face dare this fõd fellow Gratianus make Otho the firſt to be author of the 31. Canon; when as Otho depriued the ſame Iohn the 12. of the Papacye: And not onely took nothing from the Imperall iuriſdiction concerning the election, nor from the city of Rome, nor any other biſhops ſubiect to the Romain Empire: but added ſomewhat more therunto, as was ſaid before. And yet notwithſtanding, ſo ſhameles & ſenceleſſe was this Gracian, ẏ he durſt obtrude & lay before the reader, ſo manifeſt fraud and euident legerdemaine (fayned and made of hys owne braynes in the compiling of this decree) being ſo neceſſary as he thought for the dominion and primacy of the Romaine Biſhops, in ẏ ſted of good and true lawes: neither fearing that the ſame might be after his dayes reprehended, neither to his great ſhame and diſcredit vnto him attributed. Where alſo by the way is to be noted, that as this graceleſſe Gratianus to pleaſe theſe holy fathers and to erect theyr kingdome, woulde geue ſo impudent an attempt to the blinding and deceiuing of all poſterityes: inſerting for grounded truthes and holy decrees ſuch loude lyes and deteſtable doctrine: what may be thought of the rabble of the reſt of writers in thoſe dayes what attemptes hope of gayne might cauſe them to worke: By whom and ſuch like is to be feared, the falſifying of diuers other good workes now extant, in thoſe perillous tymes writtẽ.

The corrupting of many good workes to be feared.

Thus

The election wreſted frō the Emperour.

What Rome once catcheth, that ſhe keepeth

Thus, when the Biſhops had once wreſted this autoritie out of the Emperours handes: they then ſo fortified & armed thēſelues and their dominion, that although afterwardes Fredericke the firſt, graundfather vnto this good Emperor Fredericke the ſecond, as alſo Ludouicus Boius, and Henricus Lucelburgenſis (as men moſt ſtudious and carefull for the dignities of the Empire: vnfeined louers and maintainers of the vtilitie of the cōmō weale, and moſt deſirous of the preſeruatiō and proſperity of the Church) did all their indeuors with ſingular wiſedome & ſtrength, as much as in them lay, to recouer agayne from the byſhop of Rome this the authoritie of the Imperiall iuriſdiction loſt, moſt cruelly & wickedly abuſing the ſame to the deſtruction both of the Empyre, vndoyng of the cōmon wealth, and vtter ſubuerſion of the Churche of God yet coulde they not be able to bryng the ſame to paſſe in thoſe darck and ſhadowed tymes of peruerſe doctrine and errours of the people, and moſt miſerable ſeruitude of ciuile Magiſtrates.

Not without good cauſe deſired they to noſel the people in ignoraunce.

Euery kyng and prince in their ſeuerall kingdome had alſo till that time the prerogatiue of election.

Hiſpane had the ſame.

Fraunce had the ſame.

The ſame and like priuilege alſo in the election of theyr biſhops & Prelates, and diſpoſing of Eccleſiaſticall offices, as the Emperour of Rome had: euery Prince and king in theyr ſeuerall dominions had the like. For by the decree of the Councell of Toletane, which in the 25. canon and 63. diſtinction is mentioned: the authoritie of creating and chuſing byſhops and Prelates in Hiſpane, was in the power of the king of Hiſpane. The like alſo by the Hiſtories of Clodoueus, Carolus Magnus, Ludouicus nonus, Philippus Auguſtus, Philippus pulcher, Carolus 5. Carolus 6. Carolus. 7. Kinges of Fraunce, is apparaunt and well knowne: that all theſe kinges had the chiefe charge and gouernement of the French Church, and not the byſhops of Rome.

England had the election.

And by our Engliſh hiſtoryes alſo as you heard, it is manifeſt: that the authoritie of chuſing eccleſiaſticall miniſters and byſhops, was alwayes in the kings of Englād, till the raygne of king Henry the 1. who by the labour and procurement of Anſelmus Archb. of Cant. was depriued and put from the ſame.

Germanie had the election.

Alſo the Princes of Germany and electors of the Emperor, till the tyme of Henry the 5. had all euery Prince ſeuerally in his owne dition and Prouince the ſame iuriſdiction and prerogatiue: to geue & diſpoſe eccleſiaſticall functions to their Prelates at theyr pleaſure: and after that it appertayned to the people and prelats together. And how in the raigne of Fridericke, the Prelates gate vnto themſelues alone this Immunitie: Ioannes Auentinus in his 7. booke of the Annales of the Boiores doth deſcribe.

Sicilia had the election.

Alſo it is probable, that the kinges of Sicilia had the ſame facultie in geuing and diſpoſing their Eccleſiaſticall promotions and charge of churches. Andreas de Iſtmia ad 1. conſtit. Neap. nu. 12. And that becauſe Fridericke defended hym againſt the tyranny of the biſhop of Rome, therfore as Fazelius ſayth, he was excommunicated of Honorius. But that Platina and Blondus allege other cauſes wherfore he was excommunicate of Honorius, I am not ignorant: Howbeit, he that will compare theyr writings with others that write more indifferently betweene Honorius and hym: ſhall eaſily finde, that they more ſought the fauor of the Romayn biſhops, then to write a veritie. But now agayne to the hiſtory of Fridericke.

The death of Conſtantia the wife of Fredericke.

Nicholaus Ciſnerus affirmeth, that whileſt Friderike the Emperour was in Sicilia, hys wife Conſtantia dyed at Catrana or Catana. In the meane time, the Chriſtians which was a great nauy ſayled into Egipt and tooke the citie Heliopolis, commonly called Damatia, and long ago named Pelucinum, beyng in good hope to haue dryuen Sultanus yͤ Sowdā out of Egipt: had a great & marueilous ouerthrow, by yͤ conueying of the water of the floude Nilus (which then ouerflowed into their Campe) & were fayne to accord an vnprofitable truce with the Sowldane for certayne yeares, and to deliuer the citty agayne: and ſo departing out of Egipt, were faine to come to Acone and Tyrus, to the no ſmall detriment and loſſe of the Chriſtian army. wherupon, king Iohn ſurnamed Brennus (being king of Ieruſalem) arriued in Italy, and prayde ayd of the Emperor agaynſt his enemies, in whō he had great hope to finde remedy of the euils and calamities before declared and from thence he went to Rome to the Pope, declaring vnto him the great diſcomfite and ouerthrow paſt, as alſo the preſent peril and callamitie that they were in, deſiring alſo hys ayd therin. By whoſe meanes (as Ciſnerus ſayth) the Emperour was reconciled agayne to the Pope, and made friendes together: to whome alſo king Iohn gaue Ioell his daughter in maryage, which came of the daughter of Conradus King of Ieruſalem, and Marques of Mounte Ferrat: with whome he had for dowry, the inheritaunce of the kingdome of Ieruſalem, as right heyre thereunto by her mother. By whome alſo, he after obteyned the kingdome of Naples and Sicill, and promiſed that with as much expedient ſpeede as he might he would prepare a power for the recouery agayne of Ieruſalem, and be there himſelfe in proper perſon: whiche thinge to doe, for that vppon diuers occaſions he deferred (whereof ſome thinke one ſome an other: Honorius) vnto whome he was lately reconciled, purpoſed to haue made agaynſt hym ſome great and ſecrete attempt, had hee not bene by death before preuented, vppon whome were made theſe Verſes.

A great ouerthrow of the Chriſtians in Egypt.

Fredericke and the pope made friendes.

Honorius the pope dyeth before he put his practiſe in vre agaynſt Frederick.

O pater Honori, multorum nate dolori.
Eſt tibi decori viuere, vade mori.

Gregorius as great an enemy to Fred. as Honorius.

After whom ſucceeded Gregorius the 9. as great an enemy to Frederike as was Honorius: whiche Gregory, came of the race whom the Emperor (as before ye heard) condemned of Treaſon which they wrought againſt him. This Gregory was ſcarcely ſetled in hys Papacy, when that he threatned hym that greatly with excommunication, vnleſſe he woulde prepare hymſelfe into Aſia, according to hys promiſe as ye heard before to king Iohn. And what the cauſe was, why the Pope ſo haſtened the iourney of Frederike into Aſia, you ſhall heare hereafter: In effect, he could not wel bring that to paſſe, which in his miſchieuous minde he had deuiſed, vnleſſe the Emperour were farther from him. Notwithſtanding, Fredericke it ſhoulde ſeeme ſmelling a ratte, or miſtruſting ſomewhat (as well he might) alledged diuers cauſes and lets, as lately and truely he dyd to Honorius.

Frede. refuſeth to goe into Aſia at the popes bidding, the pope is angry.

Fazellus a Sicilian writer ſayth, that the ſpecial cauſe of the Emperors ſtay was: for the oathe of truce and peace during certayne yeares, whiche was made betweene the Saracens and Chriſtians as you heard, which tyme was not yet expired.

The cauſe of the ſtay of the Emperours iourney into Aſia.

The ſame alſo Fazellus, writeth thus of king Iohn of Ieruſalē, that when hys daughter was brought to Rome the Emperour and the pope was reconciled together. And being called vp to Rome to celebrate yͤ mariage. P. Gregory (as the maner of thoſe proud prelates is) offered hys right foote vnto the Emperour to kiſſe. But the Emperour not ſtouping ſo low, ſcarcely with hys lippe, touched the vpper part of hys knee and woulde not kiſſe his foote: which thing the pope toke in very euil part and was therwith merueilouſly offended. But for that no oportunitie at that time ſerued to reuenge hys conceiued grudge and old malice, he diſſimuled the ſame as he might for that tyme, thinking to recompence it at the full as tyme would ſerue, and fall out therefore.

The Pope diſſembleth his grudge.

After this, it fortuned that the Emperor hearing how the Chriſtians were oppreſſed by the Souldane in Syria, and that from Arſacida there came a great power agaynſt the chriſten princes: he made the more haſt, and was with more deſire encouraged to ſet forward hys iourny into Aſia. Wherefore, aſſembling the Nobilitie of the Empire at Rauenna and Cremona: he gaue in commaundement to Henry hys ſonne (whō not long before he cauſed to be created Ceſar) that he ſhould perſwade the nobles & Princes of the Empire: that they all, would be ready to put to their helping hands, in furthering this hys iourney and enterpriſe. This writeth Fazellus: howbeit, ſome other affirme that theſe thinges were done in the tyme of Honorius. But how ſoeuer the matter is, this thing is manifeſt: that Fredericke to ſatiſfie the popes deſire, which neuer would lin but by al meanes ſought to prouoke him forward, gaue hym at length hys promiſe: that by certayn time he would prepare an army and fight himſelfe agaynſt thoſe, whiche kept from hym the citty of Ieruſalem (which thing he alſo confeſſeth himſelfe in his epiſtles, and alſo how he deſired, and obtayned of the pieres and Nobility of the Empire, theyr ayd thereunto) as alſo, to haue a appoynted a conuenient tyme when they ſhould be at Brundulium.

The preparation of the viage of Fredericke to Ieruſalem, and ſtaye thereof.

In the meane ſeaſon, he with all hys power and indeuour made haſty and ſpeedy preparation for the warres: he rigged & manned a puiſſant nauy, he had the pyckedſt men and beſt ſouldiours that were in euery country, and made warlike prouiſion & furniture, for euery thing that to ſuch a voiage and expedition appertayned. Neyther was the matter ſlacked, but at that tyme appoynted, great bandes aſſembled & muſtred both of Germaine ſouldiours and others, and vnder theyr Captaines appoynted ſet forth and marched to Brundulium. Theyr generals were, Thuringus and Sigebertus, and Auguſtinus the Byſhop: where they, long tyme lying and attending the Emperours cōming (being let by infirmitie and ſickenes) great peſtilence and ſondry diſeaſes moleſted them, by reaſon of the great heate and intemperaunce of that country: and many a ſouldiour there loſt his life, among whome alſo dyed Thuringus one of their Generals. The Emperour, when he had ſomewhat recouered his health, with al his nauy launched out and ſet forwarde to Brunduſium. And when he came to the ſtraites of Poliponences and Creta (being Iſlands lying in the ſea) and there, for lacke of conuenient wynde was ſtayed: ſodenly the Emperour (hys diſeaſes growing vppon him agayne) fell ſicke: and ſending before all or the moſt part of his bandes and ſhippes into Paleſtina, promiſing them (moſt aſſuredly) to come after and follow them ſo ſoone as he might recouer and get neuer ſo litle health: he himſelfe with a few ſhips, returned and came to Brunduſium, and from thence for want of health, went into Apulia.

The Pope excommunicateth the Emperour for ſtaying his viage.

He layeth falſe accuſations to his charge.

The Emperour purgeth himſelfe of thoſe crimes the pope layde againſt him by his letters dedicated to all Chriſten princes.

When tidings hereof came to the Popes eare: He ſent out his thundring curſes and newe excommunications agaynſt the Emperour. The cauſes wherefore, I find noted and mentioned by his owne letters, that is. How that whē he had robbed and taken from Brūduſius, Prince of Thuring, his horſes, hys mony, and other rich furniture of his houſe at the tyme of hys death, hee ſayled into Italy: not for yͤ entent to make warre agaynſt the Turke, but to conuey this pray that he had ſtolne and taken away frō Brunduſius, who neglecting his othe and promiſe which he had made, and feining himſelfe to be ſicke, came home agayn. And that by his default alſo, Damieta was loſt, & the hoſte of the Chriſtians ſore afflicted. Fazelius beſides theſe cauſes ſpoken of before doth write that the pope alledged theſe alſo. That he defiled a certayne Damoſell, which was in yͤ Queenes nurſery: and that he ſlew hys wife when he had whipped her in the priſon, for declaring the miſchieuous acte to her father king Iohn. But all the writers, and alſo Blondus hymſelfe doth declare, that this Ioell died after the Publication of the proſcript and excommunication; wherefore, yͤ Pope could not without great ſhame allege yͤ cauſe vpon the death of Ioell: For vndoubtedly the truthe is, that ſhe of her ſonne Conradus dyed in childebed. The Fredericke, to refell and auoyd the foreſayd ſlaunders, ſendeth the byſhop of Brundis, and other Legates to Rome: whom the Pope would not ſuffer to come to his preſence, neither yet to the Councels of the Cardinals to make hys purgation. Wherfore the Emperour to purge himſelfe of the crymes, which the pope did ſo falſely accuſe him of: both to all Chriſten kinges and ſpecially to the Princes of Germany, & all the nobles of yͤ Empire, he writeth hys letters (which are to be ſeene) that thoſe thinges are both falſe and alſo fayned, & of the popes own head inuented. And ſheweth, how that his Embaſſadours with his purgatiō, could not be ſuffered to come to the popes preſēce: alſo doth largly intreat how vnthankfull & vngratefull the Byſhops of Rome were towardes him for the great benefites whiche both he, and alſo his predeceſſors had beſtowed vpon them and the Romaine Church: which letter, for that it is ouer tedious here to place, conſidering the diſcourſe of the hiſtory is ſomewhat long, yͤ ſumme of the purgation is this.

The effect of the Emperours letters

The Emperours purgation.

The Emperours epiſtle beginning thus. In admirationem & iuſticiā, and agayne, Leuate oculos.

He proteſteth and declareth vniuerſally, that he had alwayes great care for the chriſten common wealth, and that he had determined euen from hys youth, to fight againſt yͤ Turke and Saracens. And for that occaſiō he made a promiſe to the Princes electours of Aquiſgraue, howe that he would take that warre vpon him: Afterward he renewed his promiſe to Rome, when he was cōſecrated of Honorius: Then, when he maryed the daughter of the king of Ieruſalem, which was an heyre of the ſame: And for becauſe that kingdome might be defended & kept from the iniuries of the enemies, & that he fauored it euen as he did his own: he prepared an huge nauy, and gathered together a ſtrong army of men: neither did he neglect any thing that belōged to the furniture of the warre. But when the tyme was come, and his band was gathered together: his ſickeneſſe would not ſuffer hym to be there. And afterward when he had recouered the ſame, and came to Brunduſium, and frō thence without any diſturbance went forthwith to the ſea: he fell into yͤ ſame ſickenes agayne, by the which he was let of hys purpoſe: which thing (ſaith he) he is able to proue by ſufficiēt teſtimony. How the Pope alſo doth lay the looſing of Damieta, and other thinges whiche proſpered not well with him, vniuſtly to hys charge: when as he had made great prouiſion for yͤ ſame iourney both of ſoldiors & other neceſſary thinges. But he yͤ will vnderſtande theſe things more playnely among other Epiſtles of Petrus de Vineis, written in the name of Fridericke, let hym read theſe eſpecially, which begin thus: In admirationem, & iuſticiam & innocentiam: & Leuate oculos. And truely euen as Fredericus the Emperour declareth in his letters, concerning thys matter, all the olde writers of Germany doe accord and agree in the ſame.

A letter of the Emperour to the king of England abſtracted by Mat. Pariſ.

Many kingdomes haue experience of the popes practiſes.

The Church of Rome, the mother of miſchief

King Iohns ſubmiſsion to the pope blamed by the Emperour.

Who be the rauening Wolues in ſheepes clothing.

The treaſure of the Church belongeth to the pope.

Math. Pariſienſis alſo briefly collecteth the effect of an other letter which he wrote to the king of England, complayning vnto him of the excommunication of the Pope agaynſt him: Whoſe wordes are theſe. And amongſt other Catholicke Princes (ſayth he) He alſo wrote his letters vnto the king of England, embulled with gold Declaring in the ſame, that the Biſhop of Rome ſo flamed with the fire of auarice and manifeſt concupiſcence: that not being contented with the goodes of the Churche which were innumerable, but alſo that he ſhamed not to bring Princes, Kinges and Emperours to be ſubiectes, and contributors to hym, and ſo to diſherite them and put them from their kingly dignities, And that the king of Englande himſelfe had good experiment thereof, whoſe father (that is to ſay King Iohn) they ſo long held excommunicate till they had brought both him and his dominions vnder ſeruitude and to pay vnto hym tribute. Alſo that many haue experience of the ſame by the Earle of Tholouſe and diuers other Princes, which ſo long held theyr perſons and landes in interdict: till they might bring them into like ſeruitude. I pretermit ſayth he, the Symonies and ſondry ſortes of exactions (the lyke whereof was neuer yet heard) which dayly are vſed amongeſt the eccleſiaſticall perſons, beſides their manifeſt vſury (yet ſo cloked and coloured to the ſimple ſort) that therewithall they infect the whole world. They be the ſugred and embalmed Simoniſtes, the inſatiable horſeleaches or bloudſuckers ſaying, that the Churche of Rome is our mother and nurſe, where as it is in deede the moſt polyng Court in the vniuerſall world, the roote and right mother of all miſchiefe vſing and exerciſing no motherly doings or deeds but bringing forth the right exerciſes of a wicked ſtepdame: makyng ſufficient proofe thereof by her manifeſt fruites to all the worlde apparaunt. Let the Barons of England conſider whether this be true or not, whom Pope Innocent by his bulles with one conſent encouraged to ryſe and rebell agaynſt their ſoueraigne Lord and Prince king Iohn your father, as an obſtinate enemy to the Church of Rome. But after that the king (farre out of ſquare) remembring himſelfe, had crouched vnto him and obliged both himſelfe and kingdome to the Church of Rome, more liker a woman then a man: and that the wiſe Barons whome the Pope had firſt mayntained and ſtirred vp, without all ſhame eyther of the world or feare of God, had done the ſame: ſought howe he might with gaping mouth deuoure and conſume the ſweet fat from thē, whom he had miſerably to death betrayed and diſherited, as the maner of the Romayne Biſhops is. By whoſe greedy auarice it came to paſſe, that England the Prince of prouinces was brought vnder miſerable ſubiection and tribute. Behold the maners and conditions of our Romaine Byſhops: behold the ſnares wherwith theſe prelates do ſeeke to intangle men withall: to wype their noſes of their money: to make their children bondmen: to diſquiet ſuch as ſeeke to liue in peace: being clothed with ſheepes clothing when in deede they be but rauening Wolues, ſending their Legates hither, and thither to excommunicate and to ſuſpend: as hauing power to puniſh whom they liſt: not ſowing the ſeed, that is the word of God to fructifie, but that they may bribe and pole mens purſes, and reape that which they neuer did ſow. Thus commeth it to paſſe, that they ſpoyle the holy Churches and houſes of God, which ſhould be the refuge for the poore, and the manſion houſes of ſainctes, which our deuout and ſimple parentes to that purpoſe builded and ordeined to the refection of poore men and pilgrimes, and to the ſuſtentation of ſuche as were well diſpoſed and religious. But theſe degenerate varlets, whome onely letters hath made both mad and malipert, doe ſtriue and gape to be both kinges and Emperours.

Chriſtes church was builded in humilitie: The popes Church is all ſuperfluitie, Ergo, the popes Church is not Chriſtes Church.

Doubtles the Primatiue Church was builded and layd in pouerty and ſimplicitie of life, and then as a fruitfull mother begate ſhe thoſe her holy children, whom the Catologe of Saintes nowe maketh mention of: and verily no other foundation can be laid of any other Church, then that which is layd by Ieſus Chriſt. But this Church as it ſwimmeth and waloweth in all ſuperfluitie of riches, and doth build and rayſe the frame in all ſuperfluous wealth and glory: So is it to be feared leaſt the walles thereof in time fall to decay, and when the walles be downe, vtter ruine and ſubuerſion follow after. Agaynſt vs, he knoweth that is the ſearcher of all hearts, how furiouſly theſe Catholiques rage and go to work: Saiyng, therefore excommunicating me that I will not take vpon me the iourney I haue promiſed beyond the ſeas: whereas ineuitable and moſt vrgent cauſes and perils, as well to the Churche of God as alſo to the Empire, beſides the annoyaunce of myne infirmitie and ſicknes, do deteine me at home, and ſtay the ſame, but ſpecially, the inſolency of the rebellious Sicilians. For why, neither doo we thinke it ſafety to our Empire, not expedient to the Chriſtian ſtate, that we ſhould now take our iourney into Aſia, leauing behinde vs at home ſuch inteſtine and ciuill warres: no more then for a good ſurgeon, to lay healing plaiſter to a grieuous wounde newe ſtriken with the ſworde, and made. In concluſion, alſo to this he addeth: admoniſhing all the Princes of the world that they would beware and take heede (by their auaricious iniquitie) of lyke perill and daunger to themſelues: Becauſe that as the prouerbe is: It behoueth him to look about, that ſeeth his neighbours houſe on fire. Thus much out of Pariſienſ.pag 69.

An other iourney of the Emperour to Ieruſalem.

But now, that Fredericus the Emperor might in very deed ſtop yͤ ſlaunders of the cruell Pope, which did perſiſt and goe forward ſtill in his excommunication agaynſt him: And that he might declare in the whole world, howe that the laſt yeare he forſlowed not his iourny by his own voluntary will, but by neceſſitie: when he had deuiſed and prepared all thing meet for the warre, and that he had gathered together and leuied a great army of mẽ: He departed from thence to Brunduſium, committing the gouernment of his kingdome to Renaldus the ſonne of Duke Spoletus, and to Anſelmus a Baron of Inſtigenſis and came by ſea to Cyprus with his hoſte.

The Emperour oppreſſed by famine and by prayer myraculouſly relieued.

From Cyprus, the Emperour with his whole nauy ſayled into Ioppa, which City he fortified, for that the paſſages by land were ſtopped and kept of the enemies: And by ſea might he not paſſe nor trauaile, by meanes of yͤ extreme weather and tempeſt: whereby it came to paſſe, that within ſhort ſpace they lacked vitayles and were ſore afflicted with famine. Thẽ fell they to prayer and made their humble ſupplicatiõ to God, with whoſe teares his wrath being appeaſed: the great tempeſt and long cõtinued foule weather ceaſed, whereby (the ſeas now being calme) they had both vitaile great plẽty, and all other neceſſary things for their need, brought vnto them: whereby immediatly it came to paſſe, that both the Emperour & his army as alſo the inhabitauntes of Ioppa were greatly refreſhed and animated: and on the other ſide their enemies being diſappoynted of theyr purpoſe, were greatly diſcouraged. In ſo much, that the king of Egipt who with great power (accõpanied with Scarapho his brother prince of Gaza, and the Prince of Damaſcus their nephew, with many other Dukes and nobles) hauing incamped themſelues within one dayes iourny of Ioppa, thinking to haue beſieged the ſame: were contented vpon the comming of the Emperors Harolds vnto them to intreat of a peace. Wherupon, Embaſſadours were ſent vnto them with the Emperours demaunds right profitable to the Chriſtian common weale. The Saraſens (immediately conſulting vpon the ſame) graunted thereunto: ſo that a peace for x. yeares was concluded, & was confirmed by ſolempne othe on the behalfe of both Princes according to their ſeueral vſages and maner: the forme and condition of which peace, briefly collected are theſe.

A concluſion of a profitable peace during x. yeares betwene the Turkes and the Chriſtians.

Firſt, that Fridericke the Emperour, ſhould be crowned and annoynted king of Ieruſalem, according to the maner of the kinges of Ieruſalem before him.

The articles of the peace agreed vpon.

Secondly, that all the lands & poſſeſſions which were ſituate betwixt Ieruſalem and Ptolomaida, & the greateſt part of Palaſtina, and Cities of Tyrus and Sydon which were in Syria, and al other territories which Baldwinus the 4. at any time had and occupyed there: ſhoulde be deliuered vnto him, onely certayne caſtles reſerued.

Thirdly that he might fortifie and builde what fortreſſes and caſtles he thought good, citties and townes: in all Syria and Paleſtina.

Fourthly, that all the priſoners which were in the Saracens hands, ſhould be raunſomed freely and ſent home: and agayne, that the Saracens might haue leaue without armour to come into the Temple where the Lords ſepulcher is, to pray: and that they ſhould holde and keepe ſtill Chratum, and the kinges mount.

The letters of Fredericke to the princes and pope of his ſucceſſe.

Frideritck now, for that he thought the cõcluſion of this peace to be ſo neceſſary as alſo profitable for al Chriſtians, and had alſo gotten as much thereby, as if the warres had continued he ſhould: he ſent his Legates with letters into the weſt, to all Chriſten kinges, princes, and potentates, as alſo to the biſhop of Rome: declaring vnto them the circumſtance and ſucceſſe of his iourny and warres, as partly ye haue heard: Requiring thẽ, that they alſo woulde praiſe and geue God thankes for his good ſucceſſe and profitable peace concluded: And deſireth the Pope that for as much as he had now accõpliſhed his promiſe, neither that there was any cauſe now wherefore he ſhould be with hym diſpleaſed, that he might be reconciled and obtaine his fauor.

The Emperour crowned king of Ieruſalem.

In the meane ſeaſon, the Emperour with all hys army marcheth to Ieruſalem: where, vppon Eaſter day in the yeare of our Lorde. 1229. hee was with great triumphe & comfort of al his nobles, and alſo the Magiſtrates of that kingdome (onely the Patriarche of Cyprus the kings Legate, and Oliuer the maiſter or captayne of the Temple wͭ his company, excepted) ſolemnly and with great applauſe crowned king.

After this, he reedifieth the Citty and walles thereof which by the Saracens were beaten downe and battered. After that, he furniſheth it with munition, he buildeth vp the Churches and temples that were ruinous, he fortifieth Nazarethum and Ioppen with ſtrong garriſons, vitaile, and all other thinges neceſſary.

Now ſee and behold I pray you, whileſt that Fredericke was thus occupyed in the kingdome of Ieruſalem, what practiſes the Pope had in Italy: Not I warrant you any whit at all carefull in the affayres of the Chriſtian commõ wealth, but ſtudiyng and labouring what miſchiefe and ſpite he might worke agaynſt the Emperour: whom, of a ſet purpoſe he had ſo occupied (partly for hate, and partly to enriche himſelfe) in Aſia and Ieruſalem, ſo farre out of Italy, ye may be ſure. Firſt, he cauſed the ſouldiours whiche the Emperour ſent for out of Germany to the mayntenaunce of the holy warres, to be ſtayde as they paſſed through Italy: letting them of their iourney, and tooke from them, and ſpoyled them of all ſuch prouiſion as they had. And not onely this, but he ſent ſecretly alſo hys letters into Aſia, to thoſe that were of his owne faction: that is, to the Patriarche of Ieruſalem, and ſouldiors that kept the temple and the hoſpitall, intiſing and inciting thẽ to rebell agaynſt the Emperour: whiche thing, Blondus himſelfe that Popiſh Paraſite or hiſtoriographer diſſimuleth or hideth not. But that he furthermore diſſwaded the princes of the Saracens, that they ſhould make no league nor take any truce with Fridericke, neither deliuer vp vnto hym the Crowne and Kingdome of Ieruſalem. Whiche letters as they were manifeſt teſtimonyes of his trecherie and treaſon towardes him whom God had inſtituted and made his liege Lord and ſoueraigne, and mightieſt potentate vpon earth: ſo was it hys will, that he ſhould come to the knowledge therof, and that thoſe letters ſhoulde fall into his handes. And that he kept the ſame letters for the more credible teſtimony thereof: in the ſame his laſt Epiſtle vnto the Chriſtian Princes he proteſteth. The copy of which letter amongeſt his other Epiſtles, you ſhall haue expreſſed.

The firſt and ſecret practiſe of Pope Gregory.9.

Neither were the Popes letters written to that leauened ſecte and factious in vayne. For the Patriarche and his Collegioners which tooke their name of the Temple, did mightely repugne agaynſt Fredericke. They rayſed a tumult in Ptolomaida agaynſt him: they accuſed him and his Legates openly of treaſon: and did malipartly & boldly wſtand the right worthy and good order he made amongeſt them. But as God would, by the helpe of the inhabitantes of Piſa and the Genowayes, and the Dutch ſouldiours: both their falſe accuſations were refelled, and alſo their ſeditious purpoſe & tumult expreſſed. And thys was the cauſe, that when all other men reioyced and were glad of the Emperours coronation, they as wicked confederatours were heauy therefore, and obtrectours of hys worthy laud and fame.

The Emperour withſtandeth the ſecret treaſon which the pope had wrought againſt him at Ieruſalem.

The Pope, when he had thus conſpired agaynſt Fredericke, and had betrayed him to the publicke enemy of all Chriſten men, the Turke: he coulde not diſſemble this hys miſchieuous fact, nor content himſelfe therewith, but that he would deuiſe and practiſe yet an other. For by reaſon of thoſe ſclaunders (whiche a little before I touched) of the death and ſlaughter of hys wife Iola: he incited Iohn Brennus his father in lawe to make warre agaynſt hym, who cauſed the ſubiectes of his Empire to withdraw from him their allegeance, as alſo the inhabitants of Picenum, & inhabitantes of Lumberdy. And thus ioyning themſelues together, craued farther ayd of the Frenche king, whereby they made a great power. That done, they deuided theyr hoſt in two armies, inuading with the one the Empire, & with the other the proper territories and ditions belonging in the inheritaunce of Fredericke: Iohn Brennus and Pandolphe Sanellanus, leading the one (as Generals) into Campania and the kingdome of Naples: and the other (with Iohn Columna Cardinals his Legat, and that Thomas before conuicted of treaſon, being his Lieftenantes) he ſendeth into Picenum.

The ſecond and manifeſt treaſon of the Pope againſt Fredericke.

Brennus Pãdolphus, Iohannes Columna & Thomas the traytor, the Popes generalles and leaders of his hoſte.

Of this treaſon of the Pope agaynſt Fredericus, doth alſo Mat. Pariſ. make mention during hys warres in Aſia. Who (ſayth he) purpoſed to haue depoſed him, and to haue placed alium quem libet filium pacis & obedientiæ loco eius ſubrogare, that is, any other he cared not whom (ſo that he were the childe of peace and obedience) in hys ſteede. And for the more certaintie thereof, the ſaid Mat. Pariſ. pag. 71. repeateth the letter which a certayne Earle of Siria wrote vnto him concerning the ſame, which letter here vnder inſueth word for word.

To the high and mighty Prince Fredericus by the grace of God Emperour of Rome, and euer Auguſtus and moſt puiſſant king of Sicilia, Thomas Earle of Actran his faythfull and truſty ſubiect in all thing humble ſalutation. After your departure moſt excellent Prince, Gregory the Byſhop of Rome, & publique enemy to your magnificēce, gathering together a great power & hoſt of men, By Iohannes Brennius late king of Ieruſalem and other ſtout captaynes whome he hath made generals of the ſame hys hoſt: As a foreigne enemy inuading your dominions and poſſeſſions of your highnes ſubiectes agaynſt the lawe of Chriſtianitie: hath purpoſed and determined to vanquiſh and ſubdue you with the materiall or temporall ſworde, whome he cannot maiſter and ouercome with the ſpirituall ſworde, he ſayth. For the foreſayd Iohn Brennus gathering out of Fraunce and other prouinces neare adioyning, a great armye: geueth vnto them of the treaſure he hath gotten (by what meanes together I cannot tell) great wages, in hope to recouer and get from you the Empire. And furthermore, the ſame Iohn and others (the captaynes of the ſee Apoſtolicall inuading your land) burne and deſtroy all as they goe, driuing away and taking for their booties, all that they can come by, as well cattell as other thinges: And ſuch as they take priſoners, they conſtrayne by inflicting them with grieuous puniſhementes to raunſome themſelues for great ſummes of money: neither ſpare they man, woman, nor childe, but take and keepe your townes and caſtles, hauing no regarde that you be in the ſeruice of Ieſus Chriſt. And further, if any make mention of your maieſty vnto him, he ſayth there is none other Emperour but himſelfe. Your friends and ſubiectes moſt excellent Prince, much maruell hereupon: yea and alſo the Clergy themſelues of the Empire, doe maruell with what cōſcience or vpon what conſideration, the Biſhop of Rome can doe the ſame, making ſuch bloudy warres and ſlaughter vpon Chriſtian men: eſpecially, ſeeing that Chriſt commaunded Peter, when he ſtroke with the materiall ſworde to put vp the ſame into the ſcabbard, ſaying: all that ſtrike with the ſword ſhall periſh with the ſword Or els by what lawe, he dayly can excommunicate ſuch pirates, burners of mens houſes, and robbers: when he himſelfe is the patron and mayntayner of ſuche himſelfe: hereat, they greatly muſe and maruell. Wherefore moſt mighty and renowmed Emperour, I beſeeche your highnes to cōſider your owne ſafety: for that the ſayd Iohn Brennus hath layde and fortifie, all the portes and hauens with no ſmall company of men and ſouldiours: that if (not knowing therof) your grace ſhold ariue in any of them, the ſame gariſons of his ſhoulde apprehend and take you as a priſoner: whiche thing to chaunce GOD forefend.

Thus whileſt the hoſt of this hoſtile enemy the Pope was encamped in the dominiōs of Fridericke, he receaued the letters which Fridericke by his Legates ſent into Europa as you heard: wherby he vnderſtood the good ſucceſſe he had in Aſia: who not onely tooke no delectation at all therin, but was alſo in a vehement perturbatiō therwith: wherby manifeſtly it may appeare, what was the cauſe & meaning of the Pope, that he was ſo ſolicitous & vrgent to haue Fredericke the Emperour make a voiage into Aſia. Doubtleſſe euen the ſame, that Pelias had whē by hys inſtigation he procured Iaſon with all the choſen youth and floure of Grecia to ſayle into Colchus, to fetch awaye the golden fleaſe: and that by the oportunitie of his abſence he might vſe, or rather abuſe hys power & tyranny: And that Fridericke might either be long afflicted & moleſted in the Aſian warre, or that he might periſh and loſe his life therin, was that he ſought and all that he deſired.

And when he ſaw, that fortune neither fauored his fetches, nor ſerued to his lōging luſt, he was as a man bereft of his wits, ſpecially at theſe tidings of the proſperous ſucceſſe of ỷ Emperour. He tare and threw his letters on the ground: and with all opprobrious words rebuked & reuiled the Legates for the Emperor their maſters ſake: which thing alſo Blōdus himſelfe denieth not, although he write altogether in the fauour of the Pope. And to the intent that he might couer this his rage and vnbridled fury with ſome cloke & colour of iuſt deſerued dolour: He fayned himſelfe therefore ſo much to miſlike therwith, as though the Emperour therein had onely reſpected his owne priuate cōmoditie, not regarding the vtilitie of the Chriſtians: for ỷ the Saracens had licence (although without armour & weapō) to haue repayre vnto the ſepulcher of Chriſt, & had left for thē ſomewhat neare the ſame an hoſterie or lodging place: For which occaſion ſayth Blondus, his Lord Pope rebuked the Emperours Legates by the name of traytors and ſuch like other opprobrious wordes. Now go to frend Blondus, by what ſtrong argumentes proue you & your Lord Pope, that the peace which the Emperour hath concluded, to be either againſt the Chriſtian common wealth, or that the Emperour was a traytour. But who is it that ſeeth not theſe thinges either by reading of old and auncient writers, or els partly by me that haue gathered & collected the ſame out of diuers monuments and hiſtoryes: & plainly perceaueth not the conſpiracies & treaſons, of your good Lord the Pope ſo notable and filthy, as alſo hys manifeſt ſhame and infamie. What? there be diuers that write, how the Pope commaunded theſe Legates of Fredericke to be made ſecretly out of the way: and alſo how he commanded diuers ſouldiours returning out of Aſia to be ſlayne, to the intēt that none ſhuld heare the report of thoſe good newes which were in Aſia, nor none go thether to tell ỷ fetches he had in hand at home. But I will make report of no more thē of thoſe things which all the writers wͭ moſt conſent agree vpon: This is moſt certayne, that the Pope cauſed this rumour to be ſpread of the death & taking of the Emperor vpon this conſideration, ỷ he might allure vnto him the fidelitie of thoſe Citties in the kingdome of Naples, which yet kept their allegeance vnto Fridericke, of whom they ſhould now hope for no longer refuge. And of that doth the Emperour in hys Epiſtle intituled Leuate oculos, greatly agaynſt him complayne.

Great are theſe iniuries of the Pope agaynſt Fredericke, and moſt wicked treaſons: but herewith coulde not ỷ cruell and tirannicall mind of him be contented, nor yet his luſt ſatiſfied: but ſo farre exceeded, as ſcarce is credible ỷ it could. For he preſumed not onely to ſet variance betwene Henry (whō Fridericke his Father had cauſed to be made king of Germany) and him: but alſo by his allurementes, cauſed him to become an enemy vnto him. To whō, when his father had aſſigned the Duke of Boioria (named Ludouicus) to be his ouerſeer and coūceller: neyther knew he amongſt all the princes of Germany a man more faythfuller to him in his office and duety, or els more vertuous, or els more grauer & apt to be in authoritie: Henry, fearing leaſt he ſhould vnderſtand & know of theſe ſecret councels which he with his conſpiratours had in hand agaynſt hys father: or that he ſhould vtter the ſame vnto him, or that he ſhould go about to diſſwade him from that he was purpoſed to doe: by authoritie of the court and Senate of Rome, he put him out of office. And this was the fetch of all theyr pollicie: that together and at one inſtaunce (but in diuers and ſondry places farre one from an other) ſharpe & cruell warre might be made agaynſt the Emperour: ſo that hys power being diſtract to the appeaſing of variable contention, might be himſelfe the eaſyer oppreſſed of a few.

The third practiſe of P Gregory againſt the Emperour.

The P. ſetteth the ſonne againſt the father, as a good father of peace.

Henry Ceſar at the popes intiſement putteth from him his truſtie counſailer Ludouicus.

When the Emperour now vnderſtode what ſtyrre the Pope kept in all his dominions in his abſence, and that he had ſomewhat reformed and appeaſed the troubles whiche he ſecretly had wrought him in the kingdome of Ieruſalē thinking to preuent the Popes purpoſe in that he went about, and alſo to confirme the friendſhip towardes him of them, whom in his abſence he found his truſty ſubiects: He left in Aſia Renaldus with his gariſons, commanding all the other bands to be vnder his appointment, and with al ſpeede came foorth certayne Gallyes to Calabria. During the tyme of his there being, which vnlooked for came thether: he aſſembled hys power and made with his frends all the ſpeedy preparation that he might. From thence he went to Barleta, where he taried xx. dayes: to whom came the Duke of Spolitanum with all his gariſons. And ſo frō thence, with al his power he came into Apulia, & remoued Iohn Brennus his father in lawe from the ſiege of Calatia: and within ſhort time by Gods help, recouereth agayn all his holds and dominions there. And from thence going into Campania, he winneth Beneuentum, and as many other townes and holdes as the Pope had there, euen almoſt to Rome, and ſo after that, Umbria and Picena. And now, although the Emperour (being moued therunto vpon good occaſion, & vpon ỷ Popes worthy deſert) had gotten & recouered this ſo likely an entrance vpon the Popes dominions, wherby he might haue reuenged him of all the iniuries done to him: yet notwithſtanding, for ỷ he preferred nothing before the Chriſtian and publique tranquility (for ỷ loue of which he reſtrayning hys wrath ſo vehemētly vrged & kindled) ſēdeth vnto him hys Legates to intreat a peace: declaring vnto him, ỷ if no other conceaued grudge towards him were, then that he ſimuled and pretended: he promiſeth that he would make to him an accompt voluntarely, of all things that euer he had done in his lyfe, and that he would, and was contented to ſubmit himſelfe vnto the Churche: and alſo that for this cauſe he willingly offered vnto him both duety and obſeruaunce. Furthermore to the intreating of this peace and deciding of all controuerſies, he ſent to the Pope eight or x. of the nobleſt and chiefeſt about him, that were Princes and Dukes of the Empire. As Bartoldus the Patriarche of Aquileia, and his brother Otho prince of Dalmatia and Hiſtria, Eberhardus Iuuauenſis, Sigifridus, Reginoburgenſis, Sibbotus Auguſtanus, a worthy Prelate, Leopaldus of Auſtria & Stiria, and Bernhardus being all Dukes, beſides others of the nobilitie to accompany them.

The Pope refuſeth a peace with the Emperour.

But yet ſo great was the inſolency and pride of ỹ ſtubburne pope, that by no gentlenes or beneficence, he of thoſe Princes could be brought that yeare to the profitable concord of the Church and Chriſtian common weale. O worthy head, ỹ challẽgeth al authoritie to himſelſe in ỹ Church of Chriſt, and in reſpect of his own wilfull reuenge, ſetteth nothing by the health & vtility of all Chriſtendome. Then therfore, when nothing coulde be done in the matter, & the moſt part of theſe noble men departed from Rome: ỹ next yeare after (with much adoe) a peace was made & concluded betwene thẽ, by the helpe and induſtry of Leopoldus of Auſtria, Hermannus capitaine of the Dutch ſouldiors, and the Preſident of Meſſanca,. The pope then abſoluing the Emperour Fridericus of his excommunication, tooke therfore of him an hundreth and twenty thouſand ounces of gold, reſtoring vnto him agayne the titles both of hys Empire, and alſo of his kingdomes. Nowe conſidering ỹ vncurteous dealing of the Pope with Fridericke the Emperour herein: who can ſufficiently muſe & maruell at the vnſhamefaſtnes of Blondus, which hath the face to write, that the Pope (yet notwithſtanding) had delt more gently and curteouſly with Fridericke then was meete, or beſeemed him to do. Who is it that doth not ſee his manifeſt flatery, coulored neyther with reaſon, nor ſecret diſſimulatiõ. But, much more truely, & better writeth Cuſpinianus cõcerning this matter which ſaith, that the Pope doth occupy very profitable marchandiſe, which for ſomuch money ſelleth that he receaued freely paying nothing therfore, if he had receaued it of Chriſt in deed, as he ſayth he had.

The price of the Emperours abſolution.

Vnſhamefull Blondus.

Cuſpinianus pretely girdeth the Pope.

And yet although the Emperour Fridericke, concluded with the Pope this vnprofitable peace for himſelf: yet he performed thoſe things ỹ were agreed vpõ faythfully & diligently. But the Pope, whiche thought it but a trifle to breake his promiſe, woulde not ſtand to the conditions of ỹ peace he made. For by ỹ way to paſſe ouer other things, neither hath he reſtored as he promiſed the cuſtomes in the land of Sicill, neither yet the city Caſtellana, whiche he before the peace cõcluded betwene thẽ did occupy & enioy. And that doth both Fridericke in his Epiſtles teſtifie, and alſo Fazellus in his 8. booke, writing of the affayres of Sicilia. Yet that notwᵗſtanding: Fridericke, for the quietneſſe and vtilitie of the commõ wealth, purpoſed with himſelfe to beare and ſuffer theſe ſmall iniuries. And further ſtudied in all that he might, as well by liberall gifts as otherwiſe, to haue the Pope to be to him a truſty frend. As whẽ the Romanes & other of the Eccleſiaſticall number made warre againſt ỹ Pope for certein poſſeſſiõs which he kept of theirs: he cõming to him at Reate, and as one that tendred the vnity of the church, & thinking to helpe the Pope at his earneſt requeſt in theſe matters: ſet his Legates vnto them, willing them to lay down their armour which agaynſt the Pope they bare. And when ỹ would not ſerue, at the Popes further requeſt & deſire he leuied an army againſt them at his owne charge, and draue them from the ſiege of Viterbium: with other ſuch like aſſured tokens of amitie and frendſhip he ſhewed him. Who notwᵗſtanding, ſo ſoone as the Emperour was departed with a ſmall cõpany which he tooke with him into Sicilia, leauing wyth him the greater and moſt part of his army for the mayntenaunce of his warres: concluded a peace wᵗ the Romaines (vnknowing to the Emperor) whom he had procured to trauell and labour therin with great expenſes: affirming that without his wil and commandement, the Emperour had expelled them, and driuẽ them out of the territories of Viterbiũ. And hereof, doth Fridericke alſo himſelfe make mentiõ in his ſecond and third Epiſtle, where he complayneth of the iniuries of the Popes towardes him.

What beneficence the Emperour vſeth to haue the Popes friendſhip which he ſhall neuer gette.

A well recompenced good turne of the Pope to the Emperour.

Therfore, greater cõmendation had Blondus deſerued if he had written of theſe trecheries of the Pope, then that forgetting himſelfe (as vnto lyers often it chaunceth) in ỹ he writeth both cõtrary to himſelf in the effect of this matter, and contrary to the veritie of Fridericus his hiſtory: which ſayth that the Romaines were incited to theſe new tumultes by his intiſing and ſetting on. As though ſimple men of vnderſtãding, could not both by the offering of his ſonne in hoſtage, by the great preparation of ỹ warres, and by the euent ſpecially of the thing it ſelf gather the cõtrary. But to to impudent will Blondus needes ſhew himſelfe.

Blondus taken with vntruth.

Whileſt that theſe things were done in Italy and Sicilia, great rebellions were moued in Germany agaynſt ỹ Emperour by Henricus Ceſar and Fridericke of Auſtria, hys ſonnes being the chief authors therof. For Henry, being diſapoynted and ſhakẽ of from his Lord Pope and other conſpiratours by reaſõ of the peace betwene his father & him as ye heard: began now to make open chalenge to the Empire. And for that cauſe, he as before is ſayd, put frõ him Ludouicus whom he knew to be vnto the Emperour his father ſo louing and an aſſured frend: who as willingly (perceauing and ſmelling what miſchief he went about) forſooke his court and came to Boioria: who had not there remayned a yeare, but was as he walked abroad at a certayne tyme ſtabbed in with a dagger of one Relhemius & preſently dyed, his ſeruauntes beyng not farre from him. Of whoſe death diuers diuerſly write. Notwithſtanding the ſequell doth ſhewe them to write trulieſt, that affirme the ſayd ſtriker to be ſuborned by Henry Ceſar: who comming vnto him in the habite of a meſſenger, deliuered vnto him certaine letters which he fayned to be ſent frõ the Emperour. And whileſt Ludouicus was in reading the ſame, he ſtrake him in with a dagger and gaue him his mortall wound: & with ſpeed fled vpõ the ſame. After whoſe death ſucceeded in that Dukedome his ſonne Otho, who when ſolempnly according to the maner of the Boiores he ſhold haue bene created, was alſo let by the ſame Henry Ceſar: who forbad the aſſẽbly of the magiſtrates and Citizens of the ſame. They notwitſtanding, neglecting his vniuſt reſtraint created him: wherefore, he firſt beſieged Reginoburgh & with an other company, ſacked, brent, and waſted Boioria: wᵗ many moe ſuch great outragies & rebellions.

The Emperours ſonnes no lõger ſuborned, make manifeſt rebellion againſt their father.

A wicked murther of Henry Ceſar for true and faith ſeruice.

The outrag of H. Ceſar againſt the Emperour his father.

When intelligence was brought of theſe thinges to the Emperour, he ſent his Legates and cõmaunded that both the Ceſar his ſonne and other Princes of Germany which had aſſembled their armies ſhould breake vp and diſperſe the ſame. And becauſe he ſaw and perceaued now manifeſtly that his ſonne made ſo apparant rebellion agaynſt hym, and fearing greater inſurrections to inſue in Germany, he thought good to preuent the ſame with al expeditiõ: wherfore he determined to go in all haſt to Germany with hys army, (from whence he had bene abſent nowe 14. yeares) and hereunto he maketh the Pope priuy. The Pope promiſed the Emperor hereupon, that he would write his letters in his behalfe to all the Princes of Germany: but perſwaded him to the vttermoſt of his power, that he ſhoulde in no caſe go into Germany himſelfe. For why, his conſcience accuſed him that he had written to the nobles of Germany euen from the beginning of his Papacy (for the hate and grudge he had agaynſt the Emperor) that they ſhould ſuffer him, neither any of his heyres to enioy the Empire, & farther had ſtirred them all vp to rebell agaynſt him: and had moued Henry the Emperors ſonne by his bribes and fayre promiſes, to conſpire againſt his father. And to conclude, he was the author & procurer of ỹ conſpiracie which the Lombardes made then agaynſt him: and fearing leaſt theſe things ſhould come now to the Emperours eare, he was greatly troubled and careful. But the Emperour not thinking it good at ſo needefull a time to be abſent: he (all doubt ſet a part) with his ſecond ſonne Conradus, went ſpeedely into Germany. And aſſẽbling there a councell in the City of Nureburgh: Henry Ceſar his ſonne, after hys conſpiracie was manifeſtly detected, which he had in practiſe with the Longoberdes (whereof, the Pope was chiefe autor) was by iudgement and ſentence of 70. Princes, condemned of high treaſon. And being commaunded by hys father to be bound, was as a priſoner brought to Apulia: where not long after in priſon he dyed. In whoſe ſtede, he ordayned Conradus his 2. ſonne Ceſar, by conſent of all the Piers & Princes, Furthermore, by publique commandement he renounced Fridericke Auſtriacus for his ſonne, and for an enemy to the publique weale he cauſed him to be proclaymed. And further, when he ſawe that neither that puniſhment could cauſe him to remember himſelfe and acknowledge his abuſe, the Emperour with a great armye (accompanied with diuers of the noble men of Germany) tooke from him all Auſtria and Stiria, and brought them agayne vnder hys owne obedience and fidelitie.

Then, when he had ſet Germany in a ſtay and quietnes, he left there Conradus Ceſar hys ſonne: and with hys hoſt returneth agayne into Italy, there to puniſh ſuch as had with Henry his eldeſt ſonne conſpired agaynſt him: whoſe treaſons were all detected at the condemnation of Henry Ceſar hys ſonne, chiefly ſet on by the Pope. When the Pope had vnderſtanding that the Emperour with warlike furniture marched toward Italie: although he fained himſelfe recõciled, and to be a frend to Fredericke, yet was he notwithſtanding to him a moſt ſecrete & infeſtiue enemie. And vnderſtanding, that he brought with him ſuche a power, both of horſmen and footemen, to do execution of ſuch as he vnderſtoode to haue bene conſpirators againſt him in the late tumult and rebelliõ: Thoſe which were faultie herein and giltie (and all other that tooke their partes) hee admoni-

The reſt of the Citties alſo in Italy, whether they were the Emperours or his owne, he indeuoureth to make them all hys, and proper to himſelfe.

The Popes embaſſage to the Emperour.

Furthermore, vnto the Emperor he ſendeth his Embaſſadours: to whom, vnder the pretence of nouriſhing a peace, he had geuen ſecret cõmandement: that they ſhould interdict him and his hoſt, ſo ſoone as he came within the borders of Italy. To the preſeruation of which peace, ſaith he, he had (but late ſince) promulgate a ſubſidie to be gathered amongſt the Chriſtians, when he began the holy warre. And alſo to ſay (not by way of intreatie, but cõmaundingly) that what cauſe of controuerſie he had with the Longobardes: the ſame he ſhould commit to him, and ſtand to hys arbitrement. whereunto, the Emperour replying, maketh his Legate this aunſwere.

The Emperour againe vnto the Pope.

Shortly after ſayth he, the peace was made betweene the Pope and me: he called me for a chiefe defence both of yͤ Church and himſelfe, agaynſt the Romaynes which made warre with him: and at his requeſt, with mine owne proper charge I mayntayned that his warre, & gaue his enemies the ouerthrow. And further ſayd, that he ſhould not do well through the pretence of peace, to be a let to him frõ that which both by lawe and right he might and ought to do: But rather ſo he ought to diſpoſe himſelfe, with force to reſtrayne and expell them, which gathered thẽ together as rebels thinking to exclude themſelues from the ſubiection both of him and the Empire. And that, ſuch rebels as both had reſtrained the ſouldiours which the Emperor ſent for when he was in Aſia, & diuers others alſo (which for neceſſary cauſes he had called to hym) they had ſo wickedly delt with & abuſed: He, as they had deſerued, ſhould rather deſire to ſee puniſhed & reformed, then to mayntain them (vnder colour of peace) being ſo wicked and manifeſt euill doers. And touching that he demandeth of hym, that he ſhould commit and deferre ſo great a cauſe wherein the wealth and ſafety of the Empire conſiſteth, to his arbitrement by him to be determined: without eyther aſſignemẽt of any tyme when, or adding thereunto any condition or exceptiõ for not doing the ſame: neither the diminiſhing & impayring the dignitie and regaltie of his Empire conſidered, he could not but maruell: Seing yͭ neither it appertained to his calling and facultie, nor to the benefite or cõmoditie of the Empire. To this effect alſo writeth Fridericke in his laſt Epiſtle to the Pope: the effect whereof amongſt other Epiſtles you may read.

A ſecret cõſpiracie of the pope againſt the Emperour.

And in the ſame his letters he ſheweth, that when the Emperour, at a certaine time had bene with the Pope: At his going away, he requeſted that when he came agayn he would come into Italy, but with his houſhold band and familie: For that, if he ſhoulde come as before he did accuſtome with his army, he ſhould terrifie thẽ ouermuch: amongſt whom ſayth he, you may aſſure your ſelfe to be in great ſafetye, and finde all thinges in reſt and quiet: when quite contrary (as the Emperor for a certainty had tryed) he had there all things ready and prepared for his deſtruction. So that, when he pretended vnto him greateſt frẽdſhip, he was buſieſt in conſpiring his death. The certayne time, when the Pope had this exerciſe in hand agaynſt the Emperor I cãnot ſearch out, neither may it be in his epiſtles vndated, eaſly foũd out: But yͭ of the certainty thereof no man need to doubt, I haue aſſigned you to the Emperours Epiſtle where he maketh mention of the ſame.

The Emperour marcheth into Italie, notwithſtanding the popes forbidding.

The Emperour then, as he had determined proſecuteth his purpoſe & marcheth into Italy: where he brought vnder his ſubiection, thoſe Cities that againſt him rebelled: as Mantua, Verona, Terniſium, Patauium, and others. And then, he afterward ſet vpõ the great hoſt of the Mediolanenſes, the Brixians, the Placentines and other confederators, vnto whom the Popes Legate Georgius Longomantanus had ioyned himſelfe: of whome he tooke 1000. priſoners, and alſo their general being the chief Magiſtrate in the Citty of Mediolanum, and Petrus Tenopolus the Dukes ſonne of Venice, & fiue diuers captaines moe and tooke all their enſignes. And in this battell ſpecially at the recouering of Marchia and Terniſſana he vſed the frendly ayd of Actiolinus.

The Emperour loth to breake the peace, of late concluded.

The Pope now ſomewhat diſmayd at this ouerthrow of his confederates & mates (though not much) began yet ſomewhat to feare the Emperour: & where as before, that which he did he wrought ſecretly and by others, nowe he goeth to worke (with might and mayne) to ſubdue and depriue the Emperour. And although the Emperour ſaw & perceaued what inward hate and mortall malice he bare towardes him: not onely by that he ſo apertly ſtood with his conſpiratours agaynſt him, but alſo that on euery ſide he heard, and from all partes was brought him certain word how greatly he laboured agaynſt him: as to opprobrious wordes, naughty reportes, and ſlaunders, to the intent to pull from him the hartes and fidelitie of his ſubiectes, and make thoſe that were his frends his enemies, neither that he meant at any time to take vp and ceaſe from ſuch euill and wicked practiſes: yet notwithſtanding, for that there ſhuld be no default in him foũd, for the breach of the league and peace betweene them a little before concluded: he ſendeth foure Legates to the Byſhop of Rome which ſhould aunſwere vnto and refute, thoſe criminous obiections whiche he layd vnto him: as alſo make him priuy to hys purpoſe, and what he ment to do, thereby to declare hys innocencie towardes him (in ſuch cauſes) and ſimplicitie.

The new ſentence of proſcription againſt the Emperour.

The Pope wageth and hyreth 35. Galleyes to ſpoile the coaſts of the Emperor.

The Biſhop, when he vnderſtood theſe Embaſſadours to be not farre of from Rome, & knew the cauſe of their cõming: he thought with himſelfe, that in hearing the excuſe and reaſonable anſwere of the Emperour, perhaps might be prouoked to deſiſt from hys purpoſe, and ſo degenerate from other of his predeceſſours: refuſeth to ſpeake with them, and at the day appoynted pronounceth the ſentence of proſcriptiõ againſt him, depriuing him of all his dignities, honours, titles, prerogatiues, kingdomes & whole Empire. And that he had no occaſion hereunto, as well Pandolphus & Colonutius, as the letters of the Emperour himſelfe do both right well declare. For it may appear, he dedicated as it were himſelf to his vtter ruine and deſtruction, when he did ſollicitate agaynſt Fridericus, Iacobus Tewpolus the Venetian Duke: whom, for the diſpleaſure he took with yͤ Emperor in the impriſoning of his ſonne, was in good hope he ſhould allure vnto him, he being in ſo troublous a time ſuch a comforter & ayder vnto him: that as Blondus writeth, in a certein Epiſtle gratulatory he calleth him Lord of the fourth part of Croatia and Dalmatia, and Lord of the halfe of the Romane Empire. And calling vnto him the Venetian and Genwetian Legates, made a peace betwixt them (whiche for certeine cauſes about their ſea coſtes were at variaunce) and couenaunted with them vpon this condition: that at their publique charges, they ſhould rig and man 35. gallyes, which ſhould ſpoyle and burne all alongſt the Sea coaſtes of the kingdomes and dominions of Fredericke.

The popes edict againſt the Emperour, Aſcendit de mari bellica beſtia.

Albertis Behauus the popes one hand.

The P. threateneth to curſe all thoſe that wiſh well to the Emperour.

But the Pope, when he ſaw the good will and fidelitie which the Duke of Venice bare vnto the Emperour, and ſaw alſo what ayd the Emperour had of him, neyther that he was like to wynne him to hys purpoſe: then had he recourſe agayne to his old crafty practiſes & ſubtleties. And further deuiſed, to put forth an Edict at Rome to the vniuerſal Church and people, the beginning whereof is Aſcẽdit de mari bellica beſtia: wherein, he declareth the cauſes wherfore he curſeth and geueth the Emperour to yͤ deuill of hell, & hath deiect him from all his princely dignitie. He in the ſame, accuſeth him of ſo many & ſo huge a heape of miſchiefes, as to nominate thẽ my hart deteſteth. And beſides yͭ, he reſtrayneth his ſoueraigne Lord, & Emperor of the appellatiõ which euery priuat man by law may haue. He ſlaundereth him of treaſon, periury, cruelty, ſacrilege, killing of his kinde, and all impietie: he accuſeth him for an heretike, a ſchiſmatike, and a miſcreant: And to be briefe, what miſchiefe ſo euer the Pope can deuiſe, with that doth he charge him and burden him. All this doth he ſayth the Pope, that when he hath brought our holines, and all the Eccleſiaſticall eſtate to beggary, he might ſcoffe at and deride the Religion of Chriſt, which as a miſcreant he deteſteth. And nowe for that the Pope had a great and ſpeciall truſt in Albertus Behauus of yͤ noble houſe called Equeſtri (as crafty a poſtle as the beſt) as one whom he ſaw ready to leane to his luſt: To him the Pope deliuered two other mandates in ſeueral letters ſealed, in which he commaundeth al Biſhops, Prelates, & other of the Clergy: that they ſhould ſolemnly recite the ſame in their churches in ſteed of their ſermon, that by his decree he had excommunicate Fridericke out of the fellowſhip of Chriſten men: put hym from the procuratiõ or gouernment of the Empire: & that he had releaſed al his ſubiectes of their allegeãce & fidelitie towardes him. And farthermore, chargeth thẽ, & all other Chriſten men vnder the payne of curſing & dãnation, that neither they ſuccour yͤ Emperour, nor yet ſomuch as wiſh him well. Thus he, being the Popes ſpeciall & truſty ſeruiture & made to his hand, cauſed a moſt horrible confuſiõ and Chaos of publique quietnes, as ſhall after appeare.

Amongſt al other noble men of Germany at that time towardes the Emperour, was Otho the gouernour of Rhenus and Duke of Boiora, both moſt ſeruiceable and alſo a Prince of great honour, riches and eſtimatiõ. This prince,both with fayre promiſes & alſo rewards,he entiſed from hym, for that being made by him to beleue, ẏ Ludouicus his father of whō we ſpake before,was by the Emperour murthered and ſlaine. And the ſame Otho againe, cauſed 3. other Princes & Dukes,to reuolte from the Emperour to the Pope, which were neighbours & neare adioyning vnto him:as Vuenceſlaus,and Belus, princes of the Vngarians,and Henry Duke of Polonia. To whom came alſo Fridericus Auſtriacus hys ſonne: who becauſe he was proſcript or outlawed of hys father, and had hys dukedome waſted and brent as you heard,was eaſly won vnto the pope. Theſe gathering a Councell(whē they had thought to haue tranſlated the Empiere vnto the Kyngs ſonne of Denmarke)deſired to haue the popes Legates to be ſent from hym,to the effect of that election.

Otho with diuers other princes of Germany by the popes meane doe forſake the Emperour.

The Emperour was at Pataiuun when theſe newes were brought vnto him,what the pope had done at Rome Therefore he commaunded Peter to Vineis hys Secretary (vpon Eaſter day) to make a Narration to the people,of his great & liberall munificence to the byſhops and church of Rome, & again of the iniuries of them towards hym in recompence thereof: of hys innocencye alſo in that whereof he had accuſed hym: and of the vnſeemelines of ſuch an act or deede:of the right vſe of the eccleſiaſtical cenſure,& of the errours and abuſe of the church of Rome. By which Oratiō of hys, he ſo remoued the cloud from many mens hartes of blynde ſuperſtition, and the conceaued opinion of holines of the church of Rome, and Byſhops of the ſame,and alſo of theyr vſurped power and ſubtill perſwaſion:that both they playnely ſawe and perceaued the vices and filthynes of the Church of Rome and Byſhops of that ſea,as alſo theyr fraudulent deceites and flagitious doynges: moſt vehemently lamenting and complaynyng of the ſame. Albertus maketh mention of certayne Verſes whiche were ſent and written betweene the Byſhop of Rome and the Emperour. The which verſes in the latter of this preſent hiſtory of Fridericke you ſhall finde.

What great good the oration of Peter de Vineis did in the themperors behalfe.

The Emperour moreouer both by hys letters & Legates, geueth intelligence to all Chriſten kynges, to the Princes of hys owne Empire, to the Colledge of Cardinals,and people of Rome: as well of the fayned crymes wherewith he was charged, as alſo of the cruelty of the Byſhop of Rome agaynſt hym. The copy of whiche letter or epiſtle followeth here vnder inſerted.

The Emperour to the Prelates of the worlde.

The Emperours letter to all prelates to bridle the pope and reſtraine him of his will.

IN the beginning and creation of the world: the ineffable foreknowledge and prouidence of God (who aſketh councell of none)created in the firmament of Heauen two lightes (a greater and a leſſe)the greater he created to gouerne the day, and the les to gouerne the night: which two , ſo do their proper offices and dueties in the Zodiake, that although oftentimes the one be in an oblique reſpect vnto the other,yet the one is not enemy to theother: but rather doth the ſuperior , cōmunicate his light with the inferior. Euē ſo, the ſame eternal foreknowledge hath appointed vpon the earth two regimentes: that is to witte, Prieſthoode and kingly power : the one for knowledge and wiſdome, the other for defence. That man,which was made of two partes (ouer wanton and diſſolute) might haue two raignes to gouerne and bridle him withall, that peace thereby and loue might dwell vppon the face of the earth. But alas, the B. of Rome ſitting in the chaire of peruerſe doctrine or peſtilence,that Phariſee anoynted wyth the oyle of iniquitie aboue the reſt of his conſortes in this our time, which for his abhominable pride is fallen from heauen: indeuoureth with his power to deſtroy and vndoe all, and thinketh (I beleeue) to ſtellifie againe himſelfe there from whence hee fell. Hys purpoſe is to darken and to ſhadowe the light of our vnſpotted life, whileſt that (altering the veritie into lies) his Papall letters ſtuft with all vntruthes, are ſent into ſondry partes of the world: of his owne corrupt humor,and vpon no reaſonable cauſe, blemiſhing the ſinceritie of our Religion. The Lord Pope hath compared vs,vnto the beaſt riſing out of the ſea,full of names of blaſphemy, and ſpotted like a Lyberd. But we ſay,that he is that mōſtrous beaſt of whom it is ſayd,and of whome we thus read : And there ſhall come an other red horſe out of the ſea , and hee that ſhall ſit on him,ſhall take peace away out of the earth: let them therefore that dwell vpon the earth deſtroy him. For ſince the tyme of hys promotiō,he hath not ben the father of mercy but of diſcord: A dilligent ſteward of deſolation in ſtead of conſolation: and hath intiſed all the worlde to commit offence. And to take the wordes in right ſenſe and interpretation,he is that great Dragon that dath deceiued the whole worlde : hee is that Antichriſt,of whom he hath called vs the forerunner : he is that other Balaam hired for money to curſe vs:the Prince of darcknes, which hath abuſed the Prophetes. This is the Aungel leaping out of the ſea,hauing his Phials fild with bitternes, that he may both hurt the ſea and the lande : the counterfait Vicar of Chriſt, that ſetteth forth hys owne imaginations. He ſayth that we doe not rightly beleue in the Chriſten fayth, and that the world is deceiued with three maner of deceiuers (which to name God forbid we ſhould open our mouth) ſeeing that openly we cōfeſſe onely Ieſus Chriſt our Lord and Sauiour to be the euerlaſting ſonne of God, coequall with hys father and the holy Ghoſt, begotten before all worldes , and in proceſſe of tyme ſent downe vpon the earth for the ſaluation of mankinde:Conceaued,not by the ſeede of man,but by the holy Ghoſt: which was borne of the glorious virgin Mary, & after that ſuffered and dyed as touching the fleſh: and by hys Godhead the third day, he rayſed from death that other nature which he aſſumpted in the wombe of his mother. But we haue learned,that the body of Machomet hangeth in the ayre and that his ſoule is buryed in hell: whoſe works are damnable & contrary to the law of the moſt higheſt. We affirme alſo,that Moyſes was the faythfull ſeruant of God,and a true teacher of the law: and that he talked with God in mount Sinay,vnto whō the Lord ſayd,Rubrum.&c. By whō alſo God wrought miracles in Egipt, and deliuered the law written to the Iſraelites,& that afterwards with the elect he was called to glory. In theſe and other thinges our enemy and enuier of our ſtate,cauſing our mother the church to accuſe her ſonne,hath written agaynſt vs venemous and lying ſclaunder, and ſent the ſame to the whole worlde. If hee had rightly vnderſtoode the Apoſtles meaning, he woulde not haue preferred his violent will before reaſon,which beareth ſuch ſway with him:neither would he haue ſēt out his Mandates to the ſuggeſtion of thoſe which call light darcknes,and euill good:whiche ſuſpect hony to be gall, for the great good opinion they haue cōceaued of that holy place,which in deed is both weak & infirm,& cōuerteth al truth into falſhood,& affirmeth that to be that is not.

Mā being made of two partes hath two ſeuerall regiments Gods word and the materiall ſworde.

The Apologie of the Emperor to the popes edict. Aſcendit de mari &c.

Antechriſt long agone deſcried to the world by the Emperour.

The confeſſion of the Emperours fayth whereof he was accuſed by the pope.

The pope vnder pretence of his holines deceiueth ſimple ſoules and ignorant men.

Truly my opinion (ſo indifferent on euery ſide) ought not in any caſe to be infringed and auerted from the fayth, to ſuch enemies of ſo corrupt a conſcience. Wherefore we greatly are inforced not a little to meruaile,which thing alſo doth much diſquyet vs to ſee:that you which be the pillers and aſsiſtentes in office of righteous dealing,the Senators of Peters Citie,and the principal beames in Gods building:haue not quallified the perturbation of ſo fierce a Iudge:as doth the planets of heauē in their kynd:which to mittigate the paſsing ſwift courſe of the great orbe , or ſphere of heauen, draw a contrary way by theyr oppoſite mouinges. In very deed,our Imperial felicitie hath bene(almoſt euen from the beginning)ſpurned agaynſt, and enueied at of the papall ſee and dignitie: As Simonides being demanded why he had no mo enemies and enuiers of hys ſtate, anſwered and ſayd:quia nihil faliciter geſsi:for becauſe (ſayth he) I haue had no good ſucceſſe in any thing, that euer I tooke in hand. And ſo,for that we haue had proſperous ſucceſſe in all our enterpriſes (the Lordes name be bleſſed therefore) eſpecially in the ouerthrow (of late) of our rebellious enemies the Lombardes : to whom in their good quarrell he promiſed life and abſolution and remiſsion of their ſinnes, is the cauſe wherefore this Apoſtolicall biſhop mourneth and lamenteth: And now,not by your councels(I ſuppoſe)he laboureth to impugne this our felicitie,but of hys owne power of bynding & loſing,wherof he glorieth ſo much,he impugneth it. But preſently where power and habilitie wanteth to redreſſe,there doth abuſe take place. We ſee in hym which was ſo mighty a king,and the worthieſt prince amongſt all the Prophetes,to deſire & craue the reſtitution of Gods holy ſpirit,when he had polluted the dignitie of hys office. But the prouerbe is, Vti indiſſolubilia non ſoluuntur ita inligabilia non ligantur. As thinges indiſſoluble are not to be loſed, ſo thinges that cannot be bound, are not to be bound. Which thing manifeſtly is proued in him. For why, the ſcriptures of God doe inſtruct men how to liue,they mortifie our ſoules whiche are immortall, and quicken the ſame whiche are dead for want of lyfe. And doubtles, he is able to humble and bring downe thoſe that are vnworthy of dignitie, as much as him pleaſeth, and when him pleaſeth. Doubtleſſe, if the Byſhop of Rome were a true Byſhop indeed,innocent,impolute,and not aſſociate with wicked liuers and euill men,his life ſhould declare him ſo to be. He would not then be an offerer of diſſentious ſacrifice,but a peaceable offerer of loue & charity, & would cenſe, not with the incenſe of griefe & hatred,but with the ſweet ſmelling incenſe of concord and vnity : neither yet would alter ſuum pontificium in maleficium : That is, make of a ſanctified office an execrable abuſe. If he were ſuch a Byſhoppe as he ought to be, he would not wreſt or abuſe the preaching of the word, into the fruite and gayne of his owne diſſention : neither ſhoulde we be accuſed for ſuch an enemy of our mother the true church, as is layd vnto her ſonnes charge by ſuch a Byſhopp. Which true and mother Church,with all reuerence we honour, and benignity embrace,ſo beautified and adourned with Goddes moſt holy Sacraments. Some ſingular perſons notwihſtanding, fayning themſelues to be our brethren by that mother and yet are not, but of a ſtrumpet begot:ſuch I ſay as are ſubiect and ſlaues to corruptible things (putting thē from amongſt vs) we vtterly reiect:

The imperiall dignitie ſpurned at alwayes by the pope.

The anſwere of Symonides applyed.

The Emperor propheſieth of the popes fall.

The Emperour vtterly reiecteth the pope and Church of Rome.

Eſpecially for that iniuries by them done, are not only tranſitorie and mundane, wherwith our maieſtie is ſo moleſted, vexed & greued. Wherefore, we cannot ſo eaſily mitigate our moode, neyther ought we in very dede ſo to do: and therefore are we inforced the more to take the greater reuenge of them. You therefore that are men of graue and deliberate counſail, hauing the excellẽt gift (as from God) of wiſdom and vnderſtãding: Refuſe you that raoring enemie of ours in theſe his proceedings whoſe beginnings are ſo wicked and deteſtable: wiſely comparing things paſt, with thoſe to come. Otherwiſe, you that are vnder our ſubiection, as well of the Empire as other our dominions ſhall feele and perceiue (both of my chiefe ennemie and perſecutour, as alſo of the princes that are his fautors and adherents) what reuenge by ſword Fredericus Auguſtus ſhall take vpon them, God ſo permitting.

The Emperour calleth a parliament or councell to expreſſe the popes malice.

This done, hee denounceth a ſolemne Parliament or councel of al the princes & other nobilitie of the Empire at Aegra: whether came Conradus Ceſar, Moguntinus Preſul, the Saxon Dukes, the Lordes of Brandeburgh, Miſna, Thuringus, and the Legates of all the nobles of Brabant to aid the Emperor. But the princes of Boiemus and Palatinus, being diſſuaded by the legates vnto whom the Auſtrians had ioyned thẽſelues, refuſed to come to the Councel holden at Aegra. And being at their wittes ends not knowing well what they might doe, forſoke at laſt the Emperor, and toke part with the pope and the other conſpirators. Then Fredericus Auſtriacus the Emperors ſecond ſonne (whom he diſherited as ye heard) by the aid of the Boiors and Bohemians, recouered againe the Dukedomes of Auſtria and Styria: putting to flight and diſcõfiting, the Emperors bandes and garriſons which he had there. And although the Cardinals (eſpecially that honeſt man Albertus Boiemus) had allured vnto the pope Otho the duke of Boioria as ye heard, & diuers other noble men of Germanie: yet notwythſtanding, certaine biſhops in Boioria (as Eberhardus Iuuanenſis, and Sigrefridus Seginoburgenſis, being at that time the Emperors Chauncelour, Rudicenis Ratheuienſis, Conradus Friſingenſis and others) left not or yet forſoke the Emperor. All which the foreſayd Albertus not onely did excõmunicate, but alſo by proceſſe ſought to bring them vp to Rome before the pope: Geuing commaundement to their Collegioners and cloyſterers, that they ſhould depriue them of their offices, & chuſe ſuch others in their ſteade as would obey the Pope. All which things the Pope vnderſtanding by Albertus, and of thys their fidelitie to the Emperor, corroborated and confirmed the ſame his doings, commaunding them to chuſe other byſhops in their ſtedes.

The godly Byſhops of Germany are obedient to the kyng and prince.

But the biſhops & prelates with one conſent contemning the popes mandates & writs, and alſo the curſes and threatnings of Albertus, accuſed, reproued, & greatly blamed his temerity & alſo tiranny which he vſurped againſt the churches of Germanie, and eſpecially againſt the good Emperor: that without his conſent he durſt be ſo bolde as to meddle in churches cõmitted to the Emperors gouernment, againſt the old & auncient cuſtomes: and that he had excommunicated the Emperor without iuſt cauſe, yͭ he had condemned the Emperors faithful ſubiects, as enemies to the Church, for ſtanding with their liege and ſoueraigne Prince (which allegiance to violate, without horrible iniquitie they might not) and ſo had ſought to diſquiet them likewiſe in their charges and adminiſtrations, & had alſo in that quarel geuen ſuch defiance to the Emperor. They accuſed and condemned the ſame Albertus alſo, for a moſt impudent impoſtor, and wicked varlet, and for a moſt peſtiferous botch & ſoare of the chriſtian common weale: and giue him to the deuil they do, as a ruinous enemie, as wel of the church as of his owne natural countrey: and further thinke him worthy to haue his reward, with the reſt of the popes purſiuants being the moſt wicked inuentors & deuiſers of miſchief yͭ were in al Germanie. This done, they make relation hereof to the Emperor by their letters: and further, they aduertiſe all the princes of Germanie (eſpecially thoſe which were of the Popes faction or rebellion, & were the fauorers of Albertus) that they ſhould take hede and beware in any caſe of his ſubtill deceites & pernitious deceiuable allurements: nor that they ſhould aſſiſt the pope for al his words againſt the Emperor. And doutles by the counſaile of the high prelate or Archb. of Boioria (whoſe name was Iuuanenſis) and by his induſtry and perſuaſion: Fredericus Auſtriacus was againe reconciled vnto the Emperor his father, from whoſe aide and obedience after that (by no promiſes, threatnings, bribes, nor paines, no nor for the execrable curſes of the Popes owne holy mouth) he would be induced or remoued. But Albertus proſecuteth ſtil his purpoſed miſchief, alluring & inciting by al meanes poſſible (and yͭ not amongſt the worſt but the beſt) frendes to the pope, & enemies to the Emperor: To ſome, he gaue their tithes to fight againſt the Emperor, to other ſome he gaue the gleebe landes of benefices: and to other ſome hee gaue the ſpoile of ſuch colledges and monaſteries as tooke not part with the pope: and to ſome other alſo, he gaue the colleges & monaſteries themſelues. And aſſuredly I finde by Iohannes Auentinus lib.7. annalium Boiorum: yͭ there were certen of the popes owne birdes, that had their eccleſiaſticall tithes taken from them: and other ſome, had the rents and reuenues of their colleges pluckt away by force to the maintenance of the Popes quarel againſt the Emperour. Hereby was there a windowe opened to do what they liſted (euery man according to hys rauening and deteſtable luſt) and all things lay open vnto their gredy and inſatiable deſires. Who liſteth to heare more hereof, let him reade Auentinus in his Booke before noted, and there ſhall he ſee what vaſtation grew therby to the whole ſtate of Germanie, who largely entreateth of the ſame.

The biſhops of Germanie excommunicate the popes legate and Cardinall.

Iuuanenſis the Byſhop, a true ſubiect to his prince.

The paſſage of the pope to maintaine the warre againſt his Lord and maiſter.

While theſe things were thus in working in Germanie, Fredericke leauing in Lumbardie Actiolinus wyth a great part of his hoſte (hee paſſing with the reſt by Apenninum) came to Hetruria and ſet the ſame in a ſtay, after that he had alaide certaine inſurrections there: and from thence to Pyſas, where he was with great amitie and honor receiued and welcomed. This citie was alwaies aſſured and faithfull to the Emperours of Germanie. The Pope vnderſtanding of the Emperours comming into Hetruria, and knowing what power the Emperour had alſo left in Lumbardie, hee with a great army beſiegeth the citie Ferraria, that alwaies loued the Emperour full well: which Citie, when the Popes Legate had aſſauted ſharpely the ſpace of 5. monethes and could not winne the ſame: he deuiſed with hymſelfe to ſende for Salingwerra out of the towne by way of a parlie, promiſing his faith and truth to him for his ſafe returne. Who, by the perſwaſion of Hugo Rambartus, that ſaid without peril he might doe the ſame (being but by way of Parley) was comming to the legate: who preuenting him in his iourney tooke him as priſoner, contrary to his trueth and fidelitie. And thus gate he Ferraria, and deliuered the keping therof to Azones Aſtenſis. And that the Popes Legate thus falſified his trouth, and circumuented the capitaine & olde man Salingwerra: the ſame is confeſſed of the Popes frendly Hiſtoriographers, to be but a Stratagem or warlike pollicie. But to returne againe: About the ſame time alſo the Venetian nauie, at the mount Garganum chaſed 12. galleis of the Emperors which were appointed to the keeping of that coſte, & ſpoiled, brent, and waſted all the region: and farther tooke one of the Emperors great ſhips, being driuen by tempeſt and weather into the hauen Sipontinum, fraught with men and munition.

The pope beſiegeth Ferraria.

The fidelitie of papiſtes learned by this example.

The Emperours Gallies chaſed, and one of his ſhips taken by the pope.

Fredericus againe getting on hys ſide the Lucenſes, the Volateranes, the Genenſes, the Aretines, and diuers Cities beſides in Hetruria to helpe that countrey: came to Piſas and Viterbium, which tooke parte with him. Some ſay, that the names and factions of the Gibellins & Guelphes, ſprang from Fredericke: that by them hee might ſpie and know (hauing recourſe to all the townes and cities in Italie) which tooke part with and fauoured the Pope, and which the Emperour: and called the one by the name of Gibellines, and the other by the name of Guelphes. But for that, both Blondus, and Platina, and ſome others, bring no ſufficient proofe thereof, but onely by ſlender coniecture, I rather cleaue to the opinion of Nauclerus, Hermanus, Antonius, Florentinus, and other ſuch wryters, which ſay: that theſe Guelphes and Gibellines in Italie, tooke their beginning of Cõradus 3. Fredericus his great vncle being Emperour. And that theſe Guelphes were dedicated to the Pope, of Guelphus the yonger brother of Henry the proud: and that thoſe which were called Gibellines were appoynted either of Conradus himſelfe or els of his ſonne, being brought vp in the Lordſhip of Vaiblingen. But to our purpoſe.

The Gibellines and Gwelpes from whence they came.

The Pope, when he vnderſtoode that Fredericke was come to Viterbium, he was very heauy: for that he feared he would come to Rome, the good will of which Citie the Pope much miſtruſted. He therefore cauſed a ſupplication to be drawne, portraying about the ſame the heads of Peter and Paule, & with a ſharpe and contumelious oration he much defaced the Emperour: promiſing them euerlaſting life, & gaue them the badge of the croſſe, as many as would arme themſelues and fight againſt the Emperour, as againſt the moſt wicked enemy of God & the Church. Now when the Emperour marching ſomewhat neare to Rome gates, beheld thoſe whome the Pope had with his goodly ſpectacle of S. Peter and S. Paule, and wyth his alluring oration ſtirred vp againſt him, and marked with the badge of the croſſe to come forth in battell againſt him:

The pope afraid of the Emperors comming into Italy.

The Emperour hangeth all the croſſed ſouldiours.

The Emperour retayneth the Saracens in his warres againſt the Pope.

Diſdaining to be accompted for the enemye of the Church, who had ben therunto ſo beneficial, geuing a fierce charge vppon them, put them ſoone to flight: and as many as hee tooke (cutting off that badge frō them) he cauſed to be hanged. From thēce he marching into Campania & his owne kingdomes: leuied a great maſſe of money, & muſtred new bandes, and augmented his armie: and in theſe bandes he retained the Saracens alſo. And to yͤ intent he might finde the Saracens the more truſtie vnto hym: hee appoynted them to inhabit in a city named Luceria. For which thing, although the Papiſticall wryters doe greatly blame and opprobriouſly write of Fredericke: yet notwythſtanding, Nicholaus Machiuellus doth wryte, that therefore he retained them: leaſt that through the Popes execrable curſes, he ſhould be quite deſtitute of ſouldiours as was Fredericus Barbaroſſa a litle before, his graundfather, when that of Alexander the Pope hee was excommunicated, as ye haue heard.

The effect of a letter ſent by the Emperour to the princes of Germany.

No enemy more hurtfull to the Church of God then is the pope

The Emperour voweth to remoue the pope and put an other more carefull ſhepheard into the church of God.

After this, when the Emperor had greatly afflicted by battaile the Popes Eccleſiaſticall conſorts, ſuch as conſpired with the Pope againſt him: and that he had waſted & deſtroyed Beneuentum, the mount Caſenum, & Sora, for that they toke part with the Pope againſt him: Frederick, when he had manned the City Aquila, marched forth with a great hoſte both of horſemen and footemen to Picenum, that he might vanquiſh his enemyes in Italie. And by the way, he beſieged the ſtrong towne of warre named Aſculinum, which was alſo conuerted to the popes faction and rebellion. He there hauing vnderſtanding what yͤ Popes aſſiſtents had done with the Princes electours and other princes of Germanie, eſpecially with Wenſeſlaus king of Bohemia, and Otho Palatinus: wryteth his letters vnto them. In the which, firſt he ſheweth how that thoſe contumelies and ſpitefull wordes which the Pope bluſtered out againſt him, are light vpon himſelfe: And how the biſhops of Rome haue taken to them of late ſuch hart of grace, and are become ſo loftie, that not only they ſeeke to bring Emperours, Kings and Princes vnder their obedience, but alſo ſeeke howe to be honoured as gods: And ſay, that they cannot erre, neither yet be ſubiect or bounde to any religion: and that it is lawful for them to do al things what they liſt, neither yͭ any accompt is to be ſought or demaunded of their doings, or els to be made of them to any, ſo impudent are they in theſe their affirmations. And further, as Princes they commaund (and that vnder paine of curſing) that men beleue euery thing they ſay, howe great a lie ſoeuer it be. In ſo much that by this couetouſnes of his, all things goe backwarde, and the whole ſtate of the common weale is ſubuerted: neither can there any enemie be founde more hurtfull or perillous to the Churche of God then he. Hee wrote vnto them furthermore, that he (to whom the greateſt charge and dignitie was in the whole common weale appoynted and committed) ſeeing and perceauing to hys great perill, their good harts, willes, & practiſes towardes him: would with all the power and hability that God had geuen him, do his indeuour: that he which in the likeneſſe of the ſhepheard of the flocke, & the ſeruaunt of Chriſt, and chiefe prelate in the Churche, ſheweth himſelfe ſo very a wolfe, perſecutour and tyrant: may be remoued from that place, and that a true & carefull ſhepheard of Gods flocke, may be appoynted in the Church. Wherefore he exhorteth them, that if they deſire the ſafetie and preſeruation of the whole ſtate of the cōmon weale and Empire: that they be vnto him no hinderers, but furtherers of his purpoſe and proceedings: leaſt otherwiſe, they alſo ſhould happē to fall into the ſame ſnare of ſeruitude with the Biſhop of Rome. And further, he gaue them to wit, that if he ſhould aſpire to that hee ſought for (that is to be an Emperour and King ouer kings) yet ſhould that be no ſtay of his inſatiable deſire, but would be as greedy and rauenous as nowe he is. Therefore, if they be wiſe, to withſtand him betimes: leaſt hereafter whē they would it ſhould be to late, neither were able to wͭſtand his tyrāny. The effect of this Epiſtle I toke out of Auētine which more largely dilateth the ſame: who alſo wryteth, that the Emperour (by his legates) ſent the ſame to Wenſeſlaus.

Boiemus relenteth at the Emperours letter.

The practiſe of Otho with the pope againſt the Emperour.

The Pope reſcript da- ſheth all th matter aga

By what meanes Otho attained ſo great poſſeſsions by the Emp. & his Aunceſtors.

Boiemus ſomewhat relenting at this letter, promiſeth to accompliſh the Emperors biddings and precepts: and forthwith gathereth the aſſembly of princes and nobles at Aegra: where, by commō conſent they thinke to renouate wͭ the Emperour a newe league and couenaunt. And furthermore, they finde Otho Boius (which was abſent, and wold not be at this their aſſembly) to be the author of this defection, and an enemy to the common weale. Otho, then ſeing himſelf not able to ſtand againſt Ceſar, and the other Princes with whome he was aſſociate, deſiring aid of the Pope by his letters, came with all ſpeede to Boiemus his kinſman: whome, when he coulde not perſwade vnto him againe, neither he would vnto their parts alſo be wonne: obtaineth notwithſtanding yet thus much at their hands, that the league and couenant (which they were in hand to make with the Emperor) might for a time be deferred, and yͭ an other aſſembly might be made: whereat he alſo would be, and ioyne himſelf with them. Thus had they, who killed (as you heard) his father, bewitched alſo his ſonne: and brought him to be both a rebell and traytor: In the meane ſeaſon, the Pope ſent his reſcript vnto the king of Boiemia and to Otho, tending to this effect: that in no caſe they ſhuld either forſake him, or els the church, to take the Emperours part. And ſomuch preuailed he by the meanes of Bohuſlaus and Budiſlaus (which were the chiefeſt of the Senate regal) and by his faire promiſes and bribes to ſuch as hee before had made to him: that againe at Libuſſa by Boiemus and Boius newe aſſemblies were gathered for the creation of a new Emperor, in deſpite of Auguſtus the Emperour, & Ceſar his ſonne. And whileſt that this was thus in hand, Cōradus Ceſar caſteth Landſhuta the wife of Otho (being abſent) in the teeth for great benefite & poſſeſſions which her huſband had and poſſeſſed by the aunciters of him: and that vnleſſe her huſbād tooke a better way with himſelfe, and ſhewed his obedience to the Emperour his father: that he ſhould not enioy one foote of that lande, which nowe he had by his predeceſſours. The promotion and dignities which Otho had by the aunciters of Conradus Ceſar came thus. Fredericus Barbaroſſa in yͤ yeare of our Lord 1180. at a Parliament holdē at Reginoburgh, condemned Henricus Leo of high treaſon, and depriued him of his dominions of Boiora and Saxonie, and gaue Boiora to Otho Wilteſpachius: for that hee had done him ſo faithful ſeruice in his Italian warres. After that, Ludouicus the ſonne of this Otho, obtained of this Emperour Fredericus the ſeconde, in recompence of his aſſured and truſtie fidelitie the dition of Palatinatum Rheni ſo called: which gaue alſo Agnetes the daughter of Henry Earle of Palatine to Otho hys ſonne in marriage. This Henrie was the ſonne of Henry Leo the traitor: vnto whom Henry the 6. the father of Frederick gaue in mariage Clementia his brothers daughter Cōradus Palatine of Rhenus, & gaue vnto him the keeping of the palace of the ſame. And as touching the inheritaunce of Boiora, that hee had alſo long now poſſeſſed by the heires of Otho Wilteſpachius. But to our purpoſe againe.

The gouernour of Agrippina reuolteth to the Pope.

At the ſame time alſo the gouernor of Colonia Agrippina reuolteth to the Pope: who not long after in a ſkirmiſh beweene Brabantinus & him, was vanquiſhed and taken priſoner. And doubtles, Fredericus Auſtriacus after he was receiued into fauour againe with the Emperor (keeping moſt conſtantly his promiſe and fidelitie renued) during this time, made ſharp warre vpon the Ungarians which tooke part with the Pope, & greatly annoyed them. As theſe things thus paſſed in Germanie: the Emperour, when he had gotten Aſcalum and led his hoſte into Flamminia, hauing Rauenna at his cōmandement: from thence came to Fauentia, which citie neuer loued the Emperour: the circuite of whoſe walles is 5. miles in compaſſe, & pitched his campe rounde about the ſame. And although the ſiege was much hindered by auſteritie of the time & weather (being in yͤ dead time of winter) yet notwithſtanding, through his great fortitude and courage, ſo animating hys ſouldiours in the painfulneſſe of the laborious ſiege, he indured out the ſame: who thought it no little ſhame hauing once made that enterpriſe, to come from thence without any aſſault geuen. And therfore, when nowe the winter (ſo extreme cold & hard) was wel neare ended, and the ſpring time now hard at hand, and by long battery had made the ſame in diuers places ſautable: The citizens (being greatly diſcouraged, & in no hope of the defence therof) ſent their Legates to the Emperor, crauing pardon for their offence, and that he would graūt vnto them their liues, and ſo yelded themſelues vnto his mercy.

The Emperours great lenitie and and clemency, but were merueilouſly enforced.

The Emperour hauing againſt them good and ſufficient cauſe of reuenge: yet for that his noble heart thought it to be the beſt reuenge that might be, to pardon the offence of vanquiſhed men: hee thought it better to graunt them their requeſts, to ſaue the citie and citizens therof, with innumerable people: then by armes to make yͤ ſame his ſouldiours pray, to the deſtruction both of the Citie, and great number of people therein. So doth this good Emperor in one of his Epiſtles Adacta nobis confeſſe himſelf: which Epiſtle, to declare the lenitie and merciful heart of ſo worthy a prince, if that with great & maruellous prouocation and wrongs he had not bene incited, I thought good in yͤ middeſt of hiſtory heere to haue placed. But thus I haue kept you long herein, and yet not finiſhed the ſame, In this ſiege the Emperour hauing ſpent and conſumed almoſt all his treaſure both gold and ſiluer: cauſed other money to be made of leather, which on the one ſide had his Image, & on the other ſide the ſpreade Egle (the armes of the Empire) and made a proclamation ẏ the ſame ſhuld paſſe from man to man for all neceſſaries in ſteade of other money: and therwithal promiſed, that whoſoeuer brought the ſame money vnto hys Eſchequer when the warres were ended, he would geue them golde for the ſame, according to the value of euery coyne limitted: which thing afterward, truely and faithfully he performed, as all the hyſtoriographers do accord.

The Emp. enforced to make his money of leather.

Thus, when the Pope as before is ſayde, had ſtopped his eares and woulde not heare the Emperours Legates that came to intreat for peace, but reiected and deſpiſed his moſt courteous and equal demaundes: neither yet had left any wily pollicy vnattempted or force vnpractiſed, ẏ with his confederates he thought himſelf either able to reuenge or els reſiſt: Hee by his Legates calleth to a Councell at Rome, all ſuch Prelates out of Italy, Fraunce, and England, as he thought to fauor him and his proceedinge: that hereby as his laſt ſhift and onely refuge, he by their helpes might depriue Fredericke of his Empire, as an vtter enemie to God and to the Church. All which things Fredericus hauing vnderſtanding of, & knowing that theſe aſſemblies ſhuld be but to the deſtruction & ſupplanting of him: determined to ſtop and let their paſſages to Rome, as wel by ſea as by lande in all that euer he might. So that, all the paſſages by land being now ſtopped & preuented, he commanded his ſonne Henry with certaine gallies to goe and keepe the coaſtes of Sardinia, which kingdom the Italians cal Entimum: and from thence to Piſas, and with the Piſans to rigge out a nauie to meete with (if it were poſſible) ſuch as ſhoulde come to aide the Pope at Rome. The Popes champions vnderſtanding, that by land they could not ſafely repaire to Rome: they procured of Gallies and ſhippes of Genua (hauing Gulielmus Braccius for their chiefe Capitaine or Admirall) for fortie ſaile their defence: thinking hereby, that if they ſhould fortune to meete with any of the Emperours ſhips or galleis, which ſhoulde lye for them in wait, they ſhould be able to make their part in good, and geue them alſo the repulſe. Encius in like maner and Huglinus (being Captaine and admirall of the Piſan nauie for the Emperour) launched forth to ſea with 40. ſhips and gallies: and betwixt the Iles of Lilium and Mons Chriſti, which lie betweene Liburnium and Corſica, they met with the Genewes ſhips: and ſtraightwaies fierſly began to grapple with them & bourd thẽ, in which fight at lẽgth, were 3. of the Genewes ſhips with boulged and ſonke, and 22. taken and brought away, with all the riches and treaſure in them. In theſe were taken 3. Legates of the Popes, wherof were 2. Cardinals, Iacobus Columna, Otho Marchio, & Gregorius de Romania, (all cruell enemies againſt the Emperour) and many other Prelates moe: beſides a great number of Legates and procuratours of cities, with an infinite number of Monkes & Prieſts, beſide of Genewes ſouldiours 6000. with diuers others.

A great victory on the ſea againſt the popes confederates by the Emperours nauy Pandolphus Colonutius in deſcribing the circumſtances of the great loſſe and miſfortune of theſe champions of the Pope by ſea, amongeſt the reſt declareth: that beſides the great pray and bootie which the takers had from them, they alſo founde many wrytings and letters againſt Fredericke, which much holpe him in the defence of thoſe cauſes, wherein they had laboured againſt him. The like miſchance alſo, almoſt about that time happened on the popes ſide, by the Emperours ſoldiours which lay in garriſon at Ticinum, thus. There went forth vpon a time out of Ticinum into the borders of Genewes, certaine bandes to geue them larums in the countrey: which bandes, the ſcuriers of Mediolanum (where lay a great garriſon of the Popes) diſcrying: tolde the Captaine of the towne, that nowe a very opportune and fitte time was to geue an aſſault to Ticinum: for that ſay they, the greateſt part are nowe gone a foraging. Whereupon, they immediatly calling together the captains and ſuch as had charge, ſet their ſouldiours in aray and marched forewarde to Ticinum. And now, when they were come almoſt thether, the Ticinian bandes (whome they thought to haue bene farre a foraging) were returned and met with them, & fierſly gaue a ful charge vpon them: who, being diſmaied at the ſodenneſſe of the matter, fought not long but gaue ouer and fled. In which ſkirmiſh was taken (beſides thoſe ẏ were ſlain) 350. captaines and brought priſoners into Ticinum with all their enſignes with them.

The Emp. obtaineth an other victory by land at Ticinum againſt the pope and his confederates

Newes hereof was brought to the Empero r not long after, who then was remouing from the ſiege of Fauentia as ye heard to the citie of Bononium thinking to haue deſtroied ẏ ſame. But vpon the hearing of theſe good newes, hee altereth his purpoſe, and thinking to haue hereafter a more cõuenient time therunto, leadeth his army towards Rome: and in the way, he reconciled to him the Citie Piſaurum. But Fanum, for that the townes men ſhut theyr gates and would not ſuffer the Emperour to come in, hee tooke by force and deſtroyed. For the Emperour, ſeing that neither by petition made to the pope, nor yet by his lawful excuſation he coulde doe any good with him: thought, that by his ſodaine comming thether, and with feare of the perill imminent, he might be brought to ſome vniformitie, & cauſed to leaue of his accuſtomed pertinacie. And although the Emperor was too ſtrong for him, yet for that he regarded nothing more then ẏ publike tranquillitie of the Empire, and that hee might then take the Tartarian warres in hand: if he could by any meanes conclude, he refuſed not ſo to intreate a peace with him as though he had bene both in force and fortune much his inferiour.

The Emp. thinketh to make the P. atrayde.

Whileſt that this ruffle was betwixt the Empror and the Pope, Ochodarius the Emperour of the Tartarians his ſonne, with a great power & prouiſion made and inuaded the borders next adioyning vnto him, & there wan Roxolanum, Bodolium, Mudanum, with diuers other cities, townes, and villages: deſtroying, waſting, & burning the countreis al about, killing and ſlaying, man, woman and childe, ſparing none of any ſexe or age. At whoſe ſodeine inuaſion, the people being in ſuch feare & perplexitie (hauing no citie, no refuge, nor aide to ſtande in defence for them) were faine to leaue all that euer they had, and diſperſe themſelues into woodes, and flee into mariſhes and mountaines, or where ſoeuer any ſuccoure els, did offer it ſelfe to them. And by this time, the Tartarian hoſte was come as farre as Vratiſlauia, where Henricus of Polonia and the Duke of Sileſia w their army met with them: who for the inequality of the nomber & ſmal ſtrength they were of, had ſoone an ouerthrow, and almoſt all their ſouldiours being ſlaine, they themſelues were taken and put to the ſword. From thence, they came to Morauia, & from thence to the kingdome of Boiemia: which Countrey, while the king kept himſelfe in ſtrong defenced fortes, and durſt not come abroade: he inuaded & deſtroied all Vngary, putting to flight and vanquiſhing Colmannus ẏ brother of Belus the 4. king of Vngary: by whome alſo, was great ſpoyle made in both the Pannonias, Meſiarum, Bulgaria, and Seruia, whẽ Belus the king of Vngary had gottẽ to Pola (which is a citie of Hiſtria) vnto Otho the duke of Dalmatia: He ſent his Legates to Fredericke the Emperour, promiſing that if he would ſend him aid that the Tartarians might be expelled: that Vngary ſhoulde euer after be vnder the iuriſdiction of the Emperour: which thing if he refuſed to do, that then the ſame were in great danger to be ſubiect to the Tartarians, to the no litle peril of the whole Empire. And ſaid further, that the cauſe wherfore he wyth more inſtance required the ſame, was: That ſo many chriſtian men and countreis, made ſuch pitiful lamentation in this their great calamitie & miſerie, & that there was none able to helpe them: which ſayeth he, is as great ſhame as may be to the whole Chriſtian common ſtate and Empire. And alſo ſayde, that if the malice of this barbarous people were not ſuppreſſed, that then he thought they wold make inuaſion vpon the Empire and prouinces of the ſame.

The vnmercifull crueltie and the great ſlaughter of Chriſten men by the Turke.

The K of Vngarie craueth ayde of themperour for the which he offereth him his lande.

The Emperor, although he thought it very requiſite, that with all conuenient ſpeede this miſchiefe ſhould be remedied and preuẽted: yet notwithſtanding, his great enemie the Pope with hys confederates, was the only let and hinderance therof. For when he ſaw and perceiued that he himſelfe could doe no good, and onely laboured in vaine in ſeeking peace with the Pope: he gaue commaundement to Boiemus and Boius, to intreat and perſuade wyth him: And (conſidering the imminent perill like to enſue by reaſon of ſuch ciuile diſſention to the whole ſtate of Chriſtendom) that he would take vp and conclude a peace, and mitigate ſomewhat his fierce and wrathful moode. Wherfore, when he ſaw furder that nether by that meanes of intreaty, nor any other, the Pope would deſiſt from his ſtubburne and malicious froward purpoſe: He writeth agaıne to the king of Hungarie, ẏ he was right ſory and greatly lamented their miſerable ſtate, & that hee much deſired to relieue the neede and neceſſity he and all the reſt ſtood in. But why that he coulde not redreſſe the ſame, nor ſtande him then in any ſtead, he blamed greatly the biſhop of Rome: who refuſing all intreatie of peace, could not wythout great perill to himſelfe depart out of Italie: leaſt that when he ſhoulde come to the aide of hym (by the Popes miſchieuous imaginations) he ſhuld be in perill of loſing all at home. Notwiſtanding, hee ſent Conradus Ceſar king of Bohemia & other princes more of Germany to reſiſt and withſtãd the enemie, as much as in them lay to do. The great army and nomber of ſuch ſoldiours, as ware the croſſe by the Popes aſſignement, deferred their iourney againſt ẏ Tartarians, and had commaundement giuen them by that Albertus (the Popes procurator) to tary and abide at home till they ſhould be called for in battaile to fight againſt the Emperour. This was the louing zeale and affection of the Pope and hys adherentes (to conclude) in this time of calamitie towards the Chriſtian ſtate and common wealth: That he had rather bend his force and reuenge his malice vpon the chriſtian & good Emperour, then either he himſelf to withſtande, or ſuffer and permit by concluſion of any profitable peace: that this moſt bloudy and cruell Tartarian ſhould be let and reſtrained from ſo great hauock, ſpoil, & ſlaughter of the Chriſten men. And yet forſooth theſe mē wil ſeme to haue the greateſt regard of al other to the Chriſtian preſeruation, and thinke to haue the ſupremacie geuen therin: what thing els is this, then manifeſt mockerie and deceiuing of the people? But notwithſtanding, euē in the midſt of this ſpoile and hauocke of Polonia, Bohemia and Hūgaria, was it determined: that at Libuſſa, the princes confederate ſhuld be aſſembled about the depoſing of the Emperour and creation of another.

The Pope had rather fight againſt the Emp. then againſt the Turke.

But nowe, notwiſtanding the prouident foreſight and wiſe pollicie of the Emperour (as you heard before) in reſtraining the paſſages both by the ſea & land, who had ſpeciall regard thereunto, and gaue moſt ſtraight charge that none ſhould paſſe without priuie ſearche and examination, as one hauing ſufficient triall as well in hys owne perſon as by the example of his predeceſſours, what great miſchiefe & diſſention by their Legates euery way ſent out they had procured, both to the Imperial ſtate and dignity, and to the whole cōūtrey of Germanie: yet found they ſuch meanes, and wrought ſuch pollicies, that they had not only ſecrete paſſage and repaſſage with their letters and ſpials into all places of Chriſtendome where they liſted, but alſo ſo laboured the matter and handled the ſame: that the long continued league of amitie betwene the French king and the Emperour, whoſe predeceſſors as alſo they themſelues had many yeares reuerently obſerued in Chriſtian concord & vnitie: was by this ſeditious prelate & arrogant vicar of ſathan, now either vtterly infringed, or els in variable ſuſpence: as by their letters eche to other, and heere vnder enſuing, are to be red and ſeene: which for the more probability of this hiſtory of Fredericke (not being long or greatly tedious) I thought mete here to intext and place.

The Emperor as well in his own perſon, as his predeceſſours haue triall of the Popes ſubtile practiſes.

The Epiſtle of the French King to Fredericke the Emperour touching the impriſoning of certaine Cardinals of Fraunce.

HEtherto noble Emperour, hath the good opinion and great confidence (many yeeres in mutuall loue eſtabliſhed betwixt vs) laſted and continued wel, hoping that no ſuch cauſe ſhuld riſe betwixt vs, to hatch either hatred or other occaſion offenſiue betwene your highnes empire & our kingdō. Eſpecially, ſeeing that al our predeceſsors Kings of France, late of moſt worthy memory (til theſe our daies) haue ben ſo zelouſly affected to the moſt high and regall ſtate of your Empire: As that alſo we, after whom God hath placed ſucceſsiuely to raigne as king, haue ben none otherwiſe minded nor affected towardes the ſame. None otherwiſe alſo on their behalfe, haue the auncient and renoumed Emperours of Rome our neighbours and your predeceſſours ſhewed themſelues towards vs (eche other eſteming the Empire and kingdom of Fraunce as one) and faithfully conſeruing together the vnitie of peace and concord. In ſomuch, that there hath not chaunced betwene them these many yeares, ſo much as one ſparke of diſcorde and diſſention. But this notwithſtanding, we for our parte cannot but greatly maruell, & not without good cauſe are troubled and vexed: That without deſert or any offence, you haue taken the Prelates of our realme vpon the ſea, making their repaire to the ſee Apoſtolicall: to the which, as well by their faith as their obedience they ſtande bounde and are obedient, neither coulde they withſtand the Pope his commandement: theſe haue you impriſoned, and ſo ſtill deteine the ſame. Whereat (we do your maieſtie to wete) we are not wel pleaſed, neither yet take it in ſo good part as you peraduenture thinke we do. For by their owne letters we vnderſtande, they had excogitate nothing preiudicial to your imperiall eſtate and celſitude, although the Pope had proſecuted therein more then became him to doe. Wherefore, ſeeing that there is no cauſe why ye ſhould detaine them: it is meete and becommeth no leſſe your magnificence, but that you reſtore vnto vs and ſet at libertie, the ſaide Prelates of our Realme: wherein alſo you ſhall appeaſe our grudge and kepe vs your friend, which accompt the diſpleaſure you doe to them, as our owne and proper iniurie For why, it were a great diſhonour to our Realme and Kingly eſtate, if we ſhould wincke hereat and ouerpaſſe the ſame with ſilence. Wherefore, if you wil conſider and reſpect the thing that we haue ſayde, we doubt not but that you will releaſe the Biſhoppe of Peneſtrum, with the other Legates and Prelates of the Churche, which you to our preiudice doe detaine. In deſiring of our aide doubtleſſe, we gaue vnto them a manifeſt nay: neither could they obtain in our kingdom any thing at all which, ſeemed to be againſt or preiudiciall to your maieſtie. Let therefore your imperiall prouidēce pōder in the ballance of iuſtice, thoſe things which we wryte vnto you, neither let our lawfull requeſt vnto you, be fruſtrate or made in vaine. For our realme and kingdome of Fraunce is not ſo debilitate or empoueriſhed, that it will be ſpurned at, or troden vnder your feete. Fare ye well.

The great amitie and long cōtinued league betweene the Empyre and kingdome of Fraunce.

The K. not without great allurement of the Pope would to haue written to the Emperour.

Here it ſhould ſeme the Emp. founde the fault of contradiction.

The reſcript of the Emperour to the ſame letter of the king of Fraunce.

OVr Imperiall magnificence hath peruſed your kingly letters: wherein, if we had not founde manifeſt contradiction, they might peraduenture haue obteined at our handes all that they required. But euen as with a little leauen a whole lumpe of dowe is ſowred: ſo a manifeſt vntruth alleaged, hath made the whole argument of your letter both faultie and vnſauerie. It is apparaunt that you wanted the vertue of mediocritie in the concluſion of the ſame your graces letter: For that, they themſelues bewray no leſſe, then we giue you manifeſtly to vnderſtand, & many moe beſides doth know. It is notorious alſo, and to al the world reuealed, in what ſort that Apoſtolical father hath impugned our innocencie, as well with the one ſworde as with the other. And howe, that whileſt we at his commaundement tooke our iourney beyonde the ſeas: the ſame our enemie and hoſtile aduerſarie, inuaded our kingdome of Sicilia: and the ſame not in one place or two, but in diuers & ſondry parts therof hath waſted, ſpoiled, and deſtroied. After this when with great intreatie at our returne from Aſia, we had concluded a peace with him: which with vs at his owne pleaſure he made. And had taken and receiued our deuotion for the ſame, which in ſeruiceable maner we graunted him: The ſayde Apoſtolicall father (that notwithſtanding) hath ſince that time, rather aggrauated his diſpleaſure towardes vs, then any thing at all qualified the ſame: and further hath to our depriuation and ſubuerſion, excogitate and deuiſed againſt vs, all the miſchiefe hee might or hath bene able, no cauſe in all the worlde geuen of vs to prouoke the ſame. And farther hath promulgated to our great defamation and ſhame (as well by his letters as Legates) the ſentence of excommunication againſt vs vnto all nations. Laſtly, hee aſpiring to our imperiall ſtate, and conſpiring our ſupplantation, hath made warre againſt vs, as againſt king Dauid Gods annointed: and hath vnto a priuate Councell for that purpoſe, called all the Prelates he cā get, as one that meaneth to ſet the whole world together by the eares. But ſuch is the maruelous wiſedom of God by whome we liue and raigne, beholding the wicked purpoſe hee went about (confounding the crafty in their craftineſſe) hath geuen into our hands as well your Prelates of the realme of France, as alſo of other regions and prouinces: al which, we impriſon and detaine, as enemies and aduerſaries to our Imperiall crowne and perſon. For where there deſiſted not to be a perſecutor, there hath not wanted alſo a ſufficient withſtander & defender. Let not therfore your kingly highneſſe maruell, although Auguſtus detaineth in priſon your French Prelates, which haue indeuoured themſelues to conſpire and ſo to diſturbe our imperiall eſtate and regiment. Fare ye well.

When Fredericke nowe ſaw there was none other remedie, and that in vaine hee laboured to haue peace wyth the Pope, hee proſecuteth his warre to the vttermoſt: and when he had gotten Tudertum and recōciled the ſame, he deſtroyed ẏ towne of Geminum and Marnia. and geueth the ſpoyle of them vnto his ſouldiors: He gently receiued the yelding vp of Siburnum, and waſteth all the countrey rounde about Rome. The Pope heerewith diſmaied and troubled with ſuch as otherwiſe diſſuaded and counſailed him, and that things not ſo well proſpered with him and againſt the Emperour as he wiſhed and deſired: being in diſpaire of obtaining his purpoſe, died for very anger and thought.

Gregory 9. dyeth for thought and curſt heart.

What opinion the Prelates of Germanie at that time had of this Gregory, is extant and to be ſene by the oration of Eberhardus Byſhop of Iuuauence that he made to the nobilitie of Boioria in the Parliament at Reginoburgh, written by Iohannes Auentinus in his 7. booke. Doubtleſſe he not onely brought great and ruinous calamities to the whole Chriſten cōmon weale and alſo Empire: whileſt he ſought thus to depreſſe & bridle the Emperour, & aduance his papal ſea and dignity: but alſo brought into the church of God much horrible impiety, blaſphemy and wickednes, wherof both Blondus, Platina, Baleus and others make mention: And amongſt others that moſt deteſtable Catilene Salue Regina in the which hee attributeth the honour and worſhip onely due to Ieſus Chriſte, vnto the virgine hys mother, mother. This is he in whoſe name the booke of the Decretals was ſet out, which (to omit yͤ opinion of diuers other learned men) Iohannes Baleus calleth it the ſinke or puddle of fooliſhneſſe and impietie. Doubtleſſe Charolus Molineus a man both of ſingular iudgement in that law, which in tribunall courtes & iudgements is vſed: as alſo in this painteth foorth the decree of this Gregory in his booke of annotations vnto Platina, whoſe wordes thereof are theſe. Certum eſt, multa capita in ijs mutila & decurtata eſſe, vt inuidioſum argumentum lateret. &c. That is, Doubtleſſe, diuers Chapters in the ſame booke of decretals be mangled & vnperfect, that many contentious arguments therein myght lurke. For when the ambitious deſire of raigning lyke kings tooke them, they ſtudied nothing els but how to enlarge and aduance their See and dominion with the Empire it ſelfe and other kingdomes (ofte ſhaken and weakened through cõtention) and this purpoſe and end had they and none other, in al their conſtitutions. The profe wherof, Molineus declareth in his boke de regibꝰ Galliæ & Angliæ. But many moe examples by the Emperors, Princes, and Lords Electours of the Empire may be gathered: wherof to ſpeake, more conuenient place ſhall ſerue hereafter.

Carolus olineus pon the decretals of .Grego- ry 9.

The creation nd death f P.Coeleſtinus.

In the ſteade of thys Gregorie, was placed Cœleſtine borne in Mediolanum amongſt the Caſtellians: who as Blondus declareth, by fained promiſes offred a league wyth Fredericus, and the 18. day after he was created Pope, he alſo died.

he Emperour prepa- eth an army o fight with he Tartari- ns, the Tar- arians flye.

Thus when the author of al this conſpiracy was gon, Fridericus nowe thinking himſelfe free and voyde of that feare which before he had, and durſt not be abſent out of Italy: with all his indeuour lenieth an army and prepareth his furniture and other neceſſaries for the deliuerie of the Chriſtians, ſo mightely oppreſſed as ye heard by yͤ Turke or Tartarians. Who hearing of the comming of the Emperour, left the ſtraight way thorough Hungarie, whyche they came & returned by the riuer of Danubium to Taurica, and ſo through the fennes of Meotida: and by the riuer Tanaum, into Sarmatia Aſiatica. When the Cardinals had nowe a long time protracted the creation of the Pope, and would not agree vpon the ſame: The Emperor put them in remembrance of their duty, and blameth them for their diſagreeing, and exhorteth them to be more carefull for the chriſtian common wealth. His 2. Epiſtles touching this matter are extant. Wherby appeareth that only for the care and deſire of peace he had to the chriſtian vnitie, and ſtate, he did the ſame: and for that (peraduenture) the cardinals refuſed to make peace with him, before they had created a newe Pope. The one for more breuitie I haue omitted, and here the other inſerted.

An Epiſtle Inuectiue of the Emperour vnto the Cardinals, for that they cannot agree vpon the creation of the Pope.

rederick gainſt the Cardinals.

VNto you I write, Oh you children of Ephraim, which euill haue bent your bowes, and worſe haue ſhot your arrowes, filthely turning your backes in the day of battaile. Vnto you I ſpeake, O you children of Belial, and diſperpled flock. You inſenſible people and aſſiſtents of the great iudge. Vnto you I wryte, O you diſſẽtious Cardinals, whõ the world for your deſerts doth hate: for whoſe cauſes the whole world being at variance is euill ſpoken of. Doubtleſſe, I cannot ſpeake vnto you, but to your detractatiõ, becauſe I am worldly and you ſpiritual. I am vnperfect, wherfore I muſt do as the vnperfect worlde doth: neither can the parte be diſſonant to the whole, nor I contrary to my ſelfe that wryteth. Attend ye therfore my rude Epiſtle, wanting the dignity of Rhetoricall ſtile. My prouoked tounge braſteth foorth into wordes before my conceiuing ſpirit hath deliuered the ſame: and ſo not attending to the higher regiment, hath haſtened to expres my words not fully conceiued or premeditate. Thus I ſay, a troubled minde oftentimes doth beget vnordered talke, and vntimely vttereth the ſame. This therfore is, that our heart hath conceiued, that we beleeue and all men confeſſe, that Ieſus Chriſt the mediatour betweene God and man, which came from heauen to make peace vpon the earth, is not deuided and at variaunce, being alſo the maiſter and Lorde of the Apoſtles. But Sathan being deuided in himſelfe, that bluſtering prince is amongeſt you, as thoſe to whome he miniſtreth: He, euen he, the perſwader of diſcorde and diſſention, that mankiller, father of lies, and ſpirite of darkeneſſe, that hath deuided your tonges, and ſet diſſention amongſt your ſelues: Neither ye doe good one to another, nor yet to the world, being by you in ſo perillous a ſtate brought. And the little ſhippe of Peter, which is toſſed vppon the ſea by vehement windes, you nothing regarde: which ſhippe, though it neede not in deede vtterly to feare drowning, yet ſuffereth it by your negligence many great ſtormes and perillous tempeſts. Doubtleſſe, if yee woulde diligently conſider howe the nations and people whome ye were wont to iudge in ſcorne, ſhake their heades at you: euery one of you would be aſhamed of an other. And to ſay the truth, they can not doe too much to detect your ſo deteſtable opprobrie: for whileſt euery one of you aſpireth to the chaire, euery one is at variance with his fellowe: and whileſt one of you cannot agree with another, none is promoted, & whileſt none is promoted, the Cathedrall dignitie vaniſheth: And thus by your diſcorde, the peaceable ſtate and concorde of the Churche is confounded, and the perfection of the faith and Religion whereby yee ſhould liue, periſheth. And ſurely, through your default it periſheth, ſo that where as nature hath placed the ſenſe and vnderſtanding to be: that partly like a monſter remaineth with you, both ſenſeleſſe and headleſſe. And no maruell, for why your hearing is impaired, and that ſounde of the mouth that ſhrilly was heard throughout the whole earth, is vtterly dombe, and become a ſcoffing Eccho. For why, the toundrings of Peter and Paule are now no more heard, the Preachers are become dumme dogges, and are commaunded to ſilence. Perhappes you haue handes readie to receiue, but there be no bribes: For why, thoſe that were wont to come from Saba, and bring golde with them, nowe come no more: ſeeing the Lord is not in the maunger, and the celeſtiall ſhining ſtarre refuſing to be their guide. Moreouer, yee want feete to walke withal, for ſeeing there is no man to geue you ought, you will not remoue one foote for any mans pleaſure. Fie ſhameleſſe people, the leaſt and ſimpleſt beaſt may learne you obedience, for the birdes haue their Captaine, and the ſillie Bee their King, but you will come vnder no gouernment. &c.

Peters ſhip y the diſ- entious Cardinals reatly af- flicted.

Peters ſhrill voyce turned into a ſcoffing Eccho.

The Emperour releaſeth the Cardinalls out of priſon.

The Emperour yet after thys, at the requeſt of Baldwinus, the Emperour of Conſtantinople, who came to Fredericus to Parma, releaſed the Cardinals out of pryſon: thinking therby not onely to gratifie the Emperour Baldwinus, but alſo thinking that therby things would haue the better growne to publique tranquilitie on euery ſide. When the Cardinals were all aſſembled at Augniat they made Sinibaldus a Genues Pope: whome by a contrary name for that he had determined (as I ſuppoſe) to be hurtfull to the common wealth, they called Innocentius the 4. Of which election, when Fredericke vnderſtode, he was well pleaſed therewith: And for that he had in all this troublous time bene his friend, he well hoped yͭ the Chriſtian common wealth, ſhould by him haue ben brought to much peace and cõcord. Wherfore, he ſent both his legates and letters gratulatorie vnto him, letting him to vnderſtand, howe wel it contented and pleaſed him that he was made Pope, & what peace & quietnes therby he promiſeth (as it were to himſelfe) he maketh full relation thereof: offring againe vnto him obſeruaunce, helpe and aide in all things, commẽding his dignitie to the publique ſtate and quietneſſe of the chriſtian common weale and Empire, &c.

Innocentius the fourth created Pope.

The Emperour reioyceth of the popes election but without cauſe why.

Hee alſo wrote hys letters to Otho Duke of Boioria, who a little before was reconciled to the Emperor: that he which was elected pope was a good man, a louer of peace, and ſtudious aſwell for the tranquilitie of the chriſtian cõmon wealth as of the Empire.

The Legates of Fredericke alſo with the furtherance of Baldwinus the Emperor of Conſtantinople, laboured very diligently for yͤ concluſion of the promiſed peace: And to be briefe, euery man was in good hope, and looked for no leſſe. But farre otherwiſe fell the matter out, and contrary to al their expectations. For the Pope (ſet on and incouraged by the Cardinals and other againſt Frederick) ſecretly and amongſt themſelues wrought contrary to that they openly pretended: and not a little diſappoynted both Fredericke and others of their expectation and good opinion they had in the Popes holines. For whileſt the Emperors legates attẽded the anſwer of their peace before promiſed, Raineus the cardinall went ſecretly to Viterbium wyth a certen number of ſoldiors, and toke the towne which before was on the Emperors part.

The Pope taketh Viterbium whileſt the Emperour hoped after peace.

The Emperor hauing vnderſtanding hereof, muſtereth his bandes, and with a ſufficient power entreth the popes dition, againe to recouer Viterbium. But yet, taking this war ſo in hand (not thinking therby to expel al conditions of peace) at yͤ requeſt of certaine of the Cardinals was contented to leaue Viterbium, being furniſhed by the Emperor of warlicke prouiſion before, and came to Aqua. From thence he ſent againe other ambaſſadors to Rome, & wyth them alſo the Emperor of Cõſtantinople with the Erle of Tholouſe, who he thought were able to do much with the pope in yͤ proſecuting of this peace. And although at yͤ time of Eaſter the matter ſemed to haue ben through, and peace concluded, for yͭ his legates had ſworne in the behalfe of the Emperor (and as he willed them) that he wold ſubmit him ſelfe to the Pope. And againe, for that the Cardinals and others, cõmonly called & named him Fridericus the Chriſtian prince, yet all this was no more but for a further fetch and purpoſe. Not for that they ment in dede to cōclude any peace wᵗ him, or to go through therewall, but that through this diſſimulation & likelihood of peace which they vnderſtode the Emperor much deſired: he ſhould ſet free & open the paſſages which he ſtraitly kept yͭ no man could paſſe & come to Rome, whether a great multitude daily reſorted & flocked for religions ſake. But when all came to all, & that the Legates perceiued no concluſion of peace, was ſimply purpoſed on their behalfe: they began to diſpaire of yͤ matter, letting the Emperor ſo to vnderſtande. The Emperor yet notwithſtanding doubted not, but if he might himſelfe ſpeake wᵗ the Pope, he vpon reaſonable conditions, ſhould wel enough accord with him: wherfore, he by his Legates and letters deſired him to appoynt a place where the Emperor might reſort to him. The Pope ſeemed to be contented herewithall, and appoynted a day at Feſcennia where they would talke together, & that the Pope would be there before him, and accept the Emperours comming. But the Pope in this while, had made a confederacy wᵗ the French king againſt Fredericus: who when he knew thoſe 3. gallies to be ready and brought to Centincellas, which he before had ſpoken for vnto the Genewes: ſecretly in the night with his company (haſtening thether in poſt ſpede) toke ſhip, and firſt came to Genua, and from thēce to Lions in Fraunce: where he (calling a Councel) with a loude voyce ſummoneth Fredericke, and appoynting him a day, commanded him there perſonally to plead his cauſe.

The Emperour hath too much confidence in the Pope.

The Pope mocketh the Emperour and goeth to Lyons where he proſcribeth the Emperour.

And yet, although he vnderſtood the ſodeine departing of him out of Italy, made plaine demonſtration of no concluſion or meaning of a peace: and alſo knewe the Councel which the Pope had called, wherein he was himſelfe both plaintife and iudge: and at the ſame councel thoſe which he had by bribes allured, pretēded the deſtruction of the Emperor: with many other ſuch euident demōſtrations, both of his enuious & hatefull heart towardes him: yet the moſt modeſt Emperor vſing the innocency & vprightnes of his cauſe, & as one moſt deſirous of peace and chriſtian cōcord: ſent the Patriarch of Antioch, which lately was come out of Syria, the B. of Panormia, and Thadeus Sueſſanus yͤ preſident of his court (a moſt ſkilful and prudent Ciuilian) to the councell at Lyons: which ſignified vnto them yͭ the Emperor would be there for the defence of his owne cauſe: and for yͭ the day was very ſhort, required a time more cōuenient for him thither to make his repaire. The Emperor alſo, being onward on his way & come as farre as Taurinum, ſent before other meſſengers (as the maſter of yͤ Flemiſh order, & Peter de Vineis) to geue them vnderſtanding of the Emperors comming, and that he wold proroge the day of hearing, till yͭ he might conueniently trauel thether. But for any thing that could be either ſayd or done, or vpon how iuſt cauſe ſo euer required: the pope wold not geue ſo much as 3. dayes ſpace, in the which time the Embaſſadors aſſured them of the Emperours preſence: As though there had bene no common prouiſo for euery man in yͤ caſe, by the lawe to haue vſed vppon any reaſonable let. What ſhould I longer protract the time: when the day by them appointed was come, the Pope wᵗ his confederates (whom for money & bribes he had gotten to that councell) againſt gods law, againſt chriſtian doctrine, againſt both the preſcript of the law of nature and reaſon, againſt the rule of equitie, againſt the order of law appoynted, againſt the cōſtitutions of Emperors, and alſo the decrees of yͤ Empire, without any obſeruation of the law, or graunting dilatory daies, wᵗout probation of any crime, or his cauſe ſuffered to be pleaded vnto, or heard what might be anſwered therein: taking vpon him to be both aduerſarie & iudge, condēned the Emperour being abſent. What more wicked ſentence was euer pronounced, what more crueller fact (cōſidering the perſone) might be committed? Or what thing more brutiſh & beaſtly could haue bene imagined or deuiſed? And yet hereat were theſe byſhops nothing aſhamed: but meaning to leaue their doings in wryting (as an impudent teſtimonie to their poſteritie) eſtabliſhed the ſame for a law to continue.

The Emperour comming to make his apparance before the Pope.

The extremitie of the Pope to the Emperour.

But marke what vengeance God toke vpon this wicked iudge. The wryters of the Annales recorde, that when Fredericus the Emperor, and Conradus his ſonne being Ceſar were both dead: the Pope gaping for the inheritāce of Naples & Sicile, and thinking by force to haue ſubdued the ſame, came to Naples with a great hoſt of men: where was heard in the Popes court manifeſtly pronounced this voyce, Veni miſer ad iudicium Dei. Thou wretch, come to receiue thy iudgemēt. And the next day after, the Pope was founde in his bed dead, all blacke and blewe as though he had bene beaten with bats, as before in the hiſtory of king Iohn is declared.

Vengeance falleth vpon the Pope for his falſe iudgement.

When the Emperor had vnderſtanding of this cruell & tyrannical ſentence of the Pope, paſſed and pronounced againſt him (conſidering his furious purpoſe & mind therein) thought good by hys letters to let all chriſtian princes & potentates vnderſtand, as wel what iniuries & manifolde diſpleaſures hee had ſuſteined by the 4. Popes in all theyr times, as alſo the cruelty and tyranny of this Pope in pronouncing the ſentence of iudgement and condemnation againſt him (paſſing the bounds both of iuſtice, equitie, and reaſon) which letter as he wrote the ſame, here vnder followeth to be ſeene.

The letter of the Emperour to the French King, and other Princes for the ſentence geuen againſt him in the councel of Lyons by the Pope and Cardinals.

ALthough we ſuppoſe not the contrary, but that both by true certificate and common rumour you haue heard of the indifferencie of our cauſe and good handling therof: yet for that more credite is commonly geuen to that the eye ſeeth, then to that the eare receiueth: we thought good to preſent vnto you the naked truth of ſuch things, which the Popes ſucceſsiuely haue put forth, & forged againſt vs. To the peruſing and conſideration of which my caſe and letter, I beſeech your gentlenes amongſt other times of laiſure, you wil ſpie out ſome fit and conuenient time therfore. And all other whatſoeuer that ſhall haue deſire to heare princes councels & affaires, let them in like ſort attentiuely conſider. Firſt, whether our predeceſſours haue bene deſtitute or not of godly zeale, iuſt dealing, & righteouſnes: or whether we may not lawfully reuenge our ſelues being ſo much prouoked, of ſuch euils and iniuries as haue ben wrought againſt vs. Secondly, let them conſider whether Chriſtes vicare doth followe Chriſtes ſteps or not, and whether Peters ſucceſſors do follow his example or not: and alſo, by what law, equitie & right, that ſentence which they haue pronounced againſt vs, may be maintained and allowed. As alſo what name they may iuſtly geue it, and whether that may be ſayde to be a ſentence which is geuen by an vnſufficient iudge or not. For, although we acknowledge that the Lord hath geuen full power in ſpirituall things vnto his Churche: that whatſoeuer the ſame bindeth in earth is bound in heauen, & whatſoeuer the ſame looſeth, is alſo looſed: yet we reade neither by Gods lawe, nor by any lawe of man, that we ought of duetie to be ſubiect vnto him: or that an Empire ought at his pleaſure to be transformed and tranſpoſed: or that he may geue any ſuch ſentence or iudgement to puniſh Princes temporally, and depriue them of their kingdomes. For why, although our conſecration belongeth vnto him by right and cuſtome (as he chalengeth) yet our depoſing and depriuing doth no more belong to him then doth that preſumption belong to any other prelate of other Realmes, which doe conſecrate and annoynt their kings, as the cuſtome and manner is. Or put caſe it were ſo (we nothing hindered thereby) that hee had ſuch power: Hath he that power to the intent to reuenge himſelfe vpon whomſoeuer his malicious minde conſenteth, and without all equitie and law to bring them vnder his iuriſdiction: He hath proceeded of late againſt vs as is ſayd, but not by the order of accuſation: for ſo much as neither was there any ſufficient accuſer, neither went there out any inſcriptiō or proceſſe before. Neither yet by denunciation, for ſo much as there lacked a lawful denoūcer: neither yet by the way of inquiſition, for that there went before it no manifeſt accuſation. But hee peraduenture will ſay, that all things that he layeth againſt vs were manifeſt and notorious, but that do we deny, and nothing to be notorious but that, which may by a ſufficient number of witneſſes be approued & tried. For ſo may euery iudge himſelfe (contemning the order of lawe) affirme what he liſt to be notorious, and thus condemne whom hee liſt. There were againſt vs (as well it may be ſayd in counſell) certaine falſe witneſſes although not many: of whome, the Byſhop of Calin was one, whoſe neare kinſman or nephewe (by our lawes condemned for treaſon to be hanged) maketh alſo to vs an infeſtiue enemie. With ſuch like effect proſecuting the reſt of his Epiſtle, which for breuitie ſake I omit.

This pollicie vſed the Pope to vexe and diſturbe both the countrey of Germany and the whole Empire, and not ſo onely, but alſo vtterly to deſtroy and ſubuert the ſame: by the ruinous decay whereof, the Pope and his Prelates thought to make vp their mouthes. And thus, whileſt that Germanie was nowe newly againe deuided, ſome taking part with Fredericke the Emperour, and Conradus Cæſar his ſonne & other nobles and princes of the Empire: ſome wyth thoſe that ſhoulde by the Popes procurement be the electors of the new Emperour: other ſome, with neither of both, as men not minding nor tending the publique vtilitie, but to ſerue theyr owne purpoſes, armed themſelues: And thus was the publicke peace and quiet brokē and diſturbed, and altogether in tumult and hurleyburley. For whileſt the one part laboured by all force to retaine the dominion by publique and common cōſent firſt to hym committed:

Altogether in hurly burly through the Popes malicious minde.

mitted: the other part in like ſort indeuored themſelues wͭ all their force & power to vſe and occupye the ſame, according to the decree of the biſhop of Rome, & to take it from Fredericke, and thus great conflicts grew on all partes.

Germany ſpoyled by ciuill diſſention through the Popes only practiſe againſt the Emperour.

By theſe ciuill warres, Germany ſuffered no little calamity: In euery place was mā ſlaughter and murder, the country ſpoyled, the townes and villagies ſet on fire and brent, the churches and temples violated & robbed, wherein the huſbād mē had put their goods & ſubſtaunce: houſes were pulled down, the goods deuided, & euery mans cattel driuen away. To conclude, in this turmoyle & cōtentiō of depoſing & chuſing an other emperor, in this factiō of princes, in this liberty of wearing armor, in this licēce of hurting & ſinning: The impudent boldnes of diuers priuate ſouldiors, & eſpecially of ſuch as were yͤ horſemē thē counted yͤ better ſort of ſouldiors, was ſo great: & there vnbridled & vnſatiable deſire in robbing, ſpoyling, and taking of booties, catching & ſnatching al that came to hād, ſo much: that nothing could be ſure and in ſafety that any good mā enioyed. Wherefore a litle before the death of Gulielmus the king, 60. Cityes and Townes which were belonging to Ludouicus Palatinus Duke of Boioria and Rhenus, and Otho his ſonne, and other princes, whoſe names Auentinus in his 7. booke of yͤ Annales of the Boiores maketh mention of: ioyned themſelues in a league for the expelling of theſe rebels & repreſſing of their ſo great iniurious rapines and ſlaughter of men. Of which armye the ſayd Ludouicus being captaine, chaſed & draue the whole rout of thē to the vttermoſt partes of Germany, and puld down and ouerthrew their caſtles and fortreſſes, and euery other place where they had intrenched themſelues.

The robbers and rebels chaſed out of Germany

The fidelitie of Otho to the Emp.

Otho Boius yet notwithſtanding, kepeth his promiſe and fayth moſt conſtantly made before to the emperor Fredericke and Conradus his ſonne. Whereupon, Philippus Iuuauenſis, Albertus and others, calling a councell at Mildorſus (by the Popes commaundement) ſent for Otho vnto them, vnto whom they opened the Popes pleaſure & commaundement. To all which, whē he had heard, Otho aunſwered: I cannot maruell at ſome of you enough, that when as heretofore you perſuaded me to leaue and forſake the part I tooke with the Biſhop of Rome, whome ye your ſelues affirmed to be Antichriſt, & that I ſhould take part with the Emperour: why that you your ſelues will not keepe your fidelity and promiſe made to thoſe good Princes: And ſayd that he perceiued in them a great inconſtancy and leuity, both in their woords and deedes, which now call that wicked, vniuſt, and violent wrong, but lately that they thought equall, iuſt & right. He ſayd further, that they were ouercome with pleaſures, corrupted with ſuperfluitie, wonne with brybes. gaping for honour and eſtimation: & that they neither regarded honeſty, godlynes, nor their duety and office, but ſtudied how to make diſſention and commotions, and longed after warre and bloudy battell.

The anſwer of Otho to the Legates.

He ſayd farther, that for his part he would obey God and his prince to whom he had ſworne fidelity, and that he naught eſteemed the fayned holynes and deteſtable practiſes of ſuch Prelates: He ſayd he beleued in Chriſt and would truſt in his mercy, & that he beleued how thoſe whom they curſed and gaue to the Deuill, were in greateſt fauour with God. Howbeit and notwithſtāding thoſe Prelates tooke in good part this expoſtulation with him, and ſeemed to beare Otho no malice or grudge for that he had ſayd, but to be deſirous of peace and vnity: yet not long after, Otho was curſed as blacke as all the reſt, and counted as bad as the beſt.

Otho excōmunicated for turning from the pope to take the Emperours part.

Albertus the pops champion now in Germany playeth not rex onely amongſt the citizens: But alſo bethought him of a miſchieuous deuiſe agaynſt Conradus Ceſar the Emperours ſonne. When by fraude and ſubtletye he had gotten and taken many of the rich Burgiſes and Citizens of Reginoburgh, which bare the Emperor good will and had ſent them priſoners to Staffum. Conradus ioyning with other noble men of the Empire (after he had ſpoyled and waſted much of his lands and others his cōpanions) draue him ſo neare, that vpon certayne other conditiōs he deliuered agayne the Citizēs. And ſhortly after comming again to Reginoburgh, and being receiued & welcommed into the Colledge of D. Haimeramus: Albertus with certayn of his confederates by the meanes of Vlricus a chief officer of the monks, came in the dead time of the night into the chamber, where the Ceſar with a few other about him did lie: And falling vpon them ſome they tooke, and other ſome they ſlew. & finding no other body in the chambers or lodginges, they thought that Ceſar had bene ſlain amongeſt the reſt. But he hearing the noyſe, forſooke hys bed & hid himſelf vnder a bēch and ſo eſcaped theyr hands. The next day he outlawd or preſcribed the biſhop and his mates, and alſo the monke bailif of treaſon, & ſeaſed vpon all the goodes of the houſe. But at the ſute of the guileleſſe monkes, he releaſed all to them agayne, taking by way of fine 100. pound. Vlricus loſt his office and Albertus thereby to eſcape daunger of puniſhment, tooke vpon him the habit of a Monke, Conradus Hochenfolſeus which was the murderer of theſe men (although he eſcaped the puniſhment of mans hand) yet the vengeaunce of God for yͤ fact, he eſcaped not. For as he rid in the day time abroad, he was ſodenly ſtroken with a thunderbolt and dyed.

Caeſar in daunger by Albertus.

Albertus to eſcape puniſhment taketh the order of monkery.

During all this buſy and contentious time, it may well be gathered, Fredericke the Emperour lay not ſtil, but had his hands ful: who notwithſtāding (by Gods help) ouercōming & ſuppreſſing theſe or greater part of theſe rebellious popiſh tumults, and had done ſtrait executiō (of thoſe eſpecially) that had conſpired agaynſt his perſon: calling a cōſell and ſetting in ſome ſtay the troubleſome affaires of his kingdome, came to Cremona with Fridericus Prince of Antioche, Richardus Erle of Umbria, the gouernor of Flamininia, and Encius king of Sardinia, with a great number beſides of ſouldiors & men of war. And beſids, he took with him (which he ſent for out of euery part) the wiſeſt, moſt vertuous, and beſt learned men that there was: thinking with thē to haue gone himſelfe to Lions to the Pope, and there to haue had with him communication as well concerning the ſentence definitiue, as alſo about the cōcluſiō of any peace, if by any meanes he might. And whē al things was prepared & ready, he took yͤ iourny in hād & came to Taurinū, hauing with him both a great army of ſouldiors & alſo a great cōpany of Legates and Ambaſſadors. From thence ſending his cariages before, within 3. dayes iourny of Lions: he was certified that Parma was taken & kept by the outlawes of diuers & ſundry factions of the Pope: his nere neighbors & frends: as by the popes Legate, and other citizens as of Brixia, Placentia, & ſuch like. Which thing when he vnderſtood, and that the Pope herein was the onely and chiefe doer: he ſaw manifeſtly it ſhould litle preuayle, to attempt any further the thing he went about: & thē at length, whē he ſaw no other remedy putting from him all hope of peace, determined himſelf to the wars with all his force and might. Thus altering his purpoſe & iourny, he took the ſtraiteſt way into Lumbardy: and with an army of 60000. men, he beſieged Parma. And to the intent he might more aptly and nere the town, plant his ſiege and battry, without diſturbāce: firſt he entrēched his campe and fortified the ſame about with bulwarkes & other defencible munition: After that, he cauſed diuers vitailing houſes & tauerns in his cāpe to be ſleightly builded of timber: and without the campe he appointed the place where the market ſhould be kept, & all vitailers reſort that would. He appointed places for their churches & tēples, & in ſeemely maner adourned the ſame: and for yͤ moſt part their tentes were builded with wood, ſo that it was like an other Parma. All which things when he had finiſhed, which was not long in doing: for this happy and proſperous ſucceſſe he called and named it Victoria, & had thought to haue made the ſame to be in yͤ ſtead of the City Parma, which he purpoſed to haue made leuell with the groūd. And in the beginning both there and els where, all thing proſpered well wͭ Fredericke & had good ſucceſſe: for he ſharply layd vnto their charges that defēded & kept the city Parma. And further Robertus Caſtilioneus which was the Emperors lieftenant in Picenū, nere vnto Auximum: diſcomforted the Popes army, & ſlue of them more then 4000. and tooke many ſuch as were of the confederate cities priſoners. And when the factions or cōpanies of the Gibellines and Gwelphes in Florentia were at controuerſy: whē Fredericus of Hetruria came to yͤ Gibellines to whom they had ſent for ayd: The Guelphes therewith diſmayd fled from thence to Bononia, whoſe goods & ſubſtance came all to the Emperors cofers, & Florentia alſo it ſelfe to the Emperors obediēce. But this good ſucceſſe and proſperous fortune laſted not long: for as at a time Fridericus to recreate himſelf (which ſeldom had his health) rod about the fieldes with certaine of his horſemē to hauke & hunt: Many alſo of the Emperors ſouldiors thinking nothing leſſe then of ſuch a matter to be attempted of a many ſtaruclings within the towne Parma, wandred & ranged vnarmed out of their City Victoria about the fieldes. The ſouldiors in Parma hauing this occaſion offered, with all force & ſpeed poſſible entred yͤ Emperors campe or towne Victoria, which being not very ſtrōgly fenced nor hauing gates to ſhut agaynſt thē, was a thing eaſy enough to do. The ſoden ſtraūgenes of the the matter much abaſhed the ſouldiors, & rang out their larū bell. The firſt aſſault was geuen vpō Marcus Malaſpina his charge, whom when the Emperor returning in all haſte foūd to be hard beſet, had thought to haue reſcued him. But whē that was perceiued of the enemy, they bet all their force altogether on yͤ

The negligence of the ſouldiers offereth an occaſion to the enemy.

ſide. In ſo much, that yͤ Emperor was inforced to take the trench, leſt he ſhould haue bene of the enemy enuironed, & from thence he retired into the citie or campe where he had thought to haue gathered further aide. But the enemy geuing not ſo much time therunto, with all force entred the citie Victoria. The Emperor now, when the enemies were entred, left the campe & came to Dominum, who when they had killed & ſlaine a great nomber of the Emperors ſoldiors, & had burnt & deſtroied the ſame campe Victoria, came againe to Parma. The Emperor then ſuſpecting this thing to be wrought by treaſon, whereby the enemy had vnderſtanding as wel of the Emperors abſence, as alſo of yͤ negligence of his ſoldiors, impriſoned certaine of the chiefeſt about hym, amongſt whome alſo was Petrus de Vineis. Yet whileſt he was at Dominum gathering together his ſouldiors and reſidue of his bāds: Encius getteth a great victorie of the Manſuanos, who cōming to the reſcue of Parma, loſt 50. of their ſhips and all that they had in them.

The Emp. vpon ſuſpition of treaſon impriſoneth diuers of his Captaynes.

After this alſo, Richardus in another conflict in Picenum, diſcomforted the Popes ſouldiors, & ſlewe their captaine Hugolinus, beſides 2000. others ſlaine & taken priſoners. When nowe Fredericus had gathered againe, and new muſtered his bands at Dominum, he marched forth to Cremona: and notwithſtanding, yͭ there he vnderſtode of the good ſucceſſe and victory that Encius had at Rhegium: yet for that he perceiued the defection and backſliding of all or moſt part of Lumbardie from him: he determined to take his iorney into Apulia, and when he had there leuied a ſtrong and ſufficient power, he purpoſed to make hys ſpeedy returne againe into Lombardie. Therefore, in hys iorney through Hetruria into Apulia, he ioyned with hys ſonne Fridericus, which beſieged Capras, and toke the ſame: and led with him diuers of the chiefeſt captains priſoners, and after that ſubduing vnto the obedience of the Empire Miniatum, he came into Apulia.

Capras beſieged and taken of the Emperor.

When newes was brought him thether, that Encius hys ſonne (comming to aide the Mutinenſes againſt the Bononiens) was taken priſoner, two miles of from Mutina: and that in his abſence, the Popes capitaines wͭ their bandes and garriſons went throughout all Lumbardie, Aemilia, Flamminia, and Hetruria, to ſtirre and procure the Cities to reuolt from the obedience of the Emperour: And the ſame, partly working by ſubtile pollicies, & partly by force & ſiniſter meanes to bring them to his purpoſe: determined with himſelf, that with all the force and power he might by any meanes procure and make, to haue begon a freſh & proſecuted this warre to the vttermoſt. Neyther was it to be doubted as Pandolphus Colonucius writeth, but that he would haue wrought ſome meruellous exploit & great attēpt, but that he was of this his purpoſe (whereunto he was both willing & bēt) preuēted by vnlooked for death. For whē he fell into this ague, being at a certaine caſtle of his in Apulia called Florētinū, & ſaw by the extremity thereof, his daies to be ſhort: he remēbred that which was once ſhewed him, how he ſhould die at Florēce. Whereupon, he made and ordeined his teſtament: and when vnto Conradus and other of his children he had geuen and appoynted the great and innumerable maſſe of mony which he had collected & leuied for the maintenance of his wars (and godly purpoſe as it is called) And vnto them alſo had geuen all other his kingdomes & dominiōs (to euery one according to their ages and yeres) departed this wretched and miſerable world.

The Emperour purpoſeth to make ſome great attempt.

The Emp. preuented by death Fred. one of Gods elect.

Pandolphus writeth, that Fredericus was very willing to dye, & as they made certayne report to him which were preſent at his death, that his minde was altogether ſet and bent vpon the heauenly ioy & felicity. Which thing alſo Gulielmus Putranus, Andreas Pandalus, and Manardus the biſhop, being Italian writers do all affirme of whom this laſt writeth, that he aſſuredly beleueth Fredericke to be one of the number of Gods elect.

Sundry opiniōs of the death of Frederick Emp.

The writers notwithſtanding are of ſundry iudgmēts & opinions touching this good Emperours death: Some write that he was traiterouſly poiſoned by his cup bearer, being hyred therunto. Some other, that he was ſtrangled with a pillow of Mãfredo the ſonne of Pherus. But Pandolphus as good a writer as the beſt, maketh no mention of any poyſon that was geuen him, but onely that he died of an ague. The laſt opinion of Manfredus, he manifeſtly refuteth and that there is no maner of lykelihood of the ſame: & further, that the cōtrary is affirmed by diuers other writers that were of that time. He died in the yeare of our Lord. 1268. the 13. day of December, in the 57. yeare of his age, and 37. yeare of his raigne, whoſe corpes was brought to Panormum, and there intombed.

Fredericke had 3. wiues: the firſt was Conſtantia, the daughter of the king of Arragon: of whom he begat Hēry the Duke of Sueuia and king of the Romains: The other Iole yͤ daughter of Iohannes Brennus, king of Ieruſalem, by whom he had the inheritance of Ieruſalē, Naples, and Sicile: of whom he begat Cōradus Duke of Sueuia, king of Ieruſalem & Naples being Ceſar. The third Iſabell the daughter of king Iohn of Englād, by whom he had a ſonne named Hēry, which is ſaid to die in his childhood. This Fredericus had not his peere in Marſhall affayres to be compared vnto him and warlike pollicies amongſt al the princes of that age. A wiſe and ſkilful ſouldiour he was: a great indurer of paynefull labors and trauels: moſt boldeſt in greateſt perils: prudent in foreſight: Induſtrious in all his doinges: prompt & nimble about that he toke in hand: and in aduerſity moſt ſtout & couragious. But as in this corruption of nature, few there be yͭ attain perfection: neither yet is there any prince almoſt of ſuch gouernment and godly inſtitution, both in life & doctrine as is required of them: So neither was this Fredericke, without his fault & humaine fragility. For the writers impute to him ſome fault of concupiſcence, wherwith he was ſtayned and ſpotted. And it appeareth that he was not all cleare therof, for as much as by ſūdry Concubines he had ſundry children: As Encius, the king of Sardinia: Manfredus, the prince of Tarentinū: And Frederick king of Antioche. And this is all that I finde of the deſcription of Fredericke by Colonucius, which he affirmeth to haue gathered out of good & probable authors. But as touching the haynous actes and flagitious deedes, which the Pope burdeneth him withall, and in his ſentence agaynſt hym, maketh mention of: Fredericus not onely purgeth himſelfe therof, but alſo diuers hiſtoriciens (as well Germain writers as Italiās) affirme the ſame to be falſe and of the Popes owne braynes, to do him ſkarre & teene withall, inuēted. Of which matter, thoſe things which Pandolphus (touching the commendation or diſprayſe of Fredericus writeth) I thought good out of Italian, to tranſlate: whoſe wordes be theſe.

The iſſue of Fredericke the Emp.

Fred. a moſt puiſſaunt prince in Marſhall affaires.

Frede. was not without his fault of humane fragilitie.

Albeit the Emperor Fredericus was indued with many goodly giftes and vertues, yet notwithſtanding was he accounted an enemy of the church and a perſecutor of the ſame: of which, both Innocentius the 4. in his ſentence hath pronoūced him guilty, & the ſame ſentence haue other Popes regiſtred in theyr ſixe books of Decretals, and ſtabliſhed the ſame for a lawe, howe that hee ought to be taken for no leſſe. Therefore peraduenture it ſhould not become me to falſifye or call in queſtion that, whiche other haue confirmed, or els to diſpute and argue much of that matter. Yet notwithſtanding as much as his actes & dedes in writing declare, & the books of the chiefeſt authors affirme, as alſo his own Epiſtles do teſtify: I cannot preciſely ſay, whether the biſhops of Rome ſo call him and iudge him therfore: Or els for that, he was ſomewhat to bold in ſpeaking and telling them but the truth, and reprouing the eccleſiaſticall order of their great abuſes. Or els, whether for that, he would haue had them gone ſomewhat more neare the conditions & liues of the auncient fathers of the primitiue Church and diſciples of Chriſt: Or whether for that, he defēded and ſtood with them for the prerogatiue and dignities belōging to the empire or not: Or els, whether they ſtood in feare & awe of the great power he was of in Italy (which thing in deede Gregory the 9. in a certain Epiſtle of his, confeſſeth.) But of theſe things let them iudge and diſcerne, that ſhall read the monumēts and hiſtories of Frederick Truely (ſayth he) when I conſider with my ſelfe that Chriſt (whoſe vicar the Romaine Biſhops boaſt thēſelues to be) ſayd vnto his diſciples: that they ſhould follow him and alſo intimate his example as of their maiſter and teacher: and commaunded them farthermore, how they ſhould not draw the ſword, but put vp the ſame into the ſkaberd: and farther gaue thē in precept that they ſhould not onely forgeue iniuries ſeuē times but 70. times ſeuen times to thoſe that offended them: And when I now compare the liues of the Biſhops of Rome, how neare they follow him whoſe vicar they ſay they be! And conſider ſo manye and greet conſpiracies, treaſons, rebellions, diſloyaltyes, lyinges in wayt, and treacherous deuiſes: So many Legates of the Popes (being Eccleſiaſticall perſons) which will needes be called the ſhepheardes of Chriſtes flocke, to be ſuche warriours and Captaynes of Souldiours in all the partes of Italy, Campania, Apulia, Calabria (being the Emperours dominions) in Picenum, Æmilia, Flamminia, and Lumbardy, to be ſent out againſt him. And alſo when with my ſelfe I meditate, the deſtruction of ſo many great and famous Cities, the ſubuerſion of ſuch common weales, the ſlaughter of ſo many men, and the effuſion of ſo much Chriſtian bloud: And laſtly when I beholde, ſo victorious, proſperous, and fortunate Emperours to be: and ſo many miſerable vnfortunate, and vanquiſhed Popes put to flight: Am perſwaded with my ſelfe to thinke and beleue, that the iudgements of God are ſecret and maruellous, and that to be true which Æneas Siluius, in his hiſtory of Auſtria writeth: That there is no great and maruellous lous ſlaughter, no notorious and ſpecial calamity (that hath happened either to the publick weale, or els to the church of God, of the which the Biſhops of Rome haue not bene the authors. Nicolaus Machiauellus alſo ſayth, that all the ruinous calamities and miſerable chaunces that the whole chriſtian common weale and alſo Italy hath ſuffered: hath bene brought in by the Popes and biſhops of Rome.

Fredericke. The popes church compared with Chriſt his Church as like as blacke and white.

Many Epiſtles of Fredericus there be, which he wrote vnto the Biſhops of Rome, to the Cardinals, and to diuers other Chriſtian Princes, all which I haue read· and in them is to be ſeene nothing contrary vnto Chriſtian doctrine, nothing wicked and vngodly, nothing iniurious to the Church of God, nothing contumelious or arrogantly written of Frederick. But in deede I denye not the ſame to be fraught and full of pitifull complayntes and lamẽtatiõs, touching the auaritious ambitiõ of the Eccleſiaſtical perſõs, and pertinacy of the Biſhops of Rome: and that he would receiue and take no ſatiſfactiõ, nor yet excuſe in the defence of the right and priuiledge of the Empire, which he maintained: alſo of their manifold and infinite cõſpiracies which they practiſed both ſecretly and openly agaynſt him: And of the often admonitions which he gaue to the whole multitude and order Eccleſiaſticall, to attend vpon and diſcharge their functions and charges. And who, that farther is deſirous to know and vnderſtand the trueth, and coueteth to ſearch out the renowmed vertues of magnificẽt Princes, let them read the Epiſtle of Fredericke dated to all Chriſtian Princes which thus beginneth: Collegerunt principes, pontifices & Phariſæi concilium: and an other, wherin he perſwadeth the Colledge of Cardinalles to take vp the diſſention betweene the Emperor and the pope, which beginneth: In exordio naſcentis mundi: and alſo an other which thus beginneth: Infallibilis veritatis teſtem: beſides yet an other: Ad Reges & principes orbis Chriſtiani: with diuers other moe wherein may well be ſeene the princely vertues of this ſo worthy a piere: all which Epiſtles collected together in the Latin tongue, the lerned ſort I wiſh to read, whereout they may picke no litle benefit and commodity to thẽſelues: In his Epiſtle laſt recited theſe are his wordes: Non exiſtimetis id me a vobis ideò contendere, ac ſi ex ſententia pontificia priuationis maieſtas noſtra ſit perculſa: Cum enim nobis ſit rectæ voluntatis conſcientia, cumq́; deum nobiſcum habeamus, eundẽ teſtem inuocamus id nos ſpectaſſe, cum totum ordinem Eccleſiaſticum tum præſertim primores, neruis potẽtiæ, dominationiſq́; eorum ſucciſis extirpatiſq́; tyrannidis radicibus ad primitiuę Eccleſię conditionem & ſtatum reuocaremus: That is. Thinke ye not that we ſo earneſtly deſire or craue this peace at your hand, as though our maieſty were terrified with the Popes ſentence of depriuation: When as God (vpon whom we truſt and inuocate) is our witneſſe, and iudge of our conſcience: that when we went about to reforme the Eccleſiaſticall ſtate, but eſpecially the ringleaders of the ſame; and ſhould reſtrayne theyr power and extirpate theyr great tiranny, and reduce the ſame to the ſtate and cõdition of the primatiue Church: we looked for no leſſe at theyr handes. For theſe cauſes peraduenture, thoſe which had the gouernement of the Eccleſiaſticall dignity, decreed and pronounced Fredericke to be an enemy to the Church: which (as I haue ſayd) I leaue others to iudge thereof. Hitherto Pandolphus Colonutius.

Deſerued commendation vpon the Epiſtles of Fred.

Fredericke purpoſed with the hazard of the imperiall ſtate to reforme the church of Rome.

And doubtles examples to the contrary doth appere, that Fredericke was no enemy to the church of Rome, for that he both gaue large and great giftes therunto, and alſo franchiſed the ſame with great priuiledges & immunities: which thinges, by his owne conſtitutions, ſtatutes, & cuſtomes may be perceiued and vnderſtood. But rather contrariwiſe, that the Biſhops of Rome moſt filthely recompẽced the ſame his great liberality and princely beneuolẽce again, which he gaue and beſtowed vpõ the ſame, as partly in the diſcourſe of this hiſtory you haue heard: who notwithſtanding, they ſo moleſted and tired him with ſuch & ſo many iniuries as you haue ſeene: he neuertheles, forgiuing and pardoning all the ſame, for the great zeale he had to the common Chriſtian wealth (wherof he more forced, then els of any other thing) ſought by all the meanes he might for to haue peace, although it wer to his own great hindrance. Therfore, ſeing he was of neceſſity by the Biſhops of Rome prouoked to that warr, if he did them any ſkath in reuenge of his Imperiall dignity, let them thank their owne ſelues, which might otherwiſe haue remedied the ſame. Notwithſtanding vpõ this occaſiõ diuers (both Italian and Germany writers, which at that time ſought for fat benefices, and euer ſince euen vnto theſe our dayes haue done the like, by flattery rather to obtaine that which they hunted for, then to beare true and faythfull teſtimony of things as they were in deed) took great occaſiõ to write, and ſclaunder this good Emperour. But let vs paſſe ouer theſe Paraſites and returne to thoſe, which although they themſelues were of that calling, I mean of the Eccleſiaſticall order: yet notwithſtanding, for that they rather preferred the ſtudy of veritye, and to reuerence the trueth before Popiſh authority, & flattering ſeruitude: greatly extolled and commended this good Emperor Fredericke. So did Nicholaus Cuſanus a Cardinall, in his writing affirme this Emperor to be an alter Carolus Magnus, both for hys wiſedome and alſo diligent regard to ẏ common weal. So alſo writeth Ægidius Biturigum the Biſhop, in his books of the inſtitution & bringing vp of a prince, which he wrot to the French king: exhorting him and all others, to take a patterne of this moſt worthy and excellent Prince. In cõmendation of whoſe worthy prayſe and vertue theſe verſes are written on his tombe.

Fre. ſhewed himſelfe no enemy but a friend to the Church of Rome.

Selfe doe, ſelfe haue, the prouerb is.

Hope of gaine allureth many to flatter and to write vntruthes.

Si probitas, ſenſus, virtutem gratia, cenſus,
Nobilitas orti poſſent reſiſtere morti:
Non foret extinctus, Fridericus qui iacet intus.

Wherfore, in as much as it appeareth by the approued writers of whom I haue made mẽtion: who & what maner of prince Fredericke this Emperor was: And for that he diligently labored as wel in the preſeruatiõ of the chriſten common weale, as in the conſeruation of the Imperiall dignity: procured to himſelfe the great hatred and diſpleaſure of ẏ Romain Biſhops (who haue ben, to all the good Emperors for the moſt part vtter foes and enemies) & with what wicked ſlaũders & other iniuries both by thẽ & by their miniſters they cõtinually moleſted him withal: This leſſon ought to be ours: that hauing the ſame in our memory, we imitate & folow his vertues, hating & deteſting the wicked & flagitious doings of thoſe holy fathers ẏ will ſo be called, & Biſhops of Rome: deſiring God that he will ſo guid the harts of all kings & Princes, that they may by his grace aduaunce and ſet forth his glory, and reforme the corrupt & vicious maner and order of ẏ Church to all ſincerity and purity both of life and doctrine.

These verſes which here enſue were ſent and written betwene the Emperor & Pope Innocentius the 4. which for that to the learned are both cõmodious and profitable at the end of this hiſtory I thought good to place.

Certaine preachers in Sueuia.

Ex Chron. Abs. Vrſperg. Crātz. lib. 8. cap. 10.

As ye haue heard of the iniquity & raging pride of the popiſh church againſt their lawfull Emperor: Now ſhall ye heare (Chriſt willing) how God beginneth to reſiſt and withſtand the corruption of that whoriſh Church, by ſtirring vp certaine faythfull teachers in ſundry coūtries: As in the countrey of Sueuia, about the time of this Emperour. an. 1240. or neare vpon the ſame, where were many preachers mētioned in the Chronicle of Vrſpergēſis, and alſo in Crantzius Lib. 8. cap. 16. & 18. which preached freelye againſt the Pope. Theſe Preachers (as Crantzius ſayth) ringing the Belles, and calling the Barons in Hallis of Sueuia: there preached that the Pope was an hereticke, & that his Biſhops and Prelats were ſimoniacke and heretickes. And that the inferiour Prieſtes and Prelates had no authority to binde and looſe, but were all ſeducers. Itē that no Pope, Biſhop, or Prieſt, could reſtrayne mē from their duety of ſeruing and worſhipping of God. And therfore ſuch cities or coūtries, as were then vnder the Popes curſe, might notwithſtanding lawfully reſort to the receyuing of Sacraments, as well as before. Item that Friers Dominicke, and Franciſcane, did ſubuert the church with their preaching. And as the indulgence of the Pope, & his Popelings was of no regard, ſo that remiſſiō, which they did preach vnto them, they preached it not from the Pope but as from the Lord. And thus much I thought here to recite, whereby it may appeare, how the reſiſting of the Popes vſurped power and corrupt doctrine, is no newe thing in theſe dayes in the Church of Chriſt. &c.

Reſiſtance againſt the Pope no new thing in Chriſtes church

Arnoldus de noua villa condemned of hereſie.

And not long after theſe aforeſayd, roſe vp Arnoldus De noua villa, a Spanyard, and a man famouſly learned & a great writer. an. 1250. whom the Pope with his ſpiritualty condemned among heretickes, for holding and writing agaynſt the corrupt errors of the popiſh Church. His teaching was, that Sathā had ſeduced all the world from the truth of Chriſt Ieſus. Item that the fayth (which then Chriſten men were commonly taught) was ſuch a fayth as ẏ deuils had: meaning belike (as we now affirme) that the papiſtes do teach onely the horicall fayth, which is the fayth Hiſtoriæ non fiduciæ. Itē, that Chriſten people (meaning belike for the moſt part) are led by the pope vnto hel. Item, that all cloyſters are voyd of charity, and damned: And that they all doe falſify the doctrine of Chriſt. Item, that the Diuines do euill in mixting Philoſophy with diuinity. Item, that Maſſes are not to be celebrated. And that they ought not to ſacrifice for the dead. Certaine other opinions there be, which the ſlaundrous ſects of Monks and Friers do attribute vnto him: (but as they are wont in al other to do) rather vpon enuious taking, then of any iuſt cauſe geuen.

Vide librum, de teſtibus Veritatis.

Ioannes Semeca the gloſe writer to the Popes decrees excommunicated.

And as this Arnoldus was condēned, ſo alſo the ſame time Ioannes Semeca, the gloſe writer of the Popes decrees, and Prouoſt of Halberſtate was excōmunicated, & depriued of his Prouoſtſhip, for reſiſting Pope Clement the fourth, gathering certain exactions in Germany. And therfore he appealed from the Pope to a generall councel, and had many great fauorers on his ſide, till at laſt both the Pope and he dyed.

Guilielmus de S. Amore.

Conſequently in this order and number, foloweth the worthy and valiaunt champion of Chriſt & aduerſarye of Antichriſt Guilielmus de S. Amore, a maiſter of Paris, and chiefe ruler then of that Vniuerſity. This Guilielmus in his time had no ſmall a do writing agaynſt the Fryers, & their hipocriſy. But eſpecially againſt the begging friers, both condemning their whole order, and alſo accuſing thē as thoſe that did diſturbe & trouble al ẏ churches of Chriſt by their preaching in churches agaynſt the will of the ordinaries and paſtors, by their hearing of confeſſions, and executing the charges of Curates and paſtors in theyr Churches. All the teſtimonyes of Scripture that make agaynſt Antichriſt, he applyeth them againſt the Clergy of Prelates, and the Popes ſpiritualtye. The ſame Guilielmus is thought to be the author of the booke, which is attributed to the ſchole of Paris, and intituled: De periculis Eccleſiæ. where he proueth by 39. arguments, that Friers be falſe Apoſtles.

The place of the Goſpell expounded, Goe & ſell all & come folow me.

Moreouer, he doth well expound this ſaying of Chriſt (if thou wilt be perfect, go and ſell away all thou haſt, and come follow me) declaring there pouerty to be inioyned vs of Chriſt, non actualem, ſed habitualem: not in ſuch ſort as ſtandeth in outward action, when no need requireth, but in inward affection of hart, when neede ſhall require: As though the meaning & precept of our Lord were not that we ſhould caſt away actually al ẏ we haue, but that when the confeſſion of the name of God & the glory of chriſt ſhall ſo require: that then we be ready to leaue & reliquiſh what things ſoeuer, for ẏ ſake of him. &c. As when he requireth in vs, after like phraſe, ẏ hatred of father & mother, and of our own liues: he biddeth vs not to dihonor father or mother, much leſſe to hate thē: but that thē, when caſe ſhall require, we ſet all thinges behinde the loue of Chriſt. Many other worthy workes he compiled, wherin albeit he vttered nothing but what was truth, yet notwithſtanding he was by Antichriſt & his rable, condemned for an heritick, exiled, & his bookes burnt: whoſe hereticall argumētes as they called them, that thou mayſt better iudge therof, here vnder I thought good to place.

Guliel de S. Amore condemned of the pope for an heretike.

Agaynſt falſe Prophets with ſignes to know them by in theſe his wordes do follow. For becauſe theſe ſeducers ſayth he, name thēſelues to be Apoſtles: and that they are ſent of God to preach, to abſolue & diſpēſe with the ſoules of men, by meanes of their miniſtery. Read the ſaying of ẏ Apoſtle in his ſecond Epiſtle to the Corinthians, the xi. chap. For ſuch Apoſtles are ſubtle and crafty workemen, diſguiſing themſelues to be like the Apoſtles of Chriſt: Therfore, we mean to ſhew ſome certaine infallible tokēs and probable, by the whic falſe Apoſtles may be diſcerned from the true preachers and Apoſtles of Chriſt.

The 1. ſigne and token to knowe a falſe Fryer & Prophet by.

The 1. ſigne or marke is, that ſuch as be true preachers do not enter into ſimple womens houſes ladē with ſinne and take them as it were captiue, as many of the falſe preachers do: as in the ſecond Epiſtle of S. Paule to Timothy the 3. chapter is manifeſt, ſaying: Of thoſe ſortes are they, which enter into womens houſes. &c. Therfore thoſe preachers which come into womens houſes, to the intent they may take thē captiue, be not true preachers, but falſe Apoſtles.

True Preachers do not deceiue men with painted flattering wordes.

The 2. ſigne and token is, that thoſe that be true preachers do not deceiue ſimple men with painted and flattering wordes, whereby they preferre their owne traſh and traditions, as all falſe Prophets do, as in the laſt Chapter to the Romaines appeareth, ſaying: By their pleaſaunt & ſugred talk. and by their bleſſing and croſſing they deceiue and beguile the hartes of innocent men and women. Glo. with gay glorious words they extoll & ſet forth their traditions, wherby they deceiue ſimple mē. Very greatly doe they deceiue the ſoules of ſimple men, which cauſe them to enter into theyr ſect, which they terme Religion. And they which before led a noughty life, by reaſō of their ignorance or ſimplicity: after their entrance, become ſubtle falſe deceiuing hipocrites, entring together with the reſt into poore mens houſes: yea & oftentimes become worſe then the other. wherupō Mat. 22. wo be vnto you Scribes & Phareſeis, hypocrits which go about. &c. Therfore they which do this, are no true meſſengers but falſe Apoſtles.

Signe 3. is, that true Apoſtles take in good part when they be reproued.

The 3. ſigne is, that the true Apoſtles if they be reproued, ſuffer the ſame patiently. 2. Cor. 12. ſaying: the tokens of my Apoſtleſhip are accompliſhed among you, in all patience & ſufferance, meaning that patience, which pertayneth to the maners of the preachers. Therfore they which ſuffer not correction or puniſhment, be no true Apoſtles, but rather ſhew themſelues to be no Chriſtians at all 1. Cor. 12. No man can ſay that Ieſus is the Lord, but by the holy ghoſt. Gloſſa. It is meet that chriſtians ſhould be hūbled, to the intēt that they may ſuffer themſelues to be reproued, and not to be holden vp with yea and nay. And alſo ſuch men do ſhew themſelues to be carnall, and not ſpirituall at all, although they fayne themſelues to be ſpirituall. Gal. 3. Therefore am I become an enemye vnto you? Notwithſtanding the Gloſſa ſayth: no carnall man will be reproued although he erre. wherefore, thoſe preachers which ſuffer not coroection, ſeeme not to be true Apoſtles, but falſe Prophets.

The 4. ſigne is, that true preachers commend not themſelues.

The 4. ſigne is, that true Apoſtles commend not them ſelues. 2. Cor. 4. For we dare not ioyne our ſelues, nor yet compare our ſelues vnto others which commend & boaſt many of theyr actes, when God alloweth none of them at all: Alſo true preachers although they be in deede prayſe worthy for theyr good deſertes: In the conſciences of men are they prayſe worthy, & not to the outward ſhew alone. 2. Cor. 3. we commend our ſelues ſayth the Apoſtle to the conſciences of all men: Then they do not commend them ſelues in cōpariſon of other, wherfore the gloſe ſaith vpon the ſame place: thoſe that deſerue no commendation but in compariſon of other, do chalenge to thēſelues other mens deſertes and prayſe: wherefore in the ſecond Epiſtle of S. Peter the laſt chapter it is ſayd. Euen as our welbeloued brother Paule according to the wiſedome that God hath geuen vnto him, hath written vnto you: Gloſſa. The chiefeſt of the Apoſtles hath here forgotten his papall authoritye, and alſo his keies that were deliuered vnto him: For he is aſtonied as it were at the great wiſedom geuen vnto his brother Paule. For in deede it is the maner of the elect children of God, to be more in loue with the vertues of other men, then with their owne: wherefore in the ſecond chap. to the Philipp. is writtē. Let thoſe that are ſuperiors eſteeme of themſelues in all humility. They therefore that do the contrary, ſaying that their ſtate or doings be better then other mens, although they be preachers, yet are they no true Apoſtles, in deed but falſe prophets.

Signe 5. is, that true preachers neede no letters cōmendatorie.

The 5. ſigne is, that true Apoſtles neede no letters of commendation: nor yet deſire to haue themſelues prayſed of men: as in the 2. Cor. 3. chap. the Apoſtle ſayth, we neede not the letters of commendatiō of any man: that is to ſay of falſe prophets.

Signe 6. is, that true Apoſtles preach not vnles they be ſent.

The 6. ſigne is, that true Apoſtles, doe not preach vnleſſe they be ſent, as in the 10. chap. to the Rom. how ſhall they preach vnleſſe they be ſent; Gloſſa. There be no true Apoſtles but thoſe that be ſent. For they haue no neede of Signes which are true witnes bearers, but thoſe that be not ſent and do preach, are falſe prophets.

Signe 7. is when thoſe falſe prophets preach that were neuer ſent.

The 7. ſigne is, for as much as falſe Prophets haue their authority in their owne names: wherfore, in the 2. Epiſtle of S. Paul to the Cor. it is written. For we dare not boaſt of our ſelues or make compariſon, Gloſſa. That is to ſay, with thoſe that be falſe prophets: not taking their authority frō God, but vſurping the ſame deſirous to beare rule, clayming in their owne name their authority. And therfore although peraduenture by preſumption they ſay that they are ſent of God, as all hereticks wil ſay: yet notwithſtanding, vnleſſe they ſhal proue theyr ſending, either by ſpirituall prophecy as Iohn Baptiſt did, ſaying: I am the voyce of a cryer in the deſert: As out of the prophet Eſay in the firſt chapter of S. Iohns Goſpell is alledged: Or els by myracles, as Moyſes did which turned his rod into a Serpent, and againe from a Serpent to a rod, as in the 7. chap. of Exodus: they ought for to be excommunicated, till ſuch time they ceaſe from preaching: Yet notwithſtanding, a miracle ought not to be a ſufficiēt teſtimony, of theyr ſending, for as much as they be done oftentimes and that of euill and wicked men. 1. q. 1. we may perceiue towards the end. But miracles ought to be ſuſpected, for as much as our Sauiour ſayth in the 23. of Mathew. Then ſhall falſe prophets ariſe, &c. Therfore, they which do chalenge authority in their owne name, for as much as they haue not theyr authority from God, they are not true Apoſtles but falſe preachers.

Signe 8. is, that falſe prophetes pretende great holines in ſuperſtition.

The 8. ſigne is, that falſe Prophets pretending great wiſedome and holynes to be in ſuperſtition, haue named theyr owne traditions to be religion, the which are rather to be counted ſacrilege or Church robbery, and doe vſurpe vnto themſelues the due deſerts of other men by boaſting and bragging among ſtraunge & vnknowen people. wherfore, the Apoſtle ſpeaking of falſe Prophets in the 2. chap. to the Col. ſayth: According to the precepts of men, which hauing a face of wiſedome conſiſt in ſuperſtition, interlaced with humility. Gloſe. That is to ſay, mingled with fained religion that it might be called religion, when in very deede, it is nothing els but ſacrilege, becauſe it is cōtrary to all authoritye: that is contrary to God himſelfe, that any man ſhould deſire to haue gouernment of a multitude without publicke commaundement, as in Deuteronomii 23. chap. Thou haſt entred into thy neighbors vineyarde. Gloſe. that is to ſay, into the Church of an other Biſhop. May a man warne & admoniſh others, or els correct that congregation which is not lawfull for him to gouern, nor yet to take ſo great a charge vpon him? no. And that it is not lawfull to enter into an other biſhops Dioces, it is apparant: becauſe it is not lawfull for the Archbiſhopp ſo to doe. To this effect appertayneth that which is red. 6. q. 3. And alſo it is written 9. q. 2. through out. Therefore thoſe preachers which agaynſt God and his diuine Scriptures do call their owne traditions religiō, are not are Apoſtles but falſe Prophets.

Signe 9. is, that when they neyther preach nor miniſter, yet liue vpon other mens labours.

The 9. ſigne is, by the authority which they haue. For as much as they be no preachers of ẏ goſpell or miniſters of the Sacraments, yet they will liue by the Goſpell, and not by the labour of theyr owne handes, againſt the text in the 2. Theſſ. 3. neither haue we eaten any mans bread for nought, or of free coſt, Gloſſa. Then, thoſe falſe Prophetes ought much more to liue by theyr labour, which haue not that authoritye which we ought to haue, that is to ſay to liue by the Goſpell. And S. Auguſtine ſpeaketh of this more expreſſely in his booke De opere monachorum, by theſe words, Thoſe our brethren do clayme to themſelues (very raſhly as me thinketh) that they haue any ſuch authority, to liue by the Goſpell. If they be preachers of the Goſpel, I graunt that in deed they haue ſuch authority: if they be miniſters of the aultar, if they be diſpoſers of the Sacraments: they cannot well but take to thēſelues this authority, as alſo manifeſtly to chalenge the ſame, if at the leaſt they haue not where with all to ſuſtayne this preſent life, without labour of their handes. &c. As though he woulde haue ſayd, if they be not ſuch maner of men, then haue they no authority to liue by the Goſpell. Therefore thoſe preachers, which haue not authority to liue by the Goſpell, or els miniſter the Sacraments, becauſe they haue no cōgregation wherby to take charge of ſoules, yet for al that wil needs liue vpon the Goſpell, they be no true Apoſtles but falſe Prophets.

Signe 10. is, that falſe prophets take that to them which pertayneth to the worde of God.

The 10. ſigne is, that falſe teachers, reioyce more to be commēded themſelues, then the word of God to haue the commendation & prayſe. But they that are true preachers and Apoſtles, are farre otherwiſe minded as to the Theſſ. 2. not ſeeking the prayſe of men. &c. And herin he toucheth thoſe falſe Prophets, which deſire rather to be commēded themſelues, then that the word of God which they preach ſhould haue the commendatiō, but he is an Apoſtle which not ſeeking the glory of this preſent world, but for the glory to come, doth abaſe himſelf to the intēt that ẏ preaching and word of God might be commended and exalted. They therfore which deſire to haue prayſe & to be commended of others, rather then that the word of God ſhould haue the prayſe, to be no true Apoſtles but falſe Prophets.

Signe 11. is, that falſe prophets doe preach for gaine and not for Gods cauſe.

The 11. ſigne is, that true Apoſtles do preach onely for Gods cauſe, and for the health of ſoules, and for no tēporal gayne as in the 2. Cor. 4. ſaying, we preach not our ſelues. &c. Gloſe. Our preaching tendeth not to our glory and gayne, but onely to the glory of Chriſt. But the preaching of Chriſt by thoſe that are falſe Prophets, tendeth to the contrary. wherupon in the Phil. 1. is ſayd: whether it be vpon occaſion geuē, or els for the verities ſake, let Chriſt be preached. &c. Gloſe. Falſe prophets doe preach the Goſpell vpon ſome occaſion, as either by ſeeking ſome commodity at the hands of mē, or els becauſe of getting goods, honor, or prayſe among men. which notwithſtanding, that they be ready and willing as it ſhould ſeeme to beare and ſuſtaine iniuryes: yet they ſeek not ſo much the health of him to whom they preach, as in very deed they do their owne commodity and gaine. wherupon. 2. Cor. 12. Gloſſe. Becauſe I ſeeke not the thinges that be yours; that is to ſay, not your treaſure as gold & ſiluer, but onely you your ſelues. Gloſſe. For otherwayes it could by no meanes be gathered, that they ſhould vnderſtand him to ſpeake or meane of theyr ſubſtaunce, becauſe he more eſteemeth them then theyr mony, to the intent that they might vnderſtand his great good will toward them. Therfore theſe euill and naughty preachers which preach for worldly gayn, or honor, or els for the prayſe & cōmendation of men, be no true Apoſtles but falſe Prophetes. But it may be aſked, how ſhall men vnderſtand when theſe good fellowes preach for their owne vayne glory ſake? It may be aunſwered thus, when they preach before they be called, as in the 2. Cor. 11. whoſoeuer boaſteth let him boaſt and reioyce in the Lord. Gloſſe. which thing to doe, cannot he by any meanes, that hath not his authority from God. For if any ſuch Prophet preach, he ſeeketh his owne glory: and that may eaſely be perceiued. Becauſe he is not called of God he hath no ſuch authority of him, that is to ſay, of his Church or congregation, as to the Heb. 7. No man taketh to himſelfe anye dignity, but he that is called of God as Aaron was. The Gloſſe. He is called of God that it is lawfully choſen of the congregation.

Signe 12. is, that falſe prophets doe counterfaite to loue where they hate.

The 12. ſigne is, or token of a falſe prophet is: Becauſe ſuch Prophets do counterfait themſelues to haue greater care, and loue to mens ſoules, then thoſe that be theyr very gouernors & paſtors haue, although they haue no charge at all of them, agaynſt whom the Gloſe ſpeaketh, and the 1. Theſſ. 2. we are become meek and louing towardes you, euen as the nurſe which geueth her child ſucke. Gloſſe. A woman nurſeth other mens children for wages & not for loue alone, but ſhe geueth her own ſuck of very loue without reſpect of mony. Therfore thoſe preachers which faine themſelues, to haue a greater loue & affection to the ſoules of men, then they that haue the charge ouer them, ſeeme not to be true Apoſtles. The Apoſtles ſtudye not for eloquēce nor for the curious placing of their words, but falſe Prophets do them both. As in the 2. Cor. 11. If the ſimple and vneloquēt man. &c. Gloſſe. The Apoſtles were not eloquent, but falſe Prophets are ful of curious eloquence. Alſo vpon the ſame an other Gloſſe. The Corinthiās were led away from the Goſpell by ouer nice eloquence, the 2. Cor. 7. Let vs ſhew our ſelues before all men as the miniſters of God. Gloſſe. The miniſters of God, do not flatter as falſe Prophets do. And for this occaſion thoſe that be true Apoſtles haue not theyr abiding in princes Courtes, and noble mens houſes, knowing this ſaying of Chriſt in S. Mathewes Goſpel. Behold thoſe that are clothed with ſilkes, dwell in kinges Courtes. And therefore true Apoſtles are not conuerſaunt in Princes Courtes and noble mens houſes. Gloſſe. Hard & ſtrait life with the preaching of the Goſpel loueth not to come neare Princes pallaces, and noble mens houſes. Often times it commeth to paſſe that Courtiers are found great flatterers. Therfore thoſe preachers that haue their abode in Courtes, or that in any other place do vſe to flatter, are no true Apoſtles but falſe Prophets.

Signe 13. is, that falſe prophets doe circumuent men to haue their goods, and care for nothing els.

The 13. ſigne is, that true Apoſtles or meſſengers, doe not circumuent or ſubtlely goe about to deceiue men, that they ſhould geue vnto them their goods: either in their life time or els at yͤ time of theyr death: as in the 2. Cor. 7. We haue falſly deceiued no man. Gloſſe. By the ſubtle and deceitfull getting away of your ſubſtāce as falſe Prophets do, which get away from you thoſe things that be yours, vnder pretence of great frēdſhip. Alſo Mat. 22. Wo be vnto you Scribes & Phariſeis you hipocrites which ſpoile widowes houſes, by your long prayers: which mean nothing els by your ſuperſtition, but that you may ſpoyle & robbe the people as in Luke. 20. which deuour widowes houſes, by diſſembling of your long prayer. Gloſſe. The which make ouer long prayers, to the intent they may ſeeme more deuout, & that they may get both mony & great cōmendation of all ſuch as be ſicke and troubled with the burden of theyr ſinnes: whoſe prayers be turned into ſin, which neither are profitable for themſelues nor any other. But rather ſhall haue for making thoſe prayers greater damnatiō, for as much as by the ſame they deceiue others. For by this that they receiue and take both golde and ſiluer, it appeareth that they preach not for ſoule healthes ſake, but onely for filthy lucre and gayne ſake. Math 10, Be ye poſſeſſoures neither of gold nor ſiluer. Gloſſe. If they then haue theſe thinges, they can not ſeeme, or be thought to preach for the health of yͤ ſoule, but for lucres ſake. And ſo ſayth Hierome vpon the Prophet Malachy. Becauſe ſome Prophets tooke mony, theyr Prophecy became diuinatiō: that is to ſay, theyr prophecy appeared not to be prophecie but diuination, or inchauntment: that is, that ſuch prophecy proceedeth not frō God, but from the deuill. And this appeared in. 1. q. 1. hauing this beginning Nunquā diuinatio. &c. Therfore theſe preachers which circumuēt and beguile men, to the intēt that they ſhould geue them their goods, either in their life time or after theyr death: are not true Apoſtles but falſe Prophets.

Signe 14. is, that falſe prophets can not abide to haue the trueth preached.

The 14. ſigne is, that falſe Prophets, when any verity is preached, which for the moſt part they are not acquainted with all, or that touched them: then begin they to chaſe and barke againſt the ſame, wherupō the Apoſtle in the 3. chapter to the Philippiās ſaith: behold the dogges. Gloſſa. Vnderſtand you that they are not dogs by nature, but by their vſage & conditiōs, barking agaynſt the truth, which they were neuer acquainted with. And ſo he cōpareth thē right well to dogges, becauſe dogs folow rather cuſtome, then reaſon: So falſe Apoſtles do keepe the cuſtome of the law, & do bite and barke againſt the truth, as though they were without the gift of reaſon. And alſo in the ſecōd epiſtle to Timothy, the 4, chapter, ſaying: They get them inſtructors according to theyr owne deſires. Gloſſa. Which may teach them what things they themſelues are willing to heare, becauſe the truth ſeemeth nothing pleaſant vnto them. Therfore, thoſe preachers which barke agaynſt the late reuealed truth, which toucheth thē very neare & therfore cauſe the ſame to be hidden & kept vnder: are not true Apoſtles, but falſe prophets.

Signe 15. is, that falſe prophets do inforce them to heare that are not willing to heare.

The 15. ſigne is, that the true Apoſtles doe not enforce any to receiue or heare them, which be vnwilling therunto: but ſend them away rather, leaſt they ſhould ſeeme to ſeek after ſome earthly and tranſitory thing. Math 10 Who ſoeuer will not receiue you, get you out of that Citty, and ſhake the duſt from off your feet. &c. Gloſſa That you may thereby ſhew, that the deſire of earthly thinges hath no power in you. Therfore, thoſe preachers which wraſtle & ſtriue as it were to that intent they would be receiued and heard, are no true Apoſtles: For as muche as the Apoſtle ſayth. Corint. 11. If any man appeare among you to be one contentious or full ſtrife: ſuch cuſtome haue we none nor yet the congregation of Chriſt.

Signe 16. is, falſe prophets doe cauſe princes to hate and puniſh them that will not heare them.

The 16. ſigne is, that the Apoſtles did not procure the indignation of thoſe princes with whom they were eſteemed and regarded, againſt ſuch perſons as would not receiue them and heare thē, according as we read in the life of Simon and Iude the Apoſtles: The chiefe ruler being very angry, commaūded a very great fire to be made, that the biſhops might be caſt into the ſame, & all other which went about to defame the doctrine of yͤ Apoſtles of Chriſt: But the Apoſtles fell downe before the Emperor, ſaying: We beſeech you ſyr, let not vs be the authors or cauſers of this deſtruction or calamity? Nor that we which are ſent to be the preſeruation of men, and to reuiue thoſe that are dead through ſinne, may ſeem to be killers of thoſe that be aliue. Therefore, thoſe preachers which ſeeke to ſtirre vp the diſpleaſure of Princes agaynſt them. (whoſe fauours now they enioy) that will not receiue and heare them, or rather whom they themſelues hate, are no true Apoſtles but falſe Prophets.

Signe 17. is, that falſe prophets do not knowe neyther what God hath done, nor yet will doe as true prophets do.

The 17. ſigne is, that the Apoſtles of Chriſt haue not onely the knowledge of thoſe things which God hath already done, but alſo of thoſe thinges which he will hereafter doe, as in the Apoc. 5. The beaſtes were full of eyes both behinde and before. Gloſe. Obtaining the knowledge of thoſe thinges which God had done, as alſo what he would do hereafter in the end of the world. Therfore thoſe that ſay they know not the perils of the church in the latter time which are prophecied afore: or that they care not for them, or els if they know thē not, they haue not eyes behinde and before, be no true Apoſtles. Therefore, what time as they call themſelues Apoſtles, they are falſe prophets.

Signe 18. is, that falſe prophets doe preach for money & are not to be diſcerned frō Wolues.

The 18. ſigne is, that true Apoſtles do not deſire the riches and goods of them to whom they preach, wherby they are diſcerned from wolues, that is to ſay, from falſe Prophets. Act. 20. I haue deſired no mans golde nor ſiluer: Gloſe. By this are wolues diſcerned, for they deſire ſuche thinges. And agayne in the ſame place: For thoſe thinges which I had neede of, and to thoſe which were with me theſe handes haue miniſtred. Gloſe. This example alſo of labouring, is a ſpectacle for Biſhops wherby they are diſcerned from wolues. For ſuch as aſke or beg of thoſe to whom they preach, or ſet any other to aſke or beg in theyr names: do ſeeme to commit ſimony: Like Gyezi, of whom it is red in the third booke of kinges the fift chapt. that craued certaine apparell of Naaman the Sirian, to whome his maiſter Elizeus had reſtored the benefit of health. Notwithſtanding, he had gotten thoſe garments, vnwitting to his maiſter. Whereupon Gregory Nazianzenus ſayth 1. q. 1. Qui iſti debetur. But ſome man perhaps will ſay: can not the preacher aſke money or money worth of thoſe to whō he preacheth? Or at yͤ leaſt, may not he beg? To this may be anſwered. If the preacher by authority preach and doth feed his flocke as a true paſtor with the food of Gods word, he may take money or money worth: but then it is not begging or crauing, but it is by authoritye: as the ſecond to Timothy the ſecond chapter: It is meete that the huſband man that tilleth the ground, ſhould firſt and afore other receiue the commodity of his encreaſe. Gloſe. He putteth the vertuous preacher out of doubt, not preaching for that intent to make marchaundiſe of the Goſpell, and geueth him to vnderſtand: that it is lawfull for him to take of them whom he feedeth as his flocke, what thinges ſoeuer he had need of: and doth it not in begging or crauing, but by good authority. It is manifeſt that it cannot in any place of the holy ſcripture be foūd, that the preacher ought to begge. But begging is forbidden of all the Apoſtles of Chriſt, and is abhorred of Salomon, and S. Auguſtine, & reproued by diuers other holy men. Therfore, it is manifeſt, that the true Apoſtles do not deſire the tēporall goods of them to whom they preach, neither do they beg or craue the ſame. They therefore that require any thing of them to whom they preach, or els that any other man aſketh for them, or in theyr names: do not ſeeme to be true Apoſtles, but falſe preachers.

If the Preacher do his duetie in preaching, he may take lawfully for his neceſſarye thinges.

Signe 19. is, that true Apoſtles doe not render euill for good as falſe doe.

The 19. ſigne is, that true Apoſtles are patient in tribulation: neither do they rēder euill for good, Mathew 10. Beholde I ſend you as ſheepe among wolues. Gloſe. They that occupy the place of preaching, ought not to procure any euill toward their Brethren, as the example of Chriſt teacheth. 1. Peter. 2. ſaying: Who when he was reuiled, reuiled not agayne, but did ſubmit himſelfe to him that iudged him vniuſtlye. They therefore that ſuffer not iniury, but rather do wrong themſelues, are not true Apoſtles, but falſe Apoſtles.

The 20. ſigne is, that true Apoſtles at their firſt com-

Signe 20. is, that true Apoſtles are not ſo well intertayned as falſe prophets be.

ming are euill intertayned, as the Lord ſayth, in the xxiii. chap. of Math. Ye ſhall be hated of all men for my names ſake: but yet at the length ſuch get the victory: According to that ſaying of the firſt of Saint Iohn the v. Chapter. Euery thing that is of God ouercõmeth the world. They therfore that in the beginning reioyce and are well intertayned, but in the end are reiected, ſeeme not to be true Apoſtles but falſe.

Signe 21. is, that true preachers build not vpon an other mans foundation.

Autoritie loueth them that refuſe her, and yet abhorre her not.

The 21. ſigne is, that true preachers goe not to preach vnto thoſe which haue preachers appoynted vnto thẽ, becauſe they haue not to reioyce of a company belonging to an other mans charge; as to the Romaines the 15. capter. I haue preached the Goſpell where Chriſt was not before preached, leaſt I ſhould build vpon an other mans foũdation. And in the ſecond Epiſtle of S. Paule to the Corinthians the x. chapter, he ſayth: we are no boaſters, nor buſy in other mens matters. Gloſe. where an other man had layd the foundation. Likewiſe in the ſame chapt. Not hauing pleaſure to boaſt of other mens labors, that is to ſay of thoſe which be committed to the gouernement of an other man. Likewiſe Auguſtinus ſayth. Honour ought to ſeeke thee, and not thou honour. Alſo Chriſoſtome: Authority is in loue with ſuch a man as refuſeth her, and yet abhorreth her not, They therfore that procure and haue deſire to preach vnto the people committed to an other mãs charge, which is an office of honor: eſpecially in counſels, Synods, and great aſſemblies, alſo in kinges and princes courtes, and Prelates palaces, are not true Apoſtles, but falſe teachers.

Signe 22. is, that true prophets are not proude and vaine glorious as falſe prophets be.

The 22. ſigne is, that true Apoſtles when they know themſelues to do much good in the church & congregation of God: yet notwithſtãding, are not puffed vp with pride. Ezech. 3. O ſonne of man, I haue made thy face as an Adamants ſtone. The Adamant ſtone when it draweth irõ vnto it, is not therby either lifted vp or altered. Likewiſe a true preacher when he draweth ſinners vnto him by hys preaching (whoſe hartes were as hard as iron) is neuer the more lifted vp or higher minded therefore. But as in Luke the 18. chapiter: when ye haue done all that ye can, and as well as ye can, yet ſay that you are vnprofitable ſeruauntes. Pſalme. Not vnto vs Lord, not vnto vs, but to thy name be geuen the glory. They therefore that do arrogantly boaſt themſelues of the fruite and benefit that they haue done in ẏ church of God, ſaying: we haue geuẽ light to the vniuerſal church, which was blind before our time, & we haue put out the flame of ſinne in the church of God (when perhaps they haue more furthered hypocriſy, then either truth or verity) they are not true prophets but falſe, of whom it is ſpoken in the pſalmes. The mouth of them that ſpeake proud things. &c.

Signe 23. is, that falſe prophets be alwayes mẽ pleaſers.

The 23. ſigne is, that true Apoſtles do not ſeek the fauor of the world, nor yet how to pleaſe men: As to the Ga. 1. If I ſhould pleaſe men, that is to ſay, if I had a deſire to pleaſe men, I ſhould not be the ſeruant of God, wherupõ to Tim. the 1. epiſtle & 2. chap. Not as men pleaſers, Gloſe. Seeking to pleaſe becauſe we haue not the pleaſing ſpirit. Therfore thoſe preachers that ſeek the fauor of ẏ world, & do labor to this intent that they might pleaſe men, are not true Apoſtles but falſe.

Signe 24. is, that true prophets eat what is ſet before them and geue God thãkes, but that doe not the falſe prophets.

The 24. ſigne is, that true Apoſtles when they haue meat and drinke they are contented, neither doe they deſire ouer dayntye fare, according the ſaying of Math. 10. chap. Eating and drinking thoſe things that are ſet before them. Gloſe. The goſpell condemneth not altogether coſtly and delicate fare, yet ſo alloweth the ſame, that if we haue meat and drinke, we ought not to grutch, but to be therewith contẽted. Therfore, thoſe preachers which although that neither they be ſent, nor haue authority to preach, and yet are offended when they haue not fine and delicate fare, are not true Apoſtles, but falſe preachers.

Signe 25. is, that falſe prophets do loue more their owne eſtimation, then that the word of God ſhould be truely taught.

The 25. ſigne is, that true Apoſtles doe loue more the law of God, thẽ their own eſtimatiõ amongſt their neighbors: According to that in the 7. chapt. of the Prouerbes. Keep my law as the apple of thine eie, & bind the ſame vpon thy fingers, and write the ſame in the table of thy hart: wherupon in the 119. pſalme. The law of thy mouth is derer vnto me thẽ thouſands of gold and ſiluer. Gloſe. Charite doth more loue the law of God, thẽ the deſire of gold & ſiluer a thouſand fold. He therefore that ſeeth the goſpell of Chriſt troden vnder the foot, which is the eternall glad tidings to be taken away by that curſed one, and doth neglect and contemne the ſame, or els peraduẽture conſenteth vnto the ſame, to the outward apperance of ẏ world: And yet becauſe he wil keep his temporall dignity and eſtimation, refuſeth not to ſtirre vp ſtrife and contention about ẏ ſame, and ſo to be euill ſpokẽ of: ſeemeth not to be an Apoſtle of Chriſt, but rather a falſe prophet, if he be a preacher.

Signe 46. is, that falſe prophets are not contented with neceſſary thinges, but looke after ſuperfluous.

The 26. ſigne is, that true Apoſtles ſeeke not after ſuch fine lodgings and wealthy habitations, where they may haue all thinges at theyr commaundementes: but rather ſuch honeſt reſting places, where they may haue neceſſary things for themſelues, with theyr good wils of whom they haue it. And they take nothing of ſuche, whome they ſee to be ſo ready and liberall in geuing: as that thinke the one doth him more pleaſure in receiuing the gift thẽ the other doth in geuing him the ſame. According to that in the 10. chapter of Mathew, ſaying: Into what city or town ſo euer ye ſhall enter, enquire out thoſe that be of good report in the ſame: & abide you with them, ſo long as you tary in the ſame City or Towne. Gloſe. Your hoſt with whom ye lodge, ought to be choſen by the good report of neighbors, leaſt your preaching be euill ſpokẽ of by reaſon of his infamy. Neither ought ſuch men to runne frõ houſe to houſe. But whome ſhall we call worthy or of good report? Gloſe. Him, who knoweth better to do other men good, thẽ to receiue a good turne of an other: and this is he which geueth willingly for Chriſtes cauſe, and not in reſpect of any commodity. Alſo true Apoſtles receiue nothing of ſuch mẽ as lie waltering in their ſins, but rather of thoſe that are waſhed and clenſed from their ſinnes wherupon the 2. to the Cor. the 7. chap. They haue geuen themſelues firſt to the Lord. Gloſe. Becauſe they now amẽding their olde errors and vicious maners haue vowed themſelues vnto ẏ lord, & afterward gaue of that which they had to their brethren. For otherwiſe, they ought not to haue taken any thing of them, becauſe gifts do blinde the eies. But thoſe that geue where there is no cauſe of reproofe in their doing, haue no iuſt cauſe to geue. Therfore thoſe preachers that ſeek how to come by dainty fare, & doe receiue bribes & rewardes of naughty men, that haue this world at will: to the entent that thoſe preachers may couer and hide their faultes, and get of others what they can by ſubtlety, which geue indeed rather to remoue the ſhameleſſe importunity of the crauer or els for auoyding of preſent ſhame, thẽ for any loue they haue to God: are not true Apoſtles, but falſe Prophets, according to that in the 2. to the Cor. the 9. chap. The Lord doth loue a willing geuer. Gloſe. He that geueth for preſẽt ſhame, or els for that he may be free from the importunacy of him that aſketh, doth looſe both his ſubſtaunce and merite: wherefore he that hath reſpect to theſe thinges, doth not ſeek the fruit and profit of the geuer, but the gift it ſelfe as the Apoſtle to the Philip. the 4. chap. ſayth. Seeke not the gift but the fruit or benefit of the geuer.

Signe 27. is, that thoſe that be falſe prophets, their belly is their God.

The 27. ſigne is, that true Apoſtles do not endeuoure themſelues to ſeeke & enioy the fruit of other mens labors that they may be fed thereby: becauſe that the belly is ſuch mens God, according to that in the 2. to the Theſſa. the 3. cap. we haue heard of ſome amongſt you which walk vnordinately: not laboring at al, but liuing delicately or idlely. Gloſe. of other mens labors, and deſerue they to be fed? The diſcipline of the Lord cannot away with that doing: for the belly is their God, which prouide to haue more thẽ neceſſary diſhes of meat. Therefore thoſe preachers which ſo do, are no true Apoſtles but falſe.

Signe 28. is, that true prophets reioyce not in miracles as falſe prophets doe.

The 28. ſigne is, that true Apoſtles do not reioyce only of the miracles, or other excellẽt works, which the Lord doth by them: but they reioyce rather of the ſaluatiõ which they looke for from the Lord, then that by doing thoſe miracles, they deſire any honor. According to that which is written in Luke x. ſaying: Reioyce ye not for that the ſpirits be ſubiect vnto you, but becauſe your names are regiſtred in heauen. They therfore that boaſt of their own miracles, or of any that belong vnto them, for this cauſe that they are ſaued by the doing of them, as many do ſay, ſeme not to be true Apoſtles but falſe.

Signe 29. is, that true prophets ſeeke not their owne glory as falſe prophets doe.

The 29. ſigne is, that the true Apoſtles do neuer ſeeke their owne glory in this life, but the glory of Chriſt, as in Iohn. 7. He that ſpeaketh of himſelf doth ſeek his own glory. But he that ſeeketh ẏ glory of him which ſẽt him (that is of whom he is ſent) is a true Apoſtle. Therefore thoſe which ſeeke the thinges that pertayne to the glory of thys world, of the which one is: To be aſſiſtent to thoſe ẏ beare rule and authority, according to that ſaying of Boetius De conſolatione. Thoſe that do deſire to be extolled, either they raigne & beare rule themſelues, or els do deſire to be nere about thẽ, that haue ſuch dominiõ. Another is, they deſire to haue the fame and victory, of that which they haue nothing at all deſerued before God. Whereupon is written that ſaying of the Apoſtle in the Gal. 5. Let not vs become deſirous of vaineglory. Gloſe. To be deſirous of vayneglory is, to haue victory without any merite or deſert: & thoſe I ſay that doe ſuch thinges ſeeme not to be true Apoſtles but falſe.

The 30. ſigne is, That true Apoſtles care not for the ſolemnities of men, neither their ſalutatiōs, nor feaſtings, nor any other benefite of theirs. They therfore which loue & ſeek the company and fellowſhip of men, their feaſtings, and other their commodities, do not ſeeme to be true Apoſtles but falſe.

Signe 30. is, that true prophets doe not force vpon the ſolemne ſalutatiōs of men as falſe prophets doe.

Signe 31. is, that falſe prophets reſort to other mens bordes, and flatter them for a meales meate which true prophets doe not.

The 31. ſigne is, that true Apoſtles do not commonly reſort to other mens tables, leaſt ẏ they ſhould for a meals meat become flatterers, as in the 2, Theſſalon.3. That we ſhould geue you an example to follow vs. Gloſe. He that cōmeth oftētimes to an other mans table, being geuē to idlenes, cannot chuſe but flatter him, which fedeth him: but Chriſtes religion calleth men to liberty, and to no ſuch bōdage. They therfore that reſort oftentimes, & that of theyr owne mindes to other mens tables (liuing idlely) are not true Apoſtles but falſe.

Signe 32. is, that true prophets doe not hate their enemies as falſe prophets doe.

The 32. ſigne is, that true Apoſtles do not hate theyr enemies, and ſuch as hate them: which doctrine the Lord taught Mathew.5. ſaying. Loue your enemies, do well to them which hate you. But falſe Prophets doe both hurt & defame their neighbors, according as S. Ierome.14. ſaith: The Prophets of Ieruſalem haue defiled the whole earth Gloſſa. They are not contented onely to hurt their neighbors, but alſo whō they before this time haue hated, they defame and ſpeak euill of, in euery place they come. Therfore thoſe preachers which hate them whome they thinke are their enemies, and do defame them, are not true Apoſtles but falſe preachers.

Signe 33. is, that true prophets do not perſecute men as the falſe prophets doe.

The 33. ſigne is, that falſe Prophets when they are examined, & proued whether they be true Apoſtles or liers, take that very greeuouſly. And perſecute all thoſe that can proue thē to be ſo. And alſo do ſtirre vp and prouoke other to perſecute the ſame men: which alſo ioyne thēſelues together by ſecular power euen as certain falſe prophets did in the primitiue Church, agaynſt the Biſhop of Epheſus: to whom the Lord ſayd in the Apoc. 2. I know, that is to ſay: I do alow thy workes and thy labour: that is thy tribulation, becauſe thou canſt not away with thoſe that be euill men. Gloſſa. But that thou haſt a deſire to amend thē, or els to expell them, and haſt examined thoſe, which ſay that they are Apoſtles, and are but lyers: and alſo haſt ſuffered this patiently. Gloſſa. The euils, which theſe falſe Prophetes ioyned together by ſeculare power doe bryng in: Are not the doinges of true Apoſtles but falſe Prophets.

Signe 34. is, that true prophets preach to thoſe which be not yet conuerted, which the falſe prophets do not.

The 34. ſigne is, that true Apoſtles go not to preach to thoſe which are cōuerted already by other men, but rather doe conuert thoſe which are not yet conuerted: leaſt that they ſhould build vpon an other mans foundation, as S. Paule, Rom.15, ſayth: I haue laboured ſo, that from Ieruſalem to Illiricus, I haue repleniſhed the Goſpell in euery place. Gloſe. That is, I haue preached the ſame aboūdantly, in whom the great vertue of the holy ghoſt appeareth: becauſe ſo many nations, that is, the Gentiles haue receiued the Goſpell by my preaching. But I haue preached the Goſpell there, where Chriſt was not preached before, leaſt I ſhould build vpon an other mans foundatiō. Gloſe. I ſhould not preach to thoſe that were conuerted by an other man. Alſo 2. Corinth.10. We are not ſuch as boaſt and glory in other mens labours. Gloſe. Where an other man layd the foundation: for that ſhould be to boaſt inordinately. Alſo in the ſame place: not thinking to boaſt, wher an other man hath gouernmēt, but in thoſe things which are put in experience. Gloſe. Of other preachers. Becauſe the Apoſtle did preach vnto thoſe to whō the Goſpell was neuer preached, that he might get prayſe by his owne proper labour. Therefore, thoſe Preachers which goe not to that people which haue neede to be conuerted, but to thoſe which are conuerted already, which haue apoſtles of their own: that is to ſay, Biſhops, and Prieſts, and yet do boaſt ouer an other mans flocke: are not true Apoſtles, but falſe Prophets.

Signe 35. is, that true prophets chiefly preach in their owne dioces, and not in other mens.

The 35. ſigne is, becauſe true Apoſtles when they are ſent, go to their own dioces, & not to an other mās dioces: euen as Paule being ſent, went to the Gentiles when he purpoſed to preach: Actes.13. Seperate Paule and Barnabas, for the buſineſſe whiche I haue choſen them vnto Gloſe. According to the appoyntmēt and decree of Iames, Cephas, and Iohn, went he forth to be a teacher vnto the Gentiles. But thoſe preachers that ſtand vpon theyr feet: That is to ſaye, thoſe Preachers whiche haue but ſmall worldly ſubſtaunce, for which cauſe they are more readier to goe which way ſo euer it ſhall pleaſe the Lord to ſend them: I ſay, the Lord hath ſent them to preache, not to thoſe which be ſufficiently learned, but to thoſe that are infidels, as we read in Ezech.2. After that, the ſpirit of the Lord ſet Ezechiel vpon his feet, in qua ſpem ſitus vnus tangitur, and he ſayd vnto him: O ſonne of man beholde I ſend thee to the nations which haue ſtart backe from their profeſſion: which haue gone from me, that is to the Iewiſh herretickes, and to thoſe nations which ſometime haue bene Chriſtians: as the Egyptians, the Babilonians, and all thoſe that obſerue the law of Mahomet. Therefore, if ſuch go to thoſe that are already inſtructed, & hauing both Apoſtles, biſhops, and prieſts of their owne: they goe not into their own dioces, but into an other mans dioces: and are not true Apoſtles, but falſe preachers. And it is greatly to be feared, leaſt the Church be in hazard and daunger by ſuch, vnleſſe they be thruſt out of the ſame betime: Euē as Ionas which whē he was ſent to Niniuy of the Lord, which is interpreted large or wide, and leadeth to the hill: that is to the Infidels we ſpeake of before. They go not to thoſe Infidelles according to the commaundement of the Lord, but they turne an other way, take their iourny into Tharſis, which is interpreted, ſeeking after ioy and pleaſure: That is, they goe vnto thoſe which receiue thē with ioy and gladnes, & do well prouide for them, that is to ſay, to godly and deuout Chriſtians: And therefore it is to be feared leaſt the ſhip in which they be (that is the Church) be in great perill, vnleſſe they be thrown forth. And therefore the Apoſtle ſpake of ſuch falſe Prophets, not without good cauſe. 2. Timo.2. And ſhonne thou thoſe. Gloſe. That is ſuch men as thoſe be.

Signe 36. is, that falſe prophets do attribute vnto themſelues that which they neuer did.

The 36. ſigne is, becauſe true Apoſtles doe not boaſt, neither do they attribute vnto thēſelues any other thing, but in that God hath wrought the ſame by them. Paule, Romaines 15. ſayth: I dare not ſay any thing, but that which Chriſt hath wrought and accompliſhed by me. Glo. That is, I ſpeake onely thoſe thinges (which by me) that is by my miniſtery, Chriſt hath wrought. They therefore that boaſt of many things, & do attribute much vnto thēſelues, which they neuer did, are not true Apoſtles, but falſe Prophets.

Signe 37. is, that falſe prophets do cleaue and leane to logicall and philoſophicall reaſons.

The 37. ſigne is, that true Apoſtles do not apply them ſelues, or leane to Logicall or Philoſophicall reaſons. Therfore thoſe preachers which do indeuour themſelues to ſuch kinde of reaſons, are not true Apoſtles, but falſe Prophets.

Signe 38. is, that falſe prophets do loue carnally and not ſpiritually.

The 38. ſigne is, that true Apoſtles doe not loue carnally or after the fleſh, but hate what thing ſoeuer doth reſiſt them in the ſeruice of God, as Luke.14. He that doth not hate his father and mother, his ſonne and ſiſter, and alſo himſelfe, he cannot be my diſciple. Gloſe. That is, he that doth not hate whatſoeuer doth reſiſt or let him in the ſeruice of God, is not worthy to be a Diſciple, neither can he abide in that office. Therefore for as much as true preachers are the true Diſciples of the Lord, it muſt needes follow: that thoſe Preachers which do promote their nephewes and kinſfolks (how vnworthy ſoeuer they be) to Eccleſiaſticall promotions and liuinges, contrary to the will of God: or do any other thing that letteth or hindreth them in the ſeruice of God, are not true Apoſtles, but falſe Prophets.

Signe 39. is, that falſe prophets do hunt after the friendſhip of the world.

The 39. ſigne is, that true Apoſtles do not hunt for the frendſhip of this world: for he that is the frend of this world, is the enemy of God. Therefore thoſe preachers which purchaſe the frendſhip of this world are not true apoſtles but falſe prophetes, Therefore, for as much as the Scripture is infallible, as in the 24. chapter of Mathew, ſaying: Heauen and earth ſhall periſh, but my words ſhal endure for euer. And the holy ghoſt which ſpake in the Apoſtle cannot lie: for prophecy (for the moſt part) is not ſpoken by the will of man, but the holy men of God ſpake by the inſpiration of the holy Ghoſt, as it is red in the firſt epiſtle of Peter the 5. chapter: It remayneth that all men which are bound to defend the Church, may riſe vp in the defence of the ſame, according to that in the 24. chapter of the Prouerbs. Deliuer thoſe that are led to death and ceaſe thou not to reſcue thoſe which are drawne to deſtruction. Neither may he alleadge vayne accuſations, becauſe it is ſayd in the ſame place: If he ſay he is not able, or ſtrong enough, he that beholdeth the thoughtes of mens hartes, ſhall know it. &c. What ſo euer periſheth in the Church of God for want of preachers: all that ſhal be demaunded of them at the day of iudgement: As Iacob confeſſeth to Laban, whoſe ſheep he fedde. Geneſis.31, I did reſtore all thy loſſe, and that which was ſtolne I made aunſwere for. I will demaund his bloud at thy handes. Ezechiell.3. This is ſayd, to the Paſtor or Prelate. But if the other things which we haue ſpoken of before could not moue the Prelates, and Cardinals: this at the leaſt ſhould moue them: Becauſe that then, the ſpirituall power which doth conſiſt for the moſt part in ẏ exerciſe of preaching, in hearing confeſſions, & enioyning of penaunce: ſhall be taken away frō them by litle & little. For by piece mele doth the wolfe deuour

Shall ſuche haue the temporall goods of the church which miniſter not the ſpirituall treaſure thereof? 1. Cor. 9. Know ye not that they which kill the ſacrifice ought to eate of the ſacrifice, & they that ſerue at the aultar are partakers of yͤ aultar? For as the body without the ſoule cannot ſtand, ſo corporall thinges without ſpirituall things cannot continue. 1. q. 1. if any ſhall take away the ſame. A deteſtable booke of the Fryers called Euangelium æternum.

In the dayes of this Guilielmus, there was a moſt deteſtable and blaſphemous booke ſet forth by the Friers, (mentioned alſo in Math. Pariſienſ.) which they called Euangelium æternum, or Euangelium ſpiritusſancti: That is, the euerlaſting Goſpell, or the Goſpell of the holy Ghoſt. In which book, many abhominable errors of the Friers were conteyned, ſo that the Goſpell of Ieſus Chriſt was vtterly defaced: which this booke ſayd, was not to be compared with this euerlaſting Goſpel, no more then the ſhell is to be cōpared with yͤ carnell: then darknes to light. &c. Moreouer that the Goſpell of Chriſt ſhal be preached no longer but fifty yeares, and then this euerlaſting Goſpell ſhould rule the Church. &c. Item, yͭ whatſoeuer was in the whole Bible, was in the ſaide Goſpell contayned. At length this Friers Goſpell was accuſed to the Pope, and ſo 6. perſons choſen of the whole vniuerſitye to peruſe and iudge of the booke: as Chriſtianus Canonicus, Baluacenſis: Odo de Doaco: Nicholaus de Barō: Ioannes de Sicca Vella Anglus. Ioannes Belim, Gallus: Among whom, this Guilielmus was one, who mightely impugned this peſtiferous and deuiliſh booke. These 6. after the peruſing of the booke were ſent vp to Rome. The Friers likewiſe ſent their meſſengers withall: where they were refuted, and yͤ errors of the booke condemned: but ſo, that the Pope with the Cardinals commaunded the ſayd booke to be aboliſhed and condemned not publickly (tendering the eſtimation of the religious orders, as of his own moſt chiefe champions) but that they ſhould be burned in ſecret wiſe: and the books of the forſayd Guilielmus to be burnt with all.

The eternall and ſpiritual Goſpell of the Fryers condemned with much a do of the Pope.

Beſides other his bookes, 2. Sermons we haue of his yet remayning, one vpon the Goſpell of S. Luke, of the Phariſy and the Publicane: the other vpon the Epiſtle, redde in the Church on May day. where in the firſt he reſembleth the Phariſeis to our Monkes, and that he proueth by all the properties of the Phariſeis deſcribed in the Goſpell. The Publicane he reſembleth to the Laity, ſuch as for becauſe the ſooner they are reduced to acknowledge their ſinnes, the more hope they haue of mercy. The other, becauſe they ſtand confident in their own righteouſneſſe, are therefore farther from their iuſtification. In the latter ſermō he ſetteth forth and declareth what perils and daūders be like to fall vpon the Church by theſe religious orders of Monkes and Friers.

Laurentius Anglicus condemned of the pope. Defenſio Guilielmi. Cauendum a pſeudoprophetis. The Pope Antichriſt. The ſynagogue of Rome to be great Babylon. Ex Nicolao Emerico in libro ſuarū inquiſitionum.

Among the other beſides of that age which withſtood the biſhops of Rome & his Antechriſtian errors, was one Laurēce an Engliſhman, and maiſter of Paris. An other was Petrus Ioannes a Minorite. Of whome the foreſayde Laurence was about the yeare of our Lord. 1260. Who in his teaching, preaching & writing, did ſtoutly defēd yͤ part of the forſayd Guilielmus & the reſt of his ſide agaynſt the Friers. Againſt the which Friers he wrote 2. bookes: One in yͤ defence of william afore mētioned: the other vpō this argument and title: To beware of falſe prophets. &c. Certayn other things alſo he wrote, wherin by diuers proofes and teſtimonies he argued & proued, that Antichriſt was not farre of to come.

The other, Petrus Ioannes was about the yeare of our Lord. 1290. which taught and maintained many things agaynſt the Pope: prouing that he was Antichriſt, and that the ſinagogue of Rome was great Babilon. He wrot vpon Mathew, vpon the Epiſtles, and vpon the Apocalips. Mention of this Petrus Ioannes is made in Nicholaus Emericus in Lib. Inquiſitionum. &c. And ſayth moreouer, that Michael Ceſenas (of whō Chriſt willing ſhall followe hereafter) took of him a great part of his opiniōs. And becauſe the pope could not burne him aliue, after his death he cauſed his bones to be taken vp and burned.

Petrus Ioannes burned after his death.

Robertus Gallus propheſieth againſt the Pope.

To theſe and with theſe aboue ſpecified, is to be added Robertus Gallus, who being borne of a right noble parentage for deuotion ſake, was made a Dominicke Frier, about the ſame yeare of our Lord aboue touched, an. 1290. This man, as appeareth by his writing, had diuers and ſundry viſions: whereof part is annexed with the viſions and prophecy of Hildegardis. His viſions al tend againſt the ſpiritualty of Rome. where in the fift chapter, he calleth playnely the Pope an Idoll: which hauing eyes ſeeth not, neither luſteth to ſee the abhominatiōs of his people, nor the exceſſiue enormity of ther voluptuouſnes. But only to ſee to the heaping vp of his own treaſure: & hauing a mouth, ſpeaketh not, but ſayth: I haue ſet good men ouer them, (which is ſufficiēt for me) to do them good either by my ſelfe or by ſome other. And foloweth in the ſame chapter, wo to that Idoll: woe to the mighty and proud, who ſhall be equall in all the earth to that Idoll? He that exalted vp his name in earth, ſaying: who ſhall bring me vnder? Is not my houſe compared with the mighty Potentates of the land? I am higher then Dukes: Knightes on their horſebacke do ſeruice vnto me. That which my Fathers had not before me, yͤ haue I done to me. My houſe is ſtrowed with ſiluer: gold and pearle are the pauement of my palace. &c.

The Pope deſcribed.

Agayn in the 12. chapter and alſo in the firſt, vnder the name of a Serpēt he paynteth out the Pope: whom he declareth to extoll himſelfe aboue meaſure, and to oppreſſe yͤ few that be godly, and to haue many falſe prophets about him, which neglecting the word and the name of Chriſt, do preach & extoll him only, obſcuring the name of Chriſt. The church of Rome and the Pope he deſcribeth in theſe words: I was praying (ſayd he) on my knees, looking vpward to heauen, nere to the aulter of S. Iames in Paris, on the right ſide of the aultar: & ſaw in the ayre before me the body of a certain high biſhop all clothed in white ſilke, who turning his backe on the Eaſt, lift vp his hand toward the weſt, as the Prieſtes are wont in theyr Maſſe turning to the people, but his head was not ſeene. And as I was conſidering aduiſedly whether he had any head or no: I perceiued a certayne head in him all dry, leane & withered, as though it had bene a head of wood. And the ſpirit of the Lord ſayd to me: This ſignifieth the ſtate of the Church of Rome.

The viſions of Robertus Gallus.

The ſtate of the church of Rome deſcribed.

Moreouer, the ſame author in his viſions well deſcribing the maner of the ſchole ſophiſters, and Sorboniſts, addeth in this wiſe. An other day as I was in like contēplation as before, I beheld in ſpirit: and beholde I ſaw a man apparelled like to the other before: which wēt about, hauing fine bread, and excellent wine, that hanged about him on both ſides. And the ſame hauing in his hand a lōg and an hard flint ſtone, was gnawing hungerly vpon the ſame, as one being hungry is wont to bite vpon a loafe of bread. Out of the which ſtone came two heads of two ſerpentes, the ſpirit of the Lord inſtructing me, and ſaying: This ſtone purporteth the friuolous, intricate, & curious queſtions, wherein the hungry do trauaile and labor, leauing the ſubſtauntiall foode of their ſoules. And I aſked, what theſe two heads did meane. And he ſayd, The name of the one is vaine glory, the name of the other is the marring and diſſipation of religion.

The ſcholemen and the friuolous queſtions deſcribed.

Alſo, concerning reformation of the church, this viſion he declareth: It happened as I was (ſayth he) in the ſame City in the houſe of a certaine noble man (a Britaine) and was there ſpeaking with certayne: I ſaw a croſſe of ſiluer very bright, much like to the Croſſe of the Earle of Tholouſe. But the 12. apples which did hang beſide in the armes of the croſſe, were very vile, like the apples which the ſea is wont to caſt vp. And I ſayd: what is this Lord Ieſu? and the ſpirit anſwered me: This croſſe which thou ſeeſt is the church, which ſhal be cleare and bright in purenes of life, and ſhall be heard and known all ouer through the ſhrill voice of the preaching of ſincere verity. Then being troubled with the apples, I aſked, what theſe apples ſo vile did ſignify? and he ſaid: it is the humiliation of the Church. &c.

The reformation of the church prefignified.

This godly man did forewarne (as in a certain chronicle is declared) how God would puniſh the ſimony and auarice of the clergy with ſuch a plague, that riuers ſhould runne with bloud. &c. It is ſayd, that there is remayning a great volume of his viſions, whiche are not yet abroad: for theſe that be abroad, are but a briefe extract out of hys viſions and reuelations.

The ſimonie and auarice of the clergie to be puniſhed.

named Robert Groſted, a man famouſly learned (as that time ſerued) in the three toungs, both Latin, Greeke, and Hebrue, alſo in all liberall ſciences. Whoſe works & Sermons, yet this day are extant, which I haue ſeene in the Queenes Maieſtyes Library at Weſtminſter. Wherein is one ſpeciall Sermon writtē and exhibited in foure ſundry ſkrolles to the pope, and to other foure Cardinals, beginning Dominus noſter Ieſus Chriſtus. &c. Nicolas Triuet in his chronicle writing of this biſhop, affirmeth that he was borne in Suffolke, in the Dioces of Northfolke: who geuing him the prayſe to be a man of excellent wiſedome, of profound doctrine, & an example of all vertue: witneſſeth, that he being maiſter of Arte, wrote firſt a Commentary in librum poſteriorum of Ariſtotle. Alſo that he wrote Tractations de ſphera, & de arte comput. And that he ſet forth diuers books concerning Philoſophy. Afterward being Doctor in Diuinity, and expertly ſeene in all the 3. tongues, drew out ſundry Treatiſes out of the Hebrue gloſes: alſo tranſlated diuers works out of the Greeke, as namely the Teſtamentes of the xij. Patriarches, & the bookes of Dioniſius, commenting vpon the new tranſlation with hys owne gloſe. Hæc ille. Many other workes and volumes beſides were written by the ſaid Groſted, as De oculo morali, de Dotibus, De ceſſatione legalium, paruus Cato, Annotationes in Suidam, in Boetium, De poteſtate paſtorali, expoſitiones in Geneſ. in Lucam, with a number mo, beſides diuers Epiſtles, Sermons, and Inuections ſent to the Pope, for his vnmeaſurable exactions, wherwith he ouercharged & oppreſſed the Church of England.

The death of R.Groſtede.

Malleus Romanorum Groſthedus.

This godly and learned Biſhop after diuers conflicts and agonies ſuſtayned agaynſt the Biſhop of Rome: after the example of Fredericke: of Guiliel. de ſancto amore, of Nico. Gallus and other after minded: at length after great labors and trauells of life, finiſhed his courſe, & departed at Buckdone in the moneth of Octob. an. 1253. Of his deceaſe thus writeth Mat. Pariſienſ. pag. 278. Out of the priſon and baniſhmēt of this world (which he neuer loued) was takē ẏ holy biſhop of Lincolne Robert, at his manor of Buckdone in the euen of S. Dioniſe: who was an open reprouer of the Pope and of the King: a rebuker of the prelats, a corrector of the Monkes, director of the Prieſtes, inſtructor of the clerkes, fautor of ſcholers, a preacher to the people, perſecutor to the incontinent, a diligent ſearcher of the Scriptures. A malle to the Romaines, and a contemner of theyr doings. &c. Hæc Mat. What a malle hee was to the Romaines, in the ſequele hereof (Chriſt willing) ſhall better appeare. The ſtory is this.

The trouble of R.Groſt. with the Pope.

It ſo befell, among other dayly and intollerable exactions wherein Pope Innocēt was greuous and iniurious (manifold wayes) to the Realme of England: he had a certaine coſin or nephew (ſo Popes were wont to call theyr ſonnes) named Fredericke, being yet yoūg & vnder yeres: whom the ſaid Innocent the Pope would needs preferre to be a Canon or Prebendary in the church of Lincolne, in this time of Robert Biſhop of the ſayd Church. And vpō the ſame directed down letters to certayn his factors here in England for the execution thereof. The copy of which letter, by chaunce, yet not by chaunce, but by the oportune ſending of God, came to my hādes, as I was pēning this preſent ſtorye, written in the ende of an olde parchment book and otherwiſe rare I ſuppoſe to be foūd. As is this.

An vnreaſonable letter of the Pope.

The Popes vnreaſonable letter.

Excommunications abuſed.

Vnto our welbeloued ſonnes the Archdeacon of Cant. & to maiſter Innocent our ſcribe abiding in England: greting and Apoſtolicall benedictiō. For ſo much as our welbeloued ſonne G. of S. Euſtace Deacon Cardinal, vpon our ſpeciall commaūdemēt hath geuen and graunted to our welbeloued ſonne Frederick de Lauania (a Clarke and our nephew) a Canōſhip in the Church of Lincolne with full power and graunt of the ſame: Inueſting him alſo corporally, and preſently with his owne ring in the ſaid canōſhip to be frō hēceforth Canō of Lincolne, & to haue ful power of the ſayd canonſhip in the church, and a prebend when anye ſhall fall in the Churche of Lincolne: From that time, ſince whiche our former letters of late, concerning this receiuing and prouiſion to be geuen to him in the ſayd Church were preſēted & exhibited to our reuerend brother Biſhop of Lincolne: Or els after the next auoyding the ſaid prebendſhip to be reſerued to the Apoſtolical donation & to be geuē to him, making it void & fruſtrate if the ſayd prebēdſhip ſhall be geuē to any other man beſide, and alſo denouncing the ſentence of excōmunication agaynſt all them that ſhall rebell and gainſay the ſame as in the letters of the ſayd Cardinall is more fully contayned.

We therfore graciouſly inclined by the deuout ſupplication of the ſaid Friderick, ratifying & gratefully approuing that which hath bene done by the ſaid cardinals in the premiſſes haue thoght good by the authority Apoſtolicall to confirme. Wherefore we geue in cōmaundement by our letters Apoſtolicall to your wiſedomes, that you will ſee the ſayd Frederick (or his proctor in hys behalfe) to be really and corporally poſſeſſed in the ſayd Canonſhip or prebēd by our authority, & alſo defend the ſayd party being therin poſſeſſed, denouncing the ſentence of excommunication againſt all ſuch as ſhall withſtand the ſame: All maner of cuſtomes, or ſtatutes to the contrary notwithſtāding, corroborated either with oath, or cōfirmatiōs of the ſea Apoſtolick, or by what ſtay or let ſoeuer: Or whether that the ſaid Frederick be not preſent to take the oath accuſtomed to be geuen for obſeruing the cuſtomes of the ſayd church: Or whether it be geuen and graunted by the ſayd ſea to the foreſayd Biſhop, or to the chapter of the ſayd church ioyntly and ſeuerally, or to what perſon or perſons els, that no man by compulſion ſhould haue admiſsion or prouiſion for any perſon in their Church wherby they cannot be interdicted, ſuſpended, or excommunicate by the letters Apoſtolicall obtained, or to be obtained hereafter, vnder what form or words ſoeuer, yea although the whole tenour of the ſayd indulgence be inſerted word for word in the ſayd your letters or by any other indulgences to what perſō or perſōs ſoeuer, of what eſtate, dignity or place ſoeuer, vnder any maner or forme of words, graūted hereafter by the ſea Apoſtolicke: by the which indulgences the effect of the ſaid prouiſion may be by any maner of waies hindered or deferred: yet of our certayne knowledge we will that they ſhall want theyr ſtrength in the prouiſion made or to be made for the ſayd Frederick in the Church of Lincoln: And if any vpon the premiſſes or any of them ſhall alleadge agaynſt the foreſayd Fredericke, or his procurator: That you will cauſe them to be cited on our behalfe, ſo that they being cited peremtorily ſhal within the ſpace of two monethes of your citation, perſonally appere before vs there according to the law to make aunſwere to the ſayd Fredericke, vpon the premiſſes: Any priuiledges or indulgēces what ſoeuer, geuen and graunted either generally to the kingdome of England, or peculiarly to any other perſon of what ſtate, degree, and place ſoeuer, graunted by the foreſaid ſea, vnder whatſoeuer maner & forme of words for them not to be called vp beyond the ſea, or out of their owne City or Dioces by letters Apoſtolicall, vnder whatſoeuer forme of wordes obtayned, to the contrary in any wiſe notwithſtanding: All which priuiledges and indulgences, we will in no caſe ſhall ſtand in any force or effect to the ſayd partes. Moreouer, the day and forme of the citation, we will that ye faythſully do intimate vnto vs by your letters containing the tenor therof. And if both of you can not be preſent at the execution hereof, yet we will notwithſtādīng that one of you do execute the ſame without fayle. Dated the 7. Kal. Febr. the 10. yeare of our Popedome.

A double commendation of B. Groſted.

As there is no mā which hath any eies to ſee, but may eaſely vnderſtand in reading this letter of the Pope, how vnreaſonable his requeſt is how impudently he commaūdeth, how proudly he threatneth, how wickedly he oppreſſeth and racketh the Church of God, in placing boyes and ſtraungers in the miniſtery & cure of ſoules, & alſo in making them his prouiſors, to rauen vp the Church goodes: So is it no great maruell, if this godly Biſhoppe Robert Groſted was offended therwith. Who in my mind, deſerueth herein a double commendation, not onely that he ſo wiſely did diſcerne error from ſincerity and truth: but alſo that he was ſo hardy and conſtant to ſtand to the defence therof agaynſt the Pope, according as in this his anſwere to the Pope agayne may appeare, as foloweth.

The aunſwere of Robert Groſted.

The anſwer of R. Groſted to the Pope.

SAlutem. Pleaſeth it your wiſedome to vnderſtand, that I am not diſobedient to any the Apoſtolicke precepts: but both deuoutly & reuerently with the natural affectiō of a ſonne obey the ſame: And alſo am an vtter enemy to al thoſe that reſiſt ſuch Apoſtolick precepts, as a childe zelous of his fathers honor. And truly I am no leſſe then bound therunto by the precept and cōmaūdement of God. For the Apoſtolick preceptes are none other nor can be, then conſonant and vniforme to the doctrine of the Apoſtles, and of our Sauiour Chriſt being the maiſter and Lorde of all the Apoſtles: whoſe type and perſon, ſpecially in the conſonant and vniforme hierarchie of the Church, the Lord Pope ſemeth to beare (the ſame our Lorde and Sauiour Ieſus Chriſte, ſaying) whoſoeuer is not with me, the ſame is agaynſt me: Therefore, agaynſt him, neither is nor can be, the moſt diuine ſanctitye of the ſea Apoſtolicall. The tenour then of your foreſayd Apoſtolicall letter is not conſonant to true ſanctity but vtterly diſſonāt and diſagreeing to the ſame. Firſt, for that vpon the clauſe of this your letter & many ſuch other letters like, which clauſe alwayes ye ſo much do vrge (Non obſtante) induced and brought in vpon no neceſſity of any naturall law to be obſerued: doth ſwarme, and floweth with all inconſtancy, boldnes, pertinacy, impudency, lying, & deceiuing, and is alſo a ſea of miſtruſt in geuing credit to no man. Which as it ſwarmeth with theſe, ſo in like maner with innumerable other vices which hang and depend vpon the ſame: mouing and diſturbing the purity of Chriſtian religion and lyfe agreable to the ſame, as alſo the publique tranquility of men. Moreouer, next after the ſinne of Lucifer (which ſhalbe in the latter time, to wit, of Antichriſt the childe of perdition, whome the Lord ſhall deſtroy with the breath of his mouth) there is not nor can be any kinde of ſinne ſo repugnant and contrary to the doctrine of the Apoſtles and holy ſcripture & to our ſauiour Chriſt himſelfe more hatefull, deteſtable and abhominable: then to deſtroy and kill mens ſoules by defrauding them of the miſtery of the paſtorall office which by the miniſtery of the poſtorall cure ought to ſaue and quicken the ſame. Which ſinne, by moſt euident places of the Scripture ſuch men are diſcerned & knowne to commit: which being in the authority of the Paſtorall dignity, do ſerue their owne carnall deſires and neceſſaries, with the benefit of the milke and wooll of the ſheep and flocke of Chriſt: and do not miniſter the ſame Paſtorall office and charge to the benefite and ſaluation of thoſe theyr ſheep. The ſame therefore by the teſtimony of the Scripture, is not the adminiſtration of the Paſtorall miniſtery but the killing and deſtruction of the ſheep. And that theſe two kinde of vices be moſt vile and wicked (although after a differryng ſorte) and farre exceeding all other kinde of wickedneſſe, hereby it is manifeſt: For that the ſame are directly contrary to two vertues moſt chiefely good (although differing in themſelues) and vnlike together. For that is called moſt wicked which is contrary to a thing moſt beſt. So much then as lyeth in the offenders, the one of their offences is directly agaynſt the deity, which of himſelfe is alwayes eſſentially and ſupernaturally good: The other is agaynſt the deification and the Image of God in man, which is not alwayes but by the participation of Gods lightſome grace eſſentially and naturally God. And foraſmuch as in thinges being good, the cauſe of good is better then the effect: & like as againe in euill things the cauſe of euill is worſe then the effect of euil proceeding therof: hereby it is manifeſt: That the inducers of ſuch wicked deſtroyers of Gods Image and deification in the ſheep of Chriſt (that is the church of God) are worſe thē thoſe chief deſtroiers, to wit, Lucifer & Antichriſt.

And as in theſe degrees of wickednes how much more excellent ſuch be, who hauing a great charge committed to them of God (to edifiication, and not to deſtruction) are more bound to keep away and exclude ſuch wicked deſtroyers from the church of God: So much is it alſo of that, that this holy ſeat Apoſtolicall to whom the Lord Ieſus Chriſt hath geuen all maner of power (to edification as the Apoſtle ſayth, and not to deſtruction) can commaund, or will to goe about any ſuch thing, vrging vnto ſo great wickedneſſe, ſo odible, deteſtable, and abhominable to our Lord Ieſus Chriſt and alſo ſo pernitious to mankinde. For this ſhould be a great defection, corruption, and abuſe of the ſayd ſeat and fulneſſe of power, and an vtter ſeparation from the glorious throne of our Lord Ieſus Chriſt, and a neare neighborhood vnto the two moſt principall princes of darcknes, ſitting in the chaire of peſtilence, prepared to the paynes of hell. Neither can any mā which is ſubiect and faythfull to the ſayd ſea (and not cut away from the body of Chriſt, and from the ſayd holy ſea) with ſincere and vnſpotted conſcience, obey ſuch maner of precepts and cōmaundementes, or what ſoeuer other attemptes proceeding, yea though from the high order of aungels themſelues: but rather ought of neceſſity with all their ſtrength to withſtand & rebell againſt the ſame. Wherfore my reuerend Lorde, I like an obedient childe vpon my bound duty of obedience & fidelity, which I owe to both the * parentes of this holy Apoſtolicke ſea, and partly for loue of vnity in the body of Chriſt ioyned with the ſayd ſea: doe not obey but withſtand and vtterly rebell agaynſt theſe things in the ſaid letter contained, & eſpecially which vrge and tend to the foreſayd wickednes: ſo abhominable to the Lorde Ieſus Chriſt, ſo repugnant to the holines of the holy Apoſtolick ſea, & ſo cōtrary to the vnity of the catholick faith. Neither for this cauſe can your diſcretiō determine any extremity vnto me, becauſe al my doing and gaynſaying in this matter is no reſiſtaunce nor rebellion, but a childly obedience to the diuine precept and honour due both to * Father and Mother. Briefly therefore repeating my wordes I ſay: that this holy Apoſtolicke ſea cannot do any thing but to edification, and nothing at all to deſtruction. For this is the fulnes of power, to be able to do all thinges to edification. But theſe which you call prouiſions, be not to edification, but to manifeſt deſtruction. The holy Apoſtolicke ſea therfore cannot nor ought to attempt any ſuch thing, becauſe that fleſh and bloud which cānot enter into the kingdome of God hath reuealed the ſame, and not the Father of our Lord Ieſus Chriſt which is in heauen.

Power giuē to miniſters to edificatiō only, not to deſtruction.

Two principall princes of darknes, Lucifer and Antichriſt.

* He meaneth either Chriſt & the Church, or els Peter and Paule.

* Ideſt, both to Chriſt and his Church.

Then followeth it in the ſtory both of Mathæus Pariſiēſis and of Florilegus, in theſe words: That when this Epiſtle came to the knowledge of the Pope, he fuming & fretting, with anger and indignation anſwered, with a fierce looke and proud minde ſaying: what olde doting franticke wretch is this ſo boldely, & raſhly to iudge of my doinges? By ſweet S. Peter and Paule, were it not but that vpon our own clemency and good nature we are reſtrayned, we would hurle him down to ſuch confuſion, that we would make him a fable, a gaſing ſtock, an example and wonderment to all the world. For is not the king of England our vaſſall? and to ſay more, our manſiple or page (to vſe the very wordes of mine author) which may at our pleaſure & becke both hamper him, and impriſon him and put him to vtter ſhame? This when the Pope in his great fury and rage had vttered amōgſt his brethren, the Cardinals, who were ſcarce able to appeaſe the furious violence of ye pope, with milde moderatiō of wordes, they ſayd vnto him: that it was not expediēt for thē to proceed agaynſt that biſhop in ſuch rigorous maner. For ſayd they to confeſſe the truth to your holynes, it is but very truth that he affirmeth, neither can we condemn him therfore. He is a catholick man yea alſo a holy man: more holy & alſo religious thē we our ſelues: a man of excellent wit and excellent life, ſo as it is thought among all the Prelats he hath not his better nor yet his like. This is not yet vnknowne both to the french & Engliſh clergy vniuerſally, neither can our cōtradictiō preuail againſt him: The truth of this his epiſtle perhaps is knowne now to many & ſhall ſtir vp many againſt vs: for he hath the name to be a great Philoſopher and ſingularly ſeene in all the toungues both Greeke, Latine & Hebrue: zelous in iuſtice, a reader of diuinity in the ſcholes, a preacher amongſt the people, a louer of Chaſtity, & a perſecutor

Ex Mat. Pariſ. ad verbum.

Well ſworne maiſter pope.

Giles Cardinall defendeth Robert Groſted to the pope.

ſecutor of Simony. Theſe wordes ſpake L. Giles, a Spaniſh Cardinall to the Pope and other mo moued by theyr cōſcience to ſpeak. And this coūſell they gaue to the Pope, that he ſhould diſſemble and wincke at theſe thinges as one not ſeing or regarding them: leaſt otherwiſe perhaps, ſome tumult might riſe and ſpring thereof: Eſpecially ſeing this is manifeſt and knowen to all men, that once muſt needes come a defection and parting from the Church of Rome.

The godly talke of R. Groſted in time of his ſicknes.

Not long after this (about the canicular dayes) thys reuerend & godly Robert biſhop of Lincolne lying at his manor place in Bugden fell greuouſly ſicke: and therupon within few dayes departed. In the time of his ſicknes he called to him a certayne Frier, of the preaching order named M. Iohn Giles, a man expert & cunning both in phiſick & Diuinity: partly to receiue of him ſome cōfort of his body, and partly to confer with him in ſpirituall matters. Thus vpō a certeine day, the ſaid. B. cōferring w the foreſayd M. Iohn, & reciting to him the doings & procedings of the Pope: did greuouſly rebuke & reprehend his fellow brethren the preaching Friers, and the other order alſo of the Minorites. That for ſo much as their order being plāted in wilfull pouerty of the ſpirit, to the intēt they ſhould more freely carpe and reproue the vices of the mighty, & not to flatter or ſpare them, but ſharply to rebuke & reprehend the ſame: The ſaid Friers contrary to theyr profeſſion did not boldly enough cry out and inuey againſt the abuſes of their ſuperiors and men of power, nor did vncouer nor detect their faults and wickednes. And therfore ſayd the Biſhop, I iudge them to be no better thē manifeſt hereticks: And addeth moreouer (demaunding of M. Iohn) what is hereſy? and that he ſhould geue him the true diffinition therof. wherat, when the Frier did ſtay and pauſe, not remembring the ſolemne diffinition of that matter: the Byſhop therupon inferreth, geuing this diffinition in Latine, by the true interpretation of the Greek word: Hereſis Græce, electio Latine, eſt ſententia humano ſenſu electa, Scripturæ ſacræ contraria, palam docta, pertinaciter defenſa. That is. Hereſy is a ſentence taken and choſen of mans owne brayne, contrary to holy Scripture, openly mayntained, and ſtifly defended. And this diffinitiō geuen conſequently he inferred ſharpely reprehending the Prelates of the church, but eſpecially the Romaines: which commit the charge of ſoules vnto their kinſfolks being both in age vnworthy, and in learning vnſufficient. To geue ſayth he, the charge of ſoules to a boy is a ſentence of a prelate choſen and taken of mans own head, onely for carnall and earthly reſpect: & alſo is contrary to holy ſcripture the which forbiddeth any ſuch to be made miniſters or paſtors, which are not ſufficient to driue away the wolues. And moreouer it is alſo openly mayntayned, becauſe it is manifeſtly borne abroad and cōmaunded, with chartes inbulled both with waxe & lead. And finally, it is ſtifly defended: for if any man ſhall dare to preſume to withſtand the ſame, he is ſuſpended and excommunicated and open warre cryed out agaynſt him: Therfore to whom the whole definitiō of an heretick doth agree, he is a very heretick. But euery faythfull Chriſtian man ought to ſet himſelfe agaynſt an heretick as much as he may: wherefore he that can reſiſt him and doth not, he ſinneth and ſeemeth to be a fautor thereof according to the ſaying of Gregory. He lacketh not cōſcience of ſecret ſocietye which ceaſeth to reſiſt open impietye. But the Friers both Franciſcanes and Dominicks, are moſt chiefly bōd to withſtand ſuch, ſeing both of them haue the gift of preaching cōmitted to them by their office, and be more apt to the ſayd office, by reaſon of their pouerty: And therfore, do not onely offend in not reſiſting ſuch, but alſo are to be coūted mayntayners of the ſame, according to the ſentence of the Apoſtle to the Romains ſaying: Not only they which commit ſuch things, but alſo they that conſent are worthy of death. wherefore it may be concluded, that as well the Pope (vnleſſe he ceaſe frō that vice) as alſo the ſame Friers, vnleſſe they ſhew themſelues more earneſt and ſtudious in repelling the ſame, are both worthy of death, that is, perpetuall damnation. Item ſayth the Canon decretal, that vpon this vice of hereſy the Pope both may & ought to be accuſed.

Certain Aphoriſmes or articles layd of R. Groſted againſt the B. of Rome.

After this, the vehemency of his diſeaſe more & more increaſing and becauſe the nightes were ſomething lōger: the third night before his departure, the biſhop feeling his infirmity to grow vpon him willed certaine of his clergy to be called vnto him, therby to be refreſhed with ſome cōference or communicatiō: Vnto whom the biſhop mourning and lamenting in his minde for the loſſe of ſoules through the auarice of the Popes court ſayd on this wiſe, as by certayne Aphoriſmes.

1. Chriſt came into the world to ſaue and win ſoules: Ergo, he that feareth not to deſtroy ſoules, may he not worthely be counted Antichriſt?

2. The Lord created the whole world in ſixe dayes, but in reſtoring of man he labored more then 30. yeres. wherfore he that is a deſtroier of that, about which the Lord ſo long labored, is not he worthy to be coūted the enemy of God, and Antichriſt?

The Pope accuſed f his wicke clauſe(no obſtante.)

3. The Pope ſhameth not impudently to adnihilate and diſanull the priuileges of his holy predeceſſors of Romain Biſhops, by this obſtacle (Non obſtante) which is not done without the preiudice and manifeſt iniury of them, For in ſo doing, he doth reproue and deſtroy that which ſo many and ſo holy men haue builded vp before, and thus ſemeth he to be a contemner of the Saints: worthely therefore he that contemneth ſhall be contemned, according to the ſaying of Eſay: woe to thee that doeſt deſpiſe, for ſhalt not ȳ thy ſelfe be deſpiſed? And who ſhall keepe his priuiledges which ſo breaketh the priuiledges of others.

The P. accu ſed for arr gating m then is du to him, and proued n to be equ but inferio to his prede ceſſours.

4. The Pope anſwering hereunto thus defēdeth perhaps his error. He that is equall, hath no ſuperiority ouer his equall. Therfore, no Pope hath power to binde me being pope as well as he. To this I anſwere agayne (quoth the Biſhop) It ſeemeth to me, that he that now preſently is ſayling in the daūgerous ſeas of this world: and he that is ſafely arriued in the hauen, hauing paſt all ieopardyes, are not both like and equall. Graūt that ſome Popes be ſaued (God forbid any ſhould ſay contrary.) Then ſayth our ſauiour: He that is leaſt in the kingdome of heauē, is greater then Iohn Baptiſt, a greater thē whom did neuer riſe amongſt the children of men. Is not therefore ſome Pope greater being a giuer and cōfirmer of priuileges then this that is aliue? Truely me thinkes he is greater. Therefore he hath dominion ouer his inferior.

The P. accu ſed for viola ing the and founda tions of hi predeceſſo

5. Doth not the Pope thus ſay, ſpeaking of all his predeceſſours for the moſt part: This our predeceſſor, and thys our predeceſſor of moſt worthy memory. &c. And agayne, we (ſayth he) cleauing to, or following the ſteppes of our predeceſſors. &c. And why then doe ſuch Popes as come after, deſtroy theſe foundations which their predeceſſors haue layd?

Proued tha the Popes liue is infe our to his predeceſſo before him. And therfore to ha no authoritie to infringe the priuileges of other Popes.

6. Many Apoſtolicke men comming after, haue confirmed ſome priuiledge being graunted by other before: And be not many Biſhops being already ſaued by the grace of God, to be counted greater and better then one Byſhopp which hath not yet atteined, but ſtandeth in daūger to obtayne that which the other haue got already?

Proued by example o Benet tha men more auncient i time ough to be prefe red in high er reueren

7. Alſo our former fathers biſhops of ȳ Apoſtolical ſea, in preferremēt of time go before the other, which in time come after. And thoſe whom the eſtimatiō of auncient time doth aduaunce, ſuch are we bōd to eſteme and to haue in more reuerence. This did the holy man Benedict well conſider who in his rule preferreth ſuch as came firſt in time, what ſo euer men they were, before them, which (albeit being more auncient in yeares) come after them into the order: & commaundeth them to be theyr ſuperiors, and to haue the preheminence. which being ſo (as it is) true and certayne: how commeth then this iniurious and raſh preſumption, which dare repeale and diſanull, the old priuileges of many auncient holy Biſhops, in time and in reuerence going before them.

The Pope accuſed fo maintaining of vſury.

8. Moreouer, and though many Popes haue bene greuous to the Churche, yet this Pope moſt ſpecially hath brought it moſt into ſeruitude & manifold wayes hath dāmnified the ſame. For theſe Caurſini, theſe open vſurers, whō our holy forefathers and doctors (whom we haue ſeene) and namely our learned maiſter in Fraunce preacher: alſo the Abbot of Flay a Ciſtercian: maiſter Iacobus de veteri, and maiſter Steph. Archbiſhop of Cant. in the time of his baniſhment: And alſo maiſter Rob. Curcun, with his preaching, baniſhed out of Fraunce (for before that time theſe kinde of Vſurers were neuer knowne in England) the ſame Caurſini, theſe wicked vſurers (I ſay) were by thys Pope induced, ſupported and mayntayned: ſo that if any do ſpeak againſt them, he is miſerably toſſed and troubled for his labor, wherof partly Roger biſhop of London hath ſome experience.

Againſt vſ rers.

9. The world doth know, that vſury is counted a deteſtable thing in both the Teſtamēts, and is forbidden of God. But now the Popes Vſurers or Exchaungers (the very Iewes crying out agaynſt them) being openly ſuffered in London to exerciſe their vſury, to the great damage & detrimēt of all eccleſiaſticall perſons (but eſpecially houſes of religion) compelling ſuch as be in pouerty, to counterfeit, and to put to their ſeales vnto forged writinges: which is no leſſe then to commit Idolatry, and to abrenoūce the veritye whiche is God himſelfe. As for example, I borow 100. Markes for a yeare, in ſtead of 100. Poundes. I am compelled compelled to make my writing, and to ſeale the ſame, confeſſing that I haue receiued in borow an 100. pounds to be repaied againe at the yeares end to ſuch a man. &c. And if it ſhall chaunce that your occupying be ſuch, that wythin a moneth you bring againe the principall to the Popes vſurer, hee will receaue no leſſe notwithſtanding, then his full 100. poundes: which condition of vſurie is much worſe then that of the Iewes. For to the Iewe what principall you bring, he wil require no more then proportionally, for the commenſuration of ſo much time, wherein his money hath bene out of his hands.

The craftie practiſe of vſurers.

The Popes Vſurers worſe then the Iewes.

Craftie ſubtiltie of the Pope to get money.

10. Moreouer, we haue ſene & knowen the Pope to haue geuen in charge and commaundement to the Friers preachers, and minorites: to enquire diligently for ſuch as lie ſicke and like to die, and ſo comming to them diligently to perſwade them, to make their wils and Teſtamentes fauorably to the profite and ſubſidie of the holy lande, and to take the croſſe vpon them, that if they do amend, they may wring them in the law. And if they die, they may wraſt the money from their executors.

Men ſigned to the holy land, ſold for money lyke ſheepe by the Pope, Remiſsion of ſinnes, ſolde for money.

11. We haue knowen likewiſe and ſeene men that haue taken the vowe and ſigne of the croſſe vpon them, to be ſolde to lay men, as ſheepe and oxen were wont in time paſt, to be ſold in the temple.

We haue ſeene wͭ our eyes, the Popes letter, in which we haue foūd this to be written: that they which bequeath any thing to the behoofe or ſubſidy of the holy land, ſhal receiue ſo much indulgence, as they haue diſburſed money.

The Pope accuſed to be iniurious to churches in his prouiſions and reſeruations.

12. Ouer and beſide all this, the Pope in diuers and ſundry his letters, hath willed and commaunded Prelates to receaue into Eccleſiaſticall benefices, and to prouide ſome ſuch liuing in their Churches, as ſhall be ſufficient to ſuch and ſuch a ſtraunger, (being both abſent, and alſo vnworthy) which haue neither learning, nor yet the language of the countrey: whereby they are neither able to preach, nor to heare confeſſions, nor to kepe reſidence for to refreſh the poore and waifarers.

The Pope accuſed to be iniurious to the Abbot of S. Albons,

13. Item, we knowe and haue ſeene our ſelues, that the Pope hath wrytten to the Abbot of S. Albane, to prouide for one called Iohn de Camezana, whome hee neuer ſawe, in ſome competent benefice. Wherupon in fewe dayes after, when prouiſion was made for him in a certaine Churche, worth 40. markes by the yeare and more: the partie being not therewith contented, complained to the Pope. Who then wryting to the foreſayde Abbot, commaunded him to prouide for the foreſaide M. Iohn in ſome better thing, reſeruing notwithſtanding the gift of the former benefice, to himſelfe.

The Pope accuſed for violent extortion.

14. Againe, not long after came alſo to the houſe of yͤ foreſayd Abbot two other perſons like begging vagabondes, bringing with them the Popes letters: in the tenor whereof the Abbot was commanded, that incontinent vpon the ſight thereof, he ſhould geue & diſburſe to the ſayd perſons for the expedition and diſpatch of his affaires 10. marks in hand, without any delay or ſticking: The which perſones vttering to the Abbot proude and threatning wordes, he was faine to agree with them and ſend them away.

The Pope accuſed for troubling & corrupting learned men of the ſpiritualtie with his temporal affayres,

15. Item, of men which are both holy and well learned, which haue left the world for the following of God in ſuch order, as they ought not to turne backe againe, the Pope of them maketh hys Tolners and bankers to gette in his mony: The which charge they are compelled againſt their willes to take vpon them, leaſt they ſhould ſeme to be diſobedient: and ſo of ſpirituall men, are made more ſecular then the moſt ſecular. And ſo, yͤ baſeneſſe of their chimmers and ſcapillers which they weare, doth proue them to be liers: whileſt vnder the habite of pouerty and humiliation, lurketh the ſpirite of pride and elation. And becauſe no Legate may be ſent into England, but being firſt required of the king: the Pope ſendeth ſophiſticall Legates and ſuche as be diſguiſed in counterfet apparell, and are garded with great might and power: neither is it hard to bring forth examples thereof. For ſo many ſuch daily do come into the realme, that to heare the names of them recited, it woulde be tedious for any man to heare.

The Pope accuſed for vnlawfull diſpenſation

16. Furthermore (as we haue ſeene our ſelues) the Pope graunteth for ſecular fauor, that a man may haue a Biſhopricke, and yet be no Biſhop conſecrated, Sed electus ſempiternus, that is, elect for euer. Which is as much to ſignify, to haue the milke and the wolle of the ſheepe, and not to kepe the wolues away from the ſheepe: To retaine the rents of a Biſhop, and not diſcharge the function of a Biſhop.

And when this godly Biſhop had thus reproued theſe and ſuch other deteſtable enormities of the court of Rome: as all kinds of auarice, their vſurie, their ſimonie, their extortion, all kindes of filthineſſe, fleſhly luſt, glottonie, and their ſumptuous apparell raigning in that Court: then ſayth he, this old verſe may be truely verified vpon it.

Eius auaricia totus non ſufficit orbis,
Eius luxuriæ meretrix non ſufficit omnis.

All the worlde cannot ſuffice their greedie auarous minde,
Nor all the drabs and naughty packes their filthy luſting kinde.

Afterwarde he went about more to proſecute, how the foreſaide court like a gulph neuer ſatiſfied, euer gaping (ſo wide, that the floude of Iordane might runne into hys mouth) aſpired howe to vſurpe the goodes of them that die inteſted, and of Legacies bequeathed wythout forme of law, and whereby more licentiouſly to bring this to paſſe, they vſed to ioyne the king to be fellow and partaker with them in their ſpoyles, extortions, and robbings. Neyther ſayeth he, ſhall the Church be deliuered from the ſeruitude of Egypt but by violence and force, and wyth the bloudie ſword. And albeit ſayeth he, theſe be yet but light matters, yet ſhortly more great and greuous things then theſe ſhall be ſeene.

And in the end of this his propheciyng which he ſcarſly coulde vtter, wyth ſighing, ſobbing and weeping, his tounge and breath began to faile, and ſo the organe of hys voyce being ſtopped, made an ende both of his ſpeache and life. Ex Math. Pariſ.

What the reuenues of the Popes Clarkes here in England came to by yeare.
Ex Ceſtrenſis, lib. 7.

And for as much as mention hath bene made before, of the inſatiable auarice of the Popes court by his inordinate prouiſions and reſeruations, it is teſtified by the ſayde author Math. Pariſ that the foreſayd Robert Groſted being biſhop of Lincolne, cauſed to be vewed and conſidered diligently of his clearks, what the reuenues of forreiners and ſtrangers within England ſet in by the Pope, came to by the yeare: and it was founde and euidently tried, that thys Pope now preſent, to wit, Innocentius 4. did empouerish the vniuerſall Churche throughout Chriſtendome, more then all his predeceſſours from the time the Pope firſt began: So that the reuenues of forreiners and clearkes placed by him heere in Englande, mounted to the ſumme of 70000. markes and aboue, whereas the mere reuenues of the crowne came not to 30000.

The Pope ſtroken with the ſtaffe of Groſt. Byſh. of Lincoln

Of this Robert Groſted wryteth Ceſtrenſis in his 7. booke of his hiſtorie: that partly for that it greeued hym to ſee yͤ intollerable exactions of the Pope in this realme, and partly becauſe he refuſed to admitte a certaine younge nephew of the Pope to be canon of his Church (as hath bene before recited). He therefore wryting to the Pope, and ſignifying that he could not admit any ſuch perſons into hys Church, which neither knewe themſelues, nor the tounge of the people, nor the charges committed vnto them: was called vp to Rome, and there excommunicated, who then appealing from yͤ Pope, ſhortly after departed, which was An. 1253. It chanced within 2. yeares after his deceaſe, the ſayde Pope Innocent being a ſlepe: a certaine Biſhop appareled biſhop like, appeared vnto him, and ſtriking him with his ſtaffe on his left ſide, ſayde: Surge miſer veni in iudicium. That is, Riſe wretch and come to thy iudgement. The next day after, the Pope was found amaſed as a man ſtroken on the ſide with the ſtroke of a ſtaffe. This Robert though he was greatly commended for his ſanctimony, & as Ceſtrenſis ſayeth, for his myracles: yet was he not permitted in the court of Rome to be aſcribed in the Cataloge of Saintes. And thus much out of Ceſtrenſis concernyng thys matter. But Math. Pariſ. and the author of Flores hiſtoriarum proſecuting thys ſtorie more at large, addeth thys more vnto it & ſayth. That Pope Innocent the next yeare folowing, which was An. 1254. being paſſing angry: contrary to the minde of his brethren the Cardinals, woulde haue the bones of the foreſayd byſhop of Lincolne caſt out of the Church, and purpoſed to bring him into ſuche ſpite and hatred of the people, that he ſhuld be counted an Ethnicke, a rebell, and diſobedient perſon through the whole worlde. And thereuppon cauſed his letters to be wrytten and ſent downe to the king of England, knowing that the king would gladly ſerue him therein to haue the ſpoyle of the biſhop and of his church. But the night following, the ſaid B. of Linc. appeared vnto him as cōming in his pontificalibus, and wͭ a ſeuere coūtenance and ſterne loke, and terrible voyce ſpeaketh vnto him being in his reſt, & ſmiting him on the ſide with a vehement ſtroke with the ende of his croſſeſtaffe thus ſaid, O thou ſcourfie, lazie, old, bald, louſie, wretched, doting Pope. Haſt thou purpoſed to caſt out my bones out of the Church to the ſhame and ſlaunder of me? How commeth this raſh wilfulneſſe in thy head? It were more meete for thee being thus aduaunced by God & honoured, to make much of the zelous ſeruaunts of God, although departed. The lord wil not ſuffer thee hēceforth to haue any more power ouer me, I haue writtē vnto thee in the ſpirit of humilitie and loue, that thou ſhouldeſt correct thy manifolde errors. But thou wyth a proud eye and diſdainful hart haſt deſpiſed my wholeſome admonitions. Woe to thee that deſpiſeſt, ſhalt not thou alſo be deſpiſed? And ſo the Biſhop departing from the Pope, ſtroken as is ſaid on the ſide, left him for half dead, and ſo lying in ſorow & lamentation. Wherupon his chamberlains being amaſed hearing theſe things, came rũning to the pope to know what him ailed. To whome the Pope much troubled and vexed in his ſpirit, ſayd: that great terrors in his ſlepe, vehemently diſturbed and moleſted him in ſuch ſorte, that he thought he ſhould neuer recouer it, nor be reſtored to himſelfe againe. Oh (ſayeth he) howe ſore is my ſide, and howe egerly it vexeth me, as being runne through with a ſpeare. Neither did the Pope eate or drinke all that day, but faining himſelf to be ſicke of a burning ague, kept in. And yet the indignation of the irefull hand of God (ſayth the ſtory) ſo left him not.

The Pope diſquieted in his minde.

The reuenge of God vpon pope Innocent.

For after theſe wholeſome admonitions geuen to hym by the ſeruaunt of God: the Pope not regarding them, but all ſet vpon warre, ſuppreſſion of his enemies, and ſecular affaires, gaue his minde wholy vnto them. And yet all his labors, counſailes, & expences beſtowed vpon them, could neuer proſper after that day, in that he wẽt about. For the Pope the ſame time hauing warre with the Apulians, all his army fighting vnder yͤ Popes nephew their captaine, were ſlaine & confounded the number of many thouſands. Whoſe lamentable ſlaughter al yͤ countrey of the Romains did much bewaile. The Pope not yet quiet in his minde, directeth his iorney towarde Naples, although ſore vexed in his ſide like a man ſicke of a pluriſie, or ſmitten rather wͭ a ſpeare. Neither could any phiſicke of his Cardinals help him. For Robert of Lincolne (ſayth the ſtory) did not ſpare him. And hee that woulde not heare him gently correcting him, being aliue, his ſtripes did he feele whẽ he was dead. So that hee neuer after that enioyed any luckie or proſperous day, till time of his death: nor yet any proſperous or quiet night vntill the morning. And ſo continued he vnto his death, which ſhortly after enſued, he being at Naples. An. 1255. or as N. Triuet recordeth. An. 1254. And thus haue ye the whole diſcourſe betweene Robert Groſted & Pope Innocent.

A note to the reader concerning the appearing of dead men.

¶ In the which ſtory is to be noted (gentle reader) that although in the ſtorie of Ceſtrenſis, of Mathewe Pariſ and of Flor. hiſt. it is expreſly teſtified and reported, that the Pope was ſmitten with the ſtaffe of Robert the foreſaid Byſhop of Lincolne: yet thou muſt wiſely vnderſtand, that how ſo euer Gods hand dealeth heere in this world in puniſhing his enemies, or how ſo euer the Image of things not ſene but phantaſied, offer themſelues to the ſecrete cogitation of man (his ſenſes being a ſlepe) by the operation or permiſſion of God, working after ſome ſpirituall influence in our imaginations: certaine it is, that no dead man materially can euer riſe againe or appeare, before the iudgement day, to any man with his ſtaffe or without his ſtaffe, to worke any feate, after he haue once departed this life.

Diſſention betwene the arch. of Cant. and the Church of Lincolne.

Excommunication abuſed. Appellation made to Rome. Henry Lexintõ B. of Lincolne.

After the death of this Robert Groſted biſhop of Lincolne, great diſſention fel betwene the Archb. of Cant. Boniface, and the canons of the ſaid church of Lincolne, about the right of geuing prebendſhips, and about the reuenues of the ſaid church, in time of the biſhops ſee being now vacant. Which right & power the Archbiſhop claimed to him ſelfe, but the canons of that Church (maintaining the contrary ſide) ſtood againſt him, and for the ſame were excommunicated of the Archbiſhop. Amõg whom, one M. Wolf reſiſting the Archb. to the face, in the name of all the other canons, made vp his appeale to Rome, where much money on both ſides was ſpent. At length, after this Groſted, was elected Henry Lexinton in the ſee of Lincolne.

About which time, the wicked Iewes at Lincolne had cruelly crucified, whipped, & tormented a certaine child named Hugo of 9. yeres of age. An. 1255. in the month of Auguſt. Ex Gualt. Giſburn. At length the childe being ſought & found by yͤ mother, being caſt in a pit. 32. of thoſe abhominable Iewes were put to executiõ. Wherof Mathew Pariſ. reciteth a long ſtorie. The ſame or like fact was alſo intended by yͤ like Iewes at Norwich 20. yeres before vpon a certaine childe, whom they had firſt circumciſed, & deteined a whole yere in cuſtodie, intending to crucifie him, for the which the Iewes were ſent vp to the tower of Lõdon, of whom 18. were hanged, & the reſt remained long in priſon. Ex Ceſtrenſ. lib. 7. Of this wicked Iewiſh people I find alſo in the boke of Flor. hiſt. that about this yere of our Lord 1255. they began firſt to be expelled out of Fraunce, by the commaundement of the French king, being then in Paleſtina, warring againſt the Turkes: By the occaſion that it was obiected then by the Turke againſt him and other Chriſtian princes, for the reteining the Iewes amõgſt thẽ which did crucify our ſauiour, and warring agaynſt them which did not crucifye him. Ex Flor. Hiſt. Of theſe Iewes moreouer king Henry the ſame yere 1255. exacted to be geuen vnto him 8000. markes in paine of hanging. Who being much agreued therwith, & complayning that the king went about their deſtruction, deſired leaue to be geuen thẽ of the king, that they might depart the realm, neuer to returne agayne. But the king committed the doing of that matter vnto Earle Richard his brother, to enforce them to pay yͤ mony whether they would or no. Moreouer of the ſame Iewes mention is made in the ſtory intituled Eulogiũ. Of the Iewes in Northhampton, who had amõg thẽ ſelues prepared wilde fire, to burn the city of Londõ. For the which diuers of thẽ were takẽ, & burned in the time of Lent, in the ſaid city of Northhamptõ, which was 2. yeres before, about the yere of our Lord. 1253. Ex Eulogio. And for ſo much as mention here is made of the Iewes, I cannot omit what ſome Engliſh ſtoryes write of a certaine Iew: who not long after this time about the yeare of our Lord. 1257. fell into a priuy at Tukeſbury vpon a Sabboth day which for the great reuerence he had to his holy Sabboth, would not ſuffer himſelfe to be plucked out. And ſo Lord Richarde Earle of Gloceſter, hearing thereof, would not ſuffer him to be drawne out on ſonday for reuerence of the holy day. And thus the wretched ſuperſtitious Iew remaining there till Monday, was found dead in the dong.

Hiſt. is both ſtoryed and reprehended. Let this alſo be adioyned, which the forenamed author, and in the ſame yere is recorded of one named Peter Chacepore, who dying in Fraũce, an. 1255. left in bequeſt of his teſtamẽt 600. marks for lands to be purchaſed to the houſe of Mertõ for God to be ſerued there perpetually pro anima eius, & omnium fideliũ. i. for his ſoules health, and all faythfull ſoules. The Pope iniurious to the Church of England.

Ye haue heard it often complained before, how yͤ vſurped power of the Pope hath violẽtly and preſumptuouſly encroched vpon the Church of England, in geuing & conferring benefices and prebends to his Italians and ſtrangers, to the great damage and ruine of Chriſtes flock manifold waies. This violent iniury & oppreſſion of yͤ Pope, as by no lawfull and gentle meanes could be reformed: ſo by occaſion & meanes inordinate about this time, it began ſomwhat to be bridled. The matter wherof was this, as it is in the collector of Flor. Hiſt. recited. In the dayes of the raigne of this king 44. The Byſhop of London named Fulco, had geuen a certaine prebende in the Church of S. Paul, to one maſter Ruſtandus yͤ Popes meſſenger heere in Englande. Who entring into the profeſſion of the graie friers, & ſhortly after dying on the other ſide of the ſea: the Pope immediatly conferred the ſayd prebend to one of his ſpecials, a like ſtraunger, as yͤ other was before. About the ſame inſtant it befel, that the biſhop alſo of London deceaſed, wherby the byſhoprick now vacant fell into the kings handes. Who hearing of the death of yͤ forenamed Ruſtandus, gaue the ſayd prebendſhip (geuen of the Pope before) to one Iohn Crakehale his vnder treaſurer. Who with all ſolemnitie toke his inſtallation, vnknowing as yet that it was beſtowed of the Pope before. It was not lõg after as time grew, but this being noiſed at Rome, forthwith commeth downe a certaine Proctor named Iohn Gras wyth the Popes enbulled letters, to receaue the collation of the benefice by his commiſſion procuratory, geuen by yͤ Pope: wherin Iohn Crakehale had bene already inſtalled, as is aforeſaide, by the kings donation. This matter comming in trauiſe before Boniface Archbiſhop of Cant. hee inquiring and ſearching which donation was the firſt, finding the popes graunt to be the former, gaue ſentence with him againſt the king: ſo that in concluſion, the Romane clearke had the aduauntage of the benefice, although the other had long enioyed the poſſeſſion therof before. Thus the popes man being preferred, and the Engliſhman excluded, after the partie had bene inueſted & ſtalled after the vſe and maner, hee as thinking to be in ſure poſſeſſion of his place, attempted with the reſt to enter the Chapter houſe, but was not permitted ſo to do: wherupon the popes clerke geuing place to force and number, went toward the archbiſhop to

This being knowne, certaine recluſes purſued him, and ſo being compaſſed about, one in the thickneſſe of the throng being neuer after knowne, ſodenly ruſhing vpon him, a litle aboue his eies ſo pareth of his head, yͤ he fell downe dead. The ſame alſo was done to an other of his felowes in fleing away. This hainous murder being famed abroad, ſtrait inquirie therof was made, but the deede doer could not be knowen. Although great ſuſpition was laide vpon Crakhale the kings Chaplein, yet no proofe could be brought. But moſte men thought, yͤ bloudy fact to be done by certaine ruffians, or other light perſons about the City or the Court, diſdaining belike, that the Romanes were ſo enriched wyth Engliſhmens liuings, by whome neyther came relief to any Engliſhman, nor any godly inſtruction to the flocke of Chriſt. And therefore, becauſe they ſawe the Church and realme of England in ſuch ſubiection, and ſo much to be troden downe by the Romanes and the popes meſſengers: they thought therby ſomthing to bridle, as wͭ a ſnaffell, the Popes meſſengers, from their vntemperate ranging into this land. The ſtory of Mat. Pariſ. here ceaſeth.

Heere by the way is to be noted, that vnto the death of this foreſayde Fulco Byſhop of London, continueth the hiſtory of Mathew Pariſ. monk of S. Albons, which was to the yeare of grace 1260. The reſidue was continued by an other Monke of the ſame houſe, but not wyth ſuch like commendation, worthy to make any autentike ſtory, as I haue ſeene it noted in a written booke.

It were to tedious and curious in order to proſecute what happened in euery yere, through this kings raigne: as how it was prouided by yͤ king, that whoſoeuer coulde deſpend 15. li. land by yere, ſhould be bound to make to the king a ſouldiour, that watch ſhould be kept euery night in Cities: that who ſoeuer was robbed or otherwiſe damnified in any countrey, he that had the cuſtody, ſhuld be compelled to make vp the loſſe againe, or els to purſue the malefactor, which was An. 1253. witneſſing Flores hiſt. By reaſon wherof, great taxes and tolonies and tenthes were required of his ſubiects, eſpecially of the Churchmen: who were wont to receiue tithes of other, nowe were conſtrained to geue tithes to the laitie. Flores Hiſt. An. 1254. Item, howe in the yeare next following, the Londoners offring a 100. li. for a gift to the king with a precious cup of gold, at his returne out of Fraunce, were ſhortly after compelled by the King to pay 3000. Marks, for the ſcape of a certaine priſoner being a clerke condemned: which clerke being graunted of the King to the Biſhop, and he hauing no priſon ſufficient for him, borrowed of the Londiners to haue him kept in the priſon of Newgate, who eſcaping thereout, they as is ſayde, were demaunded this recompence aforeſaide. Anno 1255. Item, how the king greatly complaining of his debt, the ſame yeare required the whole tenthes, which ſhoulde be gathered in 3. yeres, to be takē vp all at once. To whoſe requeſt, the nobles and commons agreed to ſtraine themſelues, ſo that the Charter of their liberties and cuſtomes might be ratified, & fully by him confirmed. And ſo for that yeare they were. Flores Hiſt. Hereunto moreouer might be adioyned, how Pope Alexander abuſing and mocking the kings ſimplicity, made him beleeue that he would make his ſonne Edmund king of Apulia, ſo that he would ſuſtaine the charges and coſtes thereof, to maintaine the warre which thereto ſhoulde appertaine. wherby the king caſt in a ſodaine hope, cauſed his ſonne incōtinent to be proclaimed king of Apulia. Here might be ſhewed moreouer, and added to the ſtories aboue, how the yere next following, which was 1259. (as Nicholas Triuet wryteth,) the King entering into France, required the reſtitution of ſuch lands in Normandie and Angiew, as of olde righte was due vnto him, and wrongfully withholden from him. But the French King againe alledged, ſaying: that the cōtrey of Normandie by old time was not geuē away from the crowne of France, but vſurped, and by force extorted by Rollo. &c. In cōcluſion, the King fearing and ſuſpecting the hearts of his nobles, and looking for none other but for rebellion at home, durſt not try wͭ them, but was compelled to agree wͭ them vpon ſuch peace & conditions as he coulde get, which was this. That he ſhoulde haue of the French king xiij. C. M. of Turen poundes, with ſomuch lands els, as came to the value of xx. M. pound in yearely rent: ſo ſhould he reſigne fully and purely to the handes of the French king, all ſuch landes and poſſeſſions which he had in Fraunce. wherby the King geuen ouer his ſtile and titles which hee had in thoſe partes, ceaſed then to be called Duke of Normandie, or Earle of Angiew.

The conflict & ſkirmiſh betweene the Northern Welch men, and the Southern men in Oxford.

Beſide many other matters omitted, here I ouerpaſſe alſo the ſore and vehement conflict, not betwene the frogs and the miſe which Homer writeth of, but the mighty pitched field fought in the yeare of our Lorde 1259. betweene the young ſtudents and ſcholers of the Uniuerſitie of Oxford, hauing no other occaſion (as I read in Math. Parienſ.) but onely the diuerſitie of the Countrey where they were borne. For the Northern men ioyning with the welſhmē, to try their manhoode againſt the Southerne part: fel both parts together in ſuch a broile, with their enſignes & warlike aray, yͤ in concluſion diuers on both ſides were ſlaine. This heauy & bloudy cōflict during and increaſing amōg them, the ende was this: that the Northern lads with the welſh had the victorie. After that fury and fiery fierceneſſe had done what it could, the victorers bethinking at length wͭ themſelues, partly what they had done, partly howe it would be taken of the higher powers: and fearing due puniſhment to fall vpon them, eſpecially ſeeing the brother of Leoline prince of wales, and ſonne of Giffine, was newly dead in priſon, drawing their counſaile and helps together: they offer to king Henry 4000. markes, to Edwarde his ſonne 300. and to the Queene 200. to be releaſed of their treſpaſſe. But the king anſwering them againe, that he ſet more price by the life of one true ſubiect, then by all, which by them was offered: would in no wiſe receiue their money. And ſo the ſtudentes without hope of peace, went home wyth ſmall triumphe, learning what the common Prouerbe meaneth: Dulce bellum inexpertis. Notwithſtanding, the King being then occupied in great affaires and warres, partly with Leoline and yͤ welſhmen, partly inwrapped wyth diſcorde at home with his nobles, had no leiſure to attend to the correction of theſe vniuerſitie men, which was. ning, might ſufficiently induce vs to vnderſtande what ſmall peace and agreemēt was then ioyned with that doctrine and religion in thoſe dayes, during the ſtate & raigne of Antichriſt.

Theſe with many ſuch other matters moe, which here might be diſcourſed and ſtoried at large, being more forein then Eccleſiaſtical, for breuity I do purpoſely contract and omitte, cutting of all ſuch ſuperfluities as may ſeeme more curious to wryte vpon, then neceſſary to be knowen.

Hiſtories profitable for example.

This that foloweth concerning the pitiful & turbulent commotion betwene the king and the nobles, which laſted a long ſeaſon: becauſe it is lamentable, & conteineth much fruitfull example, both for Princes and ſubiects to beholde and looke vppon, to ſee what miſchiefe and inconuenience groweth in common weales, where ſtudy of mutuall concorde lacketh, that is: where neither the Prince regardeth the offending of his ſubiects, and where the ſubiects forget the office of chriſtian pacience, in ſuffering their princes iniuries, by Gods wrath inflicted for their ſinnes. wherfore, in explaning the order and ſtorie thereof, I thought it not vnprofitable to occupy yͤ reader with a little more tariance in peruſing the ful diſcourſe of this ſo lamētable a matter, and ſo pernitious to the publicke weale.

The occaſions of commotion betweene the kyng and the Nobles.

And firſt to declare the occaſions and firſt beginnings of this tumult, here is to be vnderſtode, which before was ſignified: howe king Henry maried with Alinor daughter of the Earle of Prouince, a ſtranger, which was about the yere of our Lord 1234. wherupon, a great dore was opened for ſtrangers, not only to enter the land, but alſo to repleniſh the court: to whome yͤ king ſeemed more to incline his fauour, aduancing them to more preferment, then hys owne naturall Engliſh Lordes, which thing was to them no litle greuance. Moreouer, before was declared, how the king by Iſabel hys mother who was a ſtraunger, had diuers brethren: whom he nouriſhed vp with great liuings and poſſeſſions, and large penſions of money, which was an other hearts ſore to diuers, & alſo an hinderance. Ouer & beſide hath alſo ben declared, what vnreaſonable collectiōs of mony from time to time, as quindecims, ſubſidies, tenthes, merſements, fines, paiments, lones and taxes, haue bene leuied by the king, as well of the ſpiritualtie, as of the lay ſort, partly for maintaining the kings warres againſt wales, againſt Scotlande and Fraunce, to recouer Normandie: partly for helping the kings debtes, viagies & other expenſes: partly for the kingdom of Apulia, which was promiſed the kings ſonne by the pope: partly for moneying and ſupporting the Pope in his warres againſt the Emperour. By reaſon of all which ſundrie and importable collections, the common wealth of the Realme was vtterly excoriate, to the great impoueriſhment of poore Engliſh men. Neither did it a little vexe the people to ſee the king call in ſo many Legates from Rome euery yeare, which did nothing els but tranſporte the Engliſh money vnto the Popes cofers. Beſides all thys, what variaunce and altercation hath bene betweene the king and hys ſubiects about the liberties of Magna charta, & de foreſta, graunted by king Iohn, and after confirmed by thys king, in the former councel holden at Oxford, hath bene afore declared.

Perhaps thys might be alſo ſome peece of a cauſe, that the king conſidering and bearing in minde the olde iniuries done of the Lordes and Barons to his father Kyng Iohn before him: did beare ſome grudge therefore, or ſome priuie hatred vnto the Nobilitie, to reuenge hys fathers quarel. But of things vncertaine I haue nothing certainly to affirme. This is certaine, by truth of hiſtorie, that the yeare next enſuing, which was 1260. thus wryteth Nicho. Triuet, that the kings Iuſtices called Itinerarij, being ſent thether to execute their office, were from thence repelled: the cauſe being alledged for that they were againſt the king in proceeding and enterpriſing againſt yͤ forme of the prouiſions enacted and ſtabliſhed a little before at the Towne of Oxford.

Straungers hauing all the wealth of the realme vnder the kyng.

Ex Gualt. Giſburnenſi.

It befell moreouer the ſame yeare, aboue other times (as Gualt. Hemmingford wryteth) that a great number of aliens comming out of Fraunce and other prouinces, reſorted into England: and had heere the doing of all principall matters of the Realme vnder the king. Unto whome the rewards and reliefes, & other emoluments of the land did moſt chiefly redound, which thing to ſee did not a little trouble & vexe the nobilitie and baronage of England. In ſo much, that Simon Montfort Earle of Leiceſter, offering to ſtande to death for the liberties and wealth of the Realme, conferred together with other Lordes and Barons vpon the matter. who then comming to the king after an humble ſort of petition, declared to him howe all the doings of his Realme and his owne affaires, were altogether diſpoſed by the handes, and after the willes of ſtrāgers, neither profitable to him, nor to the weale publicke: for ſo much as hys treaſures being waſted and conſumed, he was in great debt, neither was able to ſatiſfie the prouiſion of his owne houſe, but driuen to take for his owne cates, to no ſmall diſhonour to his owne ſtate. And nowe therfore ſaid they, pleaſeth your highnes to be informed by our aduiſe, and to commit your houſe to the guiding and gouernment of your owne faithfull and naturall ſubiects: And we will take vppon vs to diſcharge your whole debt within one yere, of our owne proper goods and reuenues, ſo that we within 5. yeares may cleare our ſelues againe. Neither wil we diminiſh your familie, but rather increaſe it with a much greater retinue: prouiding ſo for the ſafety and ſeeing to the cuſtodie of your royall perſon, as your highnes ſhal finde and vnderſtand our diligence moſt truſty and faithfull vnto you in the ende.

The wordes of the Nobles to the kyng.

The K. graunteth to his Lordes.

To theſe wordes ſo louingly declared, ſo humbly pretenſed, ſo heartely and freely offered, the king as willingly condeſcended: aſſigning to them both day and place, where to conferre & to deliberate farther vpon the matter, which ſhoulde be at Oxforde, the 15. day after Eaſter. At which day and place, all the ſtates and Lordes wyth the biſhops of the realme were ſummoned to appeare at the ſayd town of Oxford, for the behalfe of the king, and the Realme conuented together. where firſt of the King himſelfe, then of the Lordes an oth was taken: that what decrees or lawes in the ſaid aſſembly ſhould be prouided to the profite of the king and of the realme, the ſame vniuerſally ſhuld be kept and obſerued to the honor of God, & vtilitie of his church, and wealth of the Realme. Beſides theſe Lordes and the King, were alſo 9. Biſhops, which ſwearing to the ſame, did excommunicate all ſuch as ſhould gainſtand the ſayde prouiſions there made, the King holding a burning taper in his hand, and the Lordes openly proteſting, to riſe with all their force, againſt all them that ſhall ſtande againſt the ſame.

The kinges brethren againſt the prouiſions of Oxford.

There were at that preſent in the Realme, foure brethren of the kings (moſt part of them by the mothers ſide) which would in no caſe agree heereunto, but in anger departed priuely vnto wint. The nobles hearing thereof, in all ſpedy wiſe purſued them, fearing leaſt they ſhould take the Citie of wint. and forceably keepe the ſame. wherfore, the Lordes preuenting their purpoſe, and ſeeing them ſtiffely to perſiſt in their ſtubburne ſentence, wrought no other violence againſt them, but returning to Oxforde againe, preſcribed to them theſe cōditions, that they departing the realme ſhould repaire to their owne lands & poſſeſſions, which they had beyōd the ſea. And that forthwith they ſhould put this iniunction in execution. Notwᵗſtanding that the King made for them great interceſſion, yet it tooke no place. And becauſe this ſhould ſeeme to procede of no ſpeciall diſpleaſure againſt thē, they enacted moreouer, that all ſtrangers and aliens of what ſtate or condition ſoeuer, ſhould forthwith auoid the realme in paine of death. Diuers other prouiſions the ſame time were ordeined and ſtabliſhed: that if any did holde of the king in whole or in part, and ſhould chance him to depart (his heire being vnder age) the wardſhip of him ſhould belong to the king, as hath partly before bene ſpecified.

Many other lawes & decrees (ſayth the author) in this aſſemble were ordeined, wherein they continued the ſpace of 15. daies: and many of them were impoyſoned, of whom was the Abbot of weſtminſter, a man in that order much commended. Alſo william brother to the Earle of Gloceſter. Alſo the Earle himſelf being impoiſoned hardly eſcaped wᵗ life, his heare and nailes falling of his body, wherof the author not long after was taken, and duely executed at wintcheſter. In the mean time, yͤ nobles conſidering thoſe dangers and ieoperdies, were conſtrained to breake off for that time, appoynting the 14. day of Octob. next folowing to conuent together at London with weapon and harnes: to proſecute & finiſh the reſidue, that was in the ſaid counſaile to be concluded. All which at the time & place appointed was fully accompliſhed, and the actes thereof in order of wryting promulged, and ſo committed to execution.

The K. ſueth to the pope to releaſe him of his oath.

The Popes abſolution abuſed.

But becauſe he coulde not at that preſent otherwiſe chuſe, he diſſimuled for a ſeaſon. Thus time paſſing on, wythin a yeare following, which was 1261. the king ſeeing himſelfe more & more to grow in debt, and not to be relieued according to promiſe made, but eſpecially being egged (as may be thought) by his brethren, taking it to ſtomacke, ſent vp the Pope both for him, and his ſonne Edwarde, to be releaſed of their othe made before at Oxford. The benefite of which abſolution being eaſely obtained (or rather bought at the Popes hande) the king ſtepping backe from all that was before concluded, calleth an other parliament at Oxford. where he before the Lords and nobles declared: how in the late counſel of Oxford they had agreed among them ſelues for the cõmon vtilitie of the Realme and of the king (as they pretended) for the increaſing of his treaſure, & his debt to be diminiſhed. And therupon bound themſelues wͭ an othe, cauſing alſo himſelfe, and his ſonne Edward to be bound to the ſame. But now by experience prouing & trying the matter to be otherwiſe then their promiſe was: and that they, contrary to their couenaunt made, ſought not ſo much the profite of him & of the Realme as their owne, taking him not as their Lord, but going about to bring him vnder their ſubiection as an vnderling: and for that moreouer his treaſure greatly decreaſing, his debtes encreaſed, and hys princely liberalitie was cut ſhort and trodẽ vnder foote: They ſhould not maruell therefore, if he henceforth would be no more ruled by their counſail, but would prouide himſelfe of ſome other remedy, ſuch as he might. And moreouer, as touching the othe wherewith he & his ſonne ſtode bound vnto them, he had ſent already vnto Rome, & had obtained abſolution and diſpẽſation of the ſame, both for him, and his ſonne Edwarde alſo, and for all other that would take his part. And therefore, he required of them to be reſtored againe to that ſtate & condition, he had enioyed in times paſt.

The anſwer of the nobles again to the kyng.

To this againe gaue aunſwere the ſtate of nobilitie on the other ſide, being in the ſame place preſent. In the number of whome was Simon Mountfort Earle of Leyceſter, Richard Clare Earle of Gloceſter, Humfry Ronne Earle Ferrence, with a great number of Barons: as Lord John Fitze, John L. Haſtings, L. Geoffrey Lucie, Lorde John Veſcy, L. william Segraue, Hugh Spencer, L. Roberte Veſpoynt, with diuers and many mo, whoſe aunſwere to ẏ king againe was this. That the prouiſions made at the counſaile of Oxforde (whereunto they were ſworne) they would hold, defend, and maintaine to their liues end: forſo much as they did ſound, and alſo were agreed vpõ, both to the honor of God, to the profit of the prince, & ſtable wealth of the Realme. &c. And thus partes on both ſides diſcording among themſelues, would ſo haue departed, had not certaine of the Biſhops comming betwene both, laboured betwene thẽ to take vp the matter. By whoſe meane (ſaith Gualt. Giſburn.) and procurement, the determination of the cauſe was brought in comprimis, and referred to Ludouick ẏ French king to iudge betwene them, who hearing both the allegations (ſayth he) like no equal iudge, but a partial frende: inclined wholy and fully to the kings ſentence, and condemned the nobles. But the author of Flores Hiſt. ſayth, ẏ by the mediation of certaine diſcrete men, two were choſen: one for one ſide, the other for the other. To whome the thirde alſo was adnexed, who hearing as well what was brought of the kings part, as alſo what was aunſwered of the other, ſhould define betweene them both. And ſo peace was betwene them cõcluded, til the comming of Edward. Al this while as yet, the Popes abſolution for the king, although it was grãted and obtained at Rome, yet was it not brought downe in ſolẽne wryting, neither was prince Edward as yet returned out of Fraunce to England.

The controuerſie betweene the king & the Nobles put in comprimis.

The Pope releaſeth the K. of his oath.

At length, the wryting of the kings abſolution being brought from Rome, the king eftſoones commaunded the ſame to be publiſhed throughout the Realme, and ſendeth to the French king and other ſtraungers for helpe. Moreouer ſeiſeth all his Caſtels into his owne hand, reiecting the counſaile of the Lords, to whoſe cuſtody they were before committed. Alſo remouing the former officers, as Iuſtices, and the Chancelour: with other placed afore by the Lordes, he appoynted new in their ſtead.

To this foreſaid abſolution procured frõ Rome for the king and his ſonne: Edward returning out of Fraunce, at that time did not geue his conſent, but held wͭ the Lordes. Who then putting themſelues in armes, with a great power repaired vp to London (keping there, in the ſuburbes and places about) while the king kept wͭin the tower, cauſing the citie gates to be watched and lockt, and all within the ſaid citie being aboue the age of 12. yeares to be ſworne vnto him. But at length through the meanes of certaine comming betweene, this tumultuous perturbation was ſomwhat appeaſed, (at leaſt ſome hope of peace appeared) ſo that the matter was takẽ vp for that time without war or bloudſhed. Notwͭſtanding, ſome falſe pretenſed diſſemblers there were, which ſecretly diſcloſing all the counſails and doings of the Lords vnto the king, did all they coulde to hinder concord, and to kindle debate. By the meanes of whom, the purpoſe of the Lords came not to ſo good effect, as otherwiſe it might. Ex Flor Hiſt.

In this preſent yere (as affirmeth ẏ forenamed author) it was rumored abroade, that all the Biſhops of England went about to recouer againe out of ẏ handes of religious men, all ſuch churches and benefices, which were to them improperated or appropriated: and ẏ they, for the expeditiõ of the ſame had ſent vp to Rome, both meſſengers & mony nothing miſdoubting to obteine their purpoſe. But as a litle good fruite in thoſe daies vſed to ſpring out of that ſea: ſo I do not finde, that godly ſute and labour of the biſhops to take any fruitfull effect. The ſame yere died Pope Alexander, after whom ſucceeded Pope Vrban the fourth.

Of the which Pope Vrbane the king alſo obtained, or rather reuiued a new releaſemẽt from hys oth, made to the prouiſiõs and ſtatutes of Oxford. which being graunted, he commaundeth incontinent all the foreſaid lawes & prouiſions through England to be diſſolued and brokẽ. This done, the King with the Queene taketh hys voiage into Fraunce, where he fell into great infirmitie of ſicknes, and the moſt part of his familie taken with the feuer quartane, of which many died. The prouiſions of Oxford again graunted by the kyng.

The welſhmen this yere, breaking into the borders of England, did much annoyance in the lands of Roger lord Mortimer: but mightely again by him were expulſed, not without great ſlaughter of the inuaders. About which time, the king through ſome diſcrete counſaile about hym, inclined to peace and concorde with his nobles, graunting of his mere voluntarie will, the conſtitutions and prouiſions of Oxforde to take place in the Realme, directing his commaundement to euery ſhire. All be it, the Realme yet was not altogether pacified for all that.

The Nobles ryſing againſt the ſtraungers hauing the commodities of the realme Peter of Hereford a Burgundian a rich Byſhop.

John Maunſell a rich prieſt.

After this foloweth the yeare 1263. in which, the Barons of England confederating themſelues together, for maintaining the ſtatutes and lawes of Oxford, and partly moued with the old grudge conceiued againſt the ſtraungers (maintayned by the King and the Queene, and Edward their ſonne, in the realme of England) ioyned powers in all forceable wiſe: and firſt inuaded the ſayd ſtraungers, namely thẽ which were about the king. Their goods and manors they waſted and ſpoyled, whether they were perſons eccleſiaſticall or temporall. Among whom beſides other, was Peter a Burgundian (Biſhop of Hereford, a rich prelate) with al his treaſure apprehended and ſpoiled: alſo his coũtreymen, whom he had placed to be Canons of the ſame church. with like order of handling other alienes alſo, to whom was cõmitted the cuſtody of diuers caſtels, as of Glouceſter, of worceſter, of Brignorth: were ſpoiled, inpriſoned, and ſent away. Briefly, whatſoeuer he was in all the land that could not vtter the Engliſh toung, was of euery raſcall diſdained, and happy if he might ſo eſcape. By reaſon whereof it ſo came to paſſe, that a great number as wel of other foreners, as eſpecially religious men and rich Prieſtes (which here had gathered much ſubſtance) were vrged to that extremitie, ẏ they were glad to flee the lande. In the cataloge of whõ, was one moſt principally named John Maunſel, a prieſt notoriouſly growen in riches and treaſures not to be told: hauing in his hand ſo many & rich benefices, that neare no biſhop of this realme might compare with him in riches. who notwͭſtanding he kept with the king at London, yet was cõpelled priuely to voide the Realme, & was purſued by Henry the ſonne of Rich. king of Almaine. Certaine other ſtraungers there were, to the number of 200. and more, which hauing the caſtell of winſore there inmured and intrenched themſelues, to whome at length prince Edward alſo adioyned himſelfe.

The kyng agayn agreeth with the Nobles.

In the meane time while this ſturre was abroade, the king keeping them in the tower, & ſeeing the greateſt part of his nobles & commons with the Londoners to be ſet againſt him: agreed to the peace of the Barons, & was conſented to aſſent againe to the ordinances and prouiſions of Oxford.

The Queene a great cauſe of this debate.

The forme of peace concluded betweene the king and the Nobles.

Oxford. Albeit the Queene, by al meanes poſſible went about to perſwade the king not to aſſent therto. Who as ſemed, was a great worker in kindling thys fire of diſcorde betweene the king & the baronage. In ſo much, that when the ſayde Queene Alinore ſhoulde paſſe by barge from the tower to Windſore: the Lõdiners ſtanding vpon yͤ bridge with their exclamations, curſings, and throwing of ſtones & durt at her, interrupted her courſe, cauſing her to returne to the tower againe. Notwithſtanding, the peace yet continued with the nobles and the king, the forme therof was this. Firſt, yͭ Henry ſonne of Richard king of Romanes, ſhould be deliuered by the King & Quene. Secondly, that the Caſtels againe ſhould be committed to the cuſtodie of Engliſhmen, not of ſtraungers. Thirdly, that the prouiſions and ſtatutes decreed at Oxford, ſhould as well by the king, as by al other inuiolably be obſerued. Fourthly, that the realme henceforth ſhuld be ruled and gouerned not by foreners, but by perſonages borne within the land. Fiftly, that all alienes and ſtraungers ſhould voyde the land, not to returne againe, except onely ſuch, whoſe abode ſhoulde by the common aſſent of the kings truſtie ſubiectes be admitted and alowed.

The caſtle of Windſor recouered out of the handes of ſtraũgers.

And all theſe things, as touching the taking of Northampton, were done on the Sabboth day in paſſion weeke, being the thyrd of Aprill, in the yeare of our Lord. 1264. And the king went forward euen to Notingham, burning and waſting the manners of the Lords and others his enemies, and there he gathered together his nobles, and greatly increaſed hys number.

Earle Simon Mountfort fayneth him ſelfe ſicke.

when this ill lucke was tolde of them that there were run away to the Earle Simon, whiche was comming towardes Northampton wt a great hoſte: he was in a great rage, & yet was not diſcouraged. But immediatly going to London, cauſed a chariot to be made him after the maner of lytters or couches, wherein he might ride as though he were ſicke: for he fayned himſelfe to be feeble and weake, whereas he was in deede a ſtout and valiaunt warriour. And there gathered to him other noble men that were cōfederate with him, Earles and Barōs, euery one bringing with them their ſeuerall armies. And preparing their ingynes of woode, they went to beſiege Rocheſter, for the Earle of worceſter in the kynges behalfe, kept both the towne and caſtell. when they had gotten the firſt gate and the bridge, they were partly wounded and compelled to retire, and there that valiant knight Roger de la Bourne was wounded and very il handled: And whileſt they continued ſiege there a while, it was told them that the kyng was comming toward London with a mighty hoſt. And they ſayd one to an other: if the king at hys cōming ſhould take London, we ſhall be ſhut in as it were in a ſtraight corner. Let vs therefore returne to London that we may keep in ſafety both the place and the people. Therefore appointing certaine perſons to keepe the ſiege, they returned to London. At the length when the king came, they went forth with the Citizens to meete him, not with floures and palmes in their handes, but ſwordes and ſpeares. The K. ſhunned them, and after he had the Caſtell of Kingſton, which was the Erle of Gloceſters, he went from thence to Rocheſter: where after he had killed a few, he brake ẏ ſiege, and from thence the king went to Tunbridge. And the towne and Caſtell now being geuen vp to him, he tooke there the Counteſſe of Gloceſter, & put her into an Abbey, not to be kept in hold, but to goe at libertye whether ſhe would: And he left for the cuſtody of the Caſtell and City a great part of his hoaſt to the number of aboue xx. picked out enſignes, for that it was commonly ſaid that the Earle of Gloceſter would come out of hād to aſſault them. which being done, he continued on his iourney to wincheſter, where he receiued to peace, the ſeamen of the hauē townes. And three dayes after vpon the ſonday following he came to the towne of Lewes, and was receaued into the Abbey, and his ſonne Edward into the Caſtell. Then the Barons ſent letters to the king the xii. day of May, the tenor wherof followeth.

The letter of the Lords to the kyng.

TO theyr moſt excellent Lord Henry by the grace of God king of England, Lord of Ireland, and Duke of Aquitania: hys Barons and other his faythfull ſubiectes, being willing to keep their othe and fidelitie to God and him, ſend greeting and due obedidience with honour and reuerence. Whereas by many experimentes it is manifeſt, that ſome of your graces aſsiſtaunces haue reported to your maieſty many lyes of vs, working miſchiefe, as much as in them lyeth, not onely agaynſt vs, but agaynſt you alſo and your whole Realme: Be it knowne to your highnes, that we haue bene alwayes willing to defend the health and ſauegarde of your perſon with all our power and fealty due to your grace: purpoſing to vexe to the vttermoſt of our power and eſtate not onely our ill willers, but alſo your enemies, and the enemies of your whole Realme. If it be your good pleaſure geue no credite to thē, we ſhall be alwayes found your faithfull. And we the Earle of Leiceiſter and Gilbert of Clare at requeſt of the other, for vs & them haue put to our ſeales.

These letters being read and heard, there was a counſell called, and the king writ back to them, and ſpecially to the two Earles of Leiceſter and Gloceſter, in maner and forme following.

The anſwer of the king to the Lords

HEnry by the grace of God king of England, Lord of Ireland, Duke of Aquitanie. &c. To Simon Mountfort, and Gilbert de Clare, and their confederates. For as much as by the warre & generall diſquietnes by your meanes raiſed vp in our whole realme, and alſo the burninges and other hurtfull enormities, it appeareth manifeſtly that you keepe not your fidelitie to vs ward, nor care any thing for our health or ſafety: And for that ye haue inorderly greued our nobles, and other our faythfull ſubiectes, ſticking faythfully and conſtantly to vs (as you haue certified vs) we accounting their loſſe as our owne, and their enemies as ours. And ſeing theſe my aforeſayd faithfull ſubiects for the keeping of their fidelitie, do aſsiſt vs manfully and faythfully agaynſt your vnfaithfulnes, we therefore care not for your fidelitie or loue, but defie you as our and their enemies. Witnes my ſelfe at lewes the day & yeare aboueſayd.

The letter of Richard K. of Almaine and prince Edward to the Barons.

Alſo Richard king of Almaine, and Lord Edward the ſonne of king Henry writ alſo to the Barons in this wiſe. Richard by the grace of God, king of the Romaynes alwayes Auguſtus, and Edward the eldeſt ſonne of the noble king of England, & al the other Barons and nobles conſtantly and faythfully in hart & deede cleauing to the foreſayd king of England: to Simon Mountfort, and Gilbert de Clare and to all and ſinguler other their adherents in their conſpiracie. By your letters whiche you ſent to our Lord the noble king of England we haue vnderſtanding that you defie vs, although before any ſuch word, your defiaunce towardes vs was apparant inough by your cruell perſecution in burning our poſſeſsions and ſpoyling our goodes: we therefore geue you to witte, that we all and euery one of vs, as your enemies, doe defie you all as our open enemies. And farther that we will not ceaſe, where ſoeuer it ſhall lye in our power, to the vttermoſt of our force and might, to ſubuert your perſons and all that you haue. As touching that you laye to our charge, that we geue neyther faythfull nor good counſell to our Lord the king, you ſay not the truth. And if your Lord Simon Mountfort, or Gilbert de Clare, will affirme the ſame in our Lord the kinges court: we are ready to get ſafeconduit for you to come to the ſayd Court to try, and declare the truth of our innocency and the falſehood of you both, as forſworne traytors, by ſome man equall with you in nobilitie and ſtocke. All we, are contayned with the ſeales of the aforeſayd Lordes, the Lord Richard, and the Lord Edward. Dated the day aforeſayd.

The battaile of Lewes betwene the king and the Barons beginneth.

Both which letters beyng read, they drew neare to the king for they were not farre diſtant from the place whiche is called Lewes. And for that there wanted to the Kinges ſtore prouiſion for their horſes, it was cōmanded them, on tewſday to go forth to ſeeke for hay and prouender. which when they were gone forth, were preuented moſt of them, of their enemies and killed: but the reſidue returning, ſaw their enemies comming very early, on ẏ wedneſday morning, and making outcries ſtirred vp the king, & his hoſte to arme themſelues. Then the Barons comming to the full playne deſcended there, and girding & trimming their horſes made fit their harnies to them. And there the Earle Simon made the Earle of Gloceſter, and Robert Deuer, and many other new knightes: which being done, he deuided and diſtincted his hoſt into foure ſeueral battails. And he appointed noble men to guide & gouern euery battaile. And ouer ẏ firſt battayle were ordayned Captaines, Henry Mountfort the eldeſt ſonne of the Earle Simon & Guido his brother, Lord Iohn de Bruch the yonger, & Lord Humfry de Boun. Ouer the ſecond battaile, Lord Gilbert Clare Earle of Gloceſter, Lord Iohn the ſonne of Lord S. Iohn and Lord william of Mounchenſi. And ouer the third, in whiche the Londiners were at their requeſt, the Lord Nicholas Segraue was aſſigned. which required alſo very inſtauntly, that they might haue ẏ firſt ſtroke in the battayle, at the aduenture come what come woulde. But ouer the fourth battayle, the Earle himſelfe was captayne with the Lord Thomas of Pilneſtone. In ẏ meane ſeaſon came forth the kinges hoſt, preparing themſelues to the field in three battayles: of whiche Edward the kynges ſonne led the firſt, with the Earle of warwicke and Valence the kings brother: and the ſecōd the king of Almaine guided, with hys ſonne Henry: but the king with hys nobles guided the third. And the fourth legion the king appoynted not, by reaſon that he had left many of hys chiefe ſouldiours behinde him, to keepe the Caſtell and towne of Tunebridge agaynſt the Earle of Glocceſter. And the moſt part of the kinges army were but young men, for the king thought not that his Barōs had bene come ſo nigh hand. Theyr armies being on both ſides ſet in aray & order, they exhorted one an other on eyther party to fight valiantly: & after they buckled together, the battaile was great & many horſemen were ouerthrown euen in a moment. But by and by Edward the kings ſonne with his band, as a fierce young gentlemen, & valiant knight fell vpon his enemies with ſuch force, that he compelled them to recule backe a great way: ſo that the hinmoſt (thinking by reaſon of their geuing backe, that the foremoſt were ſlayne) ran many away of them, and taking water to paſſe ouer, were almoſt threeſcore ſouldiours drowned, & a few of thē being ſlaine, all the reſt fled. Straight way the Londiners whiche had aſked the firſt fight, knowing not howe the battaile went tooke them to theyr heeles: whom Edward purſued with his band killing the hinmoſt of them by the ſpace of two or three miles. For hee hated them becauſe they had rebelled agaynſt his father, and diſgraced his mother whē ſhe was caryed by barge vpon the Temſe, frō the tower to Windſore, as is aboue touched, pag. ooo.

Richard king of Almaine with his ſonne taken priſoners.

The kings main battaile at Lewes diſcomforted, and the king fayne to take the Abbey.

Whileſt that Prince Edward was thus in the chaſe of the Lōdoners, who had the vawward of the Barons battell: In the meane tyme the mayne battayle of the Barons ſet vpon the kinges mayne battayle, of the which the kyng of Almaine yͤ brother of king Henry had the leading: which being ſoone diſcomforted, and he with hys ſonne Henry & Robert de Brus, John Couen with diuers other Captaynes taken priſoners: the reareward wherein the Kyng himſelfe fought, being immediately ſo hardly beſet, & ſeyng his knightes and ſouldiours on euery ſide about him beaten down and ſlayne, and diuers other of hys ſouldiours to forſake the field and ſhift for themſelues: thought good to take agayne the town, and ſo retired into the Abbay frō whence he came, ſhutting and rampering vp the gates, & cauſed the ſame to be ſtrongly warded with ſouldiours. To be briefe, the Barons thus getting the field after long fight, and many men on either ſide ſlayne: entred alſo the town of Lewes, purſuing in chaſe ſuch ſouldiours as thether fled for ſuccour.

Prince Edward returning from the firſt chaſe, findeth altogether loſt.

In the meane tyme, Prince Edward returning from the chaſe of the Lōdiners, as ye heard, who deſired to geue the firſt onſet: and firſt eſpying the chariot of yͤ Earle Simon (which he cauſed purpoſely to be made for him) & the horſes in the ſame, without eyther waggener or any other to gouerne the ſame: fell immediately vpon the chariote, & brake it al in peeces, & ſlew two Burgeſes that were within the ſame. But when he came nearer to the place where the bloudy battel had bene fought, & ſaw the great diſcomforture and ouerthrow which in his abſence wͭ great mortalitie and ſlaughter had happened: hys hart was muche diſmayd, and hys countenaunce altered. Yet notwithſtanding comforting & couraging his knightes & ſouldiors, of whom he had a valiant company, in battell aray marched toward the towne. Agaynſt whome, came the Barons agayne with all theyr power. And this was begon betwixt them a freſh field and new battaile, & many men ſlayne on either ſide. But at length, the Earle de Warenia, with the kinges two brethren, forſooke the field and fled: after whō went more then ſeuen hundred choſen ſouldiours, whiche were of their houſe and family: who the ſame day came to Penenſie, and there took ſhipping ouer the ſea. Alſo Hugh Bigot with diuers other fled, and left the valiaunt Prince fighting in the field: which thing he alſo perceauing, tooke the towne. And when he found not the King his father at the Caſtle, he went frō thence to the Abbey where he was. In the meane ſeaſon the town was deuided in parts: ſome fighting: ſome ſpoyling, ſome getting of booties, neyther could ſcarcely one of them know, & diſcerne an other whether he were his friend or enemy. But when wͭin a whyle the Barōs had aſſembled ſome company, they gaue an aſſault vpon the Caſtel, thinking to haue reſcued John Gifford and others whom the kings ſouldiours had takē priſoners and put therein. But the ſouldiours wͭin defended manfully the ſame, add in throwing out balles of wyld fire, as for the defence thereof they had, they alſo fired part of the towne. Then the Barons retired and left the Caſtell, and purpoſed to haue ſet vpon the Abbey where the King and prince Edward hys ſonne was, which alſo was ſet on fire by the aſſault geuen to the Caſtell. But yet it was ſhortly recouered & quenched. Then Edward the kinges ſon perceiuing the bold enterpriſe of the Barons, prepared with couragious knightes and ſouldiours as were yet remaynıng & within the Abbey, to haue iſſued out, & to haue geuē a new charge vpon thē, But that perceiuing the Barons, ſent vnto the king Meſſengers to intreat a truce for that day, & on the morow to talk and cōclude of a further peace betweene them. This battaile was fought vpō the 19. day of May, being the yeare of our Lord. 1264.

The Caſtle of Lewes beſieged

A peace intreated betweene the king & Barones.

The two princes giuen in hoſtage.

The next day, whiche was Thurſday, there were ſent on eyther ſide two preaching Friers betweene the king & the Barons, with certaine articles, & demaunds of peace: ſo that with certeine others, theſe conditions were agreed on: that on the morow beyng Friday, yͤ prince ſhould geue himſelfe in hoſtage for the king hys father and other of his partes. And Henry the Kinges ſonne of Almayne alſo ſhoulde geue himſelfe the like for hys father. That thoſe thinges which ſhould be concluded vppon for the benefite and commoditie of the Realme, and peaceable quietnes thereof might be performed: and that all ſuch priſoners as were taken on either ſide, ſhoulde be freely raunſomed and ſent home.

The next day which was Saterday, the king diſcharged al his ſouldiours, and other that were with him in the Abbey, licenſing them to depart whether they liſted. And furthermore, by the aduiſe of his ſonne and the Barons: he gaue commandement to thoſe which he had appoynted to the keeping of Tunbridge, that they ſhold make no attēpt to the preiudice or hurt of the Barons, but in hope of the peace which was now at the poynt to be concluded, they ſhould alſo depart euery man to theyr houſes and habitations. But they geuing no credite thereunto, went wͭ theyr furniture to Briſtow, where they kept themſelues in garriſon, vntill the eſcaping of Edward the kinges ſonne out of priſon. But firſt before that, when they heard at Tunbridge that the king was vanquiſhed in battaile, & that the Lōdiners in the forward were put to flight by Prince Edward (by a meſſenger that eſcaped from the ſame) and that alſo the ſame Londiners were at Crowdown: they ſet vpon them in the euening tide, and taking from them much ſpoyle: ſlew alſo many of them.

The kyngs ſouldiours in Tūbridge after they had ſpoyled the Londiners at Crowdown kept themſelues in garriſon at Briſtow.

But when Roger Mortimers part began to decreaſe, & Simon the Earles part on the other ſide to increaſe: he bare himſelfe more ſtoughter, for that both the king and all that was his, did depend vpon the good will and fauour of the Earle: and led with him the kinges ſonne to ſuch holds & Caſtles as he thought to be moſt ſtrōgeſt. As though all were in hys handes to doe as hym liked, and kept the hoſtages more ſtraightly thē he was wont to do. In ſo much that when it was blown abroad that the kings ſonne was kept as a priſoner, diuers counſailed him that were hys frendes, that he ſhould deſire to diſport himſelfe at the barriers, that yͤ people might haue a ſight of him, but he being narrowly garded as hee knewe, and fearing ſome tumult to ariſe, thought good to refuſe their counſell and ſo did.

Earle Simon after this victory beareth himſelf ſo ſtout, that he impriſoneth the hoſtages of the kings.

In this troubleſome yeare, whiche was 1264. as the Londiners with the nobles were thus occupyed in warre and diſſention: the malignaunt Jewes thinking to take vauntage of that tyme, wͭ priuy treaſon conſpired agaynſt the whole Citty and ſtate of the Nobles. Who being taken with the maner, were almoſt all ſlayne that dwelt in the city of London.

In this yeare after the death of Pope Urbane, ſucceeded the ſayd yeare of our Lord. an. 1264. Pope Clement the 4. Whiche Clement, as affirmeth Nich Triuet, was firſt a maryed man & had wife and children, and was the ſollicitor and counſailor to the Frenche king. Then after yͤ death of his wife was biſhop intituled Podiēſis. After that archbiſhop of Narbone. And at laſt made Cardinall. Who being ſent of P. Urbane in Legacie, for reformation of peace in his abſence was elected Pope by the Cardinals. About this time floriſhed Thomas of Aquine, reader at Paris among the Dominike Friers, and Bonauenture among the Francis Friers. Ex Nich. Triuet.

{Ann. 1265.}

As this paſſed on, the ſonnes of Simon the Earle, to wit, Henry, Simon, Guido, and Hēry being puft vp, and with the pride of this ſucceſſe eleuated, did that whiche nothing contented the Earle of Glouceſter. In ſo muche that he chalenged Henry the eldeſt ſonne of the Earle Simon Mountfort, at the barriers, to be tryed at Northampton. But that chalenge was taken vp, leaſt ſome further inconuenience might haue riſen therof. But the Earle of Glouceſter being moued therewith in hys minde, ſent vnto hys father the Earle that he ſhould deliuer him ſuch priſoners being Noble men, as he tooke at the battayle of Lewes. Amongſt whom, the king of Almaine was named firſt. But he by countermaund anſwered him and ſaid: that it might content and ſatiſfie him, for that he had ſaued and preſerued to him his landes, that day the battayle was fought at Lewes. And that furthermore he would not ſend him ſuch priſoners as he demaunded: But that he himſelfe kepte more nobler then they in the Caſtell of Douer: among whom was John Baſſet, whiche vndermined and braſt downe the walles of Northampton, at that conflict as is ſayd before and ſpecified.

Diſſention betweene Earle Simon and the Erle of Gloceſter

The Earle of Glouceſter being herewith diſpleaſed, as ſoone as he heard this aunſwere: ſent incontinently to the Lord Roger Mortimer, which alwayes tooke the kynges part, deſiring that they two might take together touching the benefite and commoditie of the king. Who, doubting ſome deceite, deſired ſureties and pledges for hys ſafe return, & he would come and talk with him, and ſo had. Whē they met, and had a while talked familiarly: the Earle of Glouceſter ſhewed him all that he was purpoſed to do: and that further he lamented, he had ſo much and greatly offended the king: And that he woulde with all his power and habilitie make amends for that offence in the reſtitution of the king agayne to his kingly dignitie, as much as he poſſible might. Therfore they ſet ſecretly to Rabert, yͤ brother of yͤ Erle of Glouceſter, which was neare about the Earle Symon, & made him to conſent with them therein. And to worke this thing more circumſpectly, whē oportunitie ſerued thereunto: Roger Mortimer ſent vnto the kings ſonne a horſe excelling all other in footmanſhip, vnto whome he might be ſure to truſt, when he ſaw conuenient tyme thereunto. After which things thus contriued, Prince Edward deſired leaue of the Earle to proue his courſer againſt ſuch time he ſhould ryde at the tylt, as they might when they liſted. Aſſoone as he had gotten leaue, and that with gallopyng and raunging the field he had weryed diuers of their horſes: at the laſt, getting vp vpon the horſe which for that purpoſe was ſent, and ſpying a ſeruaunt on horſebacke cōming toward him with two ſwords: He turned about vnto his keeper, whoſe name was Robert de Roſe, & to other his playfellowes that were with him, ſaying: My louing Lords, thus long haue I kept you company, & haue bene in your cuſtodies: And now not purpoſing to vſe your cōpanyes any longer, betake you to God: And quickely turning his horſe about, put to the ſpurres and away went he. The other pricked after a pace, but yet came far inough behinde, and ouertake hym they coulde not. At laſt, when they ſawe Roger Mortimer comming from his Caſtle of Wygmore, accompanyed with many armed men to meete him as before it was appointed, they returned again home as wiſe as when they came foorth. And when this the princes eſcape was diuulgated: much people came vnto hym out of euery quarter, with great ioy therof. Amongeſt whom, the firſt was the Earle of Glouceſter, and the other ſouldiours of the kings, which had long now lien at Briſtow, and thereaboutes. And within a ſhort ſpace he had a great and mighty hoſt.

Prince Edward eſcapeth frō out of the cuſtody of Earle Simon by a trayne.

Which thing when the Earle Symon vnderſtode, he much doubted and miſtruſted himſelfe: And ſending into Wales, he gate from thēce a great many men, and augmēted hys power as ſtrongly as he might, from euery part of England. He ſent alſo Simon his ſonne to the noble men of the North partes, that with all poſſible ſpeede he might bring them with him: who with a great companye came with him, and at Kenelworth a while they ſtayd, and there pitched their tents. But leauing Kenelworth for a certein time they went to Wincheſter, and ſpoyled the ſame, and then returned agayne to Kenelworth. And when this by a certen ſpiall was declared to Edward the kynges ſonne, who then was at Worceſter, which he had gotten after he came from Glouceſter a little before: prepared himſelfe with hys ſouldiours, in the night ſeaſon to goe to the place where the ſpye ſhould bring hym, which was into a deepe vally nere vnto the place, where Simon and his company had pitched. And whē in the morning they were very early about to arme thēſelues, and prepare theyr horſes: they heard a great noyſe of theyr enemies comming towardes them. Then thinking, that they had prepared themſelues agaynſt their comming, and ſo had bene betraied: they ſet forth in battell aray marching forward, till that they mette certeine of theyr enemies ſtraggling in long winges, thinking to haue gone aforaging & to haue ſought for vitailes: whō they took, & with their freſh horſes, new horſed their ſouldiours that had their horſes tyred wͭ long trauell. And ſo marching forward, came very early in the morning vpō theyr enemies, whom for the moſt part they found ſleeping and laying luſtily about them: they ſlew diuers, ſome they toke, the reſt they put to flight: and 15. of theyr chiefeſt enſignes they tooke, and many other rich ſpoyles. But yong Simon himſelf lodged in the Caſtell, who with a few with him eſcaped and fled. And this was the fourth day before the Nones of Auguſt. an. 1265.

The Earle Simon ſendeth about, and in all haſt gathereth a power.

The firſt enterpriſe of prince Edward after his eſcape by the meanes of a ſpie.

But when Edward, heard that Earle Simon was cōming toward Kenelworth, to ioyne with hys ſonnes battell: he marched forward to meete hym, yͤ third day after at Euſham. Where he deuided hys hoſt into 3. battayles, he himſelf hauing the leading of one, the Earle of Glouceſter the ſecōd, and Roger Mortimer the third, which came vpō their backs. The kings ſonne Edward came Northward as though he came frō Kenelworth to Euſham, & becauſe he would not be deſcride, he cauſed hys owne ſtanderdes and enſignes to be taken down, and yong Simons which he had taken before to be aduanced. But the Erle Simons Scurier, whoſe name was Nicholas, ſhewed the Earle yͭ ſuch bandes and companies were marching towards him who thinking the ſame to haue bene Simon hys ſonnes power, not knowing of the ouerthrow whiche he had before, gaue ſmall credite thereunto: till that yͤ ſaid Nicholas the better to view and deſcrie them, went vp to the Abbey ſteple of Euſham, where he might plainly diſcerne them all and their ſtanderds: For by this tyme, they were mounted the hill which they laboured to attayne, thinking to haue that vauntage, when they ſhold geue theyr charge as they had purpoſed: and had alſo aduanced agayn his own ſtanderdes, and pulled down Simons, wherby they were the more eaſlyer deſcried and knowne. Then he cryed aloud to the Earle Simon and ſaid, we are all but dead men: For it is not your ſonne as you ſuppoſe that commeth, but it is Edward the kinges ſonne, that commeth from one parte: and the Earle of Glouceſter, from an other part, and Roger Mortimer from the third part. Then ſaid the Earle. The Lorde be mercifull vnto our ſoules, foraſmuch as our bodyes and liues are now in their handes: commaunding that euery man ſhould make hymſelfe redy to God, and to fight out the field, for that it was their willes to dye for their lawes and in a iuſt quarrell: And ſuch as woulde depart, he gaue leaue to goe their wayes that they ſhoulde be no diſcomfiture to the reſt.

The diſpoſing of the princes battayle againſt the Earle Simon fought at Euſham.

Prince Edwards hoſt deſcried, whereat the Earle was much abaſhed.

Then came vnto him his eldeſt ſonne Henry & comforted him, deſiring him to haue no diſpaire, nor yet miſtruſt in the good ſucceſſe of this victory, with other ſuch cheerfull wordes. No my ſonne (ſayth he) I diſpayre not: but yet, it is thy preſumption and the pride of the reſt of thy brethrē that haue brought me to this end ye ſee. Notwithſtanding yet I truſt, I ſhall dye to God and in a righteous quarrel. After wordes of comfort geuen to all his hoſt, and the oration made as is the maner, they all armed themſelues. The king alſo (whom the Earle alwaies kept with him) he armed in an armour of his owne. And then deuiding theyr battailes, they marched toward theyr enemies, but before they ioyned, the Welchmen ran theyr waies, and thinking to ſcape ouer the riuer of Dee, were there ſome drowned, & ſome ſlayne. Then when the battayles ioyned and came to handy ſtrokes, within ſhort ſpace, many of the Erles part fell and were ſlayne. And the king himſelfe being ſtroken at, cryed with a loud voyce to them, ſaying: kill me not, I am Henry your king. And with theſe the kinges wordes the Lord Adam Monhaut knewe him, and ſaued him. At whoſe voyce and cry came alſo prince Edward hys ſonne, and deliuered him to the garde and cuſtody of certayne knightes. In yͤ meane ſeaſon, the Earle Simon was hard beſtead and beaten downe, and alſo ſlayne before Edward the prince came at hym. Howbeit, before he fell, when as ye fought for his life, & Hēry his ſonne & other noble men on his part were about hym, he brake out in theſe words vnto hys enemies ſaying: what, is there no mercy & compaſſion with you? who agayne anſwered, what compaſſion ſhould there be ſhewed to traytors? Then ſayd he, yͤ Lord be mercifull to our ſoules, our bodyes are in your hands. And as ſoone as theſe wordes were ſpoken, they mangled hys body, and deuided his members, and cut of his head, which head Roger Mortimer ſent vnto his wife. And not farre of from him alſo was ſlayne Henry his eldeſt ſonne, the lord Hugh Spencer, the L. Radulphe Baſſet, the Lord Thomas de Heſtele, the Lord William Maundeuile, the Lord Iohn Bewchampe, the Lord Guido Bailloſet, the Lord Roger Rowley, and many other noble men beſides with a great multitude of people the Lord knoweth howe many. This battail was fought in the moneth of Auguſt & continued from one of the clocke till it was night: in the which, was not ſo much as one man on the Earles part of any eſtimation, fortitude, and courage, but in that battell loſt his life: more then the Lord Iohn, who by the great grace of God eſcaped death. Neither is this to be forgottē, that the ſame day being Tueſday, at that inſtant houre, when the battell began, whiche was at one of the clocke at after noone: there was ſuch a darcknes ouer all, ſuch thunder and ſuch tempeſt: that the like before that time was neuer ſeene, being very calme and fayre weather both immediately before and after, which ſeemed (ſayth myne author) to geue a playne demonſtration of that whiche afterward chaunced and followed.

The wordes of Earle Simon to his ſonne.

K. Henry almoſt ſlain in the battell, at length knowen by his voice & reskued by his ſonne.

Earle Simon, his ſonne, and many moe Lordes and Barons ſlaine at this battell of Euſham.

After this great ſlaughter and ouerthrow, there was a Parliament ſummoned at Wincheſter by the Earle of Glouceſter, and other of hys part. Here by the is to be conſidered, that the king although he was in the camp of the Erle of Leceiſter, being then in cuſtody, and his ſonne Edward with the Earle of Glouceſter, yet the king was in that ſide agaynſt his will, and therefore in the ſayd Parliament, the king was reſtored to his kingly dignitie which was before that tyme vnder the cuſtody of the Barons. But after the battaile was ended and done, certaine of them that loued the Earle: vpon an old ladder, gathered vp ſuche partes of his body as remayned, and couering the ſame with an old gowne brought it to Euſham: where they putting yͤ ſame in a faire linnen cloth, buried it in yͤ church. But not lōg after, by ſuch as thought not themſelues ſufficiently reuenged with his death (to wreke them of the dead corpes) took vp the ſame and threw it in an other place, ſaying: that he Kenilworth caſtle beſieged of the king.

Kenilworth decree againſt the diſherited.

Kenilworth decree gaynſayd by diuers.

Kenilworth caſtle yelded vp to the king before the returne of the meſſengers out of Fraunce.

The ſame yeare the king perceiuing, that vnleſſe yͤ Caſtle of Kenilworth were recouered, and the boldnes of thē reſtrayned that kept the ſame: many euils and inconueniences might enſue therupon, to yͤ preiudice of his kingdom: for that the number increaſed euery day more & more, waſting and ſpoyling the country all about. Therfore, he gathered an army and came downe to warwick, where he a while taryed expecting the meeting and aſſembling of hys Marqueſſes and Lordes, with engines and other munition ſautable. who when theyr bondes were furniſhed and muſtred, and al thinges ready, the morow after Midſomer day he diſplayed hys banner, & began his vyage marching towardes Kenilworth & beſieged the ſame. During which ſiege, by the aduiſe and counſaile of the king, the Popes Legate, and other noble men 12. perſons were choſē which ſhould haue the diſpoſing of thoſe thinges yͭ pertayned to the ſtate of the Realme, & of thoſe that had loſt their landes and inheritaunces: who amongeſt other thinges, made and eſtabliſhed this one prouiſo, that was commōly called Kenelworth decree. That all thoſe which haſt loſt their lādes by attaynder (although yet not attainted) ſhould fyne therfore at the kinges pleaſure, and take their lands of him agayn: paying ſome three yeares, ſome foure yeares, ſome two yeares reuenues of the ſame, according to the quallitie of the cryme & offence committed. All which prouiſos or prouiſions, were eſtabliſhed and confirmed as well by the corporall othe, as by ſignment of the ſame with the handes & ſeales of al the Prelates and clergy of England, there aſſembled for that purpoſe by the Popes Legate vpon the feaſt of all Saints. when theſe things were thus finiſhed, meſſengers were ſent on the kings behalfe, as wel to thoſe that kept yͤ caſtle of Kenilworth, as alſo to thoſe that were aſſembled in the Ile of Ely: willing them to come vnder the protection of the Kinges peace, and yeld to the foreſayd prouiſos eſtabliſhed by the twelue commiſſioners. Who altogether aunſwered & ſayd: that they would in no wiſe cōdeſcend therunto: both for that it was done without theyr conſentes not being called vnto it, and alſo for that the ſaid decree was ouer ſtraight and intollerable. within ſhorte ſpace after, great famine and peſtilence chaunced amongeſt them which kept the caſtle, in ſo much as they were without all hope of keeping the ſame: wherefore, ſoone after the king ſending agayne to them to yeld the Caſtle and take theyr pardōs, they conſulting together of their own eſtate: thus aunſwered the kings meſſengers, if it pleaſe the king and his counſaile to permit vs to ſend our meſſenger vnto the Lord Symon Mounfort which is beyond the ſea: that he may come by a certayne day to the defence of this hys garriſon & fort: and that in the meane ſpace, we be not diſturbed by the kinges army that hath enuironed vs, til the return of our meſſēgers: If by the day appoynted he come not, we will yeld vp the ſame, ſo that we may be pardoned of life, limme, and moueables.

When the meſſengers were returned, and had declared to the king their aunſwere: he conſulting with his Nobles about the matter, agreed to their petitions. And cauſed the truce to be proclaimed throughout all his campe, after that ſufficient hoſtages were on either ſide geuē for the performance of the ſame: whereupon, they ſet forward theyr meſſengers, as before was ſayd they woulde. But after that many of thē within the Caſtell being very greeuouſly vexed with the bloudy flixe and other diſeaſes, in ſo much that the whole men might not abide the corruption, and anoyaunce of thoſe that were diſeaſed: deliuered vp the Caſtell before the returne of the meſſengers againe, and were permitted to goe whether they would to refreſh themſelues, as men moleſted with great vexation & miſeries. After the rendring vp of the Caſtell, the king committed the cuſtody therof to hys ſonne Edmund, and ſo with hys hoſt departing from the ſiege, came vpon Chriſtmas euens euen to Oſney: where, he with great ſolemnity and triumph kept his Chriſtmas during ſeuen dayes, and from thence with hys hoſt came to windſore, from whence after a few dayes he marched towardes Ely: In whiche Iland he beſieged thoſe, which were diſherited, and ſharpely aſſaulted them.

The ſame yeare, Pope Clement the 4. promoted maiſter walter Giffard Byſhop of Bathe, to be Archbiſhop of Yorke.

In which yeare alſo the Church of England began to pay the tenthes of all their reuenues as wel ſpirituall as temporall, to the king: to continue for 3. yeares ſpace, and this was done by the authoritie Apoſtolicall.

Within a while after, the Barons which were yet remayning, gathered themſelues together agayne: Amongſt whome Iohn Daywile (being a ſubtile and ſtoute man of warre) began to haue a name & was well eſteemed amongeſt them: who altogether did what miſchiefe they might, and in the moneth of May, they aſſembled at Cheſterfield, vnder the ſayd Iohn Daywile & the Earle Ferarence, vpon whom the kinges ſouldiours, comming ſodenly in the night toke them ſleping, and ſlue many of them. Then the ſayd Iohn Daywile quickly arming himſelfe came forth: thinking no more defence both to ſaue himſelf and to eſcape. Who in the way, ſtroke the Lord Gilbert Hunſard ſuch a blow with his dimilance, that he feld both him & his horſe to yͤ ground, & ſo fled with a few more after him. And thus whileſt the poore ſouldiors fought & were ſlayn, the Barōs fled away & ſaued thēſelues. Alſo the Erle Ferarence fled, & hid himſelf in a Church. But being bewrayed by a womā he was taken forth, and led away priſoner. After this, the king kept a parliament at Northampton, where he diſherited all thoſe, that tooke any part with the Erle Simon & al their childrē. Where alſo the Popes Legate Octobonus held a conuocation, and excōmunicated al ſuch biſhops, as had taken any part with Simon, againſt the king: of whō diuers he ſent vp to Rome, to be abſoyled of the pope, and farther the ſaid Legate cauſed to be proclaymed certain decrees, which he himſelfe had made: And alſo the new grāt of Pope Clemēt, to the king and Queene, of al the tenthes for ſeuen yeres to come. And ſhortly after a taxe alſo was fined vpon yͤ country of Norfolke: to the gathering wherof, walter the byſhop of Norwich was appoynted. Ex Scala mundi.

After this, in the yeare of our Lord. 1267. King Henry beſieged agayne the Caſtell of Kenelworth, from the 7. day before the firſt day of Iuly, vntil the beginning of December: whether came Octobonus yͤ Popes Legate, by whoſe intreaty Henry Haſtinges deliuered the ſame vnto the K. which ſtoutly had defended the ſame and reſiſted the kyng, hauing pardon graunted both for him and hys, of his lyfe, landes, goodes, and cattels. In which tyme alſo the Barons agayne aſſembled, with Iohn Dayuile in the Ile of Axioline, & ſo proceeded till they came to Lincolne: which alſo they tooke, and ſpoyled the Iewes, and ſlue many of them: And entring their Sinagoge teare and rent the book of their law, and burnt the ſame, and all other writinges & obligations which they could come by. Which thing when the king heard, he ſent thither hys ſonne prince Edward: but as ſoone as they heard that, they fled into yͤ Ile of Ely, and fortified the ſame with Bulwarkes as ſtrongly as they might, at euery entraunce into the ſame. This was in the month of Aprill when Edward the kinges ſonne came thither. Who for the great aboundaunce of waters in the ſame, could by no meanes enter the Iland, til at length by the counſayle of the inhabitauntes of that prouince, he cauſed with a number of workmen great trenches and ditches to be made, ſomewhat to conuey away the water: And ſo long vſed the Counſayle of them, in making bridges with planks and hurdles, till at laſt they entred the Iland. Who as ſoone as they were entred, the Barons fled to London, where they were of the Londiners well entertayned. The reſt which were in the Iland, yelded themſelues (amongeſt whom was Roger wake, Simō the yonger, and Peches) ſauing their liues and members. After this, both the King and Edward his ſonne, came to Londō with a great power, but yet were kept out of the city, by the Barons and Citizens, for the ſpace of 40. dayes. And Octobonus the Legate (who for feare was fled into the Tower) they narowly layd for, that he ſhoulde not eſcape. At length by the intreaty of the Earle of Glouceſter and other Earles that were his friendes, both the Barons and Cittizens were pardoned, and admitted to the kinges fauour. And 4. Byſhops and 8. other noble men were choſen, ſuch as were at Couentry firſt nominated: that they ſhould order and diſpoſe all matters betweene the King and ſuche as had loſt theyr inheritaunce, as alſo the forme of theyr peace and raunſome. And proclamation was made vppon the feaſt of all Sainctes, of perfect peace and record throughout al the Realme.

The ſame was he, that made all the Cathedral & Conuentuall Churches to pay pencions: ſo that thoſe Churches whiche gaue not the vacancie of their benefices to their Clerkes and ſtraungers ſhould pay vnto them a certein yearly pencion during the vacācy of the benefices which they ſhould haue.

The mariage of Edmund Earle of Lancaſter

Then alſo dyd Edmunde Earle of Lancaſter and Leiceſter, and ſeconde ſonne of king Henry, take to wiſe the Earle of Albemark his daughter, and the Niece of ỹ Earle of Glouceſter: at whiche maryage was the king and the Queene: and all the Nobilitie of England.

The Byſhop of Sarum put from his conſecratiō.

The ſame yeare died Walter de Lawile Biſhop of Sarum the third day before the nones of Ianuary. After whō ſucceded Robert of Northampton the Deane of the ſame Church. And becauſe the ſee of Cant. was then vacant, he was confirmed by the Chapter of Canterbury: whiche Chapter had alwayes the iuriſdiction in ſpirituall cauſes, during the vacancy of that ſee, in as ample maner as the Byſhop hymſelfe had beyng aliue. After thys, the Byſhop elect comming thither, thinking to haue had hys conſecration, was notwithſtanding put backe for two cauſes: one was, for that there was preſent then no more but one Byſhop: the other was, for that all the other Biſhops had appealed, that he might not be conſecrated to their preiudice, that is, by the authoritie of the Chapter of Cant. ſaying, that they would not be vnder the obedience of the monks.

After this, ſolempne Meſſengers were for this cauſe ſent to the Cardinals of Rome, for that then ỹ ſee of Rome was vacant: who receiued aunſwere, that during the vacation of that ſee, the confirmation and conſecration of the Byſhop elect, pertayned to the foreſayd Chapter of Caunterbury.

During this kinges raigne, there was made a great & generall expedition of diuers and ſondry Chriſtian princes to Ieruſalem, taking vpon them the Lords character: that is the Croſſe: among whome was alſo Edward the kings ſonne one, to ỹ which expeditiō was graunted him a ſubſidie throughout al ỹ realme. The death of Boniface Archbiſh. of Cant.

About the time when Prince Edward was preparing his iourny toward Aſia. Boniface the Archbiſhop of Canterbury ended his life, in the country of Sebaudia, goyng belike to Rome or comming thence. After whoſe death, the Monks of Canterbury proceeding to a new election grāted by the king, agreed vppon the Prior of their houſe named Adam Chelendene. But the king & his ſonne Prince Edward conſenting and ſpeaking in the behalfe of Robert Burnell theyr Chauncellour: did ſollicite the matter with the Monkes, partly intreating. partly threatning them, to chuſe the ſaid Robert to be Archbiſhop. Notwithſtanding the Monkes being ſtoute, woulde neyther relent to their curteous requeſt, nor yet bow to theyr boyſtrous threates, but conſtantly perſiſting in their former election, appealed from the king and prince to the Pope. Prince Edward being now on his iourny, and ſeing himſelfe thus fruſtrated of the Monkes, writeth backe to the king his father: deuoutly praying and beſeching in no wiſe to admit the election of the foreſayd Monks. And ſo paſſing to Douer with Hēry the ſonne of Rich. his vncle king of Romanes, with their wiues tooke their paſſage in the month of Auguſt. After this the Prior thus elected, as is foretold, but not admitted by the king to be Archbiſhop went vp to Rome.

Adam Chelindene elected Archb. of Cant.

Appellation from the K. to the Pope by the Mōks of Cant.

Adam Chelindene goeth vp to Rome.

In the meane tyme, the Monkes in the abſence of their elect) ordayned one Geoffrey Pomenall to be theyr Official: who ſeing himſelf aduaunced to that dignity, & bearing belike ſome old grudge agaynſt the Prior of Douer, cauſed him to be cited vp to appeare in the Chapterhouſe of Canterbury. The Prior of Douer ſeing this citation to be preiudiciall to him and to the Church of Douer, whereas the Monkes of Cant. haue no ſuch iuriſdiction (the ſee of Cāterbury being vacant) but that all things appertayning to that Church, ought to be reſerued whole to the conſecratiō of the new Archb. therefore, for the ſtate both of hym and of hys Church, he appealed vp alſo vnto Rome. But to returne to the archbiſhop agayne.

Variance betweene the officiall of Cant. and the prior of Douer.

Appellation to Rome.

Adam Chelindon reſigneth to the Pope. Rob. Kilwarby Archb. of Cant.

The ſecond yeare after, Adam Chelindon the foreſayde Archb. elect, remayning all this while at Rome: at laſt reſigned vp hys election to the popes hand, beyng Greg. 10. who then gaue the ſame to Rob. Kilwarby. who then cōming to Douer, reſtored agayn the Prior of that houſe, being before excluded vpon certain cauſes. By theſe contentions, iudge good reader, of the religion of theſe men, and of theſe times, And now to returne to our former ſtory.

The cōcordance

About whiche tyme came out the great concordaunces by an Engliſhe Frier, called Iohn Dernington. Ex Eulogio.

It was aboue declared, how a generall voyage beyng proclaymed to warre agaynſt the Turkes, and a ſubſidie beyng collected in Englād vpon the ſame: prince Edward with other was appoynted to take theyr voyage, & nowe were onward in theyr iourny. who at Michelmas following, with hys company came to Egermorth, whiche is from Marſilius 8. leagues weſtward: & there taking ſhip agayne (hauing a mery winde and proſperous) within x. dayes arriued at Sunes at Tunicium, where he was wyth great ioy welcommed & entertayned of the Chriſtian princes that there were to this purpoſe aſſembled, as of Philip the French king, whoſe father Ludouicus, died a little before: of Carolus the king of Sicilia: and the two kinges of Nauarre and Aragō. And as the Lord Edward came thither for hys father the king of England, thither came alſo Henry the ſonne of the king of Almaine for his father, who at hys returne from the voyage, was ſlayne in a chappell at Viterbium hearing maſſe, by the Lord Simō and Guido, the ſonnes of the Lord Simon Mountfort Earle of Leiceſter.

When Prince Edward demaunded of theſe kings and Princes what was to be done, they anſwered him agayne and ſayd: The Prince of this Citie ſayd they, and the prouince adioyning to the ſame, hath bene accuſtomed to pay tribute vnto the king of Sicile euery yeare. And nowe, for that the ſame hath bene for the ſpace of vii. yeares vnpayed and more, therefore we thought good to make inuaſion vpon hym. But the king knowing the ſame tribute to be but iuſtly demaunded, hath now according to our owne deſires ſatiſfied for the tyme paſt, and alſo payed his tribute before hand.

The great expedition to inuade the Turke ſtayed by the concluding of a peace.

The great voyage of the frēch kyng againſt the Turkes turned to a mony matter.

Then ſayde he: My Lordes what is this to the purpoſe? Are we not here all aſſembled, and haue taken vpon vs the Lordes Character to fight againſt the Infidels and enemies of Chriſt? what meane you then to conclude a peace with them: God forbid we ſhould do ſo: for nowe the land is playne and hard, ſo that we may approch the holy Citty Ieruſalem: then ſayd they nowe haue we made a league with them: neither is it lawfull for vs to breake the ſame: But let vs returne agayne to Sicilia and when the wynter is paſt, we may well take ſhipping to Acra. But this counſaile nothing at al liked him, neither did he ſhew himſelfe wel pleaſed therwith: But after that he had made them a princely banquet, he went into hys cloſet or priuy chamber, from amongſt them: neither woulde be partaker of any of that wicked mony which they had taken. They notwithſtanding continuing their purpoſe: at the next mery wynd took ſhipping, and for want of ſhips, left CC. of theyr men a ſhore crying out & piteouſly lamenting for the perill & hazard of death they were in. Wherewith Prince Edward being ſomewhat moued with compaſſion, came backe agayne to the land and receiued and ſtowed them in his own ſhippes, being the laſt that went aborde. Within 7. dayes after, they arriued in the kingdome of Scicilia ouer agaynſt the Citty Trapes, caſting theyr anchors a league from thence within the ſea, for that their ſhips were of great burden & throughly fraught. And frõ the hauen of the Citie they ſent out barges and boates to receiue and bring ſuch of the Nobilitie to land as would: but for theyr horſes for the moſt part, and all their armour they kept ſtil within bourd. At length towardes the euening, the ſea began to be rough & encreaſed to a great tempeſt & a mighty: In ſo much, that their ſhips were beaten one againſt an others ſides, and drowned there was of them at that tẽpeſt lying at anchor, more then 120. with all their armour and munition with innumerable ſoules beſides, and that wicked mony alſo which they had taken before likewiſe periſhed and was drowned. But the tempeſt hurt not ſo much as one ſhip of Prince Edwardes, who had in number 13. nor yet had one man loſt thereby, for that as it may be preſuppoſed, he conſented not to the wicked counſaile of ẏ reſt. When in the morning the Princes and kinges came to the ſea ſide, and ſaw al theyr ſhyps drowned: and ſaw their men and horſes in great number caſt vpon the land drowned, they had full heauy heartes, as well they might. For of all theyr ſhyps and mariners, whiche were in number a 1500. beſides the common ſouldiours: there was no more ſaued, then the Mariners of one onely Shyp, and they in this wiſe. There was in that ſhip a good and wiſe Matrone (a Counteſſe or an Earles wife) perceiuing the tempeſt to grow, and fearing her ſelf, called to her the Maiſter of the ſhip: & aſked whether in attempting to the ſhore, it were not poſſible to ſaue themſelues: who anſwered, that to ſaue the ſhip it was impoſſible, howbeit the men ẏ were therein by Gods help he doubted not. Then ſayd ẏ Counteſſe, for the ſhip force no whit: ſaue the ſoules therein, and haue to the, double the value of thy ſhip. Who immediately hoyſing the ſayles, with all force ran the ſhip a ground ſo neare the ſhore as poſſible was. Thus with the vehemency of the weather and force he came withall, braſt the ſhip and ſaued all that was within the ſame, as the matter had ſhewed and ſayd before.

Prince Edward and his men preſerued from the tempeſt. The integritie of Prince Edward rewarded of God.

Then the kinges and princes (altering theyr purpoſe after this ſo great a ſhypwrack) returned home again euery one vnto their own lands: Onely Edward the kinges ſonne remayned behinde with his men and ſhips, which ẏ Lord had ſaued and preſerued. Then Prince Edward (renouating hys purpoſe) tooke ſhipping agayn, and within 15. dayes after Eaſter arriued he at Acra, and went a land taking with hym a thouſand of the beſt ſouldiours & moſt expert, & taryed there a whole month, refreſhing both hys men and horſes and that in this ſpace he might learne and know the ſecretes of the land. After this, he took with hym 6.027. thouſand ſouldiours and marched forward twenty myles from Acra, and tooke Nazareth: and thoſe he there found he ſlew, and afterward returned again to Acra. But their enemies following after them, thinking to haue ſet vpon them at ſome ſtraight or other aduauntage: were by the Prince premoniſhed thereof, and returning agayn vpon them gaue a charge, and ſlew many of them and the reſt they put to flight. After this about Midſomer, when the Prince had vnderſtãding that the Saracens began to gather at Cakhow, which was 40. myles from Acra: he marching thether, ſet vpõ them very early in the morning, and ſlue of them more then a 1000. the reſt he put to flight, and tooke riche ſpoyles, marching forward till they came to a Caſtle named Caſtrum Peregrinorum, ſituate vpon the Sea coſt, and taried there that night, & the next day they returned toward Acra. In the meane ſeaſon, the king of Ieruſalem ſent vnto the noble men of Cypres, deſiring them wͭ ſpeede that they would come and ayde the Chriſtians: but they would not come, ſaying: they would keepe their own land and go no further. Then Prince Edward ſent vnto them, deſiring that at his requeſt they would come & ioyne in ayd with him. Who immediately thereupon came vnto him with great preparation and furniture for the warres, ſaying: that at hys commaundement they were bounde to do no leſſe, for that his predeceſſors were ſometimes ẏ gouernors of their lande, & that they ought alwaies to ſhewe their fidelitie, to the kings of England. Then the Chriſtians being herewͭ animated, made a third voiage or Rode, and came as farre as the fort called Vincula S. Petri, and to S. Georges: and when they had ſlayne certayne there, not finding any to make reſiſtance agaynſt them, they retyred agayne from whence they came.

When thus the fame of prince Edward grew amongſt hys enemies, and that they began to ſtand in doubt of him: they deuiſed amongeſt themſelues, howe by ſome pollicie they might circumuent him and betray him. Whereupon, the great Prince and Admirall of Ioppa, ſent vnto hym: fayning himſelfe vnder great deceit to become a Chriſtian, and that he would draw with hym a great number beſides ſo that they might be honorably entertayned & vſed of the Chriſtians. This talke pleaſed the Prince well, and perſwaded him to finiſh the thing, he had ſo well begonne, by writing agayne: who alſo by the ſame meſſenger ſent and wrote backe vnto him, diuers tymes about the ſame matter, whereby no miſtruſt ſhoulde ſpring. This meſſenger, ſayth myne autor, was one ex cautè nutritis, one of the ſtony harted that neither feared God, nor dreaded death. The fiſt tyme when this meſſenger came, and was of the Princes ſeruauntes ſearched, according to the maner and cuſtome what weapon and armour he had about him, as alſo his purſe, that not ſo much as a knife could be founde about him: he was had vp into the Princes chamber, and after hys reuerence done, he pulled out certayne letters, which he deliuered to the Prince from his Lord, as he had done others before. This was about eight dayes after Whitſontide vpon a Teuſday, ſomewhat before night: at which time the Prince was laid vpon his bed bare headed in his Ierkin, for the great heat and intemperature of the weather.

The meſſenger ſearched before he came to the princes preſence.

When the Prince had red the letters, it appeared by thẽ ẏ vpon the Saterday next following, his Lord woulde be there ready to accompliſhe all that he had written and promiſed. The report of theſe newes by the prince to the ſtanders by liked them well, drawing ſomewhat backe to conſult thereof amongeſt themſelues, In the meane tyme, the meſſenger, kneeling & making his obeiſance to the Prince (queſtioning further with him) put his hand to the belt, as though he would haue pulled out ſome ſecret letters: & ſodenly he pulled out an inuenomed knife, thinking to haue ſtroken hym into the belly therewͭ as he lay: But ẏ Prince lifting vp his hand to defend the blow, was ſtriken a great woũd into ẏ arm. And being about to fetch an other ſtroke at him, the prince agayn with his foote tooke hym ſuche a blow ẏ he feld him to the ground: wͭ that the prince gat him by the hand, and with ſuch violence wraſted the knife from him, ẏ he hurt himſelf therwith on the forehead, and immediately thruſt the ſame into the belly of the meſſenger and ſtriker, and ſlue him. The Princes ſeruauntes being in the next chamber not farre of, hearing the buſkling, came with great haſt rũning in: and finding the meſſenger lying dead in the floure, one of them tooke vp a ſtoole, and bet out his braynes: wherat the Prince was wroth, for that he ſtroke a dead man, and one that was killed before. The rumour hereof as it was ſtraunge, ſo it ſoone went throughout all the Court, and from thence amongſt the common people: wherefore they were very heauy and greatly diſcouraged, To him came alſo the Captayne of the Temple & brought him a coſtly and precious drinke agaynſt poyſon, leaſt the venim of the knife ſhoulde penetrate the liuely bloud, and in blaming wiſe ſayde vnto hym: Did I not ſhewe your grace before of the deceipt & ſubtiltie of this people? Notwithſtanding, ſayth he, let your grace take a good hart, you ſhall not die of this wound, my life for yours. But ſtraight wayes, ẏ ſurgions & phiſitiõs were ſent for, and the prince was dreſſed: and within few dayes after the wound began to putrifie, and the fleſh to looke dead and blacke, whereupon they that were about the prince began to mutter amongeſt thẽſelues, and were very ſad and heauy. Which thinge he himſelfe perceauing, ſayd vnto them: Why mutter you thus amongeſt your ſelues? What ſee you in me, can I not be healed? Tell me the truth, be ye not afrayd. Whereupon one ſaid vnto him: and like your grace you may be healed, we miſtruſt it not, but yet it will be very paynefull for you to ſuffer. May ſuffering, ſayth he, again reſtore health? Yea ſayth the other, on payne of looſing my head. Then ſayd the Prince, I commit my ſelfe to you, doe with me what you thinke good. Then ſaid one of the Phiſitions, is there any of your Nobles in whome your grace repoſeth ſpeciall truſt? To whome the Prince aunſwered yea, namyng certayne of the Noble men that ſtoode about him. Then ſayd the Phiſition to the two whome the Prince firſt named, the Lord Edmund, and the Lord Iohn Voyſie: And doe you alſo faythfully loue your Lord and Prince? Who aunſwered both, yea vndoubted. Then ſayth he, take ye away this Gentlewoman and Lady (meaning hys wife) & let her not ſee her Lord and huſband, till ſuch a time I will you thereunto. Whereupon they tooke her out of the princes preſence, crying out and wringing her hands. Thẽ ſaid they vnto her, be ye contented good Lady & Madame. It is better that one woman ſhould weepe a little while, then that all the realme of England ſhoulde weepe a great ſeaſon. Then on the morow, they cut out all the dead and inuenemed fleſh out of the Princes arme, and threw it from them, and ſayd vnto him: how chereth your grace, we promiſe you wͭin theſe fifteene dayes you ſhall ſhew your ſelfe abroad (if God permit) vpon your horſe backe, whole and well as euer you were. And according to the promiſe hee made the prince, it came to paſſe, to the no litle comfort and admiration of all his ſubiectes. When the great Souldan heard of, and that the Prince was yet aliue, he woulde ſcarſly beleue the ſame: and ſending vnto hym three of hys nobles and princes, excuſed himſelfe by them, calling hys gods to witnes, that the ſame was done neither by hym, nor his conſent. Which Princes and meſſengers ſtanding a looſe of from the kinges ſonne, worſhipping hym, fell flat vpon the ground. You ſayth the prince doe reuerence me, but yet you loue me not. But they vnderſtoode hym not, becauſe he ſpake in Engliſhe vnto them, ſpeaking by an interpreter. Neuertheles, he honourably intreated thē, and ſent them away in peace.

The Prince returneth out of Turky toward England againe.

Thus when Prince Edward had bene 18. monethes in Acra, he tooke ſhipping about the aſſumption of our lady, as wee call it, returning homeward, & after 7. weekes he arriued in Sicilia at Trapes: and from thence traueling through Paleſtina and Mecines, and ſo through the middes of Apulia, till he came to Rome, where he was of the Pope honourably entertayned. From thence he came into Fraunce, whoſe fame and noble prowes was there much bruted among the common people: and enuied of yͤ nobilitie, eſpecially of the Earle de Chalōs: who ſent vnto hym and required him, that he might breake a ſtaffe wᵗ him at the Tilte in hys countrey: whiche thing to doe, for that the prince would not diminiſhe his honour and fame (although he might haue well alledged a ſufficient cauſe and excuſe by meanes of hys trauell) yet he would not, but willingly conſented therunto. Whereupon it was proclaymed, that Prince Edward by ſuche a day, with thoſe that were with him, had challenged all commers at the Tilt & Barriers. Whereupon great aſſemblies were made in the country all about: and diuers as well horſemen as footemen had coniured amongſt themſelues, and conſpired agaynſt the Engliſhmen, ſelling their horſes and armour aforehand, & drinking one to an other in bon voiage of the ſpoile of them whom they would take as theyr priſoners. Prince Edward in the meane tyme, ſent into England for diuers Earles and Barons whiche came vnto hym. Whē the day appoynted was come, the Prince had wᵗ him more then 1000. horſemen, whiche were knightes, beſides hys footemen. But yet there was as many mo on the other ſide both in horſemen and footemen. When the parties ſhould meete: The French footmen whiche had before conſpired: began both to ſpoyle, rifle, and kill. The Engliſhmen reſiſted & defended thēſelues both with bowes & ſlings: many of thē they ſlue & draue them to the gates of their Citty, the other they chaſed ouer a riuer, where manye of them were drowned. In the meane ſeaſon, the Earle with fiftie of his knights which followed him, came forth and ioined together ſo many for ſo many, and a lōg time together they tryed it with theyr ſwordes, laying one at an other. At the laſt, the Earle perceauing himſelfe not able to match with him at the armes end: encloſed with him, and taking him about the necke held him with his armes very ſtraite. What meane you my Lord, ſayth the prince, thinke you to haue my horſe? Yea marry quoth yͤ Earle, I meane to haue both thee and thy horſe. Hereat Prince Edwarde being aſcorned, lifted vp himſelf, and gaue him ſuch a blow yͭ therwithall he forſaking his horſe, hong ſtil about the Princes necke, till that he ſhooke him off to the ground. Herewith the Prince, beyng ſomewhat in a heate, lefte the preaſe to take ſome ayre, thereby to refreſhe himſelfe. But when he ſawe the iniury of the Frenchmen towardes hys men, and how they had ſlayne many of them, he then ſaid vnto them that they vſed rather the exerciſe of battayle then of Torny Spare you not therefore, ſayth he, from henceforth none of them all, but geue them agayn as good as they bring. Thē they aſſayed to kill eche other freely on eyther part, and let theyr ſwordes walke. And when by this tyme the Engliſh footmen were agayne returned, and ſaw the conflicte of horſemen and many other Engliſhmen ouerthrowne: they put themſelues amiddes the preaſe, ſome pāching the horſes, ſome cutting a ſonder the girthes of yͤ Frenchmens ſaddels, ouerthrewe the ryders and gaue them holibread. Then when the foreſayd Earle was horſed agayn by ſome of his men & amongſt the throng, Prince Edward alſo ruſhed in amongſt the thickeſt & coped agayn wᵗ him: to whō he often ſpake and cryed, that he ſhoulde yelde hymſelfe as vanquiſhed: but that he would not doe. Notwithſtanding when his ſtrength began to fayle hym, he was fayn to yeld himſelfe vnto a ſimple knight, according as Prince Edward him bad: and all the reſt of hys horſemen & Knights fled and ſaued themſelues: Howbeit, many of them in that place were ſlaine, and our men returned hauing the victory. But when after this they thought themſelues to be quiet and at reſt: they were killed by two & by three at once as they went in the ſtreetes of the Citizens. Which thing, when the prince heard, he ſent for the Maior and Burgeſſes, commaunding them to ſee the ſame redreſſed, and that immediately: for otherwiſe, of hys knighthoode, he aſſured them, that vpon the morow he would fire the city, and make it leuell with the grounde. Whereupon they went theyr wayes, and ſet watchmen in diuers places of yͤ ſame to keepe the peace, by whiche meanes the Prince and hys mē were in ſafety and quiet. Thus in this paſtime of Torneing and Barriers, much bloud was ſpilte, whereupon the name of the place was chaunged: ſo that it is not called Torniamentum de Chalons, but paruum bellum de Chalons.

¶ Certaine Notes of other occurrents chaunced in forreine Countryes abroad within the compaſſe of yeares and raygne of the foreſayd King Henry the thyrd.

Hauing thus accompliſhed the life and hiſtory of King Henry the third, with ſuch accidents as happened wᵗin this realm, I thought good to adioine vnto the ſame ſome other foreine matters not vnworthy the note, incident in other Countries during the tyme of the ſayd king: Namely from the yeare of our Lord. 1217. vnto this yeare 1272. which I thought the rather not to be omitted, for that euen from and about the beginning of this kings raigne ſprang vpp the very welſprynges of all miſchiefe and ſectes of Monkiſh religions and other ſwarmes of Popiſh orders which with their groſſe and horrible ſuperſtition haue encombred the Church of Chriſt euer ſince.

Firſt to omitte the repeticion of Pope Innocent the third the great Graundſire of that fowle monſter Tranſuſtantiation and auriculer Confeſſion, with the fryers Dominick, and Franciſcane Fryers: Thomas Aquinas, Iacobus de Voragine, Vincentius: with Pope Honorius the third coyner of the Cannon Lawe and the Cardinall Hoſtienſis, as alſo Bonauenture, Albertus magnus with Pope Vrbane the 4. firſt founder of the feaſt of Corpus Chriſti and procuror of the adoration of the body of Chriſt in the Sacrament, beſides Durandus and many moe: followeth further to be noted, that the Tartarianes aboute the yeare 1240. iſſuing out of Moſcouia into the partes of Polonia made great waſte in Chriſtendome ſo muche the rather becauſe the Princes about Polonia beyng at variaunce amongeſt themſelues, vſed none other remedie for theyr defence, but heapes of Maſſes, Inuocation of the dead and worſhipping of Images, whiche in deede dyd nothing relieue them but rather encreaſe theyr trouble.

Ex Annalibus Sileſia.

The Tartarians make great ſpoile in Chriſtendome.

The Scythians army lyke locuſtes.

The next yeare following the whole nation of the Scithians (muſtering like Locuſtes) inuaded the partes of Europe with two mightye armyes: whereof the one entring vppon Polonia made great hauocke and caryed away many Chriſtians from thence Captiues, the other ouerrunning Hungaria made no leſſe ſpoyle there. Adde hereunto an other freſhe armye of Tartarianes to the number of 5000000. who at the very ſame tyme, ioyninge themſelues together entered into Muſconia and Cracouia, and made moſt horrible ſlaughter ſparing neyther ſexe, nor age: noble nor vnnoble within the Land. From thence paſſing to Vratiſlauia, made great ſpoyle there alſo, and thinkyng there to winne the Caſtle, were by the miraculous workyng of the Lorde at the inſtaunce and prayers of good people diſcomfited beyonde all expectation of man by thundringe and lightning falling vpon them from heauen in moſt terrible wiſe.

The ſame yeare immediately after Eaſter an other armye of Tartarians were gathered agaynſt Lignicium drawing neere to Germany: By the bruyte whereof the Germaynes being put in great feare were altogether diſmayed: but yet not able to helpe themſelues by reaſon they lacked a good guyde and gouernour amongeſt them. All which came to paſſe ſpecially by the miſchieuous practize of the Romayne Popes rayſing variaunce and diſcorde Kyng Henry ſlaine, and his army vanquiſhed.

Nine ſackes full of Chriſtians eares being ſlain amongſt them notwithſtanding Henry prince of Polonia and Silicia gathering a power as well as he coulde, dyd encounter with him, but in fine hys whole armye was vanquiſhed, and the kyng hymſelfe ſlayne. Notwithſtanding whiche ouerthrowe of Chriſtians it pleaſed God to ſtrike ſuch a feare into the heartes of the ſayd Tartarians that they durſt not approche anye further or nearer into Germany, but retired for that tyme into theyr Countrye agayne: who recounting theyr victory by taking each man but one eare of euery of the Chriſtians that were ſlayne founde the ſlaughter ſo great as that they filled ix. great ſackes full of eares. Neuertheles, after this viz the yeare 1260. the ſame Tartarians hauing the Moſkouites to theyr guides returned agayne into Polonia and Craconia. Where in the ſpace of three monethes they ouerranne the land with fire and ſword ouer to the coaſtes of Sileſia. And had not the princes of Germany put to theyr helping hand in this lamentable caſe, they had vtterly waſted the whole lande of Polonia and the Coaſtes thereaboutes.

Richard king of Almaine dyeth.
A great variãce betweene the Monkes and citizens of Norwich.
Execution done at Norwich by the commaundement of kyng Henry the 3.
Adam Prior of Cant. refuſeth to be Archb. of Cant.
Rob. Kilwerby Archb. of Cant.
The death of K. Henry the 3.

This yeare alſo in the month of Aprill, Richard Kyng of Almayne dyed at the Caſtell of Barchamſted, and was buryed at the Abbey of Hayles, whiche he built out of the ground. The ſame yeare alſo at Norwich, there fel a great controuerſie, betweene the monks and the citizens, about certayn tallagies and liberties. At laſt, after much altercation and wrangling wordes, the furious rage of the Cittizens ſo much increaſed and preuayled, and ſo litle was the feare of God before theyr eyes, that altogether they ſet vpon the Abbey and Priory, and burned both the church and Byſhops Pallace. Whẽ this thing was heard abroad, the people were very ſory to heare of ſo bold & naughty an enterpriſe, & much diſcommended yͤ ſame. At the laſt, K. Hẽry calling for certayne of hys Lords, and Barons, ſent thẽ to the city of Norwich, that they might puniſh and ſee execution done of the chiefeſt malefactors: in ſo much that ſome of them were condemned and burnt, ſome of them hanged and ſome were drawne by the heeles with horſes throughout the ſtreetes of the Citty, and after in muche miſery ended theyr wretched liues. The ſame yeare, Adam the prior of Canterbury, and Biſhop elect: in the preſence of pope Gregory the 10. refuſed to be archbiſhop, although he was elect. Wherfore, the pope gaue the ſame archbiſhopricke, to Frier Robert Kilwardby the Prouoſt of the preaching Friers: a man of good life and great learning. He was cõſecrated at Caunterbury, the fourth day of March by ſixe biſhops of the ſame Prouince. The ſame yeare alſo at Michelmas, the Lord Edmund, the ſonne of king Richard of Almaine, maryed the ſiſter of Gilbert Erle of Glouceſter, Alſo in this yeare of our Lord, 1273. the 16. day before the Calendes of December vpon S. Edmundes day the archbiſhop and confeſſour: died King Henry, in the 56. yeare of his raigne, and was buryed at Weſtminſter: leauing after him two ſonnes and two daughters, to wit Edward the Prince, and Edmund Earle of Lancaſter and Leiceſter, Beatrice, and Margaret. Whiche Margaret was maryed to the king of Scottes. This king Henry in his life tyme beganne the building of the Church & ſteeple at Weſtminſter, but did not throughly finiſh the ſame before his death.

King Edward the firſt.

K. Edward 1.
Pietie to Parẽts rewarded of God. Ex Chron. Tho. Walſinghami.
A miracle of God in preſeruing king Edward.
False worſhip reprehended.
God geueth the benefite & a dumme ſtocke hath the thankes.

IN the time of the death of K. Henry, Edward his eldeſt ſonne was abſent in Vaſconia, as a little before you heard: yet notwithſtanding, by Robert Kilwarby Archb. of Caunt. and other biſhops & nobles, he was ordeined heire and ſucceſſour after hys father: who, after he had heard of hys fathers death, retourned home to his Countrey, and was crowned the yeare of our Lord 1274. Who then layd downe his crowne, ſaying: he woulde no more put it on, before he had gathered together all the landes pertayning to the ſame. This Edward as he had alwayes before bene a louing and naturall Childe to his Father, whom he had deliuered out of priſon and captiuity: & afterward hearing both together of yͤ death of his ſonne, & of his father, wept and lamented much more for his father, then for his ſonne, ſaying to the French king (which aſked the cauſe thereof) that the loſſe of his child was but light, for Children might after increaſe and be multiplied, but the loſſe of his parent was greater, which could not be recouered: Robert Aueſbury. So almighty God for the ſame his pietie to his father ſhewed, rewarded him agayn with great ſucceſſe, felicitie, and long raigne. In ſo much, yͭ he beyng yong as he was playing at Cheſſe with a certayne ſouldior of his, ſodainly hauing no occaſion geuen: roſe vp and went his way, who was not ſo ſoon voyded the place, but incontinent fel down a mighty ſtone from the vawt aboue directly vpon yͤ place where he ſate, able to haue quaſhed him in peeces, if he had taried neuer ſo little more. In the preſeruation of whome as I ſee, the preſent hand and mighty prouidence of the liuing God: ſo in the kinges order agayne, I note a fault or error worthy of reprehenſion: For that he receiuing ſuch a liuely benefite at the hand of the liuing Lord, going therefore on pilgrimage to Walſingham, gaue thanks not only to our Lady, but rather to a rotten blocke. Ibidem. Of the gentle nature of this couragious prince, ſufficient proofe is geuen by this one example: that what time he being in hys deſport of hauking, chaunced ſharpely to rebuke the negligence of one of his gentlemen, for what fault I cannot tell about his hauke: the gentleman being on the other ſide of the riuer, hearing his manaſſing wordes was glad (as he ſayd) that the riuer was betweene them. With this anſwer the couragious bloud of this Prince being moued, vppon preſent heat, he leaped ſtraight into the floud, both a ſwift ſtreame and of a dangerous deepneſſe, and no leſſe hard in getting out. Notwithſtanding either forgetting his owne life, or neglecting the daunger preſent; but hauing a good horſe, ventreth his own death, to haue the death of his mã. At length with much difficultie recouering the bank, with his ſword drawn purſueth his prouoker. Who hauing not ſo good an horſe, and ſeeing himſelfe in daunger of taking, reineth hys horſe: and returning backe bare head vnto the Prince, ſubmitteth his necke vnder hys hande to ſtrike. The prince, whoſe feruent ſtomack the water of the whole riuer could not quench, a little ſubmiſſion of his man did ſo extinct that the quarrel fell, his anger ceaſed, and his ſword put vp, without any ſtroke geuen. And ſo both returned to theyr game, good friendes agayne. Aueſb. Nich. Triuet.

Example of princely clemency to be learned of kinges and princes. Ex Chron. Nic. Triuet. & Tho. Walſinghami.
Wales ſubdued.
The Kings ſonne firſt prince of Wales.
Vayne propheſies not to be ſought to.

In the firſt beginning of his raigne, this Kyng had much adoe in Wales, where he had diuers conflictes wyth the Welſhmen: whom at laſt he ſubdued & cut down theyr woodes, ſuppreſſed rebellions, & vanquiſhing theyr kings, Lewline and his brother, ordeined his eldeſt ſonne Edward, borne in the ſame Countrey to be Prince of Wales. This Lewline Captayne of yͤ Welſhmen here mentioned, rebelling agaynſt king Edward: aſked counſayle by way of coniuration, what euent ſhould come vpon his attempt To whom it was tolde, that he ſhould goe forward boldly for doubtleſſe, he ſhould ryde thorough Chepeſide at London, with a crowne on his head. Whiche ſo came to paſſe. For he being ſlayne, hys head was caried through Chepe, with a Crowne of ſiluer to London bridge: whereby men may learne not to ſeeke nor ſtick to theſe vayne propheſies: which though they fall true, yet are but the traynes of the deuill to deceyue men.

Puniſhment for Bakers & Milners.
The ſtatute for Mortmaine firſt enacted.

About this time was a great earthquake, and ſuche a rotte, that conſumed a great multitude of ſheep, in the land through the occaſion as they ſay, of one ſcabbed ſhepe that came out of Spayne. The king returning from Wales to England, ordred certayne new lawes for the wealth of the realme. Among many other this was one: that authoritie was geuen to all Maiors Bailiffes, & other officers to ſee execution and puniſhement of all Bakers making bread vnder the ſiſe, with pillory. Of Milners ſtealing corn with the tumbrel. &c. And within two yeares after the ſtatute of Mortmayne was firſt enacted, which is to meane that no man ſhould geue vnto the Churche any landes or rentes, without a ſpeciall licence of the king.

Anno. 1279.
Blacke Fryers by Ludgate builded.
Boſten blemiſhed with fire.
The great Conduit in Cheape.
Weſtminſter Church finiſhed.
The Iewes baniſhed the Realme.

About which tyme alſo, being the 7. yeare of his raigne 297. Iewes for mony clipping were put to execution. In whiche ſame yeare began firſt the foundation of the blacke Friers by Ludgate. And the towne of Boſten was greatly waſted the ſame yeare with fyre. The halfepeny and farthinges began firſt to be coyned the ſelfe tyme, which was the 8. yeare of hys raygne. The great conduit in Chepe began the fourth yeare after to be made. anno. 1248. And the yeare next following the newe worke of the Churche of Weſtminſter (begon, as is afore premoniſhed in the thyrd yeare of Henry 3.) was finiſhed, whiche was 66. yeares in edifiyng the Iewes were vtterly baniſhed this Realme of England the ſame tyme, for whiche the commons gaue to the kyng a fifteene. anno. 1291.

A place in Fabian corrected.

After that the country of Wales, was brought in a full order and quiet, by the hewing downe of the woodes, and caſting down the old holdes, and building of new, whiche all was brought to perfect end, about the 24. yeare of thys kings reigne: then enſued an other broile as great or greater with Scotland: to the great diſquiet of the king and the realme of England, many yeares after. This trouble firſt began by the death of Alexander king of Scots, who dyed without iſſue left aliue behinde him. Although Fabiane in yͤ 7. booke of hys Chronicle affirmeth: that he left 3. daughters, the eldeſt maryed to ſir Iohn Bailol: the ſecõd to Robert Bruce, the thyrd to one Haſtinges. But this in Fabian, is to be corrected as which neyther ſtandeth with it ſelfe, & is clearely conuinced by the witnes and hiſtory of Rob. Auei bury, and alſo of Giſburne.

Ex Thoma Walſingham & Gualtero Giſburnenſi.

For firſt, if king Alexander had left his eldeſt daughter maried to Syr Iohn Bailol, then what cōtrouerſie might riſe among the Lordes about ſucceſſion, needing ſo diligent and anxious deciding by the king of England. Secondly, what clayme or title could the king of Norway haue to the crowne of Scotland, which was one of yͤ chalengers, clayming the ſayd crowne in the behalfe of Margaret the nece of the foreſayd king Alexander her graunfather, if the eldeſt daughter of yͤ father had bene left aliue? Thirdly, what can be more playn, when by the affirmance of the foreſaid ſtory is teſtified, that K. Alexander had .2. wiues. Of the ſecond wherof he had no iſſue. Of the firſt had two Children: Alexander which died before his father, and Margaret maried to the kyng of Norway, whiche died alſo before her Father, of whom came Margaret the Nece of Alexander, and daughter to the king of Norway afore mentioned. And ſhe alſo dyed in the iourny betweene Norway and Scotland, the fourth yeare after the deceaſe of her graūdfather. Wherfore, as this matter ſtandeth moſt cleare, ſo let vs now returning frō whence we digreſſed, proſecute the reſt that followeth. After that Alexāder thus as is ſaid, departed without iſſue, & alſo Margaret his Niece in Norway was deceaſed: the matter came in a great doubt among the nobles of Scotland (eſpecially 12, by name) to whome the right of the crowne ſhould next pertayne. After much variaunce among parties, at length the election and determination of the matter was committed to the iudgement of king Edward of England: who after ſufficient proofe made to the Scottes and firme euidence, brought out of all the ancient hiſtoryes both of England, and Scotland, teſtifying from tyme to tyme that he was chiefe head and ſoueraigne of the Realme of Scotland; firſt by neceſſitie of the law, and by al theyr conſentes tooke full poſſeſſion of the ſame. And that done, adiudged yͤ right of the Crown to Iohn Bailol, who deſcended of the daughter of Dauid Earle of Huntington, brother to Dauid King of Scotland, in the dayes of Kyng Henry the ſecond. This Erle Dauid had three daughters, Iſabell maried to Robert Bruſſe, Margaret to Allen Earle of Galeway, had Ellen to Henry Lord Haſtinges: Allē Earle of Galeway had Ellē maried to Roger Quincy Erle of Wincheſter, Conſtable of Scotlād, & Dornagile maried to Iohn Bailol father to Edward king of Scots.

Lack of ſucceſſiō what diturbance it worketh in a Realme

The king of Englande proued by old records, chiefe head & ſoueraign

{ Ann. 1291. }

Sir Iohn Bayloll made king of Scotland by King Edward.

K. of Scots doth homage to the King of Englande,

When theſe thinges were thus finiſhed in Scotlande, and Syr Iohn Bailol as moſt rightfull inheritour had receaued the crowne of Scotland at the handes of kyng Edward thankefully: & for the ſame in the preſence of the Barony of England and of Scotland, did vnto the ſayd King Edward his homage, and ſware to him fealty: the Scottes with theyr new king returned into Scotland, and Kyng Edward remoued agayne to England:

The falſenes of the Scottiſh king.

The towne and caſtle of Barwicke wonne of Engliſhmen.

Falſenes iuſtly puniſhed.

But not long after, the falſenes of this Scotiſhe Kyng ſoone appeared. Who repenting him of his homage done, vntruely forſook his former othe & promiſe, and made war againſt king Edward, through the counſaile of the Abbot of Menros. Wherfore, the king with a great hoſt ſped hym into Scotland, & in proceſſe laid ſiege to the towne of Berwicke: which the Scots did egerly defend, not onely to the diſcomfiture, but alſo to the deriſion of the kinges and hys Engliſh hoſt. But in concluſion, the Engliſh men preuayled and wan the towne, where were ſlayne of the Scottes the number of 25. thouſand. And while the king was there buſied in winning other holds about the ſame, he ſent part of his hoſt to Dunbarre, where the Engliſhmē agayn had the victory and ſlue of the Scottes xx. thouſand, Giſburne ſayth but x. thouſand, ſo that very few were loſt of the Engliſh company. The king with a great nūber of priſoners returning into his realm, ſhortly after ſped him ouer vnto Flaūders, where he ſuſtayned great trouble by the French kyng, till truce for certayne ſpace was betweene them concluded. But in the meane while that K. Edward was thus occupyed beyond the Seas: the French king (reſorting to his practiſed maner) ſet the Scottes ſecretly agaynſt the Engliſhmen to keep the king at home. Which Scots makyng themſelues a Captaine named Williā Walcis: warred vpon the borders of Northumberlād, where they dyd much hurt. At length the king returning from Burdeaux into England, ſhortly vpon the ſame tooke hys iourny into Scotland. Where meeting at Yorke with hys hoſt, marched into the Realme of Scotlande, winning as he went, townes and Caſtles, till at length comming to the towne of Frankyrch on Mary Magdalens day, he met with the power of Scotland: and had with them a ſore fight, but through Gods prouidence the victory fel to the right cauſe of Engliſhmen: ſo that of the Scottes were ſlayne in the field, as it is of diuers writers affirmed, ouer the number of xxxij. thouſand: and of Engliſhmen but barely. xxviii. perſons. Wherupon, the king agayn taking poſſeſſion and fealty of the whole land, returned home.

The Scottes ſworne to the kings alleageāce

And yet the falſe vntroth of the Scots would not thus be ruled, but roſe vp in a new broyle: ſo that the kyng was enforced to make his power agayn the yeare folowing into Scotlād, where he ſo ſuppreſſed the rebellion of yͤ Lords and of the commons, that they ſwearing to the kings allegiance, preſented themſelues by great companyes, & put them wholy in the kings grace and mercy: ſo that the king thinking himſelfe to be in peaceable poſſeſſion & in a great ſurety of the land, cauſed to be ſworne vnto hym the rulers of the boroughes, citties, and townes, with other officers of the land; and ſo returned vnto Barwicke, and ſo into England, and laſtly to Weſtminſter.

Ex Chron. Tho. Walſinghami. Aueſburienſis.

The Popes meſſage vnto the kyng.

The kinges aunſwere to the Pope.

The Pope chalengeth the Realme of Scotland to be free from the dominion of England

Theſe martiall affayres betwene England and Scotland although they appertayne not greatly to the purpoſe of our ſtory Eccleſiaſtical: yet ſo much by yͤ way I thought briefly to touch, whereby the better it might be vnderſtanded by theſe premiſſes, that whiche followeth in the ſequele hereof. As the Scottes were thus warring and ragyng agaynſt the king, and ſaw they could not make theyr party good, they ſent priuily to Pope Boniface for hys ayde and counſaile: who immediatly ſendeth downe his precept to the K. to this effect, that he ſhould hereafter ſurceaſe to diſquiet or moleſt the Scottes, for that they were a people exempt and properly pertaining to hys Chappell. And therfore it could not otherwiſe be, but that the City of Ieruſalem muſt needs defend hys own Citizens: & as the mount Syon, mayntayn ſuch as truſt in the Lord. &c. Wherunto the king briefly maketh aunſwere agayne, ſwearing with an othe that he would to his vttermoſt keepe & defend that which was hys right, euidētly known to all the world. &c. Thus the Scots bearing themſelues bold vpon the popes meſſage, & alſo confederating themſelues with the Frenchmē, paſſed ouer that yeare. The next yeare after yͤ (whiche was 29. of the kinges raigne) the ſayd Pope Boniface directeth hys letters agayn to the kyng, wherein he doth vendicate the kingdome of Scotland, to be proper to yͤ Church of Rome, & not ſubiect to the king of Englād. And therfore it was agaynſt God, againſt iuſtice, and alſo preiudiciall to the Churche of Rome, for hym to haue or hold dominion vpon the ſame, which he proued by theſe reaſons.

Firſt, that when king Henry the father of this Kyng, receiued ayd of Alexander king of Scots in his warres agaynſt Simon Mountfort: he recogniſed & acknowledged in his letters patents, that he receaued the ſame of king Alexander, not of any duety, but of ſpeciall fauour.

Item, when the ſayd king Alexander comming to England, did homage to the ſayd kyng Henry: he did it not as king of Scotland, but onely for certayne landes of Tyndal and Penreth lying in England.

Item. where the ſayd king Alexander left behynd hym Margaret his heyre, being Nece to the king of England, and yet vnder age: yet the tuition of yͤ ſayd Margaret was committed not to the K. of England, but to certain Lords of Scotland, deputed to the ſame.

Moreouer, when any legacie was directed downe from Rome to the Realme of England, for collecting of tenthes or other cauſes: the ſayd legacie tooke no place, in the realm of Scotland, and might well be reſiſted (as it was in kyng Alexander hys dayes) except an other ſpeciall commiſſion touching the realme of Scotland, were ioined withall. Wherby it appeareth, theſe to be two ſeueral dominions, and not ſubiect vnder one.

Adding furthermore, that the kingdome of Scotland firſt was conuerted by the reliques of the bleſſed Apoſtle S. Peter: through the deuine operation of God: to the vnity of the Catholicke fayth.

Wherefore vpon theſe cauſes and reaſons, Pope Boniface in hys letters to the king, required him to geue ouer hys clayme, and ceaſe his warres agaynſt the Scottiſh nation: And to releaſe all ſuch both of the ſpiritualtie and laytie, as he had of them priſoners. Alſo to call home agayne his officers and deputies, whiche he had there placed and ordained to the greuance of that nation, to the ſclaunder of all faythfull people, and no leſſe preiudice to the Church of Rome. And if he would clayme any right or title to the ſaid Realme or any part therof: he ſhould ſend vp his procuratours ſpecially to yͤ ſame appoynted, with all that he could for himſelfe alleadge vnto the ſea Apoſtolicke, there to receaue what reaſon and right would require.

{ Anno. 1301. }

The K. replyeth to the Pope.

The king, after he had receaued theſe letters of the Pope, aſſembled a councell or Parliament at Lincolne: by the aduiſe of which counſell & Parliament, he addreſſed other letters reſponſall to the Pope agayne: wherin firſt in al reuerend maner he deſireth him not to geue light eare to Scotland al one with England. Brutus.

the ſiniſter ſuggeſtions of falſe reportes, and imaginers of miſchiefe. Then he declareth out of old recordes & hiſtories frō the firſt time of the Brittaynes, that the realm of Scotland hath alwayes from time to time bene all one with England, beginning firſt with Brutus in the tyme of Hely and Samuell the Prophet: which Brutus comming frō Troy to this Ile called then Albion, after called by hym Britannia, had three ſonnes: Locrinus to whome he gaue yͤ part of the land, called then of hym Logria, now Anglia: Albanactus his ſecond ſonne, to whom he gaue Albania, nowe called Scotia: and hys thyrd ſonne Camber, to whome he gaue Cambria, now called Wales. &c.

Lokrinus. Albanactus. Camber.

And thus much concerning the firſt deuiſion of this Ile, as in auncient hiſtories is found recorded. In whiche matter paſſing ouer the death of king Humber, the actes of Dunwald, king of this Realme, the deuiſion of Belyn and Brene, the victories of king Arthur, we will reſort (ſayth the king) to more nearer tymes, teſtified and witneſſed by ſufficient authors, as Marianus Scotus, William Malmeſbury: Roger Abyndon: Henry Huntington: Radulph de Bizoto and other. All which make ſpecial declaration, & geue manifeſt euidence, of the execution of this our right (ſayth he) & title of Superioritie, euer continued & preſerued hetherto.

And firſt to begin with Edward the Seniour, before the conqueſt, ſonne to Alurede kyng of England, about the yeare of our Lord. 900. it is playne and manifeſt, that he had vnder hys dominion and obedience the king of Scots. And here is to be noted, that this matter was ſo notorious and manifeſt, as Maryan the Scot writing that ſtory in thoſe dayes, graunteth, confeſſeth and teſtifieth the ſame: and this dominion continued in that ſtate 23. yeare. At whiche tyme, Athelſtane ſucceeded in the crowne of England, and hauing by battaile cōquered Scotland, he made one Conſtantine king of that party, to rule & gouerne the country of Scotland vnder him, adding this princely word: That it was more honour to him to make a king, then to be a king.

24. yeares after that, whiche was the yeare of our Lord 947. Eldred king our progenitour, Athelſtanus brother, took homage of Iriſe then king of Scots.

30. yeares after that, whiche was the yeare of our Lorde 977. kyng Edgar our predeceſſour tooke homage of Kynalde king of Scots. Here was a little trouble in England by the death of S Edward kyng and martyr, deſtroyed by the deceite of hys mother in law: but yet within memory.

40. yeares after the homage done by Kynald to King Edgar, that is to ſay, in the yeare of our Lord. 1017. Malcoline the king of Scots did homage to Knute our predeceſſour. After this homage done. The Scots vttered ſome peece of theyr naturall diſpoſition, whereupon (by warre made by our progenitour S. Edward the confeſſour, 39. yeare after that homage done, that is to ſaye, the yeare of our Lord. 1056) Malcoline king of Scots was vanquiſhed, and the realme of Scotland geuen to Malcoline his ſonne by our ſayd progenitour S. Edward: vnto whom the ſayd Malcoline made homage and fealty.

Within 40. yeares after that, William Conquerour entred this realme, whereof he accompted no perfect conqueſt, vntill he had likewiſe ſubdued the Scots: and therfore in the ſayd yeare (which was in the yeare of our Lord. 1068) the ſayde Malcoline King of Scots did homage to the ſayd William Conquerour, as hys ſuperiour by Conqueſt king of England.

25. yeares after that, which was the yeare of our Lord. 1093. the ſayd Malcoline did homage & fealty to William Rufus, ſonne to the ſayd William Conquerour: and yet after that was for his offences and demerites depoſed, and hys ſonne ſubſtitute in hys place: who likewiſe fayled in his duety, and therfore was ordained in that eſtate by the ſayd William Rufus, Edgar brother to the laſt Malcoline, and ſonne to the firſt, who did hys homage and fealty accordingly.

7. yeares after that, which was in the yeare of our Lorde. 1100. the ſayd Edgar king of the Scots, did homage to Henry the firſt our progenitour.

37 yeare after that, Dauid king of Scots did homage to Matilde the Emperatrice, as daughter and heyre to Henry the firſt. Wherefore being after required by Stephen, then obtayning poſſeſſion of the Realme, to make his homage: he refuſed ſo to doe, becauſe he had before made it to the ſayd Matilde, and thereupon forbare. After whiche Dauids death, whiche enſued ſhortly after, the ſonne of the ſayde Dauid made homage to the ſayde Kyng Stephen.

14. yeares after that, whiche was in the yeare of our Lorde 1150. William king of Scots, and Dauid hys brother, with all the nobles of Scotland made homage to Henry the ſecond ſonne, with a reſeruation of their duetye to Henry the ſecond hys Father.

25 yeares after that, which was in the yeare of our Lorde 1175. William kyng of Scotland, after much rebellion and reſiſtaunce, according to their naturall inclination (King Henry the ſecond then beyng in Normandy) knowledged finally his errour, and made hys peace and compoſition, confirmed with hys great Seale, and the Seales of the nobilitie of Scotland, making therewith his homage and fealtie.

Within 15. yeares after that, which was the yeare of our Lorde 1190. the ſayd William king of Scots came to our Citty of Caunterbury, and there dyd homage to our noble progenitour Kyng Richard the firſt.

14. yeares after that, the ſaid William did homage to our progenitour king Iohn, vpon a hill beſides Lincolne, making his othe vpon the Croſſe of Hubert then Archbiſhop of Canterbury, being there preſent, and a merueilous multitude aſſembled for that purpoſe.

26. yeare after that, whiche was in the yeare of our Lorde 1230. Alexander king of Scots maryed Margaret the daughter of our progenitour Henry the third, at our Citty of Yorke, in the feaſt of Chriſtmas: at whiche tyme the ſayd Alexander dyd hys homage to our ſayd progenitour: who reigned in this Realme 56. yeares. And therefore betweene the homage made by the ſayd Alexander king of Scotland, and the homage done by Alexander, ſonne to the ſayd king of Scots, to vs at our coronation at Weſtminſter, there was about 50. yeares: At which tyme, the ſaid Alexander kyng of Scottes repayred to the ſayd feaſt of our coronation, and there did he his duety as is aforeſayd.

¶ Beſides theſe letters of the king, the Lordes temporall alſo in the name of the whole communaltie and Parliament, wrote an other letter to the pope, anſwering to that, where as the pope arrogated to hym to be iudge for the title of the realme of Scotland, whiche the king of England claymed to hymſelfe: whiche letter I thought alſo here to annexe contayning, as in the wordes of the ſame here followeth to be read and ſeene.

The Lordes temporall, and the whole Baronie of England to the Pope.

A letter of the Lordes temporall to the Pope.

THe holy mother Churche, by whoſe miniſtery the Catholicke ſee is gouerned: in her deedes (as we throughly beleeue and holde) proceedeth with that ripenes in iudgement, that ſhe will be hurtfull to none but like a mother would euery mans right to be kept vnbroken as well in other, as in her ſelfe. Whereas therefore in a generall Parliament called at Lincoln of late by our moſt dread Lord Edward by the grace of God the noble kyng of England: the ſame our Lorde cauſed certayne letters receaued from you to be read openly, and to be declared ſeriouſly afore vs, about certayne buſineſſes touching the condition & ſtate of the realme of Scotland: We did not a little muſe and maruaile with our ſelues hearing the meaninges concerning the ſame, ſo wondrous and ſtraunge, as the like we haue not heard at any time before. For we know moſt holy father, and it is well knowne as well in this realm of England (as alſo not vnknowne to other perſons beſides) that from the firſt beginning of the Realme of England: the certayne and direct gouernement of the Realme of Scotland in all temporall cauſes, from tyme to tyme belonged to the kynges of the ſame Realme of England, and Realme of Scotland: as well in the times both of the Brittaines, as alſo of Engliſhmen. Yea rather, the ſame Realme of Scotland of olde tyme was in fee to the Auncetours of our foreſayd Lordes Kynges of England, yea and to hymſelfe. Furthermore, the Kynges of Scottes and the Realme haue not bene vnder any other then the kynges of England, and the Kinges of England haue anſwered, or ought to aunſwere for theyr rightes in the foreſayd Realme, or for any hys temporalities afore anye Iudge Eccleſiaſticall or ſecular, by reaſon of free preheminence of the ſtate of hys royall dignitie and cuſtome kept without breach at all tymes. Wherefore, after treatie had and dilligent deliberation of the contentes in your foreſayd letters, this was the common agreeing and conſent with one mynde, and ſhall be without fayle in tyme to come by Gods grace: that our foreſayd Lord the Kyng, ought by no meanes to aunſwere in iudgement in any caſe, or ſhoulde bring hys foreſayd rightes into doubt: nor ought not to ſend any proctors or meſſengers to your preſence: ſpecially ſeeing that the premiſſes tend manifeſtly to the diſheriting of the right of the Crowne of Englande, and the playne ouerthrow of the ſtate of the ſayd Realme, and alſo hurt of the liberties, cuſtomes, and lawes of our fathers: For the keeping and defence of whiche, we are bounde by the duety of the othe made. And we will mayntayne them with all power, and will defend them (by Gods helpe) with all ſtrength. And farther we will not ſuffer our foreſayd Lord the king to doe, or by anye meanes to attempt the premiſſes being ſo vnacuſtomed, vnwont, and not heard of afore. Wherefore, we reuerently and humbly beſeech your holines, that ye would ſuffer the ſame our Lord king of Englande (who among other Princes of the worlde, ſheweth himſelfe Catholicke and deuout to the Romiſhe Churche) quietly to enioye hys rightes, liberties, cuſtomes and lawes aforeſayde: without all empayring, and trouble, and let them continue vntouched. In witneſſe whereof we haue ſet our ſeales to theſe preſentes, aſwell for vs, as for the whole communaltie of the foreſayd Realme of England. Dated at Lincolne in the yeare of our Sauiour 1031. & anno Edwardi primi.28.

Anno. 1303.
The P.ſetteth king againſt king.
Ex R.Aueſb.

The yeare following, which was from Chriſt,an.1303. the ſayd Pope Boniface the eight of that name, taking diſpleaſure with Phillip the Frenche king: did excite king Edward of Englād, to warre againſt him, promiſing him great ayd thereunto. But he (as mine author ſayth) little truſting ẏ Popes falſe vnſtable affection toward him well proued before, put him of wͭ delayes. Ex Rob. Aueſb. Wherupon, the French king fearing the power of king Edward whom the Pope had ſet agaynſt hys friendſhip: reſtored vnto him agayn Uaſcone, which he wrongfully had in his hands deteined. Concerning this variaunce here mentioned betweene the Pope and the French kyng, how it begā firſt, and to what end it fell out: the ſequell hereof (Chriſt willing) ſhall declare, after that firſt I haue finiſhed the diſcourſe begon betweene England and Scotland.

An other Scottiſh rebellion ſuppreſt.

In the yeare 1303. the foreſayd Williā Waleys, which had done ſo many diſpleaſures, to the king before (continuing ſtill in his rebellion) gathered great multitudes of the Scottes to wͭſtand the king: til at length, the yeare following he was taken, and ſent vp to Londō, and there executed for the ſame. After which thinges done, the king thē held his Parliament at Weſtminſter, whether came out of Scotland the Biſhop of S. Andrewes, Robert Bruſe abone mentioned, Earle of Dunbarre, Earle of Arles, and Syr Iohn comming, with diuers other: The which voluntarily were ſworne to be true to the king of England, and to keep the land of Scotland to his vſe agaynſt al perſons.

The P. diſpenſeth with due & true obedience of ſubiects toward their prince.

But ſhortly after the ſayd Robert Bruſe, who as is ſayd maried the ſecond daughter of Earle Dauid, forgetting his othe before made vnto the king: within a yeare or two after this, by the counſell of the Abbot of Stone, and Biſhop of S. Andrewes: ſent vp vnto Pope Clement the 5. for a diſpenſation of his othe made: inſinuating to him, that King Edward vexed and greued the realme of Scotland wrōgfully. Wherupon the pope wrote vnto the king, to leaue of ſuch doinges.

The Popes inhibition neglected in England.
An other rebellion of the Scots repreſſed.

Notwithſtanding whiche inhibition of the Pope, the king proſecuting hys owne right, after he had ẏ vnderſtādīng of ẏ doings of the Scots, & of the miſchiefe of Robert Bruys (who had ſlayne wͭ hys owne handes Syr Iohn Comyng, for not conſenting with him and other Lordes at hys Parliament) areared his power & ſtrength of men preparing himſelfe toward Scotlād: where he ioyning with the ſaid Syr Robert and all the power of Scotland in a playne, neare vnto S. Iohns towne, put him to flight and ſo chaſed the Scots, that of them were ſlayne to the number of 7. thouſand. In the which victory, ſuch Byſhops and Abbots as were taken, he ſent thē to the Pope: the temporall Lordes and other Scots he ſent vnto London. &c.

The Scots agayne ſubdued.

Syr Robert Bruys after this diſcomfiture, when he had thus loſt both the field and chiefe frendes, ſeing himſelfe, not able to make hys party good, fled into Norway, where he kept hys abode during the time while king Edward liued. Whē this noble Edward had thus ſubdued the Scots, he yelded thankes to God for hys victory, & ſo ſetting ẏ land in a quiet, and an order, he returned vnto London, which was the 35. yeare and laſt of his raigne. &c.

A greeuous variance betwene Philip the frēch king & pope Boniface.
Pope Nicolas.4.
Popedome vacant two yeares.
Pope Celeſtinus 5.

Now returning to that which I promiſed before touching the variaunce and greuous diſſention betwene Philip the French king, and Pope Boniface the eight of that name. After the byſhopricke of Rome had bene long voyd through the diſſentiō of the Cardinals, for the ſpace of two yeares and 3. monthes: at length, Pope Celeſtinus was choſen, ſucceſſor to pope Nicholas the fourth. Which Celeſtinus in hys firſt conſiſtory, began to reforme the Clergy of Rome, thinking to make it an example to al other churches. Wherefore, he procured to hymſelfe ſuch a hatred among hys Clergy men, that this Boniface, then called Benedictus, ſpeaking through a reede by his chamber wall nightly admoniſhed him, as it had bene a voyce from heauen, that he ſhould geue ouer his Papacie, as beyng a burden bigger then he could wyld. Ex Maſſeo.

Craftie iugling among Popes and Cardinals.
Ex Maſſeo.
The eight Nero.

This pope Celeſtine after he had ſet vi. monethes, by the trechery & falſhoode of this Boniface, was induced to geue vp & reſigne his Biſhoprick, partly for the voyce ſpoken of before, partly for feare: being told of certaine craftely ſubornated in his chāber, that if he did not reſigne, he ſhold loſe his life. Who thē after his reſignation goyng to liue in ſome ſolitary deſert (being a ſimple man) was vilely taken and thruſt in perpetuall priſon by Pope Boniface: craftely pretending that he did it not for any hatred vnto Celeſtine, but that ſedetious perſōs might not haue him as their hed to rayſe vp ſome ſtirre in the Church. And ſo was brought to his death. Wherfore, this Boniface was worthely called the eight Nero: of whom it was rightly ſayd, hee came in like a Foxe, he reigned like a Lyon, and dyed like a dogge.

P. Boniface.8.
The miſchiefe of Pope Boniface deſcribed.

This Pope Boniface ſucceeding, or rather inuadyng after Celeſtinus, behaued hymſelfe ſo imperiouſly, that he put down princes, excommunicated kings, ſuch as did not take theyr confirmation at his hand. Diuers of his Cardinals he draue away for feare, ſome of them as ſchiſmaticks he depoſed and ſpoyled them of all theyr ſubſtaunce. Philip the French king he excommunicated, for not ſuffering hys money to goe out of the Realme, and therefore curſed both his and him, to the fourth generation. Albertus the Emperour not once nor twiſe, but thriſe ſought at his handes to be cōfirmed, and yet was reiected, neyther could obtain vnleſſe he would promiſe to driue the Frenche king out of his realme.

Guelphes and Gibelines 2. factions in Rome.

The factions diſcorde in Italy betweene the Guelphes, and Gibillines, which the part of a good biſhop had bene to extinct: ſo little he helped to quench the ſmoke, that he of all other was chiefeſt firebrande to encreaſe the flame. In ſo much that vpon Aſhwedneſday, when Porchetus an Archbiſhop came and kneeled down before hym to receaue hys aſhes: Pope Boniface looking vpon him, & perceauing that he was one of ẏ Gibbellines part, caſt his handfull of aſhes in hys eyes, ſaying: Memento homo quòd Gibellinus es &c. That is: remember man that a Gibeline thou art, and to aſhes thou ſhalt go.

Iubilei firſt begonne in Rome.
The P. claimeth and practiſeth power of both ſwordes.

This Pope moreouer ordained firſt the Iubilei in Rome: in ẏ ſolemniſing wherof, the firſt day he ſhewed hymſelfe in his pontificalibus, & gaue free remiſſion of ſinnes to as many as came to Rome out of all the parts of the world. The ſecond day (beyng arrayed with Imperiall enſignes) he commaunded a naked ſword to be caryed before him and ſayd with a loud voyce: Ecce poteſtatem vtriuſq; gladij. That is, Loe here the power and authoritie of both the ſwordes. &c.

From the which very yeare (as moſt ſtories do record) the Turkes doe beginne the firſt count of their Turkiſhe Emperours, whereof the firſt was Ottomannus, as you ſhal heare diſcourſed hereafter, by Gods grace in the hiſtory of the Turkes.

Pope Boniface 8. Author of the booke of decretals.

By this ſayd Pope Boniface, diuers conſtitutions extrauagancs of his predeceſſours were collected together, with many of his owne newly added thereto, and is made the booke called Sextus decretalium. &c. By whom alſo firſt ſprang vp pardons and indulgences from Rome.

Romiſh pardōs firſt begunne by P. Boniface.8.
Ex hiſt. Nic. Triuet.

These thinges thus premiſed of Boniface the Pope, now will I come to the occaſion of the ſtrife betweene him, and the French king: Concerning whiche matter, firſt I finde in the hiſtory of Nicholas Triuet, that in the yeare of our Lord.1301. the Byſhop of Oppanuham beyng accuſed for a conſpiracie agaynſt the French king, was brought vp to hys Court, & ſo committed to priſon. The pope hearing this, ſendeth word to the kyng by hys Legate to ſet him at liberty. The French king not daring to the contrary, looſeth the Biſhop: But whē he had done, he dischargeth both the byſhop and the Legate commaunding them to voyde hys realme.

Philip the French king excommunicated.

Whereupon, Pope Boniface reuoketh all the graces and priuiledges graunted eyther by him or his predeceſſors before to the kingdome of Fraunce: alſo, not long after thundring out the ſentence of hys curſe agaynſt hym. Moreouer, citeth all the prelates, all diuines, and lawyers both ciuile and canon, to appeare perſonally before him at Rome, at a certain day, which was the firſt of Nouember. Agaynſt this citation, the king againe prouideth and commaundeth by ſtraite proclamation, that no maner of perſō ſhould export out of the Realme of France eyther gold, or ſiluer, or any other maner of ware or marchandiſe, vppon forfeting all their goodes, and theyr bodyes at the kinges pleaſure: prouiding with all, the wayes and paſſages diligently to be kept that none might paſſe vnſearched. Ouer and beſides, the ſayd French kyng defeited the Pope in geuing and beſtowing prebendes, and benefices, and other eccleſiaſticall liuings, contrary to the Popes profite. For ẏ which cauſe, the pope writeth to the foreſayd king in forme and effect as followeth.

¶ Boniface Byſhop and ſeruaunt to Gods ſeruauntes to hys beloued ſonne Phillip by the grace of God, king of Fraunce, greeting and Apoſtolicall bleſſing.

Ex lib. Stephani Aufrery.

BOniface the ſeruaunt of Gods ſeruauntes &c. feare God, and obſerue his commaundementes. We will thee to vnderſtand, that thou art ſubiect to vs both in ſpirituall thinges, and temporall. And that no gift of benefices or prebendes belongeth to thee: and if thou haue the keeping of any beyng vacaunt, that thou reſerue the profites of them to the ſucceſſors. But if thou haue geuen any, we iudge the gift to be voyde: and call backe how farre ſo euer thou haſt gone forward. And whoſoeuer beleueth otherwiſe, we iudge them heretickes.

Unto this letter of the Pope, king Phillip maketh anſwere agayn in maner & order as followeth, which is this.

❧ Phillip by the grace of God King of Fraunce, to Boniface not in deedes, behauing himſelfe for Pope, little friendſhip or none.

A letter of king Philip of Fraũce to pope Boniface.

TO Boniface bearing himſelfe, for chiefe Byſhop, little health or none. Let thy fooliſhnes know that in no temporall things we are ſubiect to no man, and that the giftes of prebendes, and many benefices made and to be made by vs were and ſhall be good both in time paſt and to come. And that we will defend manfully the poſſeſſours of the ſayd benefices, and we thinke them that beleue or thinke otherwiſe, fooles and mad men. Geuen at Paris the Wedneſday after Candlemas. an. 1301.

After theſe aforeſayd and other writinges paſſing to and fro, betweene the French kyng and the pope: within a yeare and a halfe after, the king ſommoneth a Parliament ſending downe hys letters to his Sheriffes and other officers to ſummon the Prelates and Barons of the Realme, vnto the ſayd Court of Parliament, according to the tenor of the kinges letters here following.

A Parliament ſummoned by K. Philip at Paris.

PHilip by the grace of God king of Fraunce, &c. Whereas we would take counſaile with the Prelates, Barons and other our faythfull, about weighty matters and hard, and ſuche as belong greatly to our right and touching our honour, ſtate, liberties and lawes of this our Realme, Churches, and Eccleſiaſticall perſons, and would alſo go forward and proceede in the foreſayd matters according to their counſayle: We commaund you, that ye dilligently in our behalfe require & ſtraightly charge all the Prelates in your baliwicke, and alſo all and ſinguler Abbots and Priors of the ſame your foreſayd baliwicke, (to certayne of the whiche, we haue directed downe our ſpecial letters for the ſame cauſe) that as they fauour our honour, the good ſtate both of the realme, of thẽſelues, and of the Church: they repayre to vs in their own perſõs all lets and delayes ſet aſide, and all other buſines left of Shewing to them moreouer, that we can iudge none of them to be eyther to vs faythfull ſubiects, or friendes to the Realme, which ſhall faile herein, or withdraw himſelfe in the foreſayd buſines, counſayles, and helpes in tyme. Wherin if peraduenture any ſhall ſlack or refuſe to reſort and come toward vs within 8. dayes frõ the tyme of this charge geuen by you, or your commaundement: That then, you to ſeiſe all hys temporall goodes into our hand; & ſo ſeiſed to holde them vntill you receiue other commaundement from vs. Geuen at Paris the Monday before the Natiuitie of S. Iohn Baptiſt, in the yeare of our Lord. 1303.

¶ A declaration of maiſter William Nagareta, made againſt Pope Boniface the eight, with his appellation alſo made at Paris, afore the kyng and his Counſaile in the Church of Paris.

The appeale of Nagareta made againſt pope Boniface the 8.

Ex Regiſtro.

IN the name of God Amen. In the yeare of our Lorde. 1303. Indictione ſecunda, the 12. day of March, and the ix. yeare of the Popedome, of the moſt holy father the L. Boniface the 8. by Gods prouidence pope: and in the preſence of vs common notaries, and witneſſes written vnder, the noble man maiſter William Nagareta knight (a worſhipfull profeſſour of the lawes) ſtanding afore the moſt excellent Prince the Lord Philip, by the grace of God moſt noble king of Fraunce: ſpake with liuely words, and gaue in writinges theſe thinges that follow.

There haue bene falſe Prophetes among the people: as there haue bene alſo among you falſe teachers. &c. S. Peter the glorious prince of the Apoſtles, ſpeaking to vs by the ſpirite, tolde vs thinges to come: that likewiſe as there were falſe Prophetes afore tyme, ſo there ſhould come among you falſe teachers, bringing in ſectes of deſtruction: by the which the way of trueth ſhall be defaced: and couetouſly they ſhall make marchandiſe of you with fayned wordes: and further addeth, that ſuch maiſters did follow the way of Balaam, of Boſor, whiche loued the reward of wickednes, and had hys bridled Aſſe to correct hys madnes, whiche ſpeaking in a mans voyce did ſtop the fooliſhnes of the Prophet. All which thinges as they be ſhewed to vs by the greateſt Patriarch himſelf: Your eyes ſee them fulfilled this day according to the letter. For there ſitteth in S Peters Chaire the mayſter of lyes, cauſing himſelfe to be called Boniface. i. a well doer, where he is notable in all kinde of euill doyng: And ſo both he hath taken to himſelfe a falſe name, and where he is not a true ruler and maiſter, he calleth himſelfe the Lord, Iudge, and mayſter of all men. And comming in contrary to the common order appoynted by the holy fathers, and alſo contrary to the rules of reaſon, and ſo not entring in at the doore into the Lordes ſhepefold, is not a ſhepheard nor hierling, but rather a theefe & robber. For he (the true huſbãd of the Romiſh church yet liuing) deceiued him that was delighted in ſimplicitie, & entiſed him with fayned flatterings & gifts to let him haue his ſpouſe to be his wiſe, agaynſt trueth, which cryeth, thoſe whom God hath coupled, let no man ſeperate: & at length laying violent handes vppon hym, perſwading him falſely that thing which the deceiuer ſayd to come from the holy ſpirite: was not aſhamed to ioyne to himſelfe with wicked practiſe that holye Church, which is maiſtreſſe of all Churches, calling hymſelfe to her huſband, where as he cannot be: for Celeſtinus the true Romiſh Byſhop, agreed not to the ſaid deuorce, being deceiued by ſo great ſubtiltie, nothing is ſo contrary to agreeing as errour and deceit, as mans lawes beare witnes, that I neede not to ſpeake of his violence. But becauſe the ſpirite inſpireth where he will, and he that is led with the ſpirite, is not vnder the lawe, the holy vniuerſall Church of God, not knowing the craftes of that deceiuer, ſtumbling and doubting whether it came from the holy ghoſt, that Celeſtinus ſhould leaue of his gouernment, and the ſinnes of the people deſeruing it, for feare of a ſchiſme, ſuffered the foreſaid deceauer: although according to the doctrine of our Lord, by hys fruites he might be knowne, whether he came to the ſayd regiment by the holy ghoſt or otherwiſe: his fruites (as it is playnely here written beneath) are now manifeſt to all men, by which it is apparaunt to the worlde, that he came not in by God but otherwayes: and ſo came not in by the ſheepefould. His fruites are moſt wicked, and hys ende is death, and therefore it is neceſſary that ſo euill a tree (according to the Lordes ſaying) ſhould be cut downe and caſt into the fire. This cãnot auaile to his excuſe, which is ſaid of ſome men, that is: that the Cardinals did agree vpon him: agayn after the death of the ſayd Celeſtinus the pope, ſeing he could not be her huſband, whom it is manifeſt that he defiled by adultery, her firſt huſband yet liuing, & ſhe beyng worthy to haue the promiſe of mariage kept vnto her. Therefore, becauſe that whiche is done agaynſt the Lord, turneth to the wrong of all men: and ſpecially in ſo great a miſchiefe, by reaſon of the conſequence by which ſhe is iudged of the people both a woman adultres or defamed: I like a bridled Aſſe by the power of the Lord, and not by the voyce of a perfect mã, being not able to bear ſo great a burdẽ, take in hand to rebuke the madnes of the ſayd falſe Prophet Balaam, whiche at the inſtaunce of kyng Balaac. i. of the Prince of deuils, whom he ſerueth, and ready to curſſe the people bleſſed of the Lord, I beſeeche you moſt excellent Prince, and Lord Phillip by the grace of God king of Fraunce: that like as the Aungell of God in tyme paſt mette in the way with a ſword drawne, the prophet Balaam goyng to curſe Gods people: ſo you (whiche are vnwilling to execute iuſtice, and therefore like the Aungell of the Lorde, and miniſter of power and office) woulde meete with a naked ſworde this ſayde wicked man: whiche is farre worſe then Balaam, that he performe not that euill whiche he intendeth to the people.

An inuectiõ againſt the placing of Boniface. 8. in the papall ſea.

The pope well compared to Balaam which was wont curſe Gods people for reward of money.

Articles propounded againſt pope Boniface.

Firſt, I propound that the foreſayd man, that nameth himſelfe Boniface is no Pope, but wrongfully keepeth the ſeat which he hath in deede to the great damage of all the ſoules of Gods holy Church. I ſay alſo, yͭ his entring was many waies faulty, and he entred not in at the doore, but otherwaies, and therfore is to be iudged a theefe & a robber.

2. I propound alſo, that the ſayde Boniface is a manifeſt hereticke, and vtterly cut off from the body of the holy Church, becauſe of many kindes of hereſies, whiche are to be declared in conuenient tyme and place.

3. I propound alſo, that the ſayd Boniface is an horrible ſimoniacall, & ſuch a one as hath not bin ſithens the beginning of the world: and the miſchiefe of this ſinne in him is ſo notorious to all the world (whiche thing is manifeſt to all that will playnly vnderſtand) in ſo much that he beyng openly ſlaũdered, ſaid openly that he could not commit ſimony.

The nature of this pope and al popes by his image painted out.

The pope thinkes himſelfe equall with Chriſt.

4. I propound alſo, that the ſayd Boniface being wrapt in infinite manifeſt haynous ſinnes, is ſo hardened in thẽ, that he is vtterly not poſſible to be corrected: and lying in doungeon of miſchiefe ſo deepe, that he may not be ſuffered any longer without the ouerthrow of the ſtate of yͤ church. His mouth is full of curſing, his feete and ſteps are ſwift to ſhed bloud. He vtterly teareth in peeces the Churches, which he ought to cheriſhe, waſting wickedly the goodes of the poore, & making much of wicked men that geue hym rewardes: perſecuting the righteous, and among the people not gathering but ſcattering, bringing in new ſectes of deſtruction that haue not bene heard of. Blaſphemyng the way of truth, and by robbery thinking himſelfe equall to yͤ Lord Ieſus Chriſt which is bleſſed for euer. And he beyng moſt couetous thirſteth for gold, coueteth gold, & by ſome deuiſe getteth gold of euery people: & vtterly not regardig the worſhipping of God, with fayned wordes ſometimes by flattering, ſometimes by threatning, ſometime by falſe teaching, and all to get mony withall, he maketh marchãdiſe of vs all: enuying all thinges but hys owne, louing no man, nouriſhing warre, perſecuting & hating the peace of his ſubiectes. He is rooted in all vnſpeakeable ſinnes, contraryng and ſtriuing againſt all the wayes & doctrines of yͤ Lord. He is truly the abhomination of the people which Daniel the Lordes Prophet deſcribed.

Abbominatio deſolationis Papa.

Therfore I anſwere that lawes, weapons, and all the elemẽts ought to riſe againſt him, which thus ouerthroweth the ſtate of the Church: for whoſe ſinnes God plagueth the whole world. And finally, nothing remaineth to hym being ſo vnſatiable to ſatiſfie him withall, but onely the vnſatiable mouth of hell, and the fire that cannot be quenched, continuing for euer. Therfore, ſeing that in a generall coũcel it ſo becommeth, and I ſee this wicked man to be damned, which offendeth both God and al men. I aſke and require, as inſtantly as I can, and beſeech you my Lord and King aforeſaid, that ye would declare to the prelates, doctours, people, & princes your brethren in Chriſt, & chiefly to the Cardinals and all Prelates, and call a Councell. In the which (when this foreſaid wicked man is condemned) by the worſhipfull Cardinals: the church may be prouided of a ſhephearde, & for that Councell I offer my ſelfe ready, lawfully to purſue the foreſaide things. And where as the ſaide man being in higheſt dignity, in the meane time cannot be ſuſpended of hys ſuperiour, therefore he ought to be taken, ſuſpended in deede for the things aforeſaid, ſeing his ſtate, is called into iudgement by the meanes aforeſaid.

I beſeech and require the ſaid Cardinals by you, and I preſently require them & the church of God, that this wicked man being put in priſon, the Church of Rome may be prouided of a Vicar, which may miniſter thoſe things that ſhall appertaine, vntil the Church of God be prouided of a biſhop, vtterly to take away all occaſion of a ſchiſme. And leaſt the ſaide wicked man ſhould let and hinder the proſecuting therof, I require theſe things of you my Lord king aforeſaid, affirming you to be bounde to doe this for many cauſes. Firſt for faithes ſake. Secondly, for your kingly dignitie, to whoſe office it belongeth to roote out ſuch wicked men. Thirdly, for your oth ſake, which ye made for the defence of the Churches of your Realme, which the foreſaid rauener vtterly teareth in peeces. Fourthly, becauſe ye be the patron of the Churches, & therfore ye are not bound onely to the defence of them, but to the calling for againe of their goodes, which the foreſaide man hath waſted. Fiftly, ye following the footeſteps of your auncetors, ought to deliuer your mother the Romiſh church, from ſo wicked a hand, wherein by oppreſſion ſhee is tied bound. I require that a publike inſtrument may be made of theſe requeſtes by the notaries here preſent, vnder the witnes of the worſhipfull men that be here preſent. Theſe things were done and ſpoken as is aforeſayd at Paris in the Kings houſe of Lupara.

After this proteſtation of maſter Nagareta, immediatly inſued the appeale of the king, pronoũced and publiſhed againſt the ſayd Boniface, in forme as foloweth.

The appeale made by the king and the louers of the Realme againſt Boniface.

The appellation of the French king and Nobles againſt pope Boniface.8.

IN the name of God. Amen. In the yeare of our Lorde 1303 Indictione prima. 13. day of Iune, and the 9. yeare of the Popedom of Boniface Pope the 8. By the tenour of this publique inſtrumẽt be it vnto all men knowen that the moſt noble prince and Lorde Philip by the grace of God, king of Fraunce, the famous and reuerend fathers in Chriſt, Archbiſhops & Biſhops, religious men, Abbots and Priors here vndernamed, in the preſence of vs common Notaries here vnder written, eſpecially called and required for this purpoſe, as it is contained in the ſubſcriptions heere vnder, the famous & noble men, the Lord Lewes, ſonne of the French king Guido of S. Paule, and Iohn Drocem Earles, and William of Pleſiano Lord of Vitenob knight: Moued as they ſaide with a feruent faith, with affection of ſincere loue and zeale of charitie to be ſhewed to the holy Romiſh church, and hauing pitie from their heart, on their mother the vniuerſall church, which as they ſayde is oppreſſed daungerouſly vnder the rule of the ſaide Lord Boniface, and ſuffereth outragious defacing and loſſe: and pitying the right faith (as they ſay) in which ſtandes the ſaluation of ſoules, & which (alas for pitie) in their times miſerably pineth away, & periſheth for the lacke of wholeſome gouernment of the Churche through all Chriſtendome: and earneſtly taking paines, as they ſaid, for the repairing and enhaunſing of the Catholicke faith: ſpecially, ſeeing it was neceſſary for the ſame church, for the foundation of the faith, and health of the ſoules, that none ſhoulde rule the fold of the Lordes flocke, but the true and lawfull ſhepheard: and alſo becauſe the ſame Churche was the ſpouſe of Chriſt that hath no ſpot nor wrincle, all errour, offence, wickednes & wrong ſhoulde be put away, and ſaluation, peace and quietneſſe through Gods mercy might be procured to the whole worlde, which they ſay lieth in warres and darkeneſſe by the wicked deedes, curſed workes, and hurtful examples of the ſayd Boniface: They ſaid and laid againſt the ſaid Boniface, hereſie, and other diuers horrible & curſed faultes, wherein they affirmed him to be tangled, and commonly and notoriouſly reported, the king himſelfe being preſent, with Archbiſhops, Biſhops and other Prelates and Churchmen (which were aſſembled for to entreat of their owne matters, and matters of their Churches) beſide Barons, Earles, and other noble men, whoſe names are vnder written.

The ſaid William propounded & obiected againſt him, ſwearing by the holy Goſpell of God which hee corporally touched, that he coulde prooue all and euery the premiſſes to be true. And the ſayd William of Pleſiano ſware further this othe, that he beleued he could prooue the premiſſes, and that he woulde purſue to the full ende againſt the ſaide Boniface in the generall Councell, where, when, and afore whomſoeuer of right it ought to be done: requiring earneſtly the ſayd Lord king as a champion of the faith, and defender of the Church: that for declaring of this truth to the praiſe of Gods name, to the increaſe & promoting of the Catholike faith, to the honour and wealth of the vniuerſall Church and of all Chriſten people, and the congregation of the ſayd generall councel: that he woulde helpe and beſtowe his profitable labour, with ſouldiors and other like, for the loue of men, and zeale to iuſtice (becauſe his kingly houſe was euer a ruler of the trueth) and that he wold earneſtly require the Archbiſhops, Biſhops, & other Prelates, and that he woulde be effectually inſtant with them. The Earles & knights themſelues beſought earneſtly many of the ſame prelates (as they were pillers of the Church & the faith) that they would helpe and effectually beſtowe their labour to the calling, and aſſembling of the ſaid councell, by all waies and meanes lawful according to the ordinances of the holy fathers and decrees of the canons. But when the prelates heard & fully vnderſtode ſuch obiections, oppoſitions, and requeſts, as is aforeſaid: and conſidered that ſuch a matter not onely was moſt hard, but needed wiſe counſell, they departed out of the ſame place. But on the Friday next following i. the 14. day of the ſame moneth of Iune, the foreſaid Lord king being preſent, and alſo the Lords, Archbiſhops, Biſhops, Abbots, Priors, and many witneſſes here vnder written the ſame time being preſent, and in the preſence of vs common Notaries heere ſubſcribed, and being ſpecially called and required for this purpoſe: the foreſayd William of Pleſiano Knight ſayde, propounded, affirmed, obiected and read, as was contained more fully in a certaine paper which he held in his hand, whoſe tenor was after this ſort.

I William of Pleſiano Knight, ſay, propound, and affirme, that Boniface which now ruleth the Apoſtolical ſea is a rancke hereticke in hereſies, and by hereſies, outragious dedes, and wicked doctrines hereafter to be declared, which things to be true, I beleeue I am able to prooue: or els, ſuch things as theſe ſhall be ſufficient to proue hym a full hereticke, in a cõuenient place & time, and afore whom of right this can or ought to be done. This thing I ſweare on the holy Goſpel of God preſently touched of me.

First, that he beleueth not the immortalitie of men and of chriſten ſoules, but thinking much like as the Saducies did beleeue, that there is no euerlaſting life, and yͭ men can not get at the length ioy, but all the lot and part of comfort and gladnes to be in this world: and by this meanes he affirmeth, that it is no ſinne for the body to liue daintely in al dainties. And out of the aboundance of this leuen, he was not aſhamed to ſay and opẽly to cõfeſſe, that he had rather be an aſſe or a dogge or any other brute beaſt, rather than a Frenchman, which thing he would not haue ſaid, if he beleued a Frenchmã had a ſoule that could enioy euerlaſting life. This thing he taught many men, which knowledged this at the point of death, and the common report goeth on him thus in theſe things.

Pope Boniface had rather be a dogge then a French man.

2. Alſo, he beleeueth not faithfully, that by the wordes ordained of Chriſt & ſpoken ouer the hoſte, after the faſhion of the Church by a faithfull prieſt that is lawfully ordered, the body of Chriſt to be there: and therefore it commeth to paſſe, that he geueth no reuerence to it (no not a litle) when it is lifted vp of the prieſt, yea he riſes not to it, but turneth his backe to it, and makes himſelfe & his ſeat to be honoured where he ſitteth, rather then the altare where the hoſte is conſecrate: and he is commonly reported to doe this.

3. Alſo, he is reported to ſay that whoredome is no ſinne, no more than rubbing of the hands together, & thus commonly runnes the voice and brute.

4. Alſo, he ſaide often, that to thruſt downe the King and Frenchmen (if it coulde not be otherwaies done) he would ouerthrow himſelfe the whole world, & the whole Church. And when he had ſayd ſo, ſome yͭ ſtode by ſaid, God forbid, he anſwered God graunt. And when good men that heard the wordes replied againſt him, that hee ſhould not ſay ſo, becauſe the church of God & all Chriſten men ſhould ſuffer great ſlaunder ſo: he anſwered, I care not what ſlaunders ſoeuer come, ſo that the Frenchmen and their pride be deſtroied: for it is neceſſary that ſlaunders & offences come.

5. Item, he called againe & allowed a booke made by M. Arnold of Newton, conteining and ſmelling of hereſie, cõdemned by the Byſhop of Paris and reproued by the maiſters of diuinitie, and burned openly by Boniface himſelf: and in the full conſiſtorie of Cardinals being likewiſe reproued, condemned, and burned, yet hee allowed it being wrytten againe, and containing the ſame fault.

6. Item, that he might make the moſt damnable remembraunce of him perpetuall, he cauſed his Images of ſiluer to be ſet in the Churche, by this meanes bringing men to Idolatrie.

7. Item, he hath a priuate deuill, whoſe counſell he vſeth in all things and through all things.

8. Item, he ſaid once that if all men were on one ſide, and he on another, they coulde not deceiue him neither in lawe nor in deede, which thing could not be done except he vſed a deuiliſh art: and of this he is openly thus reported.

9. Item, he is a witch, aſking counſell at ſoothſayers both men and women, and thus he is commonly iudged.

10. Item, he ſayd openly that the Romiſh pope could not commit ſimonie, which is hereticall to ſay. This is a ſinne reproued aſwell in the old Teſtament, as in the new, and generally in the holy Councels. Alſo hee is wont to make marchaundiſe of prelates liuings, dignities, ſuperiorities, and benefices, to the which holy orders be neceſſarely ioyned: and of abſolutions and diſpenſations, like as vſurers and marchaunts vſe to buy and ſell common things in the market, and of this the common bruit reportes him.

11. Item, hee letteth with all his might among Chriſtian men the ſpeciall Embaſſade of Chriſt, made to hys owne ſonnes, ſaying: Peace I leaue to you, & ſoweth diſcord and warres: wherefore ones it was ſayde afore him, that certaine parties would freindly agree after a good ſort, but he letted the peace: and when the other parte did humbly beſeech him, that he would geue licence to agree (he ſayde) he woulde not: Yea if the ſonne of God or Peter the Apoſtle would come downe into the earth and commaund him: he would ſay, I will not beleeue thee.

12. Item, becauſe the French nation (being manifeſtly a moſt Chriſtian nation) followeth not hys errours in the faith: he reckeneth and openly calleth al and euery of them, Paterniani.

13. Item, he is infect with ſodomiticall ſinne, keping with him boyes for cõcubines, and of this fault he is moſt commonly and openly reported.

14. Item, he hath cauſed many murthers of Clearkes to be done in his preſence, & commending it reioyſing at their death: and if they were not deadly wounded at the firſt by his ſeruantes, as oft as he ſaw them ſmiting, he ſaide ſmite, ſmite: by which example many were ſlaine.

15. Item, when he had condemned a certaine noble man, he forbad the Sacrament to be geuen him at the poynt of death, deſiring it and being penitent: ſaying, that the Sacrament of penaunce was not neceſſary to ſaluation.

16. Item, he cõpelled certaine Prieſtes to ſhew vnto him the confeſſions of men, and hee publiſhed them openly afterwarde contrary to the will of them, that were confeſſed to their ſhame & confuſion, and compelled them to redeeme their ſinnes. In ſo much that ones hee depoſed a certaine biſhop of Spayne, for the faultes that he confeſſed to a certaine Cardinal, confeſſing vnto him a certaine priuy horrible fault vnder Benedicite, and compelled the Cardinall againſt his will to declare his confeſſion: and yet afterward he reſtored the ſame Biſhop againe to his place for a little money. wherfore he is thought to play the hereticke in the Sacrament of penance.

15. Item, he faſteth not on the faſting dayes, nor Lent, but eateth fleſh indifferently, & without cauſe ſuffreth his houſhold and frends to eat, ſaying it is no ſinne. Doing in this thing againſt the generall ſtate of the holy church.

16. Item, he oppreſſed the order of the Cardinals, and hath oppreſſed the order of blacke & white monks, of gray Friers & preachers: and ſaid oft, that the world was deſtroyed by them, & that they were falſe hypocrites, and that neuer good could chance to any that would be confeſſed to them, or would be familiar with them, or woulde keepe them in their houſe, and he neuer ſayde good worde of any prelate, religious man, or clark: but euer rebuketh and ſlãdereth them, taking away their good name, and to compel them to redeeme their faultes, he is glad of their accuſations: and this is the common voyce and report of him.

17. Item, of olde time he going about to deſtroy the faith, conceiued a hate againſt the French king, euen to the abhorring of the faith: becauſe of the light of faith which is there, and becauſe of the great witnes and example of chriſtianitie, is & hath ben there. And before he had this ſeat he is proued to haue ſayd, ẏ if he were Pope: he would rather ouerthrow all chriſtendom, but he would ouerthrow and deſtroy the nation, which he calleth the pride of French.

18. Alſo hee is reported, that when the Embaſſadours of the king of England, in the name of the ſayde king did require and entreat for the tenth of the realme of England to be geuen him: he aunſwered, that he would not geue them the tenth, but on this cõdition, that he would make warre with them againſt the French king. And beſide this, he is reported to haue geuen great ſommes of mony to certaine perſons, to hinder that peace ſhuld not be betwixt the ſayd kings. He himſelfe alſo withall his might hath letted it, by meſſengers, letters, and otherwaies that he coulde, yea by geuing bribes.

19. Item, he is reported alſo to haue commaunded Fridericke which kepeth the Ile of Cicil, that if he would betray Charles the king and breake the peace which he made, and ſweare that he would keepe with him, and would ſtirre againſt the king, and kil the Frenchmen: that then he would geue him aide, helpe, and counſaile, & for ſo doing he would geue and graunt him the ſaid kingdoms.

20. He confirmed alſo the king of Almaine to be Emperor, and ſaide openly that he did it to deſtroy the nation, which he calleth the pride of the French men: which ſay, that they are ſubiect to none in temporal things. wherein ſayeth he, they lied on their heds, declaring moreouer, that whoſoeuer (yea if it were an Angell from heauen) would ſay that all kings of the world were not ſubiect to the ſame king of Almaine, he were accurſed.

Pope Boniface enemy to the Frẽch men.

21. Further, he brake the agreements of peace betwixt the king of Almaine and the French king: in which, eyther of them ſhuld haue their owne ſaued. And what encrochings ſo euer had bene on either ſide, ſhould be brought to a due ſtate, and vnder an othe orderly geuen and taken: he is reported to haue commanded the ſame king of Almaine, that he ſhould not kepe theſe conditions of peace, but be an enemie and go about to ſow debate among chriſten men.

Pope Boniface an enemy to peace.

22. Itẽ, he is openly reported, that the holy land was betraied through his fault, and came to the enemies of God and of faith: and that he ſuffred this for the nonſt, & denyed to geue aide to the Chriſtians which defended it: ſpending the treaſures and mony of the church, (which ſhould haue bene beſtowed on that vſe as the patrimonie of Chriſt) in perſecuting of faithful chriſtians and friends of the church, and therwith would enrich his friendes.

23. Item, he is openly reported to vſe ſimonie, not only in beſtowing of benefices, but in geuing of orders, & making diſpenſations. He hath ſet to ſale al benefices of the church, and would beſtow the church commonly on him ẏ would offer moſt: and hee made his ſeruauntes Prelates of the Church, not for wealth of the faith, nor to thruſt downe infidels, but to oppreſſe the faithful, and to enriche his kinred by the church goods and of the patrimonie of him that was crucified: and preſumed to make them Marqueſſes, Erls, and Barons, and was not afraide to builde them ſtrong holdes, rooting out & oppreſſing many noble men & other.

24. Item, it is commonly reported, that he hath deuorced many mariages lawfully made, to the contempt, hurt, and ſlander of many: and he did promote his nephew to a cardinalſhip, being maried, vnlearned, and all together vnworthy to liue: and openly maried one that was diuorced & compelled him to make a vow of chaſtitie: and after that he is reported to haue had two baſtards by her, and ſo goeth the common bruite of him.

25. Item, he is commonly reported, that he handled vngently his predeceſſor Celeſtinus of holy memory, leading a holy life (peraduenture knowing in conſcience that hee could not forſake his Popedom, & therfore Boniface himſelfe had no lawfull entrance to the ſea) and priſoned hym, & there quickly and priuely cauſed him to die. And of thys the common brute and report is through al the world, that he cauſed many and great learned mẽ liuing a regular life (which diſputed of this, whether hee might renounce the Popedome or not) to be ſet in priſon and there to die.

Pope Boniface a murderer of his predeceſſour.

26. Itẽ, he is reported to haue railed at religious perſons leading a regular life wythout a reaſonable cauſe to the world, to the ſlaunder of many.

27. Item, he is reparted to haue ſaid that he would within ſhort time make all the Frenchmen eyther Martyrs or forſakers of their faith.

28. Item, he is commonly reported, that he ſeketh not the health of the ſoules, but the deſtruction of them.

Theſe things being propoũded and red, the ſame william proteſted, ſaide, declared, appealed, and added theſe wordes, reading them in wryting.

I

The proteſtation of W.Pleſiano.

I william of Pleſiano knight, proteſt that I doe not propounde nor ſpeake the foreſaide things for any ſpeciall hate of Boniface hymſelfe (for I hate not him, but his foreſaid euill deedes) nor I ſeeke not hys iniurie nor ſlaunder, nor any mans els: But I ſpeake it for the zeale of the faith, and for the deuotiō that I haue to the holy church of God, and ẏ holy Romiſh ſee, aſwell for thoſe things that I haue ſeene and heard of credible men of his doings, and by likely preſumptions gathered of the foreſaid things, and many diuers other things to be declared in his due place & time. And I ſweare by the holy Goſpel of God (which I touche with my hand) that I beleue him to be a ranke heretike, & that I alſo beleeue that the foreſayd things and ſuch other may proue againſt him ſuch things as ſhall be ſufficient to proue him an heretike, according to the ſtate of the holy fathers. I ſweare alſo that I will purſue againſt him by the lawes, the foreſayd things in the generall counſel that ſhal be aſſembled, in a place that ſhalbe ſafe & ſure for me, to the honour of God, & increaſe of the Chriſtian faith, ſauing the right honor & ſtate of the holy Apoſtolical ſee, in al things. Wherfore, earneſtly and with reuerence I require you my Lord the king (to whome belongeth the defence of the holy mother the church, and the Catholike faith, for of that yee ſhal make accōpt in the laſt iudgement) and you my lordes the Prelates which be the pillers of the faith, and which ought to be iudges of the foreſayde things together, wyth other reuerent fathers, the Catholike Prelates of the holy church, in the general coūcell to be aſſembled: that ye wold procure and take diligent paine that a generall coūcel may be gathered in a fit and ſafe place, and conuenient time, afore which the foreſayde things may be propounded, brought forth, & proued againſt the ſayde Boniface, as is premiſed. And I earneſtly alſo require you my Lorde king, that yee would require the ſame prelates preſent & abſent, in what countrey ſo euer they be, or to whom it belongeth: and that ye would effectually induce them manfully to labour, and to require other faithfully, that the foreſaid counſaile by the foreſaid matters might be gathered in ſuch ſort as is aforeſaide. And becauſe ſo long as this is deferred to proue, I ſuſpect Boniface himſelfe, leſt he being angry and mooued for the foreſayd things againſt me and my partakers, procurers and helpers, my friends and familiars, ſhould goe about by ſome meanes, whereby to ſtay and ſtop my good purpoſe and theirs for going forward. Therefore, by theſe wrytings afore you my lord the king, and diuers prelates, and afore your common notaries here preſent: I prouoke and appeale to the ſaid holy generall counſell Apoſtolicall and Catholike that ſhalbe, and to the holy Apoſtolical ſee, and to him and them to whome of right I may or ought: and I earneſtly require, once, twice, and thrice, that teſtimoniall letters may be geuen me from you: ſuppoſing my ſelfe, my followers, fauourers, familiares, frends, my procurers, and all them that wil hereafter folow me, my goods and theirs to be vnder the protection & keeping of S. Peter and Paule, and the ſaide holy Councel to be aſſembled by the holy Romiſh ſee, & the catholike Apoſtolicall Pope that ſhall be: ſticking neuertheleſſe and willing to ſticke to the appellation and appellations, proceſſe and proceſſes made heerupon, by the noble man M. william of Nagareta knight, in as much as they ſhalbe found & made lawfull, and yet not forſaking this preſent appellation.

Pope Boniface proued an heretick.

When theſe thinges were thus red and done, the foreſaid king aunſwered and required the foreſayde Prelates, prouoking and appealing and making requeſt, prouocation and appellation, as is conteined in the paper vnderwrytten, both there and then with other Prelates: which things all are more fully conteined in theſe wrytings following, and were red to them that heard it, whoſe tenour is ſuch.

The Kinges anſwere. The appeale of Philip the French king from the Pope.

We Philip by the grace of God, hearing and vnderſtanding the obiections propounded by our beloued faithfull knight, W. of Nagareta, againſt Boniface nowe hauing the regiment of the Romiſh Church: although we wold gladly couer with our owne cloke, the filthy partes of ſuch a father: yet for the loue of the Catholicke faith and great deuotion that we beare to the holy Romiſh and vniuerſall Church our mother, and all faithful men and ſpouſe of Chriſt, following the ſteppes of our aunceſtors, which doubted not to ſhedde their owne bloud for the entreaſe and defence of the Churches liberty and the faith: and coueting to prouide for the puritie of faith and the ſtate of the Church, as alſo to auoid the hurt of the generall ſlaunder, being not able to paſſe ouer any longer the premiſſes with wincking and diſſembling, and my conſcience driuing to the ſame, ſeeing this eſtimate & opinion of him in theſe matters, is not raſhly of vs conceiued, but vehemently and plainly increaſed by many and continuall cryings of credible men, and great authoritie oft and oftentimes beaten vnto vs, fearing moreouer the deſtruction of the faith, both of vs and of al other ſubiects, and ſpecially of kings and princes of the world, which ought to reproue negligence, which acknowledge that we haue receiued power geuen vs from the Lord, to the promoting and increaſement of it, we agree to your requeſtes in this behalfe, and to the calling and aſſembling a councell for the glory of God (ſauing the honour and reuerence that is due to the holy Romiſh church in all thinges) whereby the trueth may appeare in the premiſſes, and all errour auoided: that the ſtate of the vniuerſall Church and all Chriſtianitie and the matters of faith, and the holy land may be prouided for, & the ſlaūders & ieopardies hāging ouer vs may be withſtanded: we be ready & offer our ſelues gladly, as much as in vs is, to beſtowe our labour and diligent paine therabouts. Earneſtly requiring and beſeeching in the mercifull bowels of Ieſu Chriſt, you Archbiſhops and other Prelates here preſent, as children of the Church and pillers of faith, called of the Lorde to the promoting, encreaſe and preſeruing thereof, to care for the ſame: that with all diligence ye wold geue heede, as becommeth you, and effectually you would labor by al wayes and fit meanes, to the calling and aſſembling of this councel, in which we intend to be perſonally preſent. And leſt the ſaid Boniface, which hath boldly and wrongfully many times threatned to proceede againſt vs, ſtopping and hindring our purpoſes and intent: leaſt any of his workes of darkeneſſe (if there be any) ſhould come to light, directly or indirectly hindering the calling and gathering of this councel: or leaſt any ſtate being in the ſame realme that wil in dede procede againſt vs, or our ſtate, churches, Prelates, Barons, & other faithfull vaſſals, our ſubiects, our lands, or our realme, and the ſtate of the realme: by abuſing any ſpirituall ſworde, in excommunicating, ſuſpending, or otherwais by any meanes for vs and our welwillers, and them that will followe vs: we prouoke & appeale in wryting to the foreſayd general councell (which we inſtantly deſire to be called) and to one lawfull chiefe Biſhop that ſhall be, or to any other to whome we ſhoulde appeale: and yet not going from the appellation made by M. William of Nagareta, to whom we ſticked then, and alſo yet ſticke: requiring earneſtly, a witnes of our appellation of you Prelates & Notaries, expreſſedly to renue ſuch prouocation and appellation when and afore whome it ſhalbe thought meete to you.

Then the Archbiſhops within wrytten, byſhops, Abbots, and Priors, aunſwered the premiſſes (as it is founde in the actes) prouoked and appealed, agreed to, and proteſted, and made prouocation, and appellation, agreement, and proteſtation, as is contained more fully in a certaine paper there openly and plainely red, whoſe tenor followeth with theſe wordes.

The proteſtation of Prelates.

We Archbiſhoppes of Nicoſen, Remen, Senoren, Narbonen, Turonen, and biſhops of Landuiren, Belnacen, Catolacen, Antiſiodorem, Meldimen, Nurmen, Carnotem, Aurelianen, Ambiauen, Morinen, Silanen, Andeganen, Abricen, Conſtant, Ebroicen Lexonicen, Sagien, Caloromont, Lemonicen, Auicen, Maſticoren. And we Abbots of Cluniac, promoſtraten of the greater monaſterie of the court of S. Dioniſe in Fraunce, Camped S. Victors, S. Genoueue, S. Marten, Landmoen, Figiacem & Bellicem in Lemociuio, and Frier Hugh, viſiter of the houſes of the order of knights of S. Iohn in Ieruſalem in Fraunce, and the father Priour of S. Martine in the fieldes, hearing theſe things which were ſayd, propounded, and obiected yeſterday, & to day, by you the Lords, Earles, and William aforeſaide, againſt the Lorde Boniface the 8. and Pope, being mooued with ſuche ſayings, purpoſes, aſſertations, and your othes, your requeſt and other lawfull cauſes: and were compelled by need, conſidering that the matter of our faith which is Chriſtes, is handled in the premiſſes. Wee that be called to part of this care, to the defence and maintenaunce of the faith of ſoules of the realme, although vnworthy, yet coueting to withſtande the ieoperdies that hang ouer vs by reaſon of the premiſſes and other cauſes, thinking the calling & gathering of the ſayd Councell profitable & neceſſary, that the innocencie of the Lord Boniface himſelf may clearely be diſcuſſed, as we deſire (our cōſciences bearing witneſſe) that it may be determined on him by the Councell, touching ſuch things as are laide againſt him, and that may be done which they decree according to the Canons. We aunſwere you our Lord king, and you our Lordes, Earles, and William, that (the honor & reuerence of the holy Romiſh church ſalued in all poyntes) wee agree to your due requeſtes in this behalfe for the calling of the Councell, and are ready to geue helpe and diligent labour to the calling and gathering of the ſaid Coūcell, according to the decrees of the holy fathers, and to the lawfull orders of the Canons: not intending by any meanes, to make parties of this matter, nor to ſticke to any that maketh parties. Yet leaſt the ſayde Boniface being mooued or prouoked by theſe things, as wee feare by likely coniectures and threatnings made, againſt vs for the foreſayde things, that he will proceede againſt our pariſh Churches and our ſubiectes by ſome meanes, or cauſe to proceede againſt vs by ſome authoritie of his owne or others by excommunication, ſuſpenſion, interditing, depoſing, depri-

This was done at Paris at Lupara in the chamber of the ſayd Lord our king. Indictione prima, the 9. yeare of hys popedome, the daies of thurſday and friday aforeſayd theſe noble men being preſent, the Lordes of Auia and Bolone, the Lordes Martins and other Earles named afore, Mathewe Potera, Peter the Lorde chamberlane, Philip the Lord of wirtmos, and Henry of Bolone knight, and alſo M. Philip Archdeacon of Bengem, Nicholas archdeacon of Remem, william treaſurer of Anioy, Philip Beaſpere. Rainolde of Burbon and John Montagre, and many mo both clearkes and other ſpecially required and called to be witneſſe to this.

After theſe things thus in the Parliament decreed and agreed, the Prelates of the cleargie conſulting with themſelues what was to be done in ſo doutfull a matter: and dreading the Popes diſpleaſure, for this which was done already, to cleare thẽſelues in the matter contriued among themſelues a letter to the Pope partly to certify him, what there was done, and partly alſo to admoniſh him what he ſhould do: the tenour of which their letter contcined theſe wordes following.

The forme of a Letter, which the Prelates of France, as well ſecular as religious ſent to Boniface, that hee ſhould ceaſe his enterpriſe, wherein he proceeded againſt the King.

¶ To the moſt holy Father and their deareſt beloued Lorde, the Lord Boniface the chiefe Biſhop of the holy Romiſh churche and the vniuerſall Churche: his humble and deuout Archbyſhops, Abbots, Priors, Conuentuals, Deanes, Prouoſts, Chapters, Couents and Colledges of the Cathedrall and collegiate churches, regular and ſecular of all the Realme of France, being gathered together, doe offer moſt deuoute kiſinges of your bleſſed feete.

The letter of the French prelates to Pope Boniface.

WE are compelled, not without ſorrowe of heart and bitter teares to ſignifie vnto your holineſſe, that the moſt famous Prince our moſt deare Lorde Phillip, by the grace of God, the noble king of Fraunce: when he heard and ſaw the Apoſtolicall letters ſealed, which were ſent to him of late, from your behalfe by the worſhipfull man the Cardinall of Narbo your Notarie & meſſenger, and were preſented by the ſame Cardinall to him, & certaine other of his barons Vpon the ſight and peruſing of which ſo bloudy letters being read and declared to them ſitting by hym: both our Lorde the king and the barons themſelues were highly moued with great maruelling and great trouble. In ſo much that the ſayd our Lord the king by the aduice of his barons, commanded to be called afore him the other barons then abſent, and vs alſo: that is to wete: al Archbiſhops, Biſhops, Abbots, Priors, conuentuals, deanes, prouoſts, chapters, conuents and Colledges, as well of Cathedrall or collegiate churches, regular and ſecular, & alſo all the vniuerſities and communalties of the townes of hys Realme: that wee Prelates, Barons, Deanes, Prouoſtes, and two of the learnedſt of euery Collegiate and Cathedrall Churche, ſhoulde appeare perſonally, and ſhoulde procure the reſt likewiſe to appeare, by their Stewarde, Officers and ſufficient proctours, wyth full and ſufficient Commiſsion at the appoynted place and terme. Further, when we and the other Eccleſiaſticall perſons aforeſayd, and alſo the barons, ſtewards, officers, and proctours, and other of the comminalty of the townes that were thus called: and when according to the forme of the foreſaide calling by the kings commaundement, we ſtoode afore the king this wedneſday, the tenth of this preſent of Aprill, in S. Maries Church in Paris: Our Lord the king cauſed to be propounded openly and plainely to all men, that it was ſignified to him, from you among other things by the foreſayd Cardinal & letters: that for his kingdome (which hee and his auncetours hetherto doe acknowledge they holde of God only (now ought in temporalties to be ſubiect to you and holde of you, and that ye were not content with theſe ſo maruellous and ſtrange wordes, and not heard of from the beginning of the world of any dwellers within the ſame realme, but that ye went about to put them in practiſe. And that ye called to appeare afore you, the prelates of the ſayd realme, and doctors of diuinitie, and ſuch profeſſours of both lawes, as were borne within the ſaide realme, for the correcting and amending of ſuch exceſſes, faultes, arrogancies, wrongs, and harmes, as ye pretend to be done to the eccleſiaſticall Prelates and perſones eccleſiaſticall both regular and ſecular, abiding within the Realme & els where, by our lorde the king himſelfe and his officers or bailiffes, by his peeres, Earles, Barons and other nobles, with the communaltie & people of the ſaide realme: To the intent by this meanes, the foreſaid realme might be made ſtrong, with pretious iewels and durable treaſures, which are to be preferred before the bucklers or any armour of ſtrong men, that is to ſay, by the wiſedome of Prelates, and wiſe men, & others: through whoſe ripe faithful counſell, and circumſpect foreſight, the realme might be ruled and gouerned, the faith might be ſtabliſhed, the eccleſiaſticall Sacramẽts might be miniſtred, iuſtice might be executed: which by them being robbed of their goodes and richeſſe and vtterly ſpoyled, is in a doubtfull caſe, and in ieopardie of miſerable decay & for euer to be deſtroyed.

Among theſe and diuers other griefes which were done by you and the Romiſh church, to him, to his realme and the French church, both in reſeruing and wilfull ordering of Archbiſhopprickes, Byſhoprickes, and beſtowing of great benefices of the Realme vpon ſtraunge and vnknowen perſons, yea and oft vpon ſuſpect perſons, neuer beeing at the churches or benefices aforeſayde. By reaſon whereof the decay of Gods worſhip enſued, the godly wils of the founders and geuers are defrauded of their godly purpoſe: the accuſtomed almes geuing is withdrawen from the poore of the ſayd Realme, the pouerishing of the Realme followeth, and churches runne in daunger to be defaced, while they remaine deſtitute of ſeruice: the Prophets being taken away, & the fruites of them that ſerue them, be appoynted to the commoditie of ſtraungers. And while prelates haue not to geue, yea to reward men for their deſertes: noble men (whoſe aunceſtors founded the Churches) and other learned men, cannot haue ſeruants: and that for theſe cauſes, deuotion began to be colde, there was none at theſe dayes that would ſtretch out a liberall hand towardes the Churches, and farthermore by the premiſſes an euill example was giuen. Alſo he complayned of newe taxes of penſions, newly laid on the Churches, of immeaſurable bondages, exactions, & diuers extortions with other preiudiciall & hurtful nouelties, by which the generall ſtate of the Church is chaunged, in geuyng ſuffraganes, as helpers to the higher prelates, whereby neyther the Byſhops themſelues nor the ſuffraganes can doe their dueties, but for them they might runne with giftes to the Apoſtolicall ſee. He complayned alſo of diuers cauſes and ſome articles long ſince, but true in the time that they were preſented, that were done and be done continually: and alſo not purpoſing to ſuffer ſo great a diſheriting of him aud his ſucceſſours from the realme, and ſo manifeſt a griefe, they coulde not ſuffer any longer the euident loſſe of the honour of him and the realme, and ſayde: that hee was certaine, that it was knowen to the whole worlde, and that hee did maintaine in this matter a iuſt cauſe as hee had learned by the agreeable ſentence of doctours in Diuinitie and maiſters of both Lawes, that were borne within his Realme and others, which among the Doctors and cunning men of the world were counted of the learned ſort and more famous. Therefore he required vs, all and euery one, both Prelates and Barons, and other, earneſtly as our Lord: he prayed and gently begged as a friend: to conſult and take diligent paine, that he might ordeine wholſome things, both for the keeping of their olde libertie, the honour and ſtate of the realme and of the inhabitants therof, for the eaſing of the griefes aforeſaid, for redreſsing of the realme and the French Church, by our counſaile and his Barons to the praiſe of Gods name, the encreaſe of the Catholike faith, the honour of the vniuerſall church, and promoting of Gods religion: ſpecially ſeing ſuch griefs were done by his officers & others of the Realme, to the Churches and churchmen, for the which hee purpoſed a remedy of wholeſome correction, afore the comming of the foreſaid Cardinall, & would nowe haue put it in execution effectually, but that hee might be thought to haue done that for feare, or at your commandement, which thing ye cannot aſcribe to your ſelf. Furthermore, he wold ſpend not onely his goodes but alſo his realme, yea his children if the caſe required: and therfore we ſhould regard to be ready with counſell and helpe in ſeaſon as we are bounde by the duety of fidelitie in theſe things: wherein it is manifeſt, that as all and euery mannes caſe is handled, generally and particularly their cauſe is promoted, and euery mannes owne intereſt is touched And then hee demaunded by and by to be anſwered plainely and finally in theſe things, of all and euery one.

Then the Barons ſitting aſide with the officers and Proctors aforeſaid, at the length after they had taken counſell comming to our foreſaid Lord the king, and praiſing greatly, and hartely thanking him for his laudable purpoſe and good will, anſwered wyth one voice:that for thoſe things they were ready,not only to ſpéd their goods, but offered the ſame goods,riches, & alſo their perſons to death,and not to flee any kinde of torment. And ſayd further with one voice,that if our foreſaid Lord the king woulde (as God forbid) ſuffer,or els willingly paſſe ouer thoſe,they thẽſelues would in no caſe ſuffer it.

Then when anſwere was asked of vs afterward, although we deſired longer reſpite of deliberatiõ of the king himſelf our Lord, and of the greateſt of the forſayd Barons, and that for this intent: that in the meane while the Popes letters might haue comen to our Lord the king,we anſwered that we would not offend againſt the libertie of the realme,or by ſome meanes to innouate thinges contrary to the kings honour in this behalfe.

We went about alſo to informe him with many godly words, with earneſt perſuaſions, and with many kindes of helpe, and by ſundry wayes, to bring him to keepe the ſpeciall bande of vnitie, which is knowen to haue continued to theſe preſent dayes, betwixt the holy Romiſh church, and his predeceſſours. But when we were denied any longer delay, and it was plainely and openly tolde to all men, that if any man were of a contrary minde, from thenceforth he ſhould be manifeſtly counted for an enemie of the king & the realme. We conſidering warely, & ſeeing plainely, that except our lord the king,and the Barons aforeſaide were content with our aunſwere,beſide other dangers & great offences (whereof there could neither be number nor end) and that the deuotion both of the Romiſh and French church,and alſo the whole obedience of the laitie and all the people from thence foorth ſhould be taken away without recouerie, not without great feare & doubt we thought good to aunſwer thus.

That we would helpe our Lorde the king with due counſaile and conuenient helpe for the preſeruing of his perſon,and of his earthly honour, and the liberty and lawes of the ſayd realme,like as we were (certaine of vs) by the duetie of allegiaunce bound to him, which hold of him Dukedomes,Earledomes,Baronies,fees, and other noble partes of the ſaide Realme , by the fourme of the othe,as all other doe : yet wee made humble ſute to the ſame our Lord the king, that ſeeing we were bound to obey the Popes holineſſe and your holy feete, he would ſuffer vs to go according to the tenour of your foreſaid calling.

Then on the Kings and Barons behalfe followeth aunſwere, that in no caſe they would ſuffer vs to go out of the Realme: and that by no meanes they woulde beare to be handled ſo daungerouſly,yea rather to be altogether waſted.

Then we conſidering ſo great an anger, & trouble ſo ieopardous,& ſo great that none could be greater, both of the King, the Barons & other lay people of the realme:& now knowing plainely, that the olde enemie of peace, which goeth about from the beginning of his fall,with ſowing of Darnel,to breake the vnitie of the Church,by troubling of peace:would breake charitie,and infect the ſweetneſſe of good workes, with the poyſon of bitter enuie,and would ouerthrow mankinde vtterly, and woulde trouble with wickedneſſe the band of louely vnitie, & ſingular frendſhip, which hitherto haue had a happie encreaſe betwixt the Romiſh Church and our Lorde the King, and his predeceſſours, and the realme:to the praiſe of the higheſt God, the encreaſe of Chriſtian faith,and the ſetting foorth the honour of the Church,of the king and the realme.But nowe (alas) a dore was open to the lamentable breaking and pitifull ſeparating of great offences to riſe on euery ſide, dangers are attempted againſt Churches and Churchmen,to ſpoyle their goods and richeſſe,with ieoperdie of life,ſeeing that the laitie nowe doe abhorre and vtterly flee the obedience of clearkes, vtterly baniſhing them from their counſails and doings, and haue taken courage to condemne the Eccleſiaſticall cenſure and proceſſe.All which ieoperdies with other ſundry and diuers daungers (which neither toung is able to tell,nor wryting can declare) wee ſeeing at hand :: thought good in this poynt of greateſt neceſsity to run with weping voyce,& lamentable ſighes to the circumſpect wiſdome of your holineſſe. Beſeeching your fatherly mildenes,and humbly praying you:that ſome wholeſome remedy may be prouided in the premiſſes. By which, the ſounde profitable agreement and mutuall loue, which hath continued ſo long time betwixt the church,the king, and the realme, myght be maintained in that olde ſweete concord : the ſtate of the Frenche church might continue in godly and quiet peace: that ye woulde vouchſafe to foreſee how to withſtand the daungers and offences aforeſaid:that we and our ſtates may be prouided for,by the foreſaid commaundement of your calling,by the ſtudie of your Apoſtolicall wiſdome,and fatherly loue. The almighty preſerue your holineſſe to his holy church a long time.

Anno. 1304.
Pope Boniface beſieged.

These things thus diſcourſed and done,then followed the yeare of our Lord 1304. In the which yeare about the natiuity of our lady, came a gariſon of harneſſed ſoldioures wel appointed,ſent partly by ỷ French king,partly by the Cardinals of Columpna, whom the Pope before had depoſed, vnto the gates of Anragũ, where the Pope did hide himſelf,becauſe he was borne in the towne. The captains of which armie was one Shaira, brother to the foreſayde Cardinalles : And an other William de Longareto, high ſteward to ỷ French king. who inuading the popes towne, and finding the gates open,gaue aſſault to the popes frontire : where the Pope with his nephew a Marques,and 3. other Cardinals were immured. The townes men ſeeing all their intent & ſtrength to be bent againſt the Pope:cauſed the common bel to be rong,& ſo aſſembling themſelues in a cõmon counſaile, ordeined Adulphus one of the chiefeſt rulers of the towne for their captaine, who (vnknowing to them) was a great aduerſary to the Pope. This Adulphus bringing wᵗ him Reginaldus de Supine a great lord in Campania, & the 2.ſonnes of John Chitan a noble mã, whoſe father the pope had then in priſon: at length ioyned him wᵗ the French company againſt the Pope, and ſo beſet his palace on euery ſide. And firſt,ſetting vpõ the palacies of the 3. Cardinals which were then chiefe about the pope, rifled & ſpoiled all their goods. The Cardinals by a backedore hardly auoided their handes : but the Popes palace, through munition & ſtrength of the Marques was ſomething better defended. At length,the Pope perceiuing himſelfe not able to make his partie good , deſired truce wyth Schaira & his company, which was to him graũted,from one til nine. During which time of truce,the Pope priuily ſendeth to the townesmen of Arnagium , deſiring them to ſaue his life: which if they would doe,he promiſed ſo to enrich them,that they ſhould all haue cauſe neuer to forget or repent their benefite beſtowed. To this they made anſwer againe,excuſing themſelues,ỷ it lay not in their hability to do him any good,for that ỷ whole power of the towne was with the captaine. Then the Pope all deſtitute & deſolate, ſendeth vnto Schaira,beſeeching him to draw out in articles,wherin he had wronged him,and he wold make hym amends to the vttermoſt. Shaira to this maketh a playne anſwer,ſignifying to him againe:that he ſhould in no wiſe eſcape wᵗ his life,except vppon theſe 3.conditions. Firſt to reſtore againe the 2.Cardinals of Columpna his brethren whom he had before depriued, with al other of their ſtocke and kinred: ſecondly,that after their reſtitution,he ſhould renounce his papacie, thirdly, his body to remaine in hys power & cuſtody. Theſe articles ſeemed to ỷ pope ſo hard, that in no caſe he woulde agree vnto them : wherefore the time of truce expired,the captaines & ſoldiors in all forceable meanes bending themſelues againſt the biſhop,firſt fired the gates of the pallace,wherby the army hauing a full entrance,fel to rifle & ſpoile the houſe. The Marques vpon hope to haue his life,& the life of his children,yealdeth him to the hands of Schaira & the other captaine: which when the Pope heard,he wept and made great lamentation. After this through windowes and dores, at length wᵗ much a doe they braſt into the pope, whome they intreated wyth words & threats accordingly. Vpõ this he was put to his choiſe,whether hee woulde preſently leaue his life,or geue ouer his Papacie. But that he denied ſtifly to doe,to die for it : ſaying to them in his vulgar tõgue. Eccle col,eccle cape. That is,lo here my necke,lo here my head:proteſting,that he would neuer while he liued renounce hys Popedome. Then Schaira went about,and was redy to ſlay him, but by certaine that were about him he was ſtaide: whereby it hapned that the pope receiued no harme, although diuers of his miniſters and ſeruants were ſlaine. The ſouldiors which ranged in the meane time through all the corners of the Popes houſe,did lade themſelues with ſuch treaſure of golde,ſiluer,plate,and ornaments: that the wordes of my autor (whom I follow) do thus expreſſe it. Quòd omnes reges mundi non poſſent tantum de theſauro reddere infra vnum annum, quantum fuit de papali palatio aſportatum, & de palatijs trium Cardinalium,& Marchionis. That is,that all the kings of the earth together were not able to diſburſe ſo much out of their treaſury in a whole yeare:as then was taken & caried out of the popes pallace, and of the pallace of the three Cardinals,and the Marques. Thus Boniface bereued of all his goodes,remained in their cuſtodie 3.daies. Duryng the which ſpace, they had ſet him on a wilde and vnbroken colte, his face turned to the horſe taile, cauſing the horſe to runne and courſe, while the Pope was almoſt breathleſſe. Moreouer, they kept him ſo wythout meate, that hee was thereby neare famiſhed to death. After the 3. day:the Arnagians and people of the town muſtering themſelues together (to the number of x. M.) ſecretely braſt into the houſe where the Pope was kept, and ſo ſlaying the kepers,deliuered the Pope by ſtrong hand. who then being brought into the middle of the towne,gaue thankes with weeping teares to the people for his life ſaued:promiſing moreouer, that for ſo much as hee was out of all hys goodes, hauyng neither bread nor drink to put in his mouth,gods bleſſing and his,to al them,that now would relieue him wyth any thing,

Pope Boniface brought to a ſtraight.

Three conditions put to the Pope.

Here may all kinges by the French kyng learne how to handle the pope Boniface chuſeth rather to die then to giue ouer his popedome.

thing, either to eate or drinke. And heere nowe to ſee what pouertie and affliction can worke in a man. The Pope before, in all his pompe & moſt ruffling wealth was neuer ſo proud, but nowe was as humble & lowly: that euery poore ſimple man (as mine author teſtifieth) might haue a bolde and free acceſſe to his perſon. To make the ſtory ſhorte, the Pope in that great diſtreſſe of famine was not ſo greedy of their vitails, as they were gredy of his bleſſing. Wherupon, the women & people of the towne came ſo thicke, ſome wt bread, ſome with wine, ſome with water, ſome wt meat, ſome with one thing, ſome with an other: that the Popes chamber was too litle to receiue the offring, in ſo much that when there lacked cups to receiue the wine, they poured it downe on ye chamber floore, not regarding the loſſe of wine, to win the popes holy bleſſing. Thus Pope Boniface being refreſhed by the towne of Aruagum, tooke his iourney from thence accompanied wt a great multitude of harneſſed ſouldiors to Rome: where he ſhortly vpon the ſame, partly for feare which he was in, partly for famine, partly for ſorrow of ſo ineſtimable treaſure loſt, died. After whom ſucceded Benedictus the 11. of whome theſe verſes are written. A re nomen habe, benedic, benefac, benedicte. Aut rem peruerte maledic, malefac, maledicte. &c. And thus haue yee the whole ſtorie of Pope Boniface the 8. authour of the Decretalles. Which ſtory I thought the more diligently to ſet forth, that all the Latine Church might ſee, what an author he was, whoſe lawes and decretals ſo deuoutly they follow.

Pope Benedictus. 11.

Now after the long debating of this matter betweene the French king and pope Boniface, let vs procede in our Engliſh ſtory. About this time, in the dayes of king Edward, the Church of Rome began daily more and more to riſe vp and ſwell ſo high in pride and worldly dominion: that no king almoſt in hys owne countrey coulde doe any thing, but as pleaſed the Pope: who both had and ruled al, in all countreis, but chiefly here in England: as partly by his intollerable tallage and pillage before ſignified may appeare, partly by hys iniunctions and commandements ſent downe, alſo by his donations and reſeruations of benefices and church liuings: alſo in depoſing and diſpoſing ſuche as him liſted, in place and office to beare rule. In ſo much, that when the king and the church of Cant. in theyr election had choſen one Robert Burnell biſhop of Bathe, to be Archbiſhop of Canterburie: Pope Boniface of hys own ſingular preſumptuous authority, ruling the matter after his pleaſure, fruſtrated their election, and thruſt in an other named Iohn Pecham. For amōg all other, this hath alwayes bene one practiſe of the court of Rome: euer to haue the Archbyſhop of their owne ſetting, or ſuche one as they might be ſure of on their ſide, to weigh againſt the K. and other, whatſoeuer nede ſhould happen. To this Iohn Peckham, Pope Boniface directed downe a ſolemne Bul from Rome, as alſo vnto all other quarters of the vniuerſal church. In the which Bul was conteined & decreed, directly againſt the rule of Scripture and Chriſtian obedience: that no church, nor eccleſiaſtical perſon ſhould henceforth yelde to his king or temporall Magiſtrate, either any geuing or lending, or promiſing of tribute or ſubſidie, or portion whatſoeuer, of the goodes and poſſeſſions to hym belonging: but ſhuld be clearcly exempted and diſcharged from all ſuch ſubiection of tallage or ſubuention to be exacted of them in the behoofe of the Prince and hys affaires. Which decree manifeſtly rebelleth againſt the commanded ordinaunce of God, and the Apoſtolical canon of S. Peter and all other examples of holy Scripture. For as there is no worde in the Scripture that excludeth ſpirituall men more then temporall from obedience and ſubiectiō of princes: ſo if it chaunce the Prince in hys exacting to be too rigorous or cruell in oppreſſion: that is no cauſe for the clergy to be exempted: but to beare the cōmon burden of obedience, and to pray to God to turne and moue the Princes minde, and ſo (with prayer & patience, not with pride and diſobedience) to helpe & amend that which is amiſſe. Concerning the Bull of Boniface, if any there be that either do not credite the ſame, ſo to containe, or would for his minde ſee and read the ſame, the wordes therof here folow.

The kinges election in his owne realme fruſtrated.

Ware the bulles horne

This Bull being directed (as is ſayde) from Rome to the Archbiſhop of Canterbury, and likewiſe thorough the whole vniuerſall Church, vnder the Popes authority: It chaunced not long after, the king helde hys Parliament at S. Edmunds burie, where was graunted to him of all cities and boroughs an eight, and of the commons a twelf of their goodes. Only the Clergie by vertue of this Bull, ſtoode ſtoute: denying to pay any thing to the king. Thys anſwer not wel pleaſing the king, he willeth them to deliberate better with themſelues vppon the matter: and after long aduiſement ſo to geue him anſwer therof againſt the next Parliament, which ſhould be holden the next Hillary terme at London.

The Clergy denyeth to geue tribute to the king.

In concluſion, the Parliament came: the Clergy perſiſteth ſtill in deniall of their ſubſidie, alleging the popes bul for their warrant and diſcharge. Wherupon the king likewiſe ſecludeth them from vnder hys protection & ſafegard of his lawes. And as cōcerning the Archb. of Cant. aboue mentioned, becauſe he was found more ſtubburne then the reſt, and was the inciter to the other: hee ſeaſed vppon all his goodes, & cauſed an inuentorie of the ſame to be enrolled in the exchequer. Notwithſtanding, diuers of the other biſhops relented ſoone after to the king, and cōtributed the fift of their goodes vnto him, and were receiued agayne to fauour.

The Clergy ſecluded frō the kinges protection.

The Archb. of Cant. for his ſtubbernes had his goods confiſcate to the kyng.

In the life of this kings father, it was declared before how the ſayd king Henry the third, father to this king, after diuers warres and commotions had with his barons, had graūted certaine liberties and freedomes written and conteined in Magna charta, and in Charta de foreſta. Concerning which matter, much buſines happened in this kings daies alſo in the realme, betweene the king & his Barons and commons. The occaſion was thys. A packe of wooll which before paide but a marke to the king, was nowe by thys king raiſed vp to xl. s. After this the King hauing a iourney to make vnto Flanders, ſent to hys Barons and diuers other, to geue their attendaunce and ſeruice in the ſame, which they refuſed and denyed to doe. Notwithſtanding (the king perſiſting in his purpoſe) with ſuch a power as he had, prepareth toward his iourny. To whom being in his way at Winchelſey, the foreſaide Erles and Barons and commōs ſent certen petitions conteined in wryting vnder the name of the Archbiſhops, Biſhops, abbots and Priors, Erles and Barons, wyth the commonaltie of ye realme. In which wryting firſt lamenting and complaining of their afflicted ſtate and miſery, after humble maner they deſired their Lord the king to redreſſe and amend certain greuances amōg them. And firſt declared in the name of the whole commons, that the premonition or writs directed to them for their attendaunce vpon his grace into Flaunders, was not ſufficient: for that there was no certaine place in the ſayd writs ſpecified vnto them whether to come for making their prouiſion, and preparing mony & other things according to the ſame. And if the place had bene to thē ſignified, yet becauſe none of their aūceſters euer ſerued the king ouer into Flaūders before, the cōmōs therfore thought themſelues not bound to any ſeruice in ẏ country. And albeit they had bene ſo bound therunto, yet they were not able to doe it, being ſo heauyly oppreſſed wͭ ſo many tallages, taxes, tolles, cuſtomes, & prices of corne Otes, Tinne, wood, Lether, Oxen, Kyne, Fleſh Fiſh. &c. And beſides all this, hauing no peny of wages geuē them to relieue their charges: Ouer and beſides the lacke of the kinges wages not payd them, their owne pouerty like an heauy burden did ſo miſerably lie vpon them, that ſome of them had no ſuſtentatiō, ſome of them were not able to till their owne groūd. The alledged moreouer, that they were not now handled after the olde lawes and cuſtomes of the land, as their aunceſtors were wont. Many alſo foūd thēſelues grieued in that they were not vſed according to the Articles conteined in Charta magna, nor agayne that the Charta de foreſta, was not obſerued nor kept as was wont to be. Wherfore, moſt humbly they beſeeched the king both for his owne honor and for the wealth of his people, that of theſe thinges they might finde redreſſe. For the cuſtome moreouer of woll, the whole commons bewayled to the king their griefe: in that for euery pack of woll was fined to the king xl. s. and for euery ſack of toſed wool, 7. marks. The which wooll of England, as it doth riſe vp to the value of halfe the realme: ſo the tollage of the ſame ſurmounteth to the fift part of the valuatiō of the whole land. And becauſe therfore the commons wiſhed the honor & preſeruatiō of their king (as they were boūd to do) they thought it not good for his grace to ſayle ouer to Flaūders, vnleſſe he had better aſſuraunce of their fidelity, eſpecially at thys time the Scots being ſo buſy: who if they began to rebell he being at home in his land, much more were they like to ſtirre, he being abroad out of the land. And that not onely for the Scottes: but alſo for that the like perill was to be doubted of other forraine nations and kingdomes, which as yet were in no firme peace with England. &c.

The variance betweene K. Edward and his Barons & commons.

Petitions of the Barons and commōs to the king.

Magna Charta. Charta de foreſta.

Cuſtome for Wolle.

To theſe petitions, the king ſayd that he could as yet make no reſolute anſwere, for that his counſell, ſome was gone ouer alredy to Flaunders, ſome were yet at Londō. Notwithſtanding, at his returne againe from Flaunders (which he truſted ſhould be ſpedely) they ſhould thē heare his anſwere and know more of his minde concerning the ſame. In the meane time this he required of them, to keep good rule at home while he was forth. What aunſwere the king had minded to make them at his returne, it is vncertayne, which peraduenture had turned to a bloudye aunſwere: but occaſion ſerued otherwiſe, and turned all to agreement. For the Scottes with theyr captayne William Waleys aboue ſpecified, in the time the king being abſent, inuaded the Realme with ſuch violence: that Prince Edward the kings ſonne, who was left to rule in his fathers ſtead, was forced to aſſemble a Parliament, and to call for the Earle of Hereford, the Earle of Northfolke, high Marſhall of England, Earle of Eſſex high Conſtable, with other Earles, Barons, Knightes, and Eſquirs, to entreat peace and concord betweene his father and them. Who cōming vp to London with 1500. well armed ſouldiers, and obteining the gates of the City with their own men, fell at length to agreement with the Prince, vpon compoſition to haue the Articles of magna Charta and of Charta de foreſta, confirmed, and that by his meanes & mediation they might be aſſured of the kinges diſpleaſure to be remoued from thē. The which forſayd articles of Magna Charta with ẏ other articles adioyned withall, here follow vnder written.

The kynges anſwere to the petitiōs of the Barōs & the commons.

Humfrey Bonne. Roger Bigot.

First, no tollage or ſubſidy by the king or his heires to be impoſed or leuied hereafter within the realme of England, without the common aſſent of the Archbiſhops, Byſhops, Abbots & other prelats, Earles, Barōs, Knights, Burgeſes, and Commons of the realme.

The articles conteined in Magna Charta.

Item, no taker or ſeruiture of the king or of his heirs henceforth within this realme, to take grain, wooll, lether or any goods of any man, without the will and conſent of him which is the owner.

No taking to be hereafter, in name of tribute, for any packe of wooll.

Item, to be graunted by the king and his heires after him, both to the clergy and laity of this foreſayd Realme: to haue and to enioy their lawes, liberties & cuſtomes, in as ample maner as they were wōt at any time heretofore.

Item, if any decrees or ſtatutes ſhal hereafter be made and ſet forth contrary to theſe foreſaid articles: the ſame to ſtand voyd and of no effect for euer.

Beſides theſe articles alſo in the ſame compoſitiō was conteined: that all grudge and diſpleaſure betwene ẏ king and the Barons for not going to Flaunders ceaſing: the Earles and Barōs might be aſſured to be receiued againe into the kings fauor.

A greement concluded and ſealed betwene the K.and his Barons.

These things thus agreed vpon, and by mediation of the Prince alſo confirmed and ſealed with the kings ſeale his father: ſo was all the variance pacified, to the great comfort of the people, and no leſſe ſtrength of the Realme agaynſt theyr enemies: And moſt chiefly to the cōmendation of the gentle and wiſe nature of the king: who as he was gentle in promiſing his reconcilement with his ſubiectes, ſo no leſſe conſtant was he in keeping that which he had promiſed.

The moderate and good nature of K.Edward noted.

After the death of Iohn Peckham Archb. of Canterbury aboue mentioned, who in the Parliament had reſiſted the king in the right of certayne liberties perteing to the crowne, touching patronages and ſuch Church matters: ſucceded Robert Winchelſei, wͭ whom alſo the king had like variance: and accuſed him to the Pope for breaking the peace, and tooke part with them that rebelled agaynſt the king about vſages and liberties of the Realme. Wherefore, the king being cited vp to the court of Rome, was there ſuſpended, by ẏ meanes of the ſaid Archb. directed his letters agayne to the Pope taken out of ẏ parliament rolles where I finde diuers letters of the king to P. Clement agaynſt the ſayde Robert Archbiſhop of Canterbury the contentes wherof here followeth videlicet qualiter idem. And as this king was troubled in his time with both the Archbiſhoppes, Iohn Peckham, and alſo Rober Winchelſey, ſo it happened to all other kinges for the moſt part, from the time of Lancfrancus (that is from Pope Hildebrand) that euery king in his time had ſome buſines or other with that ſee. As William Rufus, and Henry the firſt were troubled with Anſelmus: Hēry the ſecond with Thomas Becket: King Richard and all England wyth William Biſhop of Elye the Popes Legate: King Iohn with Stephē Langthon: King Henry the third with Edmund Archbiſhop, called S. Edmūd. Polic. lib. 7. Likewiſe this king Edward the firſt, with Iohn Peckham & Robert Winchelſey aforeſayd. And ſo other kinges after him, with ſome Prelate or other: whereby ye haue to vnderſtand, how & about what time the church of Rome, which before time was ſubiect to kings and Princes, began firſt to take head aboue, and agaynſt kings and rulers, and ſo haue kept it euer ſince.

Rob. Winchelſey Archb. of Cant.

K.Edward was troubled with two Archb. of Cant.

The church of Rome, and Romiſh prelates ſet againſt kings and rulers.

Kings of England commonly troubled with Archb. of Cant.

By this Iohn Peckam afore mentioned, was ordayned: that no ſpiritual miniſter ſhould haue any mo benefices then one, which alſo was decreed by the conſtitutions of Octo and Octobonus, the popes Legats the ſame time in England.

Prieſtes to haue but one benefice

About the beginning of this kinges reigne, after the deceaſe of of Walter Archbiſhop of Yorke: William Wicewanger ſucceeding in that ſea, minding to go on viſitatiō: came to Dureſme to viſit the Church and Chapter there. But the clergy and the people of the City, ſhutte the gates agaynſt him, and kept him out, wherupon roſe no ſmal diſturbance. The Archb. let flie his curſe of excommunicatiō and interdiction agaynſt them. The Biſhop of Dureſme agayne with his clergy, deſpiſed all his curſinges, grounding themſelues vpon the conſtitution of Innocentius ẏ fourth, De cenſibus & exactionibus. And ſo they appealed to Rome, ſaying: that he ought not to be receiued there, before he had firſt begon to viſit his owne Chapter & dioces, which he had not done. For to ſay the wordes of the conſtitutions: We ordayne and decree that euery Archbiſhop, that will viſite his prouince, firſt muſt procure to viſit hys owne Church, City, and Dioces. &c.

Variaunce betweene the Archb. of Yorke and the clergie of Dureſme.

Among other thinges in this king to be noted, that is not to be paſſed ouer: that where complaynt was made to him of his officers, as Iuſtices, Maiors, Shiriffes, Bailiffes, Eſcheters, and ſuch other: who in their offices abuſing themſelues, extortioned and oppreſſed the kinges liege people, otherwiſe then was according to the right & conſcience: the ſayd king not ſuffering ſuch miſorder to be vnpuniſhed, did appoint certain officers or inquiſitors to the number of 12. which inquiſitiō was called Traibaſtō, or Trailbaſtoun: by meane of which inquiſition, diuers falſe officers were accuſed, & ſuch as were offenders were either remoued from their place, or forced to buye agayne their office at the kinges hand: to their no ſmall loſſe, and great gayne to the king, and much profite to the common wealth.

Inquiſitiō made againſt yl rulers and falſe officers Traibaſtoun.

In the Chronicle of Robert Ameſbury it is recorded

Ex Chron. Tho. Walſinghami.

A falſe miracle well ſpied out of the kyng.

of the ſayd king, that he being at Ameſbury to ſee his mother (who was then in that monaſtery profeſſed) there was a certayn man that fained himſelfe blind a long time, brought to the preſence of the ſayd Alinore the kinges mother: ſaying, how that he had his ſight agayne reſtored at yͤ tombe of king Henry her late huſband, in ſo much that ſhe was eaſely perſwaded in the miracle to be very true, But king Edward her ſonne, knowing the man a lõg time to be a vile diſſembler, and a wicked perſõ, vſed to lying and crafty deceiuing: diſſwaded his mother not to geue credite to the vile vagabon, declaring that he knew ſo well of the iuſtice of his father; that if he were aliue, he would twiſe rather pluck out both his eies: then once reſtore him one, Notwithſtanding, the Queene the mother remayning ſtil in the former fond perſwaſion, would heare or beleue nothing to the contrary; but was ſo in anger with her ſonne, that ſhe bid him depart his chamber, and ſo he did. By the example whereof may eaſely be conceiued, how and after what ſort theſe blinde myracles in thoſe dayes and ſince haue come vp amõg the blinde & ſuperſtitious people. For had not the king here bene wiſer thã the mother, no doubt but this would haue bene rong a miracle, & percaſe king Henry bene made a Saint.

Ex eodem Chrõ.

A true miracle.

But as this was fayned a miracle and falſe no doubt ſo in the ſame author we read of an other maner of miracle, ſounding more neare the trueth, and ſo much the more likely, for that it ſerued to the conuerſion vnto Chriſtian fayth: to which vſe properly, all true myracles do appertayne. The myracle was this. In the raigne of this king, and the latter yere of his raigne, Caſſanus king of yͤ Tartarians (of whome commeth theſe whome now we call Turkes) which fighting agaynſt the Souldan king of the Saracens, in the plain of Damaſcus, ſlew of them 100000. of Saracens: and agayne at Babilon fighting with the ſayd Souldain: ſlew him in the field, & 200000. of his Saracens, calling vpon the helpe of Chriſt, and therupon became Chriſtiã. This Caſſanus I ſay, had a brother a Pagane, who being in loue with the daughter of the king of Armenia a Chriſtian woman, deſired of her father to marry with her. whereunto the king her father would not agree, vnles he promiſed to be a Chriſtian. Notwithſtanding, the other being ſtrõger in power and threatning to get her by warre: the king at length was forced to agree. In concluſion, it happened that the childe being borne betwixt them was ouergrowen & all rough with hayre, like the ſkin of a Beare. which childe being brought to the father, he commaunded it to be throwen in the fire & burned. But the mother deſiring firſt to haue the childe baptiſed, cauſed all things therunto to be prepared. The infant being 3. times in water plunged, after the Sacrament of holy baptiſme receiued: incontinent was altered and turned from all his hairy roughnes, and ſene as fayre and ſmooth ſkinned, as any other. The which thing after the Father ſaw and beheld, was Chriſtened himſelfe and all hys houſe. &c.

And Scotus called Duns. who in his 4. booke of Sent Diſt. 18. complayneth of the abuſe of excommunication & of the Popes keies. where as before, excommunication was not vſed, but vpon great and iuſt cauſes, & therefore was feared: now ſayth he, it is brought forth for euery trifling matter, as for not paying yͤ Prieſtes wages. &c. & therefore ſayth he, it groweth in contẽpt. Vnder the ſame king about the beginning of hys raygn, was the yeare ſo hoat and ſo drye: that from the month of May vntill the month nere of Septẽber fell no rayn, in ſo much that many dyed for heat, & the vulgar people in their reckning of yeares, did count the time from the ſayd dry yeare long after.

After P. Benedictus aboue mentioned, ſucceded Pope Clement the 5. who tranſlated the Popes court to Auinion in Fraunce, where it remayned the terme of 74. yeares after. At the coronation of this Clemẽt, was preſent Philip king of Fraunce, Charles his ſonne and Duke Iohn Duke of Britany, with a great number of other men of ſtate and Nobility. At which coronation they being in the middle of the pompe or proceſſiõ, a great wall brake down and fell vpon thẽ: by the fall wherof, Duke Iohn with 12. other were ſlayne, king Philip hurt & wounded, the Pope ſtroken from his horſe, & loſt out from his mitre vpon his head a Carbuncle, eſteemed to the value of 6000. florence Plat. de vit. Pont. By this Clemẽt was ordeined, that yͤ Emperor, though he might be called king of the Romains before, yet he might not enioy the title & right of the Emperor, before he was by him confirmed. And that the Emperors ſeat being vacant, the Pope ſhould raigne as Emperor, till a new Emperor was choſẽ. By him the orders of the Tẽplaries (who at that time were too abhominable) was put downe at the Counſell of Vienne, as hereafter (Chriſt willing) ſhalbe declared. He alſo ordeined and cõfirmed the feaſt of Corpus Chriſti, aſſigning indulgences to ſuch as heard the ſeruice therof. And as pope Bonifacius afore heaped vp the book of Decretals, called Sextus Decretalium, ſo this Clement compiled the 7. booke of the decretals, called of the ſame Clement the Clementines. In yͤ time of this Pope Hẽricus the 6. of that name Emperor, was poyſoned in receiuing the Sacrament by a falſe diſſembling Monke called Bernard, that feined himſelfe to be his familiar frend, which was thought to be done not without the conſent of the Popes legate. The Emperour perceiuing himſelfe poyſoned, warned him to flee & eſcape away, for els the Germaines would ſure haue ſlaine him, who although he eſcaped himſelfe, yet diuers of his order after that with fire and ſword were ſlayne.

Paleologus Emp. of Cõſtantinople excommunicated with all his adherents by pope Clemẽt, for not ſuffering the Grecians to appeale to Rome.

Anno. 1327.

Note the practiſe of the Romiſh prelates.

As this Pope Clement the 5. had well prouided now (as he haue heard) agaynſt the Empire of Rome to bring it vnder his girdle: in ſomuch that without the Popes benediction, no Emperor might take the ſtate vpon him. &c. Now he proceedeth farther to intermeddle with yͤ Empire of Conſtantinople. where he firſt exerciſeth his tyranny & power of excommunicatiõ, agaynſt Andronicus Paleologus Emperor of Conſtantinople, an. 1327. declaring him as a ſchiſmaticke, and hereticke, becauſe he neither would nor durſt ſuffer the Greciãs to make their appeale from yͤ Greeke Church to the Pope, neither would acknowledge him for his ſuperior. &c. whereby it may appeare that the Greek Church did not admitte the Popes ſuperiority, as yet nor at any time before. Saue onely about the tyme of Pope Innocent the 3. an. 1202. at what time the Frenchemen with their Captain Baldwinus Earle of Flaũders, ioyned together with the Venecians: were ſet againſt the Grecians, to place Alexius to the right of the Empire of Conſtantinople, vpõ conditiõ (as writeth Platina) to ſubdue the Greeke church, vnder the church of Rome. which Alexius being reſtored, and ſhortly after ſlayne: the empire came to the Frenchmẽ, with whom it remained the ſpace of 58. yeares, till the comming of Michael Paleologus in the dayes of Pope Gregory the 9. who reſtored the Empire frõ the Frenchmen, vnto his priſtine ſtate again. During all which time of the French Emperors, the Greeke church was ſubiect to Rome, as by the decretals of Pope Gregory the 9. may appere. Then folowed after this, that the foreſayd Michael Emperor of Conſtantinople beyng called vp to a councell at Lions by Pope Gregory the 10. about the controuerſy of proceeding of the holy Ghoſt (as is aboue ſpecified) and obedience to the Church of Rome: there, becauſe the ſayd Michael the Emperor did ſubmitte himſelfe & the Grecians, to the ſubiection of Rome (as teſtifieth Baptiſt Egnat.) He thereby procured to himſelfe ſuch grudge and hatred among the Greeke Monkes and Prieſtes: that after his death they denyed him the due honor & place of buriall. The ſonne of this Andronicus was Michael Paleologus aboue mentioned: who, as ye haue heard before, becauſe he was conſtrayned by the Grecians not to admit any apellation to the Biſhop of Rome: was accurſed by the popes cẽſures for an heretick. wherby appereth, that the Grecians recouering their ſtate agayn, refuſed all ſubiection at this time vnto the church of Rome, which was the yeare of our Lord. 1327. &c. After this Clemẽt the 5. folowed Pope Iohn the 22. with whom Ludouike the Emperour had much trouble. After whom next in courſe ſucceded Pope Benedict the 12. which Benedict vpõ a time being deſired to make certayn new Cardinals to this anſwereth agayne: that he would gladly ſo do, if he alſo could make a new world. For this world (ſayd he) is for theſe Cardinals that be made already. Ex ſcripto Engethuſenſis. And thus much of the Popes, now to returne a litle backe to the kinges ſtory agayne.

The popes exactiõs cõplained of in the parliament.

Ex hiſt. quæ incipit ab Henrico tertio.

In the yeare of our Lord 1307. which was 34. of the reigne of this king, in the beginning of Hillary terme: the king kept a Parliament at Carliel, where great cõplaints were brought in by the nobles and auncientes of the Realme, concerning the manifolde and intollerable oppreſſions of churches and Monaſteries, and exactions of mony by the Popes Legate william Teſta (otherwiſe termed Mala Teſta) lately brought into the realme of England. The comming of which william Teſta was vpõ this occaſion, as followeth. Pope Clement, who as ye heard before, had tranſlated his Court from Rome into Fraunce, where he had bene Archbiſhop before, becauſe hee cõtẽned to come & remaine at his owne ſea: the Princes of Rome thought him therfore vnworthy to enioy Peters patrimonye.

ny. And ſo by that meanes falling in barenes & pouertye, liued onely of ſuch mony of Biſhops, as came to him to be confirmed, and with ſuch other ſhiftes and gifts. So that by this meanes, partly of Biſhops & other religious men & perſons, partly vnder the name of curteſy and beneuolence, partly vnder ỹ pretence of borowing: he had within the firſt yeare 9500. markes of ſiluer, all his other charges and expenſes, which he largely that yere beſtowed, clearely borne. Beſides this, he ſent moreouer the foreſayd Legate William Teſta into England with his Bulles: in the which he reſerued the firſt fruites of the firſt yeare of all Churches being vacant, at any time, or by any man within the realme of England, Scotland, Wales, and Ireland, and alſo the fruites of Abbayes and Priories within the ſayd Realmes. &c. Whereupon, the king with his nobles ſeing the inconuenience and harme thereof enſuing to the whole realme: In the foreſayd Parliamēt holden at Carlicll withſtood the ſayd Legate, charging and commaunding him by the aſſent of the Earles & Barōs, that henceforth he ſhould abſteine from al ſuch exactions. And as cōcerning his Lord the Pope, he would direct certayne hys meſſegers vnto him, purpoſely for ỹ ſame matter appointed: by the which Ambaſſadours, the king wrote vnto the foreſayd Pope declaring, & moniſhing the Pope, as right and reaſon was: that he ſhould not exact the firſt fruits of Churches and Abbayes, by his predeceſſors & noble men of the land founded, for the honor & maintenance of Gods ſeruice, for almes & hoſpitalitye: which otherwiſe in ſo doing, ſhould all be ouerthrowen. And ſo by this meanes the Pope at that time changed his purpoſe as concerning Abbayes. But after that, the fruit of Engliſh churches was graunted to the king for 2. yeares: In which ſpace he obteined the fruits of the foreſayd Churches. &c.

During the which Parliament afore ſpecified, as men were talking many things of the popes oppreſſiōs, which he began in the Engliſh Church, in the full of the Parliament: ſodenly fell downe, as ſent from heauen, among thē a certaine paper, with this ſuperſcription.

☙ An Epiſtle of Coſsiodorus to the Church of England, concerning the abuſes of the Romiſh Church.

Ex Vetuſto Chronico Albanenſi.

TO the noble church of England ſeruing in clay and bricke as the Iewes did in times paſt vnder the tyrannye of the Egiptians: Peter the ſonne of Caſſadore a Catholicke ſouldiour and deuout champion of Chriſt, ſendeth greeting and wiſhing to caſt of the yoke of bondage, and to receiue the reward of libertie.

To whom ſhall I compare thee, or to whom ſhall I liken thee O daughter Ieruſalem: to whome ſhall I match thee, O daughter of Syon? Great is thy perturbation, like vnto the ſea. Thou ſitteſt alone without comfort all the day long, thou art confounded & conſumed with heauineſſe. Thou art geuen vp into the handes of him from whence thou canſt not riſe without helpe of one to lift thee vp: for the Scribes and Phariſies ſitting vpon the chayre of Moyſes, the enemies of the Romaines are as thy heades and rulers: enlarging their garded philecteries, and ſeeking to be enriched with the marow of thy bones, laying heauye burdens, and not able to be borne, vpon thy ſhoulders and of thy miniſters, and they ſet thee vnder tribute (which of old time haſt bene free) beyond all honeſty or meaſure. But maruell not thereat, for thy mother, which is the Lady of people, like a widow hauing maried and coupled her ſelfe to her ſubiect, hath appoynted him to be thy father, that is to ſay, the Byſhoppe of Rome, who ſheweth no poynt of any fatherly loue towardes thee. He magnifieth and extendeth to the vttermoſt his authority ouer thee: And by experience he declareth himſelfe to be the huſband of thy mother. He remembreth oft with himſelfe the Propheticall ſaying of the Prophet, and well digeſted the ſame in the inwarde part of his breſt. Take to thee a great booke, and write therein quickely with the penne of a man, take the ſpoyle, robbe quickely: But is this it, which the Apoſtle ſayth, that he was appoynted for, where he writeth thus? Euery Byſhop taken from among men, is appointed for men in thoſe thinges that belong to the Lord: not to ſpoyle, not to lay on them yearely taxes, not to kill men, but to offer gifts and ſacrifices for ſinnes: and to ſorrow with them, that be ignoraunt and doe erre. And ſo we read of Peter the Fiſher (whoſe ſucceſſour he boaſteth himſelfe to be) that after the reſurrection of Chriſt he returned with other Apoſtles, to the office of fiſhing: who when he could take nothing of the left ſide of the ſhippe, at the bidding of Chriſt, turned to the right ſide, and drew to the land a nette full of fiſhes. Wherefore the profitable miniſterye of the Church is to be exerciſed on the right ſide, by the which the Deuill is ouercome, and plenty of ſoules be lucrified and wonne to Chriſt. But certaynely, the Labourer on the left ſide of the ſhippe, is farre otherwiſe: for in it the fayth ſtumbleth, heauineſſe beareth rule, when that thing that is deſired by ſeeking, is not found. For who is ſo fooliſh to thinkee that he canne both at one tyme ſerue God and man, and to ſatiſfy his owne will, or to ſtick to the reuelations of fleſh and bloud, and to offer worthy giftes to Chriſt? And doubtles, that ſhepheard that watcheth not for the edifying of the flocke, prepareth an other way to the roaring Lyon, and ſeeking whom he may deuour. And now beholde, I ſay, O daughter, the deedes of him that is called thy father, ſuch as haue not bene heard of before: he driueth away the good ſhepheardes from the ſheepefolde, and placeth in theyr ſtead Byſhoppes, to rule, but not to profite (his Nephewes, Coſins, and Parentes) ſome that know no letters, and other ſome dumme and deafe, which vnderſtand not the playne voyce of the ſheepe, nor curing their woundes that be hurt of the Wolues: but lyke hirelinges plucking of the flieſes a paſe, and reaping that which other men haue ſowen, whoſe handes moreouer be alwaies ready in their baſkets and powches, but their backes are turned from their burdens. By which things it is manifeſt, that the Prieſthood is cleane chaunged at theſe dayes, the ſeruice of God decayd, almes diminiſhed and brought to nought, the whole deuotion of kinges, princes, & chriſtians is baniſhed. May not this be thought wonderfull in the eyes of all men, that where as Chriſt commaunded tribute to bee payde to kinges for him and for Peter, he now goeth about dominiō of his ſtile, to ſubdue to him, both Realmes and princes of realmes (againſt his will, whoſe Vicar he ſayth he is, and who refuſed the Realmes and iudgementes of the world) which this Biſhop contrarywiſe chalengeth, clayming all that which he in his ſtile writeth to be his. Alacke, O daughter, what doth he yet more agaynſt thee: marke, he draweth from thee what ſoeuer pleaſeth him, and yet he thinketh not himſelf cōtent, to haue the tenth part onely of thy goodes from thee: except he haue alſo the firſt fruites of the benefices of the Miniſters, wherby he may get a new patrimony aſwell for himſelfe as for his kinred, contrary to the godly willes of the firſt founders. Ouer & beſide all this, he inferreth other execrable taxes and ſtipendes for his Legates and meſſengers, whom he ſendeth into England, whiche not onely take away the feeding and clothing of thee and thine, but alſo teare in pieces like dogges your fleſh and ſkinnes. May not this prince be cōpared to king Nabuchodonoſer, which deſtroyed the temple of the Lord, and robbed away the ſiluer and golden veſſelles thereof? The very ſame doth this man alſo he robbed the miniſters of God his houſe, and left deſtitute of due helpe. In like maner doth he: Truely they be better that are killed with the ſword, thē they which be pined with hunger: for they are dead ſtraight, but theſe are waſted with the bareneſſe of the earth. O daughter, al they that paſſe by the way, let thē haue pity & cōcōpaſsiō on thee, for there is no ſorrow like thy ſorrow. For now thy face is blacker then coales through much ſorrow and weeping, and thou art no more knowne in the ſtreetes: thy foreſayd ruler hath placed thee in darckeneſſe, and hath geuen the wormwood and gall to drinke. O Lord heare the ſorrow and ſighinges of thy people beholde Lord, and deſcend, for the hart of this foreſayd man is more indurate then the hart of Pharao. For he wyll not ſuffer the people to depart, except in the fortitude onelye of thy hand. For he ſcourgeth them not onely miſerably vpon the earth, but alſo after their death he intēdeth to incroch the goods of all Chriſtians vnder the name and title to dye inteſtate or making no will. Therefore let the chiualry of England well remember, how the Frenchmen in times paſt, directing their greedy eyes on the Realme of England, laboured with all theyr power how to bring the ſame vnder their ſubiectiō But it is to be feared leaſt the new deuiſes and practiſe of this new enemy, ſupply that which hetherto hath bene lacking in them. For in diminiſhing of the treaſure of the Realme, and ſpoyling of the Churches goods: the Realme ſhall be brought into ſuch inhability, that it ſhall not be able to helpe it ſelfe agaynſt the enemy. Therefore O daughter and you the miniſters thereof, ſuffer not your ſelues to be lead any more into ſuch miſerable bondage. Better it is for the wealth of thee and thine, that the Chriſtian king aud the powers of the Realme which haue indued thee with great benefites, and you alſo which are indued with their benefites, doe labour with all your power how to reſiſt the deuiſes, conſpiracies, arrogancy, preſumption, and pride of the foreſayd perſon: who not for any zeale of God, but for the enriching of hys Parentes and for hys owne kinred (exalting himſelfe like an Eagle) by theſe and ſuche other exactions goeth about after a newe kinde of extortion to ſcrape vppe and deuoure all the money and treaſure of England. Now leaſt the diſſembled ſimplicity of the Realme in this behalfe doe bring vtter ſubuerſion, and afterwarde be compelled to ſeeke remedy when it is to late: I beſeech the Lord God of hoaſtes to turne away the vale from the hart of that man, and to geue him a contrite and an humble minde, in ſuch ſort as he may acknowledge the wayes of the true God, whereby he may bee brought out of darckeneſſe, and bee enforced to relinquiſhe his olde ſiniſter attemptes: and that the vineyard which the Lordes hand hath plāted, may be repleniſhed continually with the preachers of the word. Let the wordes of the Lord propheſied by the mouth of Ieremy, ſtirre vp your mindes to withſtand & reſiſt the ſubtle practiſes of this man, by the which wordes the Lord ſpeaketh: O thou Paſtor which haſt ſcattered my people, and haſt caſt them out of their habitations, behold I will come and viſite vpon thee, and vpon the malice of thy ſtudies: neither ſhall there be any of thy ſeed which ſhall ſit vpon the ſeat of Dauid, neither whiche ſhall haue power any more in Iuda. So that thy neaſt ſhall become barren, and vtterly ſubuerted like Sodome and Gomer.

And if he being terrified by theſe wordes do not leaue off frō this which he beginneth, and doth not make reſtitution of thoſe thinges which he hath receiued, then let all and ſingular perſons ſing for him being indurat, to him that ſeeth all things, the Pſalme 108. Deus laudem. &c. For truely as fauour, grace and beneuolence, remitteth and neglecteth many thinges: ſo agayne the gentle benignitie of man being too much oppreſſed and grieued, ſeeking to be deliuered and freed from the ſame, ſtriueth and ſearcheth to haue the trueth knowne, and caſteth off that yoake by all meanes poſſible that geueth him. &c. Hæc Caſſiodorus.

A parliament in Fraunce aſſembled, wherein is diſcuſſed, the iuriſdiction eccleſiaſtical, how farre it extendeth.

What effect this letter wrought in them, to whom it was directed, is not in ſtory expreſſed. This by the ſequell may be coniectured, that no reaſon or perſwaſion coulde preuayle, but that the Pope retained here ſtill his exactions, whatſoeuer was ſayd or written to the contrary notwithſtanding.

Anno. 1329.

And thus much being written hetherto of theſe actes and doings here in England, now to ſlipp a little into the matters happening the ſame time in Fraunce, vnder the raign of the foreſayd king Philip aboue mentioned: forſomuch as about this time, an. 1329. was commenſed a parliament, by the ſayd king of Fraunce, agaynſt the Pope, touching the iuriſdiction both tēporall pertaining to princes, and eccleſiaſticall belonging to the church: I thought it not vnprofitable for the reader, to heare & learne the full diſcourſe and tractation hereof, according as we haue cauſed it to be excerpt faythfully out of the true copye and recordes of Peter Bertrand Biſhop of Eduenen, and chiefe doer & prolocutor in the ſayd parliament vpon the Popes ſide, agaynſt the king and ſtate temporall.

For ſo much as the high Prelate of Rome, otherwiſe called Antichriſt, being thē in his chief ruffe, extolling him ſelfe aboue all princes and poteſtates of the world, as in other countryes, ſo alſo in Fraūce extended his vſurped iuriſdictiō aboue the princely authority of the king, claiming to himſelfe full gouernement of both the ſtates, as well ſecular as alſo eccleſiaſticall. The king therfore not ſuffering the exceſſiue proceedinges of Pope Clement the 5. aboue ſpecified, directeth his letters mandatory to the Prelates and Barons of the realme of Fraūce, to conuēt & aſſemble themſelues together at Paris, about the beginning of December, the yeare aboue prefixed. The tenor of which letters of the king directed to the Prelates, followeth in this forme and maner.

The letter of Philip king of Fraunce, to the byſhops & prelates.

PHilip by the grace of God king of Fraunce, to our welbeloued Biſhop of Eduens, greeting and ſalutation. Reuerend Father in God, right truſty and welbeloued, we greete you well. The more ſight and knowledge you haue in diuinitye and the holye Scriptures of God, with the practiſe and experience of other good qualityes and vertues: you know the better a great deale, how that the Clergy and layty of this our Realme (as members of one body) ought to cleaue and ſticke together: and how by theyr helping hand, vnity and peace ſhould bee maynetayned of all, and the contrary eſchued and auoyded, euery ſtate contēting it ſelfe, & not incroching one vpon another. And becauſe we are aduertiſed, how that our Barons and officers (as well in time paſt as of late) haue diuerſly in diuers poyntes iniuried you, as ſemblably you and yours in many cauſes haue wrongfullye damaged them: by occaſion wherof, the knot of vnitie and concord which ought to haue floriſhed among you, is quite looſed and vndone. To the end therefore by Gods grace ſome good reformation and redreſſe may be had herein: We moſt ſtudious of vnity and concord requere you, and by theſe our letters commaūd you, to appeare perſonally before vs at Paris the 15. day of Decēber next enſuing the date hereof: and there before vs to make relation of ſuch wrong as ye haue receiued at the laities hāds. And wee likewiſe ſtraightly charge and commaund you our Barons, Bailiffes and officers not to fayle, but to make your perſonall appearaunces before vs, the day and place aboue written, & there to exhibite before vs a bill, of ſuch complayntes wherewith you burden our Prelats and Clergy with their officials: that we with our counſell conſulting thereupon, with due regard may ſee redreſſe therin: wherby perpetuall loue and charity may euer hereafter raigne and remayne among them for euer. Geuen at Paris the firſt day of September. an. 1329.

The Parliament conuented.

At the day in the letters aboue ſpecified, the Prelates and Clergy aſſembled themſelues before the King at hys palace in Paris, that is to witte, The L. Bituricen, the L. of Auxitan, the L. Turonen, the L. Rothom, and the L. Senon, all Archbiſhops: The L. Beluacen, the L. Cathalan, the L. Laudun, the L. of Paris, the L. Nouionon, the L. Carnoten, the L. Conſtan, the L. Andegauen, the L. Pictauen, the L. Melden, the L. of Cameracen, the L. of S. Feri, the L. Brioce, the L. of Cabilion, & the L. of Eduen, all Byſhops. where after due reuerence done vnto the Kinges grace, there ſitting in his owne perſon, wyth his Barons and counſell about him: a certayne noble and wiſe perſon Lord Peter de Cugnerijs, (being one of the kinges counſell) roſe vp and openly in the Parliament houſe ſpake in the kinges behalfe on this wiſe, taking for hys Theame. Reddite quæ ſunt Cæſaris, Cæſari, & quæ ſunt Dei, Deo: which is to ſay: geue and render vnto Ceſar, which is his, and vnto God which is Gods: which he very artificially proſecuted and applyed, deuiding it into 2. partes. Firſt that obedience and reuerence is due vnto the king, Secondly that there ought to be a difference betweene the iuriſdiction of the clergy and laity, ſo that ſpirituall matters ſhould be defined and ordered by the Prelats and ſpirituall men: and temporall cauſes ruled and determined by the king, his Barons, and temporall men. which all he proued by many reaſōs both of fact and law, as more fully appeareth beneath in the anſwere of the Byſhop of Eduen: finally he concluded, that the Clergy ought onely to deale and haue to doe with ſpirituall matters: in defence whereof, the kings highnes would ſtand their good Lord and maintayner. His Oration being ended, he repeated certayn wordes in the French toung which imported that the kinges will and pleaſure was in ſome poyntes to renew the temporall ſtate and iuriſdiction: & therewith exhibited a certaine bill in French, whereof alſo he gaue a copy to the Prelates, contayning certaine pointes and articles vnder writtē, the contentes wherof he affirmed not to appertaine to the order & iuriſdiction of the ſpiritualty, but onely to the temporalty: complayning that the Clergy had wrōgfully proceeded in ẏ ſame. But notwithſtanding the premiſſes, & for all this his complaint, he ſayd that ẏ Prelates ſhould haue time to conſult and deliberate thereupō with the king. The copy of which articles, with anſwers enſuing vpon the ſame, and the grieuaunces of the kingdome of Fraunce, wrought by the clergy, and exhibited to the king, hereafter foloweth.

Lord Peter ſpeakes in the Parliament.

The theame of his oration.

The oration deuided in two partes. Obedience to the kyng.

Difference betweene the iuriſdiction of the ſtate temporall and eccleſiaſticall.

Articles in the Parliament propounded, contaynyng the iuſt complaints of the laitie againſt the clergie. Cauſes real.

1. Firſt the cognition of cauſes reall, whether they touch poſſeſſion or their propriety or not, by commō law apperteineth to ẏ iuriſdicion temporall. But the Prelates wyth their officials to ẏ end to infringe the tēporall iuriſdiction, take vpon them the determination of ſuch cauſes reall, eſpecially concerning poſſeſſion and all other interdictes.

2. Item, when a temporall man is ſued by any Clerke or ſpirituall man, for the poſſeſſion of his land, obtayning an adiornament of the ſecular power, in the cauſe of nouite or otherwiſe: The prelates officials ſtopping hereby the tēporall iuriſdiction, at the inſtaunce of the Clerke calleth by proces before them, both the ſecular iudge and the party: inhibiting them to proceed any farther in the cauſe, vnder payne of excommunication and forfeiture of a certayne ſumme.

Prelates intermedle in temporall mens matters.

3. Item, although the ſecular iudge haue the cognition of all lay mens matters (except in ſpirituall cauſes) yet wil ẏ Biſhops Officials at the inſtaunce of any partye, call ſuch before them. And if the tēporall mē do except againſt their iuriſdiction, alleadging the incompitency of the iudge, or els if they require the cauſe to be remitted to them (vnder whom they are) as the right iudges, yet doth the Officials refuſe this to do, yea and by excommunication compell the parties to proceed before them.

4. Item, the Byſhoppes Officials at the inſtaunce of the clerks, alledging that they are iniuried in matters of inheritance by a lay man, call by proces the laity. And if it be alledged that thoſe cauſes ſtand vpō reality, being ſo indeed, & for that conſideration the cauſe to be remitted to the tēporall law: This notwithſtanding the Officials prohibit them vnder payne of excommunication or ſome great forfeit, not to proceed but before them.

5. Item, the Biſhops Officials take vpon them to heare the plea of ſuch contractes as either be conceiued in writings or made by word of mouth in the temporall law, ſēding out their monition of excommunication againſt thē that ſtand bound concerning the ſame contractes.

6. Item, the Byſhoppes and Prelates decree prouinciall coūcels and Sinodall Statuts, enacting & ordering therin many thinges to the high & great preiudice of the temporall iuriſdiction, wherin they ought to haue no cognitiō at all neither to intermeddle themſelues therwith.

7. Item, the foreſayd Officials take vpon thē, before Notaries to ſweare perſons for performance of contractes & bargaynes (made by them in places vnder the iuriſdiction temporal) concerning the ſale of inheritance or otherwiſe: incroching therby vpon their iuriſdiction, when verelye they haue nothing to do with any contracts and obligations, but with ſuch as are made and agreed vpon within the compaſſe of their owne ſeat and iuriſdiction.

Ex Officio.

8. Item, the ſayd Officials of ther meere office, call before them the laity, to aunſwere to ſuch matters of correctiō as ſhalbe layd to theyr charge; the cognition whereof as they ſay doth appertayn vnto them. And when the ſayd perſōs do appeare before them, & deny the crime obiected againſt them: the Officials deteyne them and put them in priſon, although in ſuch caſes, they are to be releaſed: and that impriſonment appertaineth onely to the temporall power, & not to them.

Impriſonment pertaineth not to the Clergie.

9. Item, in the caſes aforeſayd, although by making of their purgations and other the proces therin, they be foūd cleare of that which is layd to theyr charge and are acquited: theſe yet the ſaid officials will in no wiſe diſcharge and diſmiſſe thē before they haue to the vttermoſt payd for the writings and proces in that behalfe, a good piece of mony: when by law it ought to be done gratis and for nothing.

10. Item, it muſt not be forgotten to talke of the ſentēce of excōmunication, which is decreed by vertue of one only citation, ſo often times as a man fayleth in his appearance.

11. Item, mentiō is to be made of thoſe kinde of obligatiōs De niſi. whereby a man is excommunicated by and by, if he make not payment at the day prefixed, although he be not able ſo to do.

12. Item, whoſoeuer by vertue of excommunicatiō in the Biſhops court is excommunicate, and he [illegible] excōmunicate do not ſatiſfy the ſumme due about the excommunication: by & by the ſumm is doubled: And the ſecular power charged by the biſhops or their officials, that they vnder paine of excōmunication compell the excōmunicate by attaching their goods to pay the ſayd ſumme, and not to miſſe a iote: which monitiō if the layty refuſeth to put in executiō, they themſelues are then excommunicate & in no wiſe to be abſolued before they diſburſe that mony the which the principall excommunicate perſon ſhould haue payd.

13. Item, if the Baliffes, Hedborowes, or other the kings officers and iudges of the temporaltye, receiuing the foreſayd monitions do put the ſame in execution, & finde thoſe that be excōmunicate to be beggerlye and nothing worth: the ſayd officers are bound at their owne proper coſts and charges, to reſort to the Biſhops ſea or conſiſtory, where ſoeuer it is, & there to take a corporall oath, that yͤ partyes excōmunicate are nothing worth. This if they fayle, thoſe officers are ſure to be excommunicate and therby inforced to diſburſe the due of the firſt excommunicate perſons.

Action reall perſonall.

14. Itē, if two lay men be in ſute together before a temporall iudge about an action either reall or perſonall, & one of thē after conteſtation of law and great proces therin, do appeale vnto an eccleſiaſticall iudge: he will preſume then to deteine before him the plea of ſuch caſes & actions, both reall & perſonal, cauſing by vertue of his monitions & authority, the temporall iudge to ceaſe & leaue of from medling therein: which if the ſecular iudge obeyeth not, he is pronounced excommunicate & compelled to make ſatiſfaction: by occaſions wherof, the tēporal iuriſdiction is much annoyed and cleane loſeth the prerogatiue therof: becauſe by law no man may appeale from a ſpirituall iudge to the temporall law.

No mā may appeale frō a ſpirituall iudge to the temporall law by the Popes diuinitie.

15. Item, if a lay man inhabiter of any the kings townes, procureth his debter, being alſo a lay man, to be areſted by vertue of ſecular iuſtice in that place: & he which is ſo arreſted appealeth, & cauſeth alſo his creditor to be arreſted, the officials will take vpō them to heare this matter: And if any thing be attēpted concerning the appeale, they miſſe not to demaūd coſt and ſatiſfaction both of the iuſtice, and alſo of him to whom the arreſt was made. And if any of yͤ Princes retinue compelleth them to reſiſt this iniury, they are ſtraightwayes pronounced excommunicate.

Deanes of the Clergie.

16. Item, if the ſayd Biſhops haue a number of Officials vnder them, whom they terme Deanes of yͤ clergy, which vſually cauſeth all ſorts of people through the kinges dominions onely by word of mouth to come afore thē, & that ſometime without commiſſiō: when that in euery Dioces there ought onely to be but one ſeat or Conſiſtory, wherein matters ſhould be heard and decided. And hereby it happeneth diuers times, that many are wrongfully & without cauſe cited, & to the end: that they may pay mony enough, to rid themſelues thereof: which is to the no ſmall preiudice of the Kinges Maieſtyes ſubiectes and the temporall iuriſdiction.

17. Item, the ſayd rulers of the clerks, ſealeth vp the houſes of their clergy, which are ſituate in the kinges townes and other of his noble mens villagyes, to the preiudice of the kinges maieſtyes iuriſdiction, & other of his nobility: for that in ſuch kinde of places the Biſhops haue no ſuche kinde of iuriſdiction.

Maryed clearks.

18. Item, the ſayd Prelates or their officials, doe preſume to ſeale vp the moueable goods of maryed Clerkes, and of marchaunts, where in ſuch caſes, the order thereof appertaineth to the temporall law.

19. Item, they compel the laity to put in ſurety to anſwere clerkes before them in the ſpirituall court, yea and chiefly the kinges owne ſeruitures.

20. Item, they preſume to heare and haue the cognition of actions: which are reall or at leaſtwiſe mixt, that is both reall and perſonall.

21. Item, the ſayd prelates go about to haue cognition of ſuch temporall mens matters as dwel in hoſpitals, almes houſes, & the kings peculiars, and in villagies of his ſubiectes, although the plea thereof apperteineth to the King himſelfe, and his ſubiects: forbidding vnder payne of excōmunication & great forfeits, no man ſo hardy to commēce any ſute agaynſt any of them, but before thēſelues in pain of a great ſumme of mony.

22. Item, to the end the Clergye and Eccleſiaſticall rule ſhould be multiplied, they conferre a number of Tonſures to children vnder age, ſome of them being ſonnes of bondmen, other ſome baſtardes borne, yea and to many more maried folkes inſufficient, vnable and vnlearned.

23. Item, they do cauſe by the gouernors of their clerkes, widow women to be inforced & defiled, and will haue the diſcuſſing therof: as in like maner, they will determine the matters of Pupilles, applying their goods whē they died, as they do the goodes of them which dye inteſtate to theyr owne vſe, the cognition wherof belongeth to the king himſelfe: becauſe thoſe kinde of perſons with their goods are ward to the kind and vnder his tuition.

Gynnes to get money.

24. Item, they procure through the ſayd Deanes of the clergy of malice, temporall men of the kings dominiōs or other where (without all order of law) to be apprehended: obiecting agaynſt them that they haue ſtrayed from ſome article of chriſtian fayth, & therewith ſhut them vp: when that theyr impriſonment appertaineth to the king, while they be conuicted therof.

25. Item, they exerciſe their iuriſdiction in all places, hauing no regard, neither to the kings peculiar townes nor yet to his ſubiects: but runneth in euery hole, whē by law they ought to haue no iuriſdiction, without their owne limits and precinct.

26. Item, when theſe Prelates or their officials by vertue of their monitions do charge the kinges officers & his iuſtices to execute any thing: if they doe not performe that, which is preſcribed vnto them, the forfet (which the monition conteyneth) is taken: yea and excommunication denounced. And this is a new inuention ſprong vp of late amongſt them, much to the preiudice of the King and his ſubiectes.

27. Item, when the Biſhops or their offials do proſecute a matter of office before themſelues againſt any temporall man, and haue no proofe therof: They compell many of the laity to be depoſed therin what they know, hauing no reſpect whether they be the kinges burgeſſes, or no, or what they be, and yet will they not allow any charges & expēſes for their paynes taken in that behalfe. But if they appeare not at theyr day, they are ſure to be excommunicate.

28. Item, if malefactours be apprehended by any of the kinges iuſtices, and indicted of theft, and he (whoſe goods they were which were ſtollen) commeth before the kyngs Sheriffes and proueth thē to be his, and therfore the matter to be ordered by thē: if afterward the Biſhops or theyr officiall affirme the ſayd felon or malefactor to be a Clerke, they will by vertue of their decrees or monitions compell the Kinges Sheriffes to reſtore and bring in thē ſtollen goodes: and if they doe it not, they are pronounced excommunicated.

29. Item, if it happē the kings Shiriffe or Baylife to take an offender for his defence, and he affirmeth himſelfe to be a clerke: although he neuer tooke any kinde of tonſures or orders, wearing no habite apertaining thereunto. Yet the Biſhops or their Officials will cauſe the detaynērs of thē by their cenſures to deliuer vnto them the ſayd malefactor as their clerke.

30. Item, if it happen the kinges Shiriffe or other his iu-ſtices to take a theefe or murderer which beareth a clerkes mark and tonſure, and therfore deliuereth him to the clergy to be ordered: It ſhall not be long before he be acquited by them, although he afterward recogniſe his fact: yea & notwithſtanding his felowes and parteners of that offẽce being mere temporall, receiued iuſtice for the ſame, and appeacheth him therof. And ſo the like malefactors to be incouraged therby to commit after the like.

31. Item, if any complayneth and ſayth that he is ſpoyled, by and by the Officials will decree a monitiõ agaynſt the ſpoyler: by vertue whereof, ſome one of the Deanes of the clergy ſhall moniſh him, to reſtore the thinges compriſed in the monition & alſo miniſter to him an oath whether he hath not ſpoyled the plaintife of ſuch thinges, as he ſayth he was ſpoyled of. But if he refuſe to take an oath before him, then the Deane will ſtraightwayes ſeale vp yͤ monition, & excommunicate him: and by no meanes ſhalbe abſolued before he reſtore and ſatiſfy the contents in the monition, wherof the playntif ſayd firſt he was ſpoyled of.

32. Item, if any for his offence be caſt into priſon by the ſecular power, although at the time of his taking he were tẽporall habite, and was in no orders, but all the dayes of his life liued like a temporall man: yet if he ſhall auouch & vow himſelfe to be a clerke, to the intent to haue more expedition at the clergyes hands, and to eſcape vnpuniſhed: The clergy wil incontinent, geue to the laity in commaũdement to reſtore vnto them the malefactor, or els ſuſpẽſion to be denoũced throughout the whole townſhip where the ſaid malefactor ſhalbe ſo impriſoned. And for auoiding the ieopardy which might ariſe of the ſayd ſeaſement: the ſecular iudge of neceſſity is compelled to deliuer them the offẽder, to the great preiudice of the kings temporall iuriſdiction, to whom the cognition thereof might appertaine, in caſe of reſort and prerogatiue.

33. Item, when any offender is deliuered by the temporal Magiſtrates to the clergy, as their clerke: his frendes wil make ſute to the Biſhops Officials for him, and compoũd with them: by reaſon wherof, they demiſſe them vnpuniſhed and ſo doe worſe and worſe, although theyr fact was neuer ſo notorious.

Reſortum.

34. Itẽ, ſo ſoone as any maryed clerke being a marchant, or of whatſoeuer other ſcience he be of, for any his offence by him committed, is called before he ſecular iudge: The ſayd clerk obtayneth of the Officials a monition, bringing with them ſome prieſt, who doth inhibit the ſecular iudge vnder payne of 100. or 200. Markes, yea and of excommunication to, not to proceede farther, nor to meddle in ſuch cauſes, and not to moleſt ſuch parties neither in body, nor in goods. But if the iudges obey not, they ſhall be ſuſpended frõ hearing of Maſſe in that place, although the matter concerneth the fact of marchaundiſe.

35. Item, the ſayd Officials graunt citations without nũber agaynſt the laity in caſes of warranties perſonally to aſcite before thẽ perſons vnknowen. But if they be knowen it is contained in the citation that in no wiſe, and that vnder a great payn, he cauſe his aduerſary to be called before a ſecular iudge, during the returne of the citation.

36. Item, when one is excommunicated in any place: the Officials graunt out perſonall citations agaynſt them, which do perticipate and are conuerſant with the excommunicate: cauſing a whole country by the ſpace of 8. miles about to be cited together. And further the frendes and acquaintaunce of the party ſo excommunicate (ſometime by 40. ſomtime 60. yea and ſometime by 100. at once) are compelled to make theyr purgation before them: that they doe not participate nor keepe company with their frendes the excommunicates. Wherby enſueth that many honeſt olde and auncient men for auoyding of troubles and expenſes do pay ſome 12.d. ſome 2.s. By occaſion wherof many vines are vnlooked to, much ground vntilled: yea and many good men conſtrayned to lay the key vnder the doore, and runne away.

37. Item, the ſayd Officials doe burden many perſons of good name and fame, to be vſurers: whereby they are conſtrained to agree with them, for auoiding the infamy, that thereby might enſue.

38. Item, the foreſayd Officials call by Citation afore thẽ, the honeſt wedded (aſwell man as woman) charging thẽ, that they haue committed adultery to the perpetuall infamy of theyr husbands and wiues. And for nothing els but by extortion to wring mony from them.

39. Item, mention muſt be made of the multitude & number of Proctors, which eate and deuoure vp all the world with their citations: catching vp clientes, and keeping abroad in the countryes, courts and Aſſiſes, who for mony returne not the citations, which by extortion they receiue of them which are cited.

40. Item, there be many other griefes and enormityes, which the Chapiters, Abbotes, Priors, Prouoſtes and other eccleſiaſticall perſons in the Realme of Fraunce, practiſe agaynſt the people. As whẽ they cauſe to be cited before them, many of the kinges burgeſſes, & other in diuers places being priuiledged: that is to ſay, Baiocẽſes, Manmectans in Britaine, Lugdons, Maſticons, with other more. But ſpecially the Prouoſt of hoſpitals, vſe more cõmonly this trick, then any other do: wherby the people is much endamaged, and wilbe euery day more and more, if remedy be not had therein.

41. Item, eccleſiaſticall magiſtrates labor to haue cognition of cauſes of iniury, in whatſoeuer cauſe it be: whether the iniury be committed by word or fact. Likewiſe, they take vpon them to heare the cauſes of maried clerkes, and of their wiues although they both vſe marchaundiſe. And if at any time ſuch couples be taken by the ſecular Magiſtrates, the Officiall cauſeth a ſuſpenſion to be denounced in that Pariſh, by force of the councell Siluanecten.

42. Item, they chalenge to haue cognition concerning widowes goods, both moueable and vnmoueable. And if it happeneth at any time that a Marchaunt widow, in any the kings peculiars by way of reſt, procureth any temporall man to be conuented before the ſecular iudge: and the matter ſo farre trauiſed, that he ſhould haue bene condemned by the ſentence of the ſecular iudge, & then come to the eare of the eccleſiaſticall magiſtrates, how & before whom the widow did conuẽt him: The ſayd temporal iudge ſhal be conſtrayned, to withdraw the ſame. And by their monitions and cenſures to correct the ſame and this oftẽ times happeneth.

43. Item, many of the tenaunts & inhabitours of the Biſhops landes, calleth one an other to the court of yͤ Officials by a kinde of appellation: By vertue whereof, the Officials take vpon them, to proceede in the ſame and to haue cognition thereof: to the preiudice of the temporall iuriſdiction of our Soueraigne Lord the king.

44. Item. if any man be apprehended by ſecular iuſtice in ſhedding of bloud: by thẽ if he be Lay, he is to be ordered: If he be a Clerke he is to be reſtored to the Eccleſiaſticall iudge. But whether he be a temporall man or clerke that is ſo takẽ, and appealeth to the Officials court: They will be ſo bold to haue cognition therof, requiring herewith amends of the ſecular court, which enterpriſed the foreſayd apprehenſion. If this be ſuffered, the malefactor ſhal neuer be puniſhed: For by and by they will appeale, and immediatly after the appellation flye and auoyde away.

The clergie preiudiciall to common iuſtice.

45. Item, when they cauſe many of Office, to be cited before them, they will admit them to haue no Proctors: To whom when they come at the day of appearance, they obiect the crime of vſury. And except they anſwer as the promotors wil thẽſelues, they are trodẽ vnder feet (although they be mere lay) and ſhall not be diſmiſſed, before they fine euen as the Officials liſt themſelues although they be no vſurers. But if any be vſurers, they take of them ſatiſfaction and bribes: and ſo be permitted to vſe their vſury, no leſſe then before. So that, they may haue their olde fees and bribes.

Ex Officio.

Vſury craftely obiected by the clergie againſt laye men.

46. Item, they procure theyr officers to apprehend clerks in whatſoeuer ſoile they be foũd: albeit by iuſtice, they may appeal therefro. But if by any they be let of their will, herein they do forthwith by ſentence of excommunicatiõ, cauſe them to deſiſt therfore.

47. Item, as often times as any temporall Magiſtrate, doth apprehẽd any perſon, which afterward being required of the clergy, is quietly deliuered vnto them: yet for all that, the Officials cauſeth thoſe Magiſtrats to be denoũced excommunicate by law.

The prelates make the church a denne of theeues.

48. Item, the Prelates geue order of Tonſures aſwell to men of 30. yeares as vpward, as alſo to maried men, whẽ they come vnto them: for feare of impriſonment & puniſhment due vnto them for their criminal offences, before cõmitted. And this is often times put in practiſe.

49. Item, if it happen any of the kings ſeruants or any other to be excommunicate, & would fayne be abſolued, being glad to pay reaſonably for the ſame: The Clergy will not receiue but ſuch ſatiſfaction, as ſhall pleaſe thẽ wherby many of them remayne ſtill excommunicate.

50. Item, when two perſons haue bene at ſtrife and law together for the poſſeſſiõ of land, and the matter contentious be put into the handes of the king by ſome ſeruant or officer of the king, for the taking vp of the matter: then do the Prelates admoniſh the one part, not to trouble the other which is in poſſeſſion. Otherwiſe if he do, they do excommunicate him.

51. Item, the foreſayd Prelates, Deanes. Chaplens, and other the rout of the Clergy, putteth the kinges officers to ſo much trauaile and expenſes in trying out the kinges vſurped iuriſdictiō, as they terme it: that often times many of them ſpend and conſume in the trauaell of the right and title thereof, all that they haue and more to.

52. Item, if any ſecular iuſticer in a true and iuſt cauſe, at the requeſt of the party, putteth in his helping hand cōcerning the inheritaunce of Clerkes: the Eccleſiaſticall Iudges and their Miniſters, ſendeth out monitiōs in writing agaynſt the ſayd Iuſticer: yea vnder payne of excōmunication & forfeiture, to take away his hand and leaue of: Enioyning him further to ſuffer the other party quietly to enioy the ſayd things. Otherwiſe they denounce him excommunicate, & ſhall not be abſolued before he haue well paid for it, euen as pleaſeth maiſter Officiall, to the high preiudice of the authority of our ſoueraigne Lord the king.

53. Item, the Eccleſiaſticall magiſtrates, ſo ſoone as they heare any rich or fat Cob to dye, or thinke that he will not liue long: ſend out forthwith letters vnder ſeale to theyr chaplain, commaūding him in any wiſe not to preſume to bury him, although he made his Teſtament, and receiued the rites of the Church. And when afterward, the frendes and kinſfolkes of the dead reſort vnto them to know the cauſe of their inhibition: they declare vnto thē that he was an vſurer, and that he kept not the commaundementes of holy Church: And ſo long keep they the corpes of the dead vnburyed, while the frendes of him buy it out with good ſtore of mony, heaping & hording by theſe meanes aboūdance of riches.

Note the practiſe of officials to get money.

54. Item, if there be any violent ſhedding of bloud in any churchyard, wherby the interdict taketh place: the Clergy cauſeth a certain impoſitiō to be leuied of the pariſhioners there, for the ſalary towards yͤ reſtoring therof. Although ſome of the pariſhioners be of an exempt iuriſdictiō: yea & although he which ſhed the bloud be able to pay the whole taxe which they leuyed and more to.

55. Item, certaine Chaplaines affirme to haue certayn Apoſtolicall priuileges, by vertue wherof they may appoint what Iudges they will (yea and oftentimes of their own houſe) & ſo be iudges in their owne cauſe, which is playne againſt the law: wherby often times it happeneth, that after great proces & expenſes had & made in any great cauſe of inqueſt (more often about reality then otherwiſe) when they haue notice by the Proctors and Aduocates that they ſhall haue the foyle therin: they reuoke forthwith thoſe named Iudges, and ſo the kings ſubiectes are damaged, and can haue no iuſtice nor redreſſe at their handes.

56. Itē, if any temporall man call a Clerke before a ſecular iudge in a caſe of inheritance: the eccleſiaſtical iudge procureth a ſtopp to be made therein, attributing to themſelues the cognitiō therof: and ſo by adiourning & remouing, the lay man is conſtrayned to make ſatiſfaction.

57. Item, the clergy chalengeth the cognition of ſuch cauſes as maried Clerkes being marchauntes and artificers do commence: when by law it doth appertaine to the temporalty, eſpecially about the trade of Marchaundiſe.

58. Item, they oftentimes make interdictions in many of the kings townes and holdes, and cauſe the diuine ſeruice to ceaſe: agaynſt the priuiledges graunted by many of the high Biſhops of Rome to our ſoueraigne Lord and maiſter the King.

59. Item, to and for the maintaynance & keeping of theyr temporalties, they appoynt Baylifs & other officers: who if they do offēd, may not condignly be puniſhed according to law and iuſtice.

60. Item, the Eccleſiaſticall Iudges haue promoters belonging vnto them: who whē any man is excommunicated (be it right, or be it wrong) they cauſe to be made, that no man ſhall work or do any thing for him that is excommunicate: whereby the landes and vines are often times vnlooked to and vntilled, to the no ſmall preiudice of the king and his common people.

61. Item, the foreſayd Promoters cauſe Citation to be made out, by vertue wherof they call in one citatiō, 20. 30. 40. perſons to appeare, for participating with ſuch Interdicted perſons: taking of ſome 10. of other ſome, 20. s. as much as they be able to make: wherby, the commō people are much oppreſſed.

62. Item, the Eccleſiaſticall Iudges cauſe all the Aduocates of their courtes to be ſworne, that none ſhall retayne them of their Counſell agaynſt any of them, without their licence, whereby oftentimes, the poore man quite leeſeth his right, and the Kinges cauſe is delayed: Becauſe, hys Sollicitors cannot freely retayne counſell, without ſpeciall licence.

63. Item, they will make Inuentories of theyr goodes which dye inteſtate, or without making of will: And will haue the poſſeſſion of their goods, as wel moueable as vnmoueable in theyr owne hands to diſtribute to the heires, or to whom they liſt.

64. Item, the execution alſo of Teſtamentes they take to their own hands, taking inuentories of dead mens goods, and keeping and diſpoſing them to the heires after their pleaſure. And haue officials properly deputed for the execution therof.

65. Item, they will not geue credite (ſometimes) to teſtamentes made before witneſſe, vnleſſe they be firſt by theyr owne Officials approued.

After he had thus ſpoken, the prelats required to haue time to anſwere therunto. whereupon was appoynted for the ſame the Friday next enſuing. On the which day, the Biſhop Eduen, & Archbiſhop of Senon elect in the name of the whole clergy anſwered for them all before the king, holding his Parliament as that day at Vicenas, and thus he there propoūded. For ſomuch as the Lord Peter Cugner of late propounding againſt the Church of Fraunce, tooke to his Theame that is written in the 22. of Mathew: Render vnto Ceſar, that which is Ceſars, and vnto God, that which is Gods: by which wordes he ſayd, two points were to be noted: Firſt, the reuerence and ſubiection of the Prelates, that they ought to haue to the king their ſoueraigne: Secondly, the deuiſion of the temporall iuriſdictiō from the ſpirituall. The which firſt part he proued out of the firſt Epiſtle of Peter in the ſecond Chapter, where it is written. Submit your ſelues vnto euery creature, for the Lordes ſake, whether it be vnto the king, as vnto the ſuperior: or vnto gouernours, as vnto them that are ſent of him: for the puniſhment of euill doers, and for the praiſe of them that doe well. The ſecond poynt he proued by the wordes of our Sauiour Chriſt in the 22. Chap. of Luke where the Apoſtle ſayth: Lord behold, here are 2. ſwords: And he ſaid vnto them it is enough, ſignifying by the two ſwordes the two iuriſdictions. And in likewiſe out of the 17. of Math. where Chriſt would pay tribute for him and Peter. Geuing hereby an example, how that Eccleſiaſticall perſons were bound to pay and yeld to the temporall power the tēporalities, which alſo is proued in yͤ 11. queſt. prim. cap Si tributum, & cap magnum.

And further, becauſe this is proued by mans law, where it is ſayd, 2. great gifts are beſtowed, Prieſthood and Empire: The prieſthood to rule ouer matters diuine: the Empire to beare domination ouer humaine matters. wherby he cōcluded, that when theſe iuriſdictions are diſtincted of God: The one being geuen and limited to the church, and the other to the temporalty: That in no wiſe the Church ought to intermeddle, or to haue any thing to do with the temporall iuriſdiction. For it is written in the 22. of the Prouerb. You ought not to paſſe the old limits & bounds, which the forefathers haue ſet. And well by the way he bringeth in this word, olde & auncient: Becauſe cuſtomes brought in to the contrary, be of no force, but rather are coūted abuſes & corruptions. Neither can preſcriptiō take place, for that ius fiſci is impreſcriptible: neither cā the king abrogate frō himſelfe ſuch law, nor renoūce his right: prouing the ſame by many chapters conteined in the 10. Diſt. wherefore ſeeing the king at what time he was crowned, ſware not onely not to alienate or infringe yͤ lawes of his realme, but alſo to call in ſuch lawes as were alienated & vſurped either by the Church or by any other: yͤ king was bound by his oath to reuoke the ſame abuſes.

In eſpeciall he did exhibite many articles in writing wherin (as he ſayd) the Church did vſurpe vpon the iuriſdictiō temporall. To anſwere theſe premiſſes which conciſting of the places (vnder proteſtatiō whatſoeuer I ſay or ſhall ſay) it is not to ground or make any finall iudgemēt or determinatiō herein: but onely to informe yͤ cōſciēce of our ſoueraigne Lord the king and his aſſiſtauntes here aſſembled, alledging the firſt Epiſtle of Peter the 2. chapter, where he ſayth: Feare God & honour the king. By which wordes, the holy Apoſtle S. Peter teacheth vs 2. things. Firſt that loue, feare, & obedience, is due vnto God for the mightineſſe and puiſſaunce of his Maieſty: ſaying, Feare God. Secondly, how ſpeciall honor & reuerence is due to the King, for the excellency of his dignity: ſaying, Honor the King. But note you by the way, how the Apoſtle placeth his woordes: Firſt he ſayth, that feare is due vnto God: becauſe principally and in chiefe we ought to feare GOD: For if the King or any other ſhould commaund things contrary to God, we ought to haue no regard therof: but to contemne the King & feare God For it is written in the 5. of the Actes of the Apoſtles. we ought rather to obey God then men: and alſo in the 7. chap. of Machabees the 2. booke: where it is ſayd: I will not obey the commaundements of the king but the law.

gloſe vpon the Romaines, & alſo in the 11.quæſt.1. He that reſiſteth the ſuperiour power, reſiſteth the will and ordinaunce of God. But put caſe thou art commaunded to do that which thou maiſt not do, or to do not that which thou oughteſt to do. Doubtleſſe, thou muſt neglect the leſſer power, and feare the higher, learning the degrees of worldly thinges.

As for example be it ſo, that a Proctour commaundeth thee any thing, which (if the ſame be agaynſt the Proconſull:) thou oughteſt not to follow it. Yea and further, put caſe the Proconſull commaundeth one thing, the Emperour an other, and God willeth the third: Thou muſt not care for thẽ, but obey God, for God is the greater power: For they may threaten thee with priſon, but G O D may threaten thee with hell fire: they may ſlay and kill thy body, but God may ſend thee body and ſoule to perpetuall hell fire. And therfore worthely it is put firſt, Feare God. And here the place in the laſt of Eccleſiaſticus is to be adioyned: where it is written: Feare God and keep his commaundements.

Feare of God ſtãdeth in three pointes.

And me thinketh that man is boũd to feare God chiefly in three ſorts. That is to ſay: Firſt in the bountifull beſtowing of his giftes and benefites. Secondly, in the euident promoting of his ſeruauntes. And laſtly, in the full rendring and reſtoring vnto man that is his.

Firſt, I ſay in the bountifull. &c. and for this cauſe the Emperour Iuſtinian writeth: although there is nothing to be accompted good which doth exceede and is to great, yet for a prince to beſtow accordingly vpõ the church, it is very good. For why, the king and Emperour is bound to beſtow ſo much the more ſubſtaunce, how much the more God hath geuen to him: & to beſtow the ſame both franckly, and eſpecially to famous Churches, wherein the beſt & greateſt meaſure is of the Lordes giftes, that is a great gift. And to this end Gregory enacteth a law. cap.i.extra.de donationibus, that nobility ought in maner to preſcribe this law to himſelfe: to thinke himſelfe bound to geue, whẽ he geueth freely: & vnleſſe he increaſe in geuing ſtill, to think that he hath geuen nothing.

Wherfore, Abell, as appeareth in the 4. chapter of Geneſis, who offered of the beſt to the Lord, was bleſſed of God. And therefore other Kinges, the more they offred to God, the more they were both ſpiritually and temporally bleſſed of him: As we read of Ioſua, Dauid, Salomon & other in the booke of the Kings: and therefore it is ſo written in the 18. of Numbers. And ye ſhall ſeparate vnto the Lordes treaſury, thinges that be chiefeſt and moſt principall. As likewiſe Dauid ſayth in the firſt of Paralipomenon laſt chapter. I haue geuen all this with a glad hart, euen with a good will, and now haue I had ioy to ſee thy people which here are preſent, offer with a free will vnto thee. And no maruell, for Dauid ſayth in that place: For of thy hand we haue receiued all, and to thee we geue. And therefore it ſeemeth to me, that becauſe the Kynges of Fraunce and Barons of the ſame, more then anye other hath geuen to G O D and his Church: therefore they were happy and bleſſed aboue all other kinges, and the more they did geue to God, the more they receiued at hys handes.

What benefite commeth by geuing to the church.

Examples wherof, we haue of Clodoue, Charles, and S. Lewes: the more one geueth to God, the more he receiueth of him: For he in the 6. of Luke hath promiſed, geue and it ſhal be geuen vnto you. Wherfore, a gift that a Prince beſtoweth vpon the Church is rendered agayne with triple encreaſe, and that no leſſe in time of warr then in time of peace. I ſay in warre time: becauſe victory proceedeth of no other but onely of God, for it is writtẽ in the 1. Machabees the 3. Chapter. The victorye of the battayle ſtandeth not in the multitude of the hoaſt, but the ſtrength commeth from heauen. And likewiſe, in the 17. Chapter of Exodus it is declared, that when Moyſes held vp hys handes Iſraell had the victory: but when he let down his handes Amalec had the victory. To this end alſo ſerueth the laſt chapter Machabes.2. where Iudas being at the poynt to haue the victory, thought he ſaw Amon and Ieremy (which had bene high Prieſtes and very vertuous men) holding vp their handes toward heauẽ, and praying for theyr people and all the whole Citye. &c. Likewiſe in peace time now, the long dayes of the king and of hys ſonnes: their peace, proſperity, & obedience (by the prayer of the Church) is mayntayned & ſupported in the realme. For as long as Salomon was bent and geuẽ in building the houſe of God ſo long he had peace: who thus in the 16. chap. of the Prouerbes teacheth vs. When a mans wayes pleaſeth the Lord, he maketh his very enemies to be hys frendes: And alſo in 1. Eſdras 6. chapter, where it is read, how the Prieſtes were commaunded to offer ſweet ſauors to the God of heauen, and pray for the kinges life and hys children. And well therefore may it be called a gift both fauorable & irreuocable, wherby victory is geuen, life graũted, and peace with ſecurity conſerued. To ſerue therefore God, & liberally to geue toward the worſhipping of him: is the chiefeſt ſigne and token of diuine feare & loue. Eccl. cap.2. O ye that feare the Lord beleue him, & your reward ſhall not be empty.

Hebr.12.

Secondly, cõcerning the feare of God, I do you to vnderſtand, that among the precepts of the Lord, the firſt and chiefeſt commaundement of the ſecond table is, To honor thy father. Which precept is very well expoũded to yͤ Hebrues in the 12. chapter. Where it is not onely ment of the fathers of our bodies, but alſo of the father of ſpirites. For as ſpirituall thinges farre exceedeth temporall matters: ſo much more a great deale yͤ ſpirituall ſonne is bound to reuerence the ſpiritual father, & to be in ſubiection vnto him that he may liue. And that the Prieſtes and Prelates be the ſpirituall fathers, it is proued in the fourth book of the Kinges the 6. chapter. Where the king of Iſraell called Elizeus father, ſaying: my father, ſhall I ſmite them? Unto this effect ſerueth the 10. of Luke, where our ſauiour ſayd to the Apoſtles (whoſe ſucceſſors the Biſhops are) he that heareth you heareth me, & he that deſpiſeth you, deſpiſeth me. Alſo in the firſt to the Theſſaloniãs 4. chapter. He that deſpiſeth you, deſpiſeth not men, but God. Wherfore, Iuſtinian the Emperour in an other place ſayth: we haue great care to the Church of God, that therein may be true doctrine and integrity of Prieſtes life. Which hauing we truſt that for our great giftes we ſhall receiue such rewardes at Gods hands, both as be durable, and ſhall remain: yea and alſo that hetherto hath not happened. Bleſſed S. Hierome in his Regiſter writing to a certayne Emperor, which is alſo to be ſeene in the decrees. decr. 11.q.1. ſayth: Let not the Emperour diſdayne prieſtes, but haue ſpeciall regard on them for his ſake whoſe ſeruauntes they be: and ſo let him rule ouer them, that due and condigne reuerence be geuen vnto them. For they in deuine Scriptures are ſometime termed Gods, ſometimes named Angels, Exodus. 22. Then ſhall both their cauſes come before yͤ Gods. Alſo Malachy the ſecond, the Prieſts lippes ſhould be ſure of knowledge, that men may ſeeke the law at his mouth: For he is a Meſſenger of the Lord of hoſtes And therefore is it no maruell, if we ſhould vouchſafe to honour them, when God himſelfe in his ſpeech attributing to them honour, termeth them Gods and Anngels. And here is to be noted, how Conſtantine the Emperor, when certayne of his ſubiectes preſented vnto him libels accuſatory agaynſt the Biſhoppes, receiued them at theyr handes. But calling before him thoſe Biſhoppes whiche were accuſed therein, caſt in theyr ſight thoſe libelles into the fire, ſaying: depart you hẽce and diſcuſſe theſe matters within your ſelues: For it is not conuenient and meet that we iudge Gods, becauſe it is written: God ſtood in the ſinagoge of Gods, and in the middeſt of them he did iudge Gods: in which chap. it is declared, how that the Pagans who worſhipped goldẽ & wooden Gods, attributed great honor to the Prieſts. What maruell is it then, if the godly & great and chriſtian Emperors do honor & reuerence the prieſts of the true God? And doubtleſſe, it is their duety ſo to doe. And it is reaſon which the Lord Peter the laſt day ſaid, in this point. That there are two powers, prieſthood and dominion, the one ſpirituall, the other tẽporall which no leſſe differeth one from the other, then the ſunne from yͤ moone, the heauẽ from the earth, and gold from lead. And therfore if honor is due to be geuẽ to yͤ leſſer power, by thẽ that be vnderneth him: he yͭ is chiefe of the higher power, of right good duety is to be honored, and reuerenced of all vnder him, as expreſſely is declared Cap. For els if he ſhould ſpeak of yͤ ſubiection which is by duty of neceſſity, thẽ muſt it needs follow, that euery biſhop ought to be ſubiect to euery beggerly raſcall in the city of Paris: For yͤ text is, be ye ſubiect to all humain creatures: but a raſcal is a human creature: ergo, biſhops muſt be ſubiect to a raſcall. The third part of fearing God. Eccle.18. A thing made myne diuers wayes

6. Proofes. 1. Diuine lawe. 2. by the law of nature. 3. by canon lawe. 4. by ciuill lawe. 5. by custom. 6. by priuiledge. Formes being dislike & not contrary, may be compatible in one subiect.

Thirdly I ſay, that a man ought to feare God, in the full reuerencing & reſtoring vnto man that is his: For he that doth not geue to an other ẏ is his, but goeth about to vſurpe, doubtles he feareth not God. Contrary, he that reſtoreth all agayne, he is ſayd to loue & feare God. Eccleſiaſt.18. He that feareth God will doe good thinges. And in the Pſalme, I haue heard of thy iudgementes, and haue done iudgemēt and iuſtice. For as the Lawyers ſay which is true: A thing may be made mine diuers wayes, as by ſucceſſion, commutatiō, preſcriptiō, or any other acquiſition, either by law or cuſtome. And ſo of the reſt. And where as the Lord Peter the laſt day, by diſtinction of iuriſdictiō temporall & ſpirituall, endeuored to proue that he which had ſpirituall iuriſdiction, ought not to haue tēporall: Otherwiſe there were no diſtinctiō thereof, but rather a confuſion of iuriſdictions. I will therefore proue the cōtrary, that theſe iuriſdictiōs are cōpatible both in one perſon, eſpecially in an eccleſiaſticall man. And this I wyll proue by the law of God, by the law of nature, canō law, ciuill law, by cuſtome, and priuiledge. But firſt I aledge, that accidentall formes ſome of them are ſo diſtincted, that they are not clean contrary, but diſalike: as whitenes and ſweetnes. Other formes there be which are ſo diſtincted, ẏ they are cleane contrary one to the other, & are not cōpatible in one ſubiect. For one contrary expels another, and emporteth the negatiue of ẏ other. wherfore thoſe things be contrary, which one from another are moſt of all diſtāt and diſagreing, and in one ſuſceptible may come one after the other, but not together, as the Philoſopher teacheth in the Predicamentes. But thoſe formes which are ſo diſtincted, that they be not contrary but diſalike: are compatible in one ſubiect, as quantity and quality, which being diſtincted in reſpect of their Genus generaliſsimum, yet may be in one perſon. And fortitude and temperance being vnder one kind of moral vertue, are foūd to be in one mā, as Logick and Grammer, which are alſo ſpecies & kinds in one genus, viz. of intellectus. Therefore it is no good argument: Theſe formes be diſtincted, ergo, they be not compatible in one ſubiect. And therfore that the iuriſdictions temporal & ſpiritual are ſo diſtincted, that they are not cōtrary but cōpatible it is euident hereby, becauſe things contrary be ſo that the one cannot be ordeined to concurre with ẏ other, but rather confoundeth & deſtroyeth the other: but in this caſe iuriſdiction temporall is ordeined for the ſpirituall: & contrary, the ſpirituall for the temporall. Or rather, ẏ one ſo depēdeth of the other, as the clearenes of the moon doth of the brightnes of the Sunne: Alſo the one iuriſdiction ſo helpeth & comforteth the other, that there is no contrariety in them. And therfore it is no good cōſequēce, becauſe they are diſtincted. Ergo, they are not compatible in one perſō: This alſo is to be proued de facto. For the earth is ẏ Lordes, and the plenty of the whole vniuerſall world, and all that dwell therin. It is proued in likewiſe by this reaſon. For if the iuriſdictions were not compatible: it ſhould follow, that no eccleſiaſtical perſon ſhould haue any iot of tēporall iuriſdiction, neither land, tower, caſtle, Lordſhip, or any thing els, which is moſt abſurd: & ſo by this meanes it ſhould follow, ẏ no eccleſiaſticall perſō ſhould be in ſubiection vnto the king, which were to ẏ great derogation of the kings maieſties crown and dignity. It muſt needs be therfore that theſe iuriſdictions be cōpatible, notwithſtanding the diſtinction of them one from an other. And thus for anſwere to all theſe reaſons, by the which Lord Peter proued the diſtinction of theſe iuriſdictions.

Ierem.1.

Theſe things premiſed this I proceed further to proue that a perſon Eccleſiaſticall, which hath iuriſdiction ſpirituall, may alſo haue temporall iuriſdictiō: and that the iuriſdiction temporall may be in an Eccleſiaſticall perſon, I will proue it by the Scriptures: and firſt out of the old teſtament, to the euidēt probation wherof, it is to be vnderſtand: That God, after the creation of the world & mā, euē vnto Noes time, would gouerne the world himſelf as K. by the miniſtery of angels. By reaſon wherof, he gaue and pronounced ſentence himſelfe agaynſt Cain. Gen.4. Noe alſo, which offered burnt offeringes vnto the Lord & built an altar, as teacheth the 8. of Gene. (which thing appertayned onely vnto the prieſtes) had the gouernement and rule of all thinges, as well ſpirituall as temporall, which were in the Arke of Noe. Melchiſedech in likewiſe, the which was the prieſt of the moſt high God, and alſo king of Salem, as appeareth in the 14. of Gene. & had both the iuriſdictions in his owne handes. For Magiſter Hiſtoriarū, in the ſayd 14. of Gene. declareth, that all the firſt begot of Noe, euen to Aarons tyme were prieſts: which at meales and offringes bleſſed the people, & which onely had the Ius primogenituræ, wherby the regimēt of others was due vnto them. Moſes in like maner (of whom it is ſayd in the Pſalme, Moſes & Aaron in ſacerdotibus eius) cōſecrated Aaron and his childrē to be prieſts, which Aaron did iudge ẏ whole people in temporal matters, yea & in that cauſes of inheritaunce and mere reall, as appeareth in the 27. chap. of Num. and many other places. To whiche purpoſe ſerueth the 17. chap. of Deut. where it is ſayd, if a matter be to hard for thee in iudgemēt betwixt bloud and bloud, betwixt plea and plea, betwixt plague & plague: then ſhalt thou riſe and goe vp to that place, that the Lord thy God hath choſen. And ſhalt come to the prieſts, the Leuits and to the Iudge thē being, and ſhalt aſke who ſhall ſhew vnto vs the truth of the iudgemēt: and follow their ſentence. And if any mā preſumptuouſly ſhall refuſe to obey ẏ prieſtes commaundementes and decree of the iudge, the ſame ſhal die. Behold how manifeſtly it doth appeare, how not onely ẏ iudgemēt appertayneth to a prieſt, betwene plage and plage, concerning the circumſtances and irregularity of the law: but alſo betwixt bloud and bloud, in matters criminall: yea and betwixt plea and plea in ciuill matters: which thing doth appeare to be in many iudges out of ẏ book of Iudges. For Samuel, which was both a prophet & prieſt, was appoynted iudge of long time ouer ẏ people in matters temporal: And whē ẏ people deſired a king, the Lord was highly offended with them, and ſayd vnto Samuel: they haue not refuſed thee but me, that I ſhould not be king ouer them. Furthermore, as long as kings amōgeſt the people of God, vſed the aduiſe & coūſell of prieſts and biſhops: it was well with them and their kingdome: But when they forſook and left the counſell of Byſhoppes and prieſts, then was their kingdome diuided, and finally they brought into captiuity. In which captiuity, ẏ people were altogether gouerned and ruled by the prieſts & prophets, as by Eſdras and Neemias: And laſt of all by the meanes of the Machabees, the kingdome and gouernmēt was deuoluted and brought into the prieſtes hands, who were the kinges and captaynes ouer the people: & had the gouernement as well of ſpirituall matters as of tēporall, as is read in the firſt booke of Machab. 2. cha. Of Mathatia and his ſonnes videlicet of Iuda, Machaby, Ionatha, Simon, and Iohn the ſonne of Simon: which in al ſpirituall and temporall matters, were gouernors ouer ẏ people of God. Moreouer the 1. chap. of Ier. declareth which was one of the prieſts, after this maner. I haue ſet thee ouer the people and kingdomes, that thou mayſt roote out, break, deſtroy, and make waſte, and that thou mayſt build vp and plant. Iere. capite primo. Beſides this, in time of iudge Eliach: a prieſt in lyke maner had the iudgement of temporal matters. And ſo much concerning the proofe hereof, out of the olde Teſtament.

Psal.8. Hebr.2.

Act.10.

Secondly, I proue my former propoſition by authorities taken out of the new Teſtament. For Chriſt had not onely by diuine nature both ẏ powers, wherby he created all things of nothing, and by conſequence was God of al, but alſo by his humanity had both powers. For he was ẏ prieſt, ſecundum ordinem Melchiſedech (as it is ſayd in the Pſalmes, and alſo is alleged to the Hebr.) which had both in his veſture and thigh written, king of kings, and Lord of Lords. By this veſtiment or thigh was met his humanity, which was ioyned to his diuinity, as the garment is to him that weareth it. He ſayd of himſelfe in ẏ laſt of Mathew: Geuen is vnto me all power both in heauen and earth. As alſo to ẏ Hebrues the firſt chap. whom he made and conſtitute, heyre of al vniuerſall things. And likewiſe in the 2. chap. to the Hebr. He hath made him not much inferior to the Angels: he hath crowned him with glory and honor, and hath ſet him aboue the workes of his handes: Thou haſt put all thinges in ſubiection vnder hys feete, ſheep and oxen, and all the whole cattell of the field. whē therefore it is ſayd, he made all thinges ſubiect to him: He excludeth nothing as the Apoſtle there ſayth. whereby it is apparant, that as concerning his humain nature, in the which he was made leſſe then the Angels, all things were ſubiect to him. Alſo this appereth in the 2. chap. to the Philippians, he humbleth himſelfe, wherefore God exalteth him. &c. And it foloweth, that in the name of Ieſus ſhould euery knee bow, both of thinges in heauen and of things in earth, and of things vnder the earth. Beholde here that by nature by which he did humble himſelfe, he was exalted: becauſe euery knee ſhould bow downe to him. Thys in like maner hath S. Peter in the 10. chapter of the Actes where he ſayth, he was conſtituted of God the iudge ouer the quicke and the dead &c. And he ſpeaketh of that nature which God rayſed vp the third day, as the whole Scripture proueth. And likewiſe S. Peter had this power geuen him whō Chriſt conſtituted and made his Vicar, who alſo condēned by ſentence iudicially Ananias and Saphira for lying and ſtealing. Act. cap. 5. Paule alſo condemned a fornicator conuicted, 1. Cor. 5. And that Chriſt would the correction and iudgement of ſuche matters to appertayne to his Church, a text in the 18. of Mathew expreſſely declareth where it is ſayd. If thy brother treſpaſſe agaynſt thee, goe and tell him his fault betweene him and thee: if he heare thee, thou haſt wonne thy brother. But if he heareth not, thē take with thee one or two, that in the mouth of two or three witneſſes all thinges may be eſtabliſhed: if he heare not them, tell vnto the congregation: if he heare not the cōgregation, take him as an heathen man and a Publican. Verily, I ſay vnto you &c. whatſoeuer you binde on earth, the ſame ſhall be bounde in heauen, and what ſoeuer you loſe on earth, the ſame ſhall be loſed in heauen. Beholde how expreſſely it is commaunded, that when ſoeuer in any matter one offēdeth the other, he being firſt charitably admoniſhed, the matter muſt be publiſhed and referred to the order of the Church and congregation. But if the offender do not obey and heare the admonition, he is to be taken as an heathen & a Publican: which is as much to ſay, like one that is excommunicate by the Church & congregation, ſo that he may haue no communion or participation with it. And that this was the intention of Chriſt, this ſeemeth much to proue it, where in geuing the reaſon hereof he immediately addeth. Verely I ſay vnto you. whatſoeuer. &c. (where note this terme diſtributiue) whatſoeuer ſo as the Apoſtle argueth to the Hebrewes the 2. chapter, that if he ordained al things to be ſubiect vnto him, he excludeth nothinge vnſubiected. wherefore thus I may argue: If all things that the church and congregation doth loſe be loſed and euery thing that the Church bindeth is bound. There is nothing that the church may not loſe & bynd: Or by Logicke thus I may reaſon: There is nothing bounde by the Church, that is not bound in heauen, whiche argument is good by a certayn rule of Logicke which ſayeth: that contraries if the negatiō be put after, are equiualant. For euery thing & nothing, what ſoeuer thing, and no maner of thin be cōtrary one to the other. And ſo nothing not, is as much to ſay, as all thinges. Secondly, I doe proue it out of an other text of S. Luke cap. 22. which place alledged to make for his purpoſe, I will ſtrike him with his owne weapon. For where he ſayd, that by the two ſwordes the two powers tēporall & ſpirituall were to be vnderſtood, it was ſo in deede but to whoſe handes would he (I pray you) haue theſe two ſwords cōmitted? Truely to the handes of Peter & other the Apoſtles. &c. But the holy Father the Pope ſucceeded Peter, and the other Apoſtles, the Biſhops diſciples, curates, perſons as in the gloſe appeareth, Luk 10. wherby thus I argue, that by the 2. ſwords the 2. powers are ment. But Chriſt willed thoſe two ſwordes to be put into the churches handes, ergo he would likewiſe the two powers. But you may reply and ſay, that Chriſt did reprehend Peter becauſe he ſtrake with a temporall ſword and cut of an eare, ſaying vnto him put vp thy ſword. &c. whiche reaſon is of no force. For Chriſt did not will Peter to caſt away quite frō him the ſword, but to put it into ẏ ſkabard & to keepe it, geuing to vnderſtand therby, that ſuch power although it be in the churches hands: yet the execution therof (as much as appertaineth to bloudſhedding in the new law) he would haue to appertayne to the ſecular iudge: notwithſtanding yet perhaps, according to the diſcretion and will of the Clergy.

Thirdly, I proue this by the intent of S. Paule in the 1. Cor. 6. where he ſayth: that they which haue ſecular buſines, and contēd one agaynſt another, ought to be iudged by the ſayntes. And that they ſhould iudge therin, therfore he made this argument: know you not that ẏ ſaynts ſhall iudge the world? and if the world be iudged by you, are ye not good enough to iudge ſmal trifles? As though ye wold ſay, do ye not know how that ye ſhall iudge the Angels? How much more then may you iudge things ſecular. And it followeth: If you haue iudgement of ſecular & worldly matters, take them which are diſpiſed in the Church and congregations, & make them iudges: neither doth it make any thing againſt, becauſe the Apoſtle in the ſame place inferreth. Ad verecundiā veſtram dico. I ſay it to your ſhame. For that is to be referred to thoſe, where he ſaith, appoynt thoſe which are diſpiſed. wherfore the Apoſtle ſpeaketh ironiouſly in this matter as meaning thus: Sooner & the rather you ought to runne to the iudgemēt of the diſpiſed which be in the church, thē to the iudgemēt of thoſe which be out of the Church.

Ergo, the rather to reſort to the iudgement of the wiſe, who remayne in the Church and congregation. wherfore the Apoſtle by and by added whē he ſayd, I ſpeak to your ſhame: what not one wiſe mā amongeſt you that can iudge betweene brother and brother? Meaning thereby that there was ſome. By theſe therfore and many other like reaſons it appereth (which for breuity I omit) that both the powers may be in an eccleſiaſticall mans hand: And that an eccleſiaſticall man is Capax both of the temporall and ſpirituall iuriſdiction. Nor is it any matter if it be obiected, that Peter and other Apoſtles & Chriſt himſelfe, vſed litle this temporall power. For in them was not the like reaſon as now is in vs, as is proued in the 22. q. 1. ca. and in many other places of the law. The Apoſtles at the firſt beginning took no receipt of landes & poſſeſſions, but the price onely therof, which now the church with very good reaſon doth receiue. And that to the great merite both of the geuer and offerer, as it appeareth of Conſtantine and others: In the which foreſayd 1. cap. the reaſon of diuerſity is well proued For that the Apoſtles did foreſee, that the Church ſhould be among Gentiles, and not onely to be in Iuda. &c. And further at the beginning Chriſt and his Apoſtles were wholy bent and geuen, to our health, ſaluation & erudition: litle ſticking or ſtanding vpō the exerciſe of euery churches iuriſdiction, hauing regard to that which is written in the 6. chapter to the Corinthians. All thinges are lawfull vnto men, but all things are not expedient. And likewiſe in the 8. chapter of Eccleſiaſtes it is read, that euerye thing hath his time. But now (through the grace of God) the whole people of the realme of Fraunce haue ſubmitted themſelues to the chriſtian fayth, worthely therefore the Church is occupyed about miniſtring of Iuſtice and puniſhing of vice: For peace ſhalbe the work of Iuſtice, Eſay the 32. chap. And in theſe iudgements this onely is to be conſidered, that the life of man be reformed. &c. Thus you ſee, how this our concluſion ſomewhat is confirmed by ẏ Scriptures. Now will I proue it by naturall law & reaſon, & firſt after this maner. He ſeemeth moſt fitteſt to play a good iudges part, which followeth nereſt God: For properly God is the ruler and directer of al iudgements, who ſayth Prouerb. capite octauo. By me the law maker ſhall decree iuſtice and iuſt thinges: But Eccleſiaſticall perſons, follow next to God, and be neereſt him. For that they be elected of God into a peculiar people: whereof it is ſayd 1. Peter. 2. you are a choſen generation, a royall prieſthood, a holy nation, and a peculiar people, that you ſhould ſhew the vertues of him that called you &c. Ergo it is moſt fitteſt that perſons Eccleſiaſticall, and churchmen, ſhould iudge of ſuch matters. Moreouer none doubteth, but that the correction and puniſhment of ſinne, belongeth to eccleſiaſticall perſons: wherfore, whē ſuch things be not committed without ſinne & offence of the one party, it is euident that the Church may haue cognition thereof. Alſo who ſo hath power to iudge of the end, hath alſo power to iudge of thinges ordeined to the end: for the conſideration of the thinges ordeined to the end riſeth of the end. when therefore the body is ordeined for the life and ſoule, and tēporall thinges for ſpirituall, as to the end: The Church which doth iudge of ſpirituall things, may in like maner lawfully iudge of tēporall things. All which is ſufficiently confirmed. In extra. c. Iudicijs. where it is ſayd that the Acceſſarye followeth the nature of the principall, which appeareth ſufficiently by example. For ſo much therfore as theſe two iuriſdictions be compared to two lightes, that is to ſay, to the Sunne, and to the Moone: and all the whole clearenes and brightneſſe of the Moon both in forme and vertue, dependeth of the Sunne, & in the Sunne. And ẏ the brightnes of the Sunne is not of the Moone or in the Moone, it is playne: that ſpirituall iuriſdiction which is compared to the Sunne, hath it both in forme & vertue, the iuriſdiction temporall: and not contrary. Many other like reaſōs might be brought in. But for that the time waxeth ſhort, I will omit them.

Thirdly, I proue by the ciuill law, Auth. Diffe. Iud. ¶Si tamen ix. col. where it is ſayd: If a ſecular iudge be ſuſpected, let the Biſhop of the Citty be ioyned vnto him. But if he be negligent, then let the whole iudgement be referred to the biſhop. In like ſort Theodoſius the Emperor enacted ſuch a law, that whoſoeuer ſuter being plaintife in any kinde of matter, whether at the beginning thereof, or after conteſtation of law, or when the matter came to confirmatiō, or to ſentēce: If the plaintife had once choſen the court & iuriſdiction the holy ſee: there without all doubt, though the defendant reſiſted and diſſented, the matter before ẏ biſhops & other eccleſiaſtical Iudges ſhould be determined and ended. which law afterward Carolus the great, who was king of Fraūce, confirmed in theſe words: We will &

Which is moſt playne by the notorious cuſtome, time out of mind, in the dayes of the good & chriſtian Princes, where to violate ſuch cuſtome, it is playne ſacriledge. 11.queſt.1.tit.1.&c.2. For by law, cuſtome winneth and gaineth iuriſdiction, eſpecially to him that is Capax thereof: yea and further, cuſtome (time out of mind) is amongſt all perſons in place of written & confirmed law. Now ſeing the church of Fraūce, hath in common vſed to the temporalty to iudge & decree both of actions perſonall and reall touching the Church: it is playne, that ſuch cuſtome winneth iuriſdiction to it. Ergo. &c. But the Lord Peter auouched, that yͤ cuſtome could not preuayle in this caſe, becauſe here lacked true dealing. Beſids, the ſaid law is called impreſcriptible: for that it is Ius fiſci: But this maketh nothing agaynſt vs. For the Church of Fraunce rather chalengeth this law by cuſtome, then by preſcription. Which cuſtom ſemeth rather to be brought in of yͤ free will and election of the people, frequēting more the eccleſiaſticall Conſiſtories, then the ſecular courts. Beſides this, cuſtome in that it hath bene oftentimes decided in iudgemēt contradictory, (many of the Barons diſſenting, & not cōſēting therunto) is much therby confirmed. This cuſtome I ſay of the church, hath bene faſt eſtabliſhed by the cōſent and aſſent of the Prelats, and then confirmed by the kings of Fraūce your predeceſſors, and ſo peaceably obſerued of the Church.

Three things pertayning to preſcription. 1.Titulus. 2.bona fides. 3.Temporis continuatio.

Ius fiſci.

The church not ſubiect to the kyng.

And yet may the church chalenge this by preſcription: For that there are but 3. things which are required in preſcription: that is to ſay, title, true dealing, and continuance of time. And it is without doubt that the Churches both purely hath and in time paſt had a good title, as appereth by thy priuiledge graūted of Theodoſius the Emperor, & confirmed by Charles: who gaue in commaundement, to keepe yͤ ſame inuiolably, which title it hath both by diuine natural, and humaine law, as before is mentioned. Wherfore it muſt needes haue true dealing, when ſo many great and cleare titles are knowne to condeſcend therunto. Alſo concurreth ſuch continuance of time, that euen againſt Ius fiſci, it is preſcriptible. For it hath not onely continued by the ſpace of 100. yeares, but alſo more then 600. yeares laſt paſt. Neither is this alwayes true, that this law is impreſcriptible, eſpecially of the church: the which in as much as it appertayneth to the ſpiritualty, is not ſubiect to yͤ king, but is much more noble, and farre excelleth: Euen no leſſe then the Sunne doth the Moone, golde, lead, and heauen, the earth. And this is certaine, and no leſſe reaſon, that the higher & equall may duely preſcribe law againſt him, that is either equall or lower in degree. As one king may do to another. Wherfore, it appeareth, that the church may preſcribe this, although it were Ius fiſci, as in deed it is not.

Finally, this is proued by priuiledge graūted by Carolus the great king of Fraunce, as before, & by Ludouicke the ſecond, and by Philipp your vncle, and Ludouike and Philip your kinſemē, which priuiledges we haue here redy to ſhew. But perhappes you will ſay, that theſe things cannot agree: that the Church hath this iuriſdiction, both by law, cuſtome, & priuiledge, which all cannot well hang together. For if the church haue it by one of theſe, it ſhould folow that the church lacketh it by another. But this may I anſwere two maner of wayes. Firſt, that the priuiledge may be double, one as a bringer in of a new law, & thus it cannot be reconciled: The other as a confirmatiue and declaratiue of the old law: and this way it may well be agreed, which diſtinctiō may alſo take place in cuſtome. Wherfore it may thus be anſwered: that although this iuriſdiction is due vnto the Church by lawe, it appertaineth alſo vnto yͤ ſame by priuilege and cuſtome: but yet not by ſuche kind of cuſtome and priuiledge, which induceth new law: but which declareth and confirmeth the olde law. And if any will reply, demanding wherfore the church of Fraunce ſhuld more chalēge this, then any other churches in other realmes, which haue no ſuch prerogatiue, I can ſoone anſwer them. If the kings of Fraunce (whome God wyth ſingular grace, honour, and priuilege, farre aboue al other Princes, hath bleſſed and endued them for 3. ſpeciall cauſes, to wit, for their great faith & deuotion vnto God, for their honor & reuerence to the Church, and laſt theyr good iuſtice ſhewed vnto yͤ people) hath graunted to the church ſpecial liberties, or haue permitted thoſe which before wer graunted, peaceably to be kept and obſerued. Why then they ſhould haue them, it is no meruaile. Yea and further, theyr deuotion vnto the Church hath bene ſuche, that the nearer the Churches were vnto them, the more liberties they enioyed: and yet had theſe princes neuertheleſſe therfore, but rather the more: whych is euident and redoundeth to the great honor and nobilitie both of the king, and his realme.

5.thinges doth nobilate the realme of Fraunce.

I haue oftentimes heard of other, howe that 4. or 5. things doth eſpecially habilitate and adorne this realme.

Firſt, their ſincere and inuiolable faith: for it was at no time red, that the kings of Fraunce (ſince the receiuing of the faith) did euer ſwarue from the ſame.

The bloud of Fraunce came out of Priamus king of Troy.

Secondly, the nobility of bloud which deſcended from Priamus the king of the Troianes, and ſucceſſiuely, from Carolus and other royall kings.

Thirdly, the vnitie and peace of concord, which eſpecially aboue all other raigned and floriſhed in the Realme of Fraunce.

Fourthly, the ſolemnity and pompe of the prelates and Clergie.

Fiftly, the good diſpoſed readineſſe of the Barons and ſubiects to obey.

Daniel.5.

If therfore, the prelates of this realme ſhould not haue this law and priuiledge, but ſhuld be depriued therof: then ſhould the king & his realme loſe one of hys noble eſtates, wherby they are highly magnified (I meane the brauerie, ſolemnitie, & royaltie of the prelates) For then, they ſhould not onely be neither pōpeous nor royal, but more beggerly & miſerable then any other, the moſt part of their liuing conſiſting herein. I do cōclude therfore, to be proued both by deuine law, natural law, canon law, ciuil law, cuſtome and priuiledge: that the right of determining ſuch tēporall matters of the Churche, may of right appertaine to the Church of Fraunce, and ſo I returne the Lorde Peters theame againſt himſelfe. Beſides this, will I propounde that which is moſt plaine and manifeſt: that what ſo euer thynges be offered vp to the Church, and are conuerted to the dominion and property of the ſame, be Gods & appertaineth to him: For ſo much as they are ſaide, to be dedicated & ſanctified by hym, as ſufficiently throughout yͤ Leuites may appeare: as is declared in the 21.cap.1.Regum, concerning the bread offered to God, where it is ſayde: I haue no common bread vnder my handes to eate, but holy bread. Wherfore, it was not lawfull for the Laity to eat of the ſame bread, but in time of great neceſſity: which is alſo proued in Daniel 5.chapter, where it is read: Becauſe king Balthazar and his Lordes with his Queene, dronke in the golden and ſiluer veſſels, which his father Nabuchodonoſer had taken out of the temple of Ieruſalem: In yͤ ſame very hour, there appeared fingers as it had bene of a mans hand, writing right ouer the candleſticke vp ō the playne wall in the kinges pallace: And the King ſaw the palme of the hand that wrote, and that which was writtē was Mane, Thetel, Phares. the interpretation wherof is this, as there it appeareth: Mane, God hath numbred thy kingdome and brought it to an end: Thetel, thou art weyed in a ballaunce and art found to light: Phares, thy kingdome is delt in partes, and geuen to the Medes and Perſes. The very ſelfe ſame night was Balthazar the king of the Caldes ſlayne, and Darius ſucceded in the kingdome of the Medes: the Monarchy of the Aſſirians being then tranſlated vnto the Medes. Whereby it appeareth, that thoſe things which are offered vp to the church, belong to God, & ſo dedicated to him, that no lay man may vſe thē: which if they do, they muſt looke to receiue vengeaunce at Gods hand, as Balthazar did. Theſe things now ended, I will argue out the L. Peters theame (which was) Geue vnto the Emperor, that is the Emperors, and vnto God, that is Gods, But this iuriſdiction, which (as I proued before) is diuerſly conuerted to the dominiō and property of the French Church, is now Gods: and therfore, to be reſerued to and by him. wherfore, whenſoeuer any goeth about to take away the ſame: the good & godly ought to anſwere as Ambroſe did to the Gothē ſouldiors ſent to him by the Emperor, which was to this effect. If the Emperor (quoth he) had requeſted that which had bene mine, I woulde not haue denyed him, albeit that whatſoeuer I haue, all is the poores: But becauſe he demaundeth thoſe things which belong to God (wherin he hath no right or intereſt) I had rather he ſhould impriſon me, yea & cut off my head, then to cōdeſcend to his requeſt therin: alluding to the hiſtory of Nabaoth, which is to be ſene in yͤ 21. chap. 3. Reg. How Nabaoth the holy man, poſſeſſor of his vineyard, was requeſted by the king to geue vp his vineyard: who made anſwere, I will not geue vnto thee the inheritance of my fathers: at which anſwere the king was maruelouſly offended: wherefore (quoth Ambroſe) if Nabaoth would not deliuer his vineyard, ſhall we deliuer to you yͤ Church of Chriſt? No, God forbid that I ſhould deliuer you Chriſtes heritage. Nabaoth did not deliuer the vineyard, nor ſurely will I deliuer Chriſtes Church. And further he addeth a good ſaying: I can neither diminiſh, nor adde any thing to the Church of God, for that I tooke not vpon me the charge of keeping of it: beſides this, it is my duety and office to conſult with the high Emperor of ſaluation, in this matter what is to be done: And doubtleſſe, I may not deliuer any thing to him, nor yet he receiue any thing of me, as is proued, 24. quæſtione vltimo capite cōuenior. qui. wherfore, by theſe and the like reaſons it appereth, that not onely iuriſdiction ſpiritual (as the Lord Peter falſly hath ſuggeſted) doth belong to God: but alſo, all other kinde of iuriſdiction whatſoeuer touching the churche: whether it be by law, cuſtome, or priuilege: in ſo much that neither may we ſurrēder the ſame to any, nor yet may the king at our handes take the ſame. Further the Lord Peter affirmed, that Chriſt for example ſake did pay tribute, which is vntrue as appeareth in Gene. 48. chap. For the land of Prieſtes were free from paying of all kinde of toll and tribute. And if the Lord Peter well conſidered the 17. of Math. he ſhould haue found there, how that Chriſt did not onely pay tribute for example ſake: but rather proued, how he was not bound to pay any at all. To conclude therfore, the children be free: but ye pay, to auoyd ſlaunder and offence: wherefore the text ſayth. Leaſt we ſhoulde offend them goe to the ſea: &c. But paraduenture it may be anſwered, that by the example of Chriſt (to auoyd offence) ought to pay. But this is vntrue, becauſe there is double offence of the weaklings & of the Phariſes: for as concerning the offence of the weakolinges, which commeth of ignorance & not of malice, ſome things are to be omitted for a time, while they be better inſtructed: as the Apoſtle ſaith to the Romains in the xiiii. chap. But for the offence of the Phariſes, which commit and offend of a pretenſed malice: there is nothing to be omitted, as Chriſt ſayth in Math, 16 where to his diſciples ſaying: Doe you not know how that the Phariſes hearing this word are offended? anſwered. Beholde, ſuffer them, they are blinde, and leaders of the blind: For that in the time of Chriſt, the offēce thē was of litle ones. But now is the offence of yͤ Phariſes: wherfore, then it was not to be payd for auoyding of offēce: but now not ſo. Now therfore it is apparant that the third token of the feare of God conſiſteth in the whole true reſtoring of goods: And of him, which hath ſuch feare, whereby he reſtored to God his own, it is ſpokē of in Eccle. 15. cha. The ſeed of the man that feareth God ſhall be brought to honor: but the ſeed which tranſgreſſeth the commaūdemēt of the Lord ſhall be ſhamed. And thus it fully appeareth, how louing feare and obedience is due vnto God, for the excellency of his maieſty: becauſe the wordes be: feare God.

Eccle.4.

Secondly I do ſay, that eſpeciall honor and reuerence is due vnto the king, for his dignity ſake: which followeth in the theame. Now it is ſayd honor the king: I will alledge the 10 of Eccle. where it is ſpecified: In the middes of the brethren, the ruler is holden in honor among them. wherfore it ſemeth to me, that there are 2. kind of honors: one which proceedeth from the lips, & that is named flattery, whereof it is ſpoken in Math. the 17. chap. This people doth honor me with their lips, but their hartes are far from me. There is on other kinde of honor which is reall, and commeth frō the hart. And this is the very true honor in deed, wherwith the king ought to be honored. But me thinketh that he doth really, and de facto in very deede honor the king: which wiſheth and counſelleth him, to keepe and do thoſe things, wherby his dominion is beloued, his royalty not diminiſhed, his honor and fame preſerued, & his conſcience not burdened: And he that perſwadeth him contrary to theſe, I thinke doth not honour the king. To proceede therefore further. I ſay firſt, that he doth de facto honor the king, who perſwadeth him thoſe things, wherby he may be beloued of his ſubiectes. For a Prince ought to ſtudy rather to be beloued, then feared. And what more greater treaſure can a Prince wiſh: then to haue the harts of his ſubiectes? According to the ſaying of Seneca. The loue of the Citizens, is a fortreſſe inuincible, and a bulwarke not ſautable. what thing is more to be wiſhed for? what better then to liue and raigne, euery man willing and reioyceing thereof? And in my opiniō, there is nothing which cauſeth more a Prince to be beloued, then if he keep and mayntayne his auncient liberties, and bring in no alterations? wherefore it is ſayd in the 22. chapter of Prou. Thou ſhalt not remoue the land markes, which thy fore elders haue ſet. This place the Lord Peter alledged to make for himſelfe: which I wyll proue to make agaynſt him, and that by his reaſon, ye ought not to tranſgreſſe the olde limittes and boundes which the fathers haue ſet: For nouity and alteration doth ingender diſcord. And for this cauſe in making of new alterations there ought to be both euident vtilitye, and vrgent neceſſitye. If therefore the Prince will abrogate and take away the liberties graunted by his forefathers and predeceſſours: he ſhall not be of his Realme beloued, as it appeareth by Roboam in the 11. chap. of the 3. Reg. All which likewiſe is to be ſeene in the Chronicles, how that by theſe meanes many kingdomes and dominiōs were tranſlated from nation to nation, and from their owne natiue regiment to the rule of ſtraūge people. And now for this time certayne it is, that your graunde predeceſſors Charles the great, S. Ludowick, Philip the fayre, Ludowick and Philip his ſonnes, with many others, haue ſealed and confirmed this liberty of the Church. wherfore for a man to councell & perſwade your highneſſe to ſpoile the Church of any thing: it is euen the next way to ſpoyle and vndoe your ſelf, and to bereue you of that, by which your dominion is beloued. And for this cauſe I thought good to put your grace in remembraunce of the 20. of Math. where it is written: Remember the workes of your forefathers, which they haue done in their generations, and you ſhal receiue great glory and renowne for euer. Note here your highneſſe by the way, how that king Philip graundfather to S. Lewis: foſtered and kept in his Realme S. Thomas Archbiſhop of Canterbury: who for that he ſtoutly defended the libertyes of his Church, was baniſhed out of England. How much more therefore are you bound to defend and mayntayne your owne Prelates, in their liberties ratified and confirmed by your graces predeceſſors, according to the ſaying of Gregory in 25. quæſt. cap Si. If I ſhould deſtroy and put downe thoſe thinges which my predeceſſours haue built and ordeined: I ſhould not be called a builder and maker, but iuſtly acompted a ſtroy good and puller downe as the voyce af the Lord ſayth: Euery kingdome deuided within it ſelfe ſhall be confoūded: All knowledge and learning deuided one agaynſt the other, ſhall be deſtroyed. In an other place he ſayth: It is ouer ſharpe, and agaynſt all good maner and ciuility (vpon what reaſon and excuſe ſo euer) to breake and ſubuert thoſe thinges which are well ordayned: or by his example, to teach other at theyr pleaſures to diſſolue olde conſtitutions. Marke here a ſtory about a Caſtle which was geuen to Saynt Romige, to the Churches vſe: by Clodoui the Kyng, which afterwarde King Pipine deſired to haue by exchaunge and recouery. To whome the ſayd Saynte Remige appeared in hys dreame, and highly blamed him therefore, ſaying: a better man then thou gaue it me, and yet wilt thou take it away from me? And with that he ſmote him, who the next day was founde all blacke. Since whiche tyme, no Kyng of Fraunce durſt euer lye in that Caſtle. Verely therefore, he doth not honour the Kyng, which geueth him counſell to paſſe the olde limittes that his olde Fathers did ſet. Yea rather the Kinges Maieſty ought to ſay vnto them, whiche is written in Saynt Iohn 8. chapter I do honour and glorify my Father, that is, in keepyng the libertyes of the Church, as they did which graunted them: but you haue diſhonoured me, in counſelling me that, which ſeemeth beſt to pleaſe your ſelues, as it is written in Eccleſiaſt. 4. The worſhip of a mans father is his owne worſhip, and where the father is without honor, it is the diſhonor of the ſonne.

Secondarily I ſay, that he truely doth honor the king, who counſelleth him: whereby his power and dignity is not diminiſhed. For as it is great honour to the Kynges highneſſe to encreaſe and augment his power: ſo is it as much diſhonour for him to diminiſh any iote thereof. And therefore, the Emperours were wont to call themſelues victorious, of augmenting and encreaſing theyr common wealth. And to ſay that you and your predeceſſours could not graunt theſe things to the Churche, it were to too abſurde, and to the too muche derogation of your Maieſties moſt honourable eſtate. And therfore you (moſt ſoueraign Lorde) who holde and poſſeſſe ſo ample right and title in the realme of Fraunce, both by election and inheritaunce: not to graunt and leaue thys to your poſteritie, it were to the great debaſing of your Maieſties honour, crowne and dignitie. Yea if it were (as God forbid) it wold folow, that your predeceſſours liued continually in ſinne: yea and further, it were as much to ſay (which were too vile) that bleſſed S. Lewes, by whome all Fraunce is beautified, could not be iuſtly canonized.

For as the Lord ſpeaker declared, if he tooke his othe at his coronation both to alienate nothing, and alſo to call in that which was before alienated, which is inſeparable frõ the Crowne: it ſhould followe that he was forſworne, and conſequently committed deadly ſinne, and ſo coulde neuer be canonized, which is to to abſurde to be talked of. And if reply be made, that hee might haue repented: It is ſoone to be anſweared: That his ſinne is read of, but of hys repentaunce it is not founde, as is ſayde of Salomon. But put caſe it be true that the Lord Peter ſayd, then it muſt needes folow, that your grace could beſtow nothing, neither coũtrey, towne, nor tower. And yet there be few, whych willingly would not receiue them, notwythſtanding their allegiaunce and homage, which they pretend to your hyghnes: Kepe therefore & confirme (moſt renowmed Prince) ẏ which was graunted by your noble progenitors: otherwiſe, your royall honor ſhall decreaſe, that it may be verified in you which is read of, in the 11. to the Rom. I wil honor my miniſterie.

Rom.11.

Who honoreth the K.

Thirdly I doe affirme, that he rightfully honoreth the king, which perſwadeth him that, whereby his honor and renowne is preſerued. For in matters of weyght, and of great importaunce, next after conſcience we muſt haue regarde to name and fame, as it is wrytten the 22. of Prou. It is better to haue a good name, then riches. A good name farre paſſeth all things, and is aboue ſiluer & gold. And S. Auguſtine ſayeth two things are neceſſary for thee, conſcience & name: Conſcience for God, and name for thy neighbour. And therefore it is wrytten in the 4. chapt. of Eccleſ. Labour to get a good name, for that will continue ſurer by thee then a M. great treaſures of golde. A good life hath a number of dayes. Which renowne & name, the Lord (who annoynted your grace with the oyle of gladnes) hath in ſo litle time more aboundantly bleſſed you wythall, then any other Prince, wherfore you ought to be more vigilant and carefull, howe to kepe and enioy the ſame ſtill: For it is no leſſe vertue, to ſeeke and gette, then to keepe that whych is gotten: wherby not onely while you lyue, but alſo when you are dead, your gloryous renowne may liue for euer: yea and farther, that by you nothing be done, wherby any blotte or foyle ſhoulde creepe ints that your ſo great renowne: alluding that to your grace, which is ſayde in the tenth of the Prouerbes. &c. The memoriall of the iuſt ſhall haue good report. &c. Beware therefore moſt noble Prince, and take heede that in your daies and time, the liberties of the church be not taken away (which God forbid) or diminiſhed in any iote. For if your glorious name ſhoulde be blotted therwͭ, there be thouſands, which would chronicle the ſame to perpetuall memory. Wherefore moſt Chriſtian Prince, if ſuch (as truſted after their death for no other life, but only for fame & renowne) liued a life moſt godly & vertuous: how much more ought we Chriſtians, which looke after another life, by our wel doings here, to win vs a perpetuall name & memory after our death. And you beſides, if you ſhuld diſhonor your name, and fame: what a matter were it, conſidering how the kings of Fraunce, were euer counted the moſt chriſtian princes, and moſt bountiful towards the church, geuing examples to other princes, how to enrich their churches & liberties thereof. And now eſpecially, if your grace, ẏ church in ſome places being in great perſecution (which God forbid) ſhould ſhew light to other to pul and take away that whych was geuen by your forefathers to the church. What might the world ſay? For then by the like reaſon, might the Emperor depriue the Church of all, which was giuẽ to it by Conſtantine the Emperor. Alſo other kings would do the like in their Realme. God forbid that your highnes ſhuld geue ſuch example. And for my parte, I woulde rather wiſh my ſelfe to be deade, then geue you ſuch counſel, that in ſo pernitious and naughty a matter, you ſhoulde be example to other: Eſpecially, when the kings of France your predeceſſors, were defenders alwaies againſt ſuch ẏ went about to take away the liberties from the church: which is the office of a king, Ieronymus ſayth vpon Ieremy, which is foũd alſo in the 24. quæſt. 5. cap. Regnum & C. Princeps. After this maner let the princes of the world know and vnderſtand, how they are boũd to make an accõpt to God, for the Church which they take vpon them to keepe. Note you alſo, & read ſome examples out of ſtories & commentaries, what regarde the kings of France had in obſeruing thoſe things, and ſee you by their example, to follow and do the like: And then ſhall it be verified in your grace, which is wrytten in the 37. chapter of Eccle. A wiſe man ſhall obtaine honour amongſt his people: As alſo in the 3. of the ſame. He that honoreth his mother, is like one that gathereth treaſure together.

Fourthly I ſay, that he in deede doth honor the King, which perſwadeth hym to do that whereby his conſcience is not hurt. For aboue all things, a Chriſten man ought to beware howe to doe that thing, which ſhould be a grudge vnto his conſcience, because the life is more then is meate. Mat. the 6. chap. And aſſuredly I beleeue, that your grace wold not commit that thing willingly, wherwͭ your conſcience ſhuld be burdened, for all the worlds good: and that iuſtly. For the more miraculouſly God hath called your highnes to the ſtate of a King, and hath indued you wͭ hys grace: So much the more you ought to haue and take hede that you offende him not. For it is to be doubted, whether in doing the cõtrary, he will not be the more greuouſly diſpleaſed with you, as hee was with Saule. 1. Reg. chap. 15. Conſider therefore moſt ſoueraigne Lorde, ẏ at what time you were crowned, you ſware only theſe things folowing & no other. Firſt, that you would defend and maintaine the canonicall law, priuilege, and iuſtice, graunted to the Byſhops and the church: and as much as in you did lie, to enlarge and amplify the ſame. Alſo that by your arbitremẽt, all chriſtian people at all times ſhould keepe the true peace of God & his church. Alſo that you ſhould forbid to all nations, al kind of ſacrileges, ſpoylings, and iniquities. Alſo that in all kinde of iudgements, you ſhould will and command equity and mercy. Alſo that throughout your whole territory and iuriſdiction, you ſhuld ſincerely withal your indeuour, ſtudy to exterminate & cut off from the Church, the noted heretikes: which all, and no other your Maieſtie ſware to fulfill, at the time of your Coronation: vnder the leaue & correction of the Lorde Peter, which affirmed you were ſworne to none other thing beſides. In like maner if you be bound wͭ all your whole might and power to procure, that al whole Chriſtendome ſhould keepe the true peace of God and his church: much more haue you to procure the ſame amongſt your owne Barons & people, who euermore were all one with the Church. And alwayes where any church was in honor and eſtimation, there were belonging to it 20. ſtout Barons & knightes: whoſe office, as it was to defend the Church, ſo was it the part of the Church to pray for them & to offer ſacrifice for them vnto God. And to this end, that bleſſed S. Conſider here your maieſtie, how that pope Innocẽtius at that time proceded againſt thoſe Barons, &c. I dare be bold to ſay, ẏ if there ſhould be now diſſention betwene the Prelates and Barons: it wold not be long before the comminalty would vſurpe to rule and beare domination. As by experience it hath bene ſeene in many places, & likewiſe by practiſe, we of late myght haue ſene: at what time the people ſtomaking the ſpiritualtie in the parties of Campania and Burgundie, at laſt roſe and made in euery towne a king: and therwͭall cauſed the officers which brought citations & abſolutions from the pope and other, to be well banged: and not long after, made inſurrection againſt the Lords temporal, and ſerued them wͭ the like ſauce: vntill that by ẏ kings power they were ſuppreſſed, & many of them hanged. And this doubtles was in the daies of Lewis laſt king of ẏ name. Truely the noble men ought not to be grieued wͭ that that the Church is poſſeſſed wͭal. The next Friday following, being the 29. of December: the prelates aſſembled themſelues agayne together at the kings palace in Paris, where, the reuerend father the L. Peter Bertrand, by Gods permiſsiõ biſhop of Eduen ſpake openly there before the king, ſitting with his Counſellors and Barons about him: taking to his theame the which is written in the 18. of Geneſis, O Lord be not angry, that I ſpeake yet more. &c. The which he applyed to this end: that for the maieſty of the king, the prudency of his counſell, and inſufficiency of himſelfe (conſidering the waightineſſe of the cauſe) he trembled and was afrayde to ſpeake: yet neuertheles, truſting vpon his accuſtomed clemency, tooke to him audacity, & preſumed that which was appoynted to him by the prelates. Beginning with the 89 pſalme: Lord thou art our refuge. &c. Which he proſecuted in extolling the king his perſõ, and his miraculous atteining to the crowne of Fraunce: preaching further, how he ought to be the champion & defender of the faith: all which he proued in few words by many reaſõs and authorityes. Afterward, he touched thoſe propoſitiõs which were propounded by the foreſaid Lord Peter of Cugner, and for no other onely cauſe as he proteſted, but to informe the cõſcience of his ſoueraign Lord and king, & to aduiſe his grace concerning the ſame: Not going about to make any finall iudgement, determination, or anſwer, wherby either ſentence, Order, Statute, right to any man, or other proceſſe, might thereof enſue or be groũded. And namely he firſt beginning with the Theame of the Lord Peter: firſt affirmed (render vnto the Emperour, which is the Emperors, and vnto God which is hys: Marke 12.) By whych wordes was ſignified the obedience and ſubiectiõ to the king, with the differẽce of the ſpiritualty from the temporalty, whereof the firſt mẽber is proued by the 1. To which theſe his reaſons it was anſwered, that the iuriſdiction and determination of ciuill cauſes (whereabout the controuerſie now ſtandeth) belongeth to the Church, both by Gods law and mans law. Further, the Barons who in a manner are all ſworne to the Churche, ſwore fidelity to the ſame: by which oth of fidelity, they are bound to keepe theſe liberties and rights of the Churche. When therfore euery oth which tendeth not to the perdition of the ſoule, is to be kept: a fortiori that oth which is taken in the fauor of the church, is much more to be obſerued. c. But as touching the diſtinction betwixt the Byſhopricke and kingdom, in deede it is true: aſmuch as appertaineth to the end & to the execution of bloud, but not concerning the beginning & ſubiect: for that in one ſubiect, both the powers are, may be, and ought to be, as is before proued. To that poynt where it is ſaid that Chriſt payed tribute: it is anſwered, that not therfore he payd it, becauſe he ought or was bounde thereunto: becauſe it is certainly true, that ẏ ſonnes of ẏ king (as hee was ought not to pay) but this he did to auoide offence: yea alſo the Clergy is not boũd hereunto Eſdræ 1. & vlt. Furthermore, by this reaſon propounded: all the kings of France which euer were (and eſpecially bleſſed Ludouike) ſhuld be ſpotted: for if that were true (as God forbid) then al they were periured and died in mortal ſinne, which is to too abſurde. Laſt of all, it hurteth not where it is ſayd: that ſuch things are impreſcriptible: It is true in deede, they cannot of ſubiects, or otherwiſe then of the Church be preſcribed: but in this cauſe we talke not of ſubiects. Alſo, ſeeing they may be alienated, they may be preſcribed, eſpecially (the kinges thus conſenting who confirmed the ſame ſo long a time) which excludeth all right both fiſcal and eccleſiaſtical. The prelates therefore al with one conſent, agreeth & affirmeth to the ſame as a verity to be maintained and defended. Deſiring hym to conſider what commoditie daily he receiueth by the Churche, and that hys Churche neuer failed him yet, when hee had neede of the laitie, ſhewing the daungers and examples of them who did to the contrary. Further, hee beſeeched hys highneſſe to way howe entierly hys Lord the Pope doeth and hath loued his perſon and realme: Affirming, that neuer any placed in the ſeat of Peter, loued better his realme, then he doth. Speciall anſweres to the articles premiſed by B. Eduen.

After this in the ſayd Seſſion: The foreſayde Byſhop of Eduen prolocutour inſerted many things beſide, & anſwered particularly to the articles aboue ſpecified, and exhibited by the Lord Peter in wryting to the king and parliament. which, becauſe they touch more the ſubtiltie of the law and ſtiles of the courtes, then are neceſſary to this our hiſtory, and becauſe we would not burdē the volume withall, conteining no great profite in them: we haue heere of purpoſe for breuities ſake omitted them, paſſing to the next ſitting, which was the next friday next after following the ſame, as enſueth.

An other dayes ſitting in the Parliament.

The next Friday after thys, the Prelates aſſembled at Vicenas before the Kyng, to heare theyr anſwere: where, the foreſaid Lorde Peter of Cugner) being prolocutour for the king) ſpake on this wiſe, taking for hys theame. I am peace vnto you, do not feare. &c. which he proſecuted, moniſhed that they ſhoulde not be troubled in any thyng that there had bene ſpoken. For that the intent and minde of the ſoueraigne Lorde their king was, to keepe the rites of the Church and Prelates, which they had by law, and by good and reaſonable cuſtome: where, betweene the firſt and ſecond concluſion, he went about to proue: that the cognition of ciuill cauſes ought not to appertaine to the Church. For that ſuch things were temporal and ought to pertaine to the temporaltie, as ſpirituall things to the ſpiritualtie. And beſides his other reaſons hee alleaged the 86 diſt. declaring for a truth, ẏ for this intent firſt the clarks crowns were ſhauen: in ſigne that they ſhuld be free frō all worldlineſſe, and forſake all temporall things. Alledging to that end the 12. q. 2. Furthermore he declared, that the Byſhops had cognition in certaine caſes expreſſed by lawe. Wherefore, theſe ſaid caſes miniſtred a certaine rule againſt them, alledging for the proofe thereof De reg. iuris. ff. de lega. 1. L. ticie textoris. Alſo he affirmed that by reaſon of ſinne, the decretall Nouit. coulde not make for them. For the ſame dyd ſpeake of the king of Fraunce his ſtate, which hath no ſuperiour: but in other perſons it was (he ſayde) otherwyſe. And theſe things thus being proued, then ſayd he, and cōcluded: That neuertheleſſe, their Lord and King was ready to heare the information of them, which would inſtruct him of any cuſtome: and thoſe cuſtomes which were good and reaſonable he would obſerue. Which anſwere, becauſe it did not ſeeme to pleaſe and ſuffice the Prelates, incontinently the Byſhop Eduen anſwered for them all in manner folowing. Firſt, commēding the good and general anſwere, he ſpake in this wiſe: The Prince of the people (ſaid he) ſhalbe praiſed, for the prudence of his talke, cōmending therewyth as touching the former good generall anſwer of the King, his purpoſe and talke propounded. But as concerning the wordes of the Lorde Peter, whych engendred and brought darknes and obſcuritie, and might geue occaſion to other temporall Lordes, to breake and infringe the rites and cuſtomes of the Church, wherefore hys anſwere ſeemed not ful and plaine to the prelates. Speaking moreouer to the ſayd Peter, he alluded to the words of the Virgine ſpeaking in the Scripture thus to her ſonne: Sonne why did you ſo to vs? And ſo proſecuted ẏ ſame, both marueling with himſelfe, and yet couertly complaining of hys anſwere. Afterwarde anſwering to theſe things which the Lord Peter affirmed, and firſt to the Chapter. Ad verum he ſayde, that it was before anſwered: touching the deuiſion of the two iuriſdictions, that they may be in one ſubiect as before is proued. Neither doth it let which the Lord Peter ſayd, theſe two iuriſdictiōs could not be in one ſubiect, becauſe that things whych be in themſelues diuers, & be vnder one Genus, as a man & an aſſe cannot be in one ſubiect. But if they were vnder diuers kindes, as whiteneſſe and ſweeteneſſe in milke, they might be well in one ſubiect. It was anſwered that thys rule was not true: becauſe iuſtice and temperaunce are two diuers vertues, and vnder one kinde, and yet be in one ſubiect. Beſides theſe differing ſpecies, a man & an aſſe be not compatible in one ſubiect. Alſo to that which was ſpoken concerning the ſhauing of the crowne, it was anſwered ẏ the crowne did betoken rule & excellency: and the ſhauing did ſignify: that they ought not to heape vp ſtore of tēporal things, ſo to apply their hartes thereunto. But that the temporall things ought to be ſubiect to them, and not they to the temporaltie, as is proued in the ſaide chapter duo ſunt genera. Alſo as concerning the thyng, whych was talked of de regula: he anſwereth, that this maketh for the church, as before was proued. Yea, alſo, the cuſtome doeth make the rule for the Church. Alſo lawes in all kind of ſenſe doth alwaies except the cuſtome. And therefore, his ſaying makes nothyng againſt it. And nowe to that place which the Lord Peter ſpake about the Decretall Nouit. That the caſe was onely in the kinges perſon, yet for all that it is expreſly ſayd in the ſame text of euery Chriſten man. And although theyr lawe doth ſpeake onely of the Pope, yet the ſame is applied to all Biſhops in their Dioces. Wherfore the ſayd biſhop concluded and beſeched the king that it would pleaſe his grace to geue vnto them a more plainer and comfortable aunſwere: and that they might not depart from hys preſence all penſiue & ſad, whereby occaſion might be geuen to the laitie to impugne the rites and liberties of the Church. And that they doubted nothing heereof in the good nature & conſcience of their ſoueraigne Lord and King: In the end it was aunſwered to them in the behalfe of the king, that hys minde & intent was not to impugne the cuſtomes of the church.

The B. findeth fault with the kings anſwere.

The Sonday following the biſhops aſſembled themſelues againe before the king at Vicenas, where the Lorde Biſhop of Eduen repealed their laſt ſuppoſition, with the laſt aunſwere made vnto them in the behalfe by the King, when the Byſhop of Byturien, had geuen them to vnderſtand how the king willed them not to feare. For that they ſhould ſuffer no hinderance or damage in his time, yea and wold defend them to their rights and cuſtomes becauſe it ſhould not be ſaid that he would geue enſample to other to impugne the Church, aſſuring them that euen the Kinges grace hym willed ſo to declare vnto them. The ſayde Lord Byſhop of Senon in the name of the whole prelates gaue humble thankes to the King therefore, and the ſayde B. of Senon beſeeched ẏ ſuch proclamations which were made to the preiudice of the Eccleſiaſticall iuriſdiction myght be repealed, & called in. Heereunto the king himſelfe anſwered wyth his owne mouth that they were not publiſhed at his commandement, neither did he know of them, nor ratifie them. Thirdly, the Biſhop propoſed that thoſe abuſes which the temporaltie complained of, ſhould be ſo ordered & reformed: that euery man ſhould be wel contented therw̄. Laſt of all, he beſeeched the kings highneſſe, ẏ he would of his gracious goodneſſe geue them a more comfortable & fuller anſwere. Then anſwered the lord Peter in the name of the king: That if the prelates and biſhops would ſee reformatiō of thoſe things which were to be amēded (wherabouts he would take reſpect betweene this and Chriſtmas next folowing) his grace would innouate nothing in the meane ſeaſon. And if in the foreſaide ſpace they woulde not correct & reforme that which was amiſſe, hys maieſtie wold appoynt ſuch order and remedy that ſhuld be acceptable both to God and hys ſubiectes. After thys, the Prelates had leaue of the king to depart and went home.

Feare of God conſiſting in three thinges.
1.In geuing.
2.in honoring.
3.In reſtoring.
Honour to the kyng,double.
In word flattering,in deede effectuall.
Honour effectuall ſtandeth in foure pointes.

2.in maintayning his dignitie.
3.in maintayning his good name.
4.in maintayning his conſcience.

ring the ſeate due to God. Secondly,the honour due to the king. Wherof the firſt is,the feare of God(he ſayeth)conſiſteth in three things. 1.In geuing to God. 2.In honoring his miniſters. 3.In reſtoring that, which hath bene taken away.&c. The 2. which is, the honouring of the king, he ſayeth, conſiſteth in a double ſort, that is.In wordes onely,wherein is flattery: And in deede: which againe he deuideth in 4.members:Firſt,when a man counſaileth a king to that,whereby his dominion is loued. 2. When the king is counſailed to that whereby his honour and excellencie is not diminiſhed. 3.Thirdly,when the king is counſailed to that, whereby his fame and renowne is maintained. 4 Fourthly,when a king is counſailed to that,wherby his conſcience is not wounded.&c. And this is the order of his whole tractation. Nowe remayneth with like breuity to recite the reaſons and argumentes in order, whereby he proueth the premiſſes, with the ſubdiuiſion of euery member and part thereof.Wherein the ſtudious reader,may note both the ſubtile proceedings of theſe popiſh prelates,and alſo the feeble and impotent ground whereupon they build.Whoſe building(as by this diſcourſe and many other may appeare)wholy & finally tendeth to this,to maintaine their liberties,pompe, and eſtimation aboue all other ſecular princes and perſons.

Firſt, as concerning feare to be geuen to God,which hee deuideth in 3.partes,in geuing,in honouring and reſtoring: for the firſt, hee proueth that princes ought to geue largely and wythout meaſure to the Church by theſe argumentes.

By the teſtimonie of Iuſtinian: although nothing is good whych is too much,yet.&c.pag.361.col.2. I aunſwere that in the time of Iuſtinian, goodes then geuen to the Churche, were the goodes of the poore. Wherein was vſed faithfull diſtribution,voluntarie geuing, and neceſſary charitie. But nowe in our Popiſh Churches, reuenues and landes geuen,neither are diſtributed to the poore: and yet are men compelled againſt their will to geue ſtill. And againe, ſo little neceſsitie is nowe to geue to ſuch, that the moſt wealthes of Realmes almoſt is in their handes and houſes: in ſo much that they flowing in ſuch wealth,are nowe waxed ſo proude, that kinges can ſcarſe beare any rule for them, as was prooued before, pag. 330. col.2. that the Popes reuenues heere in England, mounted to more then three times double the ſtint of the kings crowne. Wherefore by the counſaile of Iuſtinian, it was ſo then, and then myght ſtand, quòd Religio peperit diuitias: But nowe as the time is altered, ſo that counſaile holdeth not, poſtquam nunc filia deuorauit matrē. That is,after that the daughter hath deuoured the mother. Finally concerning mens geuing to the Church in theſe our popiſh daies,foure faultes I note.

Religio peperit diuitias,nunc filia deuorauit matrem.
4.incommodities that come in geuing to the church.

Firſt, that they geue ſuperfluouſly more then ſufficient is to neceſsitie of life.

Secondly,that they geue to ſuch as abuſe it wickedly.

Thirdly, that in geuing to them that neede not,noble men in meane time defraude their poore neighbors, which nede in dede, and yet doe not complaine.

Fourthly, becauſe of thys title of geuing, men haue vſed, and yet doe vſe to put great hope of ſaluation therein, contrary to the Teſtament of God in Chriſtes death,whereof examples are before.

Pag.361.col.2. Abel offered of the beſt to the Lorde, and was bleſſed of God. Ergo,euery great man, that woulde be bleſſed of God, muſt offer of the beſt he hath vnto the Church. Aunſwere. This argument as it is farre fet:ſo it is ſoone anſwered,wherein 3. notes are to be obſerued.

3.Things to be noted,in offering to God and to the church.

Firſt,that he which offereth vnto the church of God,doth not therein offer vnto God immediatly as Abel did.

Secondly, neither is this to be graunted,that hee which offereth to all Churchmen, offereth by and by to the Church of God. For many times the Churchmen are one: and the Church of God is an other.Laurence the Martyr ſhewing forth the church of god, brought out the poore of the Pariſhe, and not of the prieſtes of the Church.Pag.72.col.1.

Pag.361.col.1.

The thirde note is this: that if noble perſons ſhould offer vnto God(by the example of Abel)that which is the beſt and fatteſt of the flocke:then ſhould they offer vnto the Lord, of their flocke onely,and not of their landes.Yea,and to note the very truth,they are taught thereby to offer to God, neither cattel nor landes,but that which is the very beſt, that is, their owne bodies for a liuely ſacrifice to God. Hee that offered vp to God a proude heart, and killed it with the axe of humilitie, geueth vnto him the beſt and fatteſt bullocke he hath in all his flocke. With like reaſon I aunſwere alſo the place of Numeri.18.and of Paral.cap.vlt.that to offer vp, or to ſeperate vnto the Lordes treaſurie, is not nowe to geue to Prieſtes and Chaplaines of the Churche, whyche peraduenture haue more then they doe well occupie: but to giue liberally to the communion of Saínctes, which are needy,and are the true treaſurie of the Church in deede, as Laurence the true treaſurer ſayd,ſupra,pag.72,

Pag.362 col.1. By Gods commaundement we are bound of duetie to honour our temporall fathers. Ergo, by the ſame duety we are bounde much rather to honour our ſpirituall fathers,that is Prieſtes and Prelates. Aunſwere. A father in common ſpeche is diuerſly taken,as by age,by nature,by office.And to al theſe we of duety, are bound to yeeld honour, reuerence, obedience ſubmiſsion, all be it not all after one ſort,nor in like degree. For as we are bound to honour our father and mothers: ſo aged men & elders haue alſo their honour and name of fathers So Magiſtrates and ſpirituall teachers in their kinde, haue their honour and reuerence. And S.Paule ſayeth, that ſuch are worthy of double honour, qui benè præſunt, & qui laborant in ſermone. But in thys two thyngs are to be noted, wherein this honour conſiſteth, and howe farre it extendeth. Theſe ſpirituall fathers of the Churche, thinke they be not honoured inough,vnleſſe Kings and Emperors geue and ſurrender vnto them all the temporall rule & gouernement, to doe what they liſt, and none to controll them. And vnleſſe noble men and ſubiects indue them wyth temporall landes and poſſeſsions,ſo much as they woulde haue. And this they call honour, which they define onely by geuing temporally: where in deede it rather conſiſteth in geuing ſpiritually, as to haue a reuerent opinion of their miniſtration,to yeld a prompt obedience to their doctrine,to reuerence them as the miniſters of God, and not to deſpiſe, defame,or moleſt their perſones, whereof S.Paule alſo about the ſame place ſpeaketh, wryting to Timothe. Let no man deſpiſe thy youth.&c. Alſo to Titus 2. Let no man deſpiſe thee.&c.And this is to honour our ſpirituall fathers.

How far honour giuen to prieſtes extendeth.

Secondly,to conſider howe farre this honour extendeth: as no man doeth denie, but theſe paſtours are worthy their double honour,which rule wel: ſo if they adminiſter not their office wel, they are vnder the ouerſighte of the king, bearing the Temporall ſworde,worthy of double puniſhment. And yet to conſider thys double honour in them that rule well, howe farre it doth extend: if it be compared to the honour due to our parentes, caſe of neceſsitie will ſoone decide it. For be it, that our parentes, on the one ſide,and paſtour of the other, ſtande in extreeme neede of the ſonnes ſupportation,wherein he can helpe but the one: nature, I ſuppoſe,will and ought ſooner runne,and the word of Chriſt will ſooner driue vs to our father,then to the Prieſts Corban.Marc.7. So that this diſtinction here may haue place: that as the one ſtandeth vpon merite of vertue,ſo the other ſtandeth vpon mere duety of neceſsitie.

And thus much concerning French matters, which becauſe they be Eccleſiaſticall,and beare wyth them ſome vtilitie to the diligēt reader(ſuch as liſt to ſearch, note and obſerue the actes of men,and courſe of religion) I thought therfore here to place and adioyne next after,the other contention before proceding betwene Philip the French king and Pope Boniface. Albeit as touching the perfect keeping of yeres and time, I am not ignorant that thys foreſaid Parliament thus ſummoned and commenced againſt the French prelates falling in the yeare of our Lorde.1329. was to be referred rather to ẏ raigne of king Edward the ij. Of whom now remaineth(by the grace of Chriſt) in order of hiſtorie to proſecute, declaring firſt the inſtructions and informations of his father geuen to him in the time of his departing.

Anno. 1307.

The ſicknes and death of K Edward.

The yeare of our Lorde 1307. and the laſt yeare of the king, the foreſayde king Edwarde in his iourney marching towarde Scotland: in the North fel ſicke of the flixe,which increaſed ſo feruētly vpon hym,that he diſpaired of life. Wherfore,calling before him his Earles and Barons, cauſed them to be ſworne, ẏ they ſhould crowne his ſonne Edward in ſuch conuenient time after his death as they might,& kepe the land to his vſe,til he were crowned. That done,he called before him his ſonne Edwarde, informing and leſſoning him wyth wholeſome preceptes, & charged him alſo with diuers poynts vpon his bleſſing: firſt that he ſhould be courteous,gentle,vpright in iudgement,faire ſpoken to all men, conſtant in deede and word, familiar with the good:and eſpecially to the miſerable to be merciful. After this,he gaue him alſo in charge,not to be to haſtie in taking his crowne, before he had reuenged his fathers iniuries ſtoutly againſt the Scots : but that he ſhould remaine in thoſe parties to take wͭ him hys fathers bones, being well boiled from the fleſh,and ſo incloſed in ſome fit veſſel, ſhoulde carie them with him til he conquered all the Scots : ſaying,that ſo long as he had his fathers bones wͭ him,none ſhould ouercome him. Moreouer,he willed and required him,to loue his brother Thomas,and Edmund: alſo to cheriſh & tender his mother Margaret the Quene. Ouer & beſides, he ſtraitly charged him vpon his bleſſing (as he would auoide his curſe) that he ſhould in no caſe cal to him againe, or ſende for Peter Gaueſton: whych Peter Gaueſton the king before had baniſhed the realme, for his naughty and wicked familiaritie with hys ſonne Edward, and for his ſeducing of him with ſiniſter counſaile. For the which cauſe, he baniſhed both Peter Gaueſton vtterly out of the realme, and alſo put the ſayd Edwarde hys ſonne in priſon. And therefore ſo ſtraitly charged hys ſonne, in no wiſe to ſende for this Gaueſton, or to haue him in any caſe about him. And finally, becauſe he had cōceiued in himſelfe a vow to haue returned hys owne perſon to the holy land (which for his manifold warres wyth the Scots, he could not performe) therefore he had prepared 32000. poundes of ſiluer, for the ſending of certaine ſouldiours with hys hart vnto the holy lād. Which thing he required of hys ſonne to ſee accompliſhed. So that the foreſayde money, vnder hys curſe & malediction, be not employed to other vſes. But theſe iniunctions and preceptes, the diſobedient ſonne did nothing obſerue or keepe after ẏ deceaſe of his father. Who forſaking and leauing of the warre with the Scots, wyth all ſpeede haſted him to his coronation. Alſo, contrary to the minde of his nobles, & againſt the precept of hys father he ſent for the foreſayde Peter Gaueſton, & prodigally beſtowed vpon him al that treaſure which his father had bequeſted to the holy land. He was moreouer a proud deſpiſer of his peeres & nobles. And therefore raigned infortunately, as by the ſequele of the ſtory heere folowing, by the grace of Chriſt ſhalbe declared. Thus king Edwarde firſt of that name, leauing behinde him 3. ſonnes, Thomas and Edmund by his third wife, and Edward by his firſt wife, whome he had ſufficiently thus with precepts inſtructed, departed this mortall life. An. 1307. after hee had raigned neare 35. yeres. Of whom this Epitaph was wrytten.

The Epitaph of kyng Edward

In ẏ time and raigne of thys king,many other things happened,which here I omit to ſpeake of: as the long diſcorde and ſtrife betweene the Prior of Cant. and the Prior of Douer,which continued aboue 4. yeres together : with much wrangling & vnquietnes betweene them. Likewyſe an other lyke cōtention growing betwene Iohn Romain Archb. of York,and the Archb. of Cant. vpon the occaſion, that when Iohn Archb. of York after his conſecration returned from the Pope, and comming to Douer, contrary to the inhibition of Cant. paſſed through ẏ middle of Kent, with his croſſe borne vp:although the ſtory reporteth,that he had the kings conſent therunto. An.1286.

Item, betwene Thomas Biſhop of Hereford,& Iohn Pecham Archb. of Cant. fell an other wrangling matter, in the time of thys king. Which Byſhop of Herefordе appealing from the Archb. to the Pope, went vp to Rome, and in his iourney died. Who with leſſe coſt might haue taryed at home. 1282.

King Edward the ſecond.

King Edward the ſecond.

EDwarde the ſecond of that name, and ſonne of Edward the firſt, borne as is aforeſaid at Carnaruan in Wales, after the departure of his father, entred the gouernment of the lande. An. 1307. But was crowned not before the yeare next folowing. An.1308. by reaſon of the abſence of Rob. Winchelſey, who was baniſhed by king Edward the firſt. Wherupon the king thys preſent yere wryteth to the pope for the reſtitution of the ſayd Archb. for that by an auncient law of the realme, the coronation of the king coulde not otherwiſe procede without the Archb. of Cant. Which Edward as he was perſonable in body and outwarde ſhape, ſo in conditions and euill diſpoſition much deformed. As vnſtedfaſt of worde, and light to diſcloſe ſecretes of great counſaile: Alſo refuſing the companie of hys Lords & men of honoure : hee much haunted among villaines and vile perſonnages : Geuen moreouer, to ouermuche drinking, and ſuch vices as thereuppon be wont to enſue. And as of his owne nature he was to the ſayd vices diſpoſed, ſo was hee much worſe by the counſaile and familiarity of certaine euill diſpoſed perſones, as firſt of Peter or Pierſe Gaueſton before touched. Then after hym of the two Spenſers and other, whoſe wanton counſaile hee followyng, gaue hymſelfe to the appetite and pleaſure of his body: nothing ordering hys common weale by ſadneſſe, diſcretion and iuſtice: which thyng cauſed firſt great variance betweene hym and his nobles, ſo that ſhortly hee became to them odible, and in ende was depriued of his kingdome. In the firſt yeare, hee tooke to wife Iſabel daughter of Philippe king of Fraunce: wyth whome (the yeare after) hee was crowned at Weſtminſter, by the biſhop of Wincheſter: for that, Robert Winchelſey Archbiſhop of Canterbury, was yet in exile not returned home. Notwithſtanding, the Barons and Lordes made firſt their requeſt to the king to put Peter Gaueſton from hym, or els they would not conſent to his coronation. Whereupon he was enforced to graunt them at the next parliament, to haue their requeſts accompliſhed, and ſo was crowned. In yͤ meane ſeaſon, the foreſayd Peter or Pierſe bearing himſelfe of the kings fauour bolde: continued triumphing and ſetting at light all other ſtates and nobles of the Realme, ſo that hee ruled both the King and the Realme, and all things went as he woulde. Neither had the king any delight els, or kept company wͭ any, but with him: with him onely he brake all his minde, & conferred all his counſailes. This as it ſeemed ſtraunge vnto the Lordes and Earles, ſo it inflamed their indignation ſo much againſt this Peter, that through the exciting of the Nobles, the Byſhops of the land did procede in excommunication againſt the ſaid Gauerſton, vnleſſe he departed the land. Vpon the occaſion whereof, the King the ſame firſt yeare of his raigne, being greeued wyth the Byſhoppes, wryteth to the Pope, complaining that they had proceded to excommunication of the ſayde Peter, vnleſſe he departed the realme within a time certaine. The which letter of the king, what anſwere againe the king had from the pope, I finde not ſet down in ſtorie. Ouer and beſides, it befell in the ſaid firſt yeare of the king, that the Byſhoppricke of Yorke being vacant, the king gaue the office of the treaſour to one of his owne clearkes: wherof the pope hauing intelligence wryteth to the King, commaunding him to call backe the ſame gift, and wͭ all citeth vp to Rome the ſayd clearke, there to anſwere the matter to a nephewe of one of his Cardinals, vpon whom he had beſtowed the ſayd dignitie whereunto the king maketh anſwere. Quod citationes huiuſmodi & illorum executio. &c. .i. That if ſuch citations and the execution of the ſame ſhould procede to the impeachement of our kingly iuriſdiction, and to the preiudice of our lawful inheritance and the honor of our crowne (eſpecially of the deciding of ſuche matters which principally concerne our eſtate, ſhould be proſecquuted in any other place then within thys our Realme by any manner of wayes. &c.) Certes, although we our ſelues would winke thereat, or through ſufferaunce permit matters ſo to paſſe our hands: yet the ſtates and nobles of our kingdom, who vpon allegeance are obliged and ſworne to the protection and defence of the dignitie of the crowne of England, will in no wiſe ſuffer our right and the lawes of the lande ſo to be violated.

Beſides this, the foreſaid pope wrote to the king, complaining that by certaine councellours of king Edwarde his father lying ſicke, vtterly ignoraunt thereof, a certaine reſtraint was geuen out, charging his nuncios and Legates (whõ he had ſent for the gathering of the firſt fruites of the benefices vacant wythin the realme) not hereafter to entermeddle therewith. &c. whereunto the king maketh anſwere. Videlicet. Pater Sanctiſ. Datum fuit vobis intelligi. &c.

In Engliſh thus.

Moſt holy Father, it hath ben geuen you to vnderſtand otherwiſe then the truth of the matter is: for moſt true it is in dede that the foreſaide inhibition was ratified by good acte of Parliament holden at Karlin, vpon certaine cauſes concerning the execution of ſuch collections (the ſaid our father not onely being not ignorant, but alſo witting, willing, and of his owne meere knowledge agreeing to the ſame) in the preſence not only of his owne Erles, Barons, and ſtates, and commons of the Realme, but alſo your legates and liegers being called thereunto.

Item, vpon other letters brought from the Pope to the king, for the enſtalling of one Peter de Subaudia his kinſeman into the Biſhoppricke of Worceſter being then vacant, and withall requiring that if the ſayd Peter would not accept thereof, the election ſhoulde be referred to the Priour and Couent of the ſame place. The king therewith grieued, maketh anſwere by his letters to the Pope and ſundry his Cardinals. Quod cum electiones de futuris prelatis in eccleſiis Cathedral. &c. That for ſo much as elections of prelates to be placed in cathedral churches within his kingdome, are not to be attempted without his licence firſt had and obtained. &c. Therefore he coulde not abide that any ſuch ſtraunge and vnaccuſtomed reſeruations ſhould or could take place in his Realme without manifeſt preiudice of his kingly eſtate, requiring further that hee woulde not cauſe any ſuche nouelties to be brought in into hys kingdome, contrary to that which hys aunceſtors before him haue accuſtomed to doe.

Anno. 1310.

Thus the time proceeded, & at length the Parliament appoynted came. An. 1310. which was the fourth of thys kings raigne. The articles were drawne by the nobles to be exhibited to the king, which articles were the ſame conteined In magna charta, and de foreſta aboue ſpecified: wyth ſuch other articles as his father had charged him with before: to wit, that he ſhould remoue frõ him and his Court, all aliens and peruerſe counſellours. And that all the matters of the common wealth ſhould be debated by common counſaile of the Lordes both temporall and ſpirituall: and that he ſhould ſtirre no warre out of England in any other foreine realme, without the common aſſent of the ſame. &c. The king perceiuing their intent to be, as it was in deede, to ſonder Peter Gaueſton from his cõpany: and ſeeing no other remedy: but nedes muſt yeld and graũt his conſent, agreed that the ſaid Gaueſton ſhuld be baniſhed into Ireland. And ſo the Parliament breaking vp, the Lordes returned to their owne, well appeaſed: although of the other articles they could not ſpeede, yet that they had driuen Peter Gaueſton out of the Realme, at this time, it did ſuffice them.

Peter Gaueſton.

Thys Peter Gaueſton was a certaine Gentlemans ſonne of Waſconie: whom being young, king Edward the firſt (for the good ſeruice, his father had done hym in hys warres) receiued to his Court, and placed hym with hys ſonne Edwarde nowe raigning. Who, in proceſſe of time growing vp with him, inceſed and prouoked him to much outrage and wantõneſſe. By whoſe occaſion firſt he began in his fathers dayes, to breake the parke of Walter biſhop of Cheſter, then Chancelour of England, and after executor to the king. For yͤ which ſo doing, the king (as is partly touched before) impriſoned his ſonne, and condemned this Peter to perpetuall baniſhment. Notwithſtanding the young king, after the death of his father (as yee haue heard) ſent for this Gaueſton againe. And with all, ſo perſecuted this foreſayd Biſhop, that he clapt him in yͤ tower, and ſeiſed vpon al his goods. Moreouer, cauſed moſt ſtrait inquiſition to be made vppon him for guiding his office, wherein if the leaſt crime might haue ben found, it would haue coſt him his life. And thus much of Peter Gaueſton, and of his origine. Now to the matter.

The ynordinate affection of the kyng to Peter Gaueſton.

The king thus ſeparated from his old compere (that is from the companie of Peter Gaueſton, nowe exiled into Ireland) continued in great mourning and penſiueneſſe, ſeeking by all meanes poſſible, howe to call him home againe, and conferring with ſuch as were about hym vpon the ſame. Who did inſinuate to the king, that forſomuch as the Earle of Gloceſter was a man well loued and fauored in all the realme, if a marriage might be wrought betwixt his ſiſter and Peter Gaueſton: It might be a meane both for him to obtaine more frendſhip, and for the king to haue his deſire. To make ſhort, Peter Gaueſton in all haſt was ſent for, & the mariage through the kings procuring, proceded betwene the Earles ſiſter, and the foreſayde Peter, albeit ſore againſt the Earles mind. Gaueſton thus reſtored and dignified, was ſo ſurpriſed in pride and exaltation, more then euer before: that he diſdained & derided al other, whoſe rule & power more & more encreaſed. Inſomuch, yͭ he hauing the guiding of all the kings iewels & treaſure, cõueied out of yͤ kings iewell houſe at Weſtminſter a table & a paire of treſſels of gold, vnto certain marchants beyõd the ſea, with other iewels mo to his behoofe: to the great impoueriſhing both of the king & Quene, and of the land. And ouer all that, brought the king (by meane of his wanton conditions) to manifold vices, as aduoutrie, and ſuche other like. Wherfore, the Lords ſeing the miſchief that daily increaſed by occaſion of this vnhappie man: toke they counſell together at Lyncolne, and there concluded to voide him again out of England, ſo yͭ ſhortly after he was exiled againe, and went into Flaunders: for in Fraunce or hys owne country he durſt not appeare, for feare of Philip the French king, to whõ the Queene of England hys daughter had ſent ouer great complaintes, of the ſayd Gaueſton: who had ſo impoueriſhed her & the whole Court, that ſhe had not wherewith to maintaine her ſtate. Vppon whych complaint, the French king through al his dominiõs layd ſtrait watch to apprehend the ſayd Gaueſton: but he not vnwarned thereof, ſecretly coaſted into Flaunders, from whẽce it was not long, but he was ſet againe by the king, as in further proceſſe followeth: ſo much was the kinges hart infatuated by this wicked perſon.

the French king: who as he cauſed to be burned in the Citty of Paris this yeare, 54. Tēplaries, with the great maiſter of the ſame order: ſo by his procurement the foreſayd Pope Clement called a Councell at Vienna, where the whole order and ſect of Templaries being cōdemned, was ſhortly after by the conſent of all Chriſten kinges depoſed all in one day. After whome, the Frenche king thought to make his ſonne king of Jeruſalem, and to conuert to hym all the landes of the ſayd Templaries: But Clement the Pope would thereto not agree transferring all their lands to the order of hoſpitulers, for the great ſumme of money geuen for the ſame. The cauſe why theſe impious Templaries were put downe was ſo abhominable and filthy that for the reuerence of chaſte eares it were better not told if it be true that ſome write.

An other matter worthy to be noted of like abhomination I thought here to inſerte touching a certayne Nonnery in Fraunce called Prouines, within the which at the clenſing and caſting of a fiſhpond were found many bones of young children and the bodyes alſo of ſome infantes as yet whole vnconſumed: vpon occaſion whereof diuers of the Nunnes of the ſayd Nunnery to the nūber of 27. were had to Paris, and there impriſoned, what became of them afterward I finde not in mine author. Ciſtercian Monkes for money redeme their exemptions of the pope.

In the the ſame Counſell alſo was decreed by the ſayd Clement, ẏ all religious orders exempted, ſhold be ſubiect vnder the common lawes as other were. But Ciſtercian Monkes with mony and great giftes, redeemed their priuileges and exemption of the pope, and ſo had them graūted Tho. Walſ. Theſe Ciſtercians ſped better herein, then did ẏ Minorites of Franciſcās in theyr ſuite. Of the whiche Franciſcans, when certayne of them had offered vnto the ſayd Pope Clement 40. thouſand florences of gold, beſide other ſiluer, that the Pope woulde diſpence with them to haue landes and poſſeſſions agaynſt their rule: the Pope aſked them where was that money? They aunſwered, in the marchant mens hands. So the ſpace of three dayes being geuen thē to bring forth theſe marchants: the P. abſolued the marchaunts of their bond made to the Fryers, and commaunded all that money to be imployed and reuerted to hys vſe. Declaring to the Fryers, that he would not infringe or violate the rule of S. Fraunciſ lately canoniſed: neither ought he to do it for any money. And thus the beggerly riche Fryers loſt both their money and theyr indulgence. Ex eodem autore.

Pope Clemēt excommunicateth the Venetians for making a duke.

Concerning this pope Clement the 5. Sabellicus writeth that he excommunicated the Venecians, for ayding and preferring of Azoda, vnto the eſtate of Ferrary: and wrote his letters throughout all Europe, condemning them as enemies of the Church, and geuing their goods as a lawfull pray vnto all men, which cauſed them to ſuſtaine great harme. But Fraunciſ Dandulus a Noble man of Venice being Embaſſadour from the Venecians to the ſayd Clement, for the obtayning of their abſolution and ſafegard of their Citty and country, and for the pacifying of the popes fury toward them, was fayne ſo to humble himſelfe before this proud tyrannicall Prelate, that hee ſuffered a chaine of yron to be tyed about hys neck, and ſo he lye down flat before his table, and ſo to catch the bones & fragmentes that fell from his table, as it had bene a dog, till the Popes fury was toward them aſſwaged: So that after that, he in reproche (becauſe he ſo humbled himſelfe for the behalfe and helping of his country) was of ſome called a dog. But the Citty of Venice ſhewed themſelues not vnkinde agayn to Dandulus for hys gentle good will declared to his country. For as he had abaſed himſelfe before the vile and ignominious condition of a dog for his Countries ſake: ſo they extolled him with as muche glory agayne being returned home, decking and adourning him after the beſt aray, with the chiefe princely ornamentes of the Citty, to make him amendes for his former reproch receaued. Anno. 1311.

The counting of the yeare was in the old time from Michaelmas to the ſame day againe.

Theſe thinges thus declared, let vs procede (by the Lordes grace) to the next yeare, which is of the Lord. 1311. & the fifth yeare after this kings raygne. In ẏ which yeare compting the yeare from Michelmaſſe, to the ſame feaſt agayne, as then the vſage of the Realme was: Peter Gaueſton, who had wandred the countryes about, & could finde no ſafe reſting place (notwithſtanding he was vtterly baniſhed, vpon forfeiting life and goodes out of the realm, yet truſting vpon the kinges fauour, and the good will of the Earle of Glouceſter, whoſe ſiſter he had maried) ſecretly returning into England with a certain company of ſtraūgers: preſented himſelfe to the kinges ſight. At the beholding of whom, the king for ioy ran to him, and imbracinge him, did not onely retayne him: but alſo for hys ſake vndid all ſuch actes as had bene in the Parliament before, enacted. The Queene and the whole Court ſeeing this doting of the king, made an heauy Chriſtenmas. After this returne of Gaueſton was noyſed among the commons, ẏ Pieres and Nobles of the Realme were not a little ſtyrred, caſting with themſelues, what way were beſt to take. If he were ſuffered ſtil they ſaw not onely themſelues reiected, but alſo that the Queene coulde not enioy the loue of the King, neither could there be any quietnes in the Realme. Again, to ſtir vp warre in the land, it were not the beſt: to vexe or diſquiet the king, alſo they were afrayd. But for aſmuch as they could not abide, all the nobilitie ſo to be thruſt out and vilepended for the loue of one ſtraunger, & alſo the realme ſo to be ſpoyled and impoueriſhed by the ſame: This way they took, that Thomas Earle of Lancaſter, ſhoulde be elected among them the chieftayn and chiefe doer in that buſines: to whom all other Earles and Barons, and prelats alſo did concordly condeſcend & conſent, except onely Walter Byſhop of Couentry, whome Robert the Archbiſhop therfore afterward did excommunicate. Which Thomas of Lancaſter by the publike aſſent of the reſt, ſent to the King (lying then at Yorke) humble petions, in the name aſwell of the whole Nobilitie, as of the commons: Deſiring his grace to geue the foreſayd Gaueſton vnto them, or els according to the ordinance of the Realme, that the land might be auoyded of him. But the tyrannous king, who ſet more by the amour of one ſtraunger then by his whole realme beſide: neither would harken to theyr counſayle, nor geue place to theyr ſupplications: But in al haſty fury, remoued from Yorke to Newcaſtle, where he remayned almoſt till midſommer.

Ex Chron. Tho. Walſ.

The Archb. of Cant excommunicateth the Biſh. of Couentry for holdyng with Peter Gaueſton.

In the meane ſeaſon, the Barons had gathered an hoſt of ſufficient and able ſouldiours, comming toward Newcaſtell: not intending any moleſtation againſt the king, but onely the execution of the lawes vpon wicked Gaueſton. The king not hauing wherwith to reſiſt theyr power: remoueth in all ſpeedy manner to Thinmouth, where the Queene lay. And hearing there that Newcaſtle was taken: taketh ſhipping and ſayleth from thence (notwithſtāding the Queene there being great with childe, with weeping teares and all inſtaunce, deſireth him to tary with her as ſafely he might) but he nothing relenting to her, tooke Peter his compiere with him, and coaſted ouer to the Caſtle of Scarbrough, where he leauing Peter Gaueſton to ẏ ſafe keeping of hys men, himſelfe iournieth toward ẏ coaſt beſide Warwike. The Lordes hearing where Peter was, bendeth thether al theyr power: ſo that at length Gaueſton ſeing no remedy but he muſt needes come into their hands yeldeth and ſubmitteth himſelf: requiring none other condition, but onely that he might talke but a few words with the king in his preſence. Thus Gaueſton being apprehended, the king hearing therof, ſendeth vnto the Lordes, requiring his life to be ſpared: and that he might be brought to his ſpeech, and ſo promiſed, that in ſo doing he would ſatiſfie their mindes and requeſtes, whatſoeuer. About this, aduiſement was taken: but then the Earle of Penbroke hearing the kinges promiſe, perſwaded the Barons to graunt vnto his petition: promiſing himſelf, vpon looſing all his landes to take theyr charge vpon him to be brought vnto the kinges ſpeach, and ſo to be recommitted to them agayne. Which when he had obtained, he taketh Peter Gaueſton with him, to bring him where the king lay. And ſo comming to Dedington, not farre from Warwike, leaueth him in the keeping of his ſouldiours, while he that night went to hys wife, being from thence not farre of.

Peter Gaueſton taken of the nobles.
The kyng entreateth for Gaueſton.
Guy of Warwike.

The ſame night it chaunced, Guido the Earle of Warwike to come to the ſame place where Gaueſton was left: who taking him out of the handes of hys keepers, caryeth him to the Caſtle of Warwike, where incontinent they woulde haue put him to death: but doubting and fearing the kings diſpleaſure, a little they ſtayed. At what time one of the company (a man of ſage and wiſe counſayle as myne author writeth) ſtanding vp among them with his graue Oration declareth the nature of the man, the wickednes of his own condition, the realme by him ſo greatly endamaged, the nobles deſpiſed and reiected, the pride and ambition of the man intollerable, the ruine of things like to enſue by him, and the great charges and expences they had beene at in ſo long purſuing and getting of him. And now being gotten and in theyr handes, he exhorteth them ſo to vſe and take the occaſion now preſent: that hereafter being out of their handes, they afterward might ſeeke, and ſhould not finde it.

Peter Gaueſton beheaded.

The corpes of Peter Gaueſton buryed in the kinges Manor of Langley.

Briefly, in ſuch ſort he perſwaded yͤ hearers, that forthwith he was brought out, and by common agreement beheaded in a place called Blakelow, whiche place in other ſtoryes I finde to be called Gaueſhed, but that name (as I thinke was deriued vpon this occaſion, afterwarde. And thus he, that before had called the Earle of Warwicke the blacke dog of Ardeine, was thus by the ſayd dog worowed as ye haue heard. &c. His carkas, the Dominicke Fryers of Oxford had in their Monaſtery interred the ſpace of two yeares: but after that, the king cauſed the ſayd carkas to be taken vpp and buryed within hys owne Mannour of Langley.
